STATUTES AND COURT DECISIONS

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

VOLUME IX

January 1, 1971 to December 31, 1975

Compiled by the Rules and Publications
Branch of the Office of the Secretary

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
WASHINGTON : 1977

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office
Washington, D.C. 20402 - Price $14.75

Stock No. 018-000-00198-5/Catalog No. FT1.13:971-75

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Michael Pertschuk, Chairman
Paul Rand Dixon, Commissioner
Elizabeth Hanford Dole, Commissioner
Calvin J. Collier, Commissioner
David A. Clanton, Commissioner

Document
FT
1.13
v. 9

NOTICE

The Syllabi of the cases published herein, taken from the Federal Reporter, the Federal Supplement, the Supreme Court Reporter, and other Reporters of the National Reporter System, are copyrighted by West Publishing Co., St. Paul, Minn., in accordance with the copyright notices appearing in the weekly Advance Sheets and the published volumes of such Reporters.

The permission given by the West Publishing Co., St. Paul, Minn., for the use in this publication of such copyrighted material, does not authorize the publication or republication, either separately or in a public document, or the use by others, of such copyrighted material without the direct consent of the copyright proprietor.

M
P
T
C

D

P
T

I

CONTENTS

Page

Members of the Federal Trade Commission VII

Preface IX

Table of Cases, citing statutes involved XI

Cumulative Table of Federal Trade Commission Court Cases, 1914-1975 XXVII

Decisions of the Courts, in cases instituted by or against the Federal Trade Commission 1

Penalty Proceedings 1553

The Statutes being reported in this volume:

- Administrative Procedure 1739
  - Freedom of Information Act 1742
  - Government in the Sunshine Act 1765
  - Privacy Act 1750
- Clayton Act, as amended 1599
- Consumer Credit Protection Act 1661
  - Credit Cards, Provisions relating to 1690
  - Consumer Leasing Act of 1976 1704
  - Equal Credit Opportunity Act, as amended 1727
  - Fair Credit Billing Act 1695
  - Fair Credit Reporting Act 1711
  - Truth-in-Lending Act 1664
- Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended 1559
- National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 1649
- Non-Profit Institutions Act 1644
- Robinson-Patman Act 1639
- Sherman Anti-Trust Act 1645

Index 1789

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

(December, 1975)

PAUL RAND DIXON, Democrat, born on September 29, 1913, in Nashville, Tenn. Educated in public schools of Davidson County, Tenn.; A.B., Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.; LL.B., University of Florida, Gainesville, Fla. Joined the Federal Trade Commission as trial attorney in July 1938 and subsequently engaged in both anti-monopoly and anti-deceptive practice work; February 1957, joined the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee as counsel and staff director; assisted subcommittee in developing and focusing attention of Congress and public on important problems in the field of restraints of trade, including administered prices in many major industries; appointed Commissioner and Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission on March 21, 1961. Reappointed on September 25, 1967, for a full seven-year term and has been reappointed for another seven-year term expiring on September 25, 1981. Served as Chairman until January 1, 1970, and as Acting Chairman from January 6, 1976 until March 23, 1976. Served with U.S. Navy from 1942 to 1945; commissioned Lieutenant (jg) and spent 23 months overseas participating in the occupation of Africa and the invasion and occupation of Sicily; entitled to wear three battle stars and is presently Lieutenant Commander, USNR (retired). Admitted to bars of Florida and Tennessee. Member: Federal Bar Association, Washington, D.C.; National Lawyers Club, Washington, D.C.; Honorary member of Phi Delta Phi, International Legal Fraternity; George C. Whiting Masonic Lodge No. 22, Washington, D.C.; Alpha Tau Omega; Kenwood Golf & Country Club, Bethesda, Md.; Metropolitan Memorial United Methodist Church, Washington, D.C. Former member: President's Committee on Consumer Interests; Committee of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices of OECD; Administrative Conference of the United States; Council of Section of Antitrust Law, American Bar Association; American Bar Association, Washington, D.C.; Executive Advisory Board, Junior Achievement Program of Metropolitan Washington, D.C.; Alumni Board of Directors, Commodore Boosters, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee. Played quarterback, Vanderbilt University varsity football team; Assistant football coach, University of Florida while attending law college. Married to former Doris Busby of Laurel, Mississippi; two sons, David Leslie and Paul R. Jr.

ELIZABETH HANFORD DOLE was sworn in on December 4, 1973, as a Federal Trade Commissioner. The Senate unanimously approved the nomination on November 20, 1973 for a seven-year term expiring September 26, 1980.

Commissioner Dole was appointed Deputy Director for the Office of Consumer Affairs at the time of its creation in February, 1971. In that post, she served as deputy to the President's Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs. Before that time, she was Executive Director of the predecessor organization, the President's Committee on Consumer Interests. She joined the PCCI as Associate Director for Legislative Affairs in 1968. Prior to that, she was engaged in the private practice of law defending indigents and also served as Staff Assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Commissioner Dole, born July 29, 1936, in Salisbury, N.C., holds an LL. B. from Harvard Law School and an M.A. from the Harvard Graduate School of Education. She received her undergraduate degree with distinction in political science from Duke University where she was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and served as president of the Student Government Association. She also participated in a summer program of study at Oxford University.

In 1972, Commissioner Dole was the recipient of the Arthur S. Flemming Award for outstanding government service. She served as a member of the 1972 Nominating Committee for the American Stock Exchange.

She is a member of the Board of Trustees, Duke University, and is currently serving as the National Chairman for the Duke Loyalty Fund. She has been elected to serve a four-year term as a member of the Council of the Harvard Law School Association.

Commissioner Dole is a member of the American and District of Columbia Bar Associations and is a former member of the American Bar Association Bankruptcy Committee. She is an associate member of the American Newspaper Women's Club, and a member of the North Carolina Consumer Council.

Time magazine, in July of 1974, named Commissioner Dole as one of America's 200 "Faces for the Future."

She is married to Robert Joseph Dole, United States Senate, and they reside in Washington, D.C.

The following individuals also served as either Chairman or Commissioner during the five-year period, 1971-1975, covered in this publication.

Miles W. Kirkpatrick, Chairman
September 15, 1970 — February 20, 1973

Lewis A. Engman, Chairman
February 20, 1973 — December 30, 1975

Everette MacIntyre, Commissioner
September 26, 1961 — June 30, 1973

Mary Gardiner Jones, Commissioner
October 29, 1964 — November 2, 1973

David S. Dennison, Commissioner
October 19, 1970 — December 31, 1973

Mayo J. Thompson, Commissioner
July 2, 1973 — September 1, 1975

Steven A. Nye, Commissioner
May 29, 1974 — May 1, 1976

PREFACE

This ninth volume of "Statutes and Court Decisions of the Federal Trade Commission" includes selected statutes, as amended, administered by the Commission and court decisions construing them during the years 1971-75, inclusive. It contains the majority of the cases to which the Commission was a party.

The bracketed boldface figures in the text of Supreme Court cases are the page numbers of the official United States reports. In the opinions of the other courts, they indicate pagination in the respective official reporters.

Grateful acknowledgment is made of the courtesy of the West Publishing Co. of St. Paul for their permission to use their copyrighted syllabi of cases appearing here.

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED

VOL. IX

Jan. 1, 1971, to Dec. 31, 1975

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Abraham Feder; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FPLA	1554
Action on Safety and Health, et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	539
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	498 F. 2d 754	FTCA	922
Adolph Coors Company v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1974)	497 F. 2d 1178	FTCA	1033
Certiorari denied (1975)	419 U.S. 1105
Alterman Foods, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	497 F. 2d 993	FTCA	1065
Aluminum Company of America, et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	390 F. Supp. 301	FTCA	1177
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1328
Aluminum Exterior Designers, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D. Ind. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
Alvin O. Langdon; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
American Brands, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
American Brands, Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
American General Insurance Company, et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. S.D. Texas 1973)	359 F. Supp. 887	CA7	673
(C.A. 5 1974)	496 F. 2d 197	CA7	1060
AMF Incorporated; U.S. v. (D.C. D. Colo. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
Amstar Corporation; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
Ancorp National Services, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	367 F. Supp. 1221	FTCA	808
(C.A. 2 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1312
Anderson, Raymond; U.S. v.

---

[1] Abbreviated as follows:

BA	Bankruptcy Act
CA	Clayton Act
FCRA	Fair Credit Reporting Act
FFA	Flammable Fabrics Act
FOIA	Freedom of Information Act
FPLA	Fur Products Labeling Act
FTCA	Federal Trade Commission Act
NEPA	National Environmental Policy Act
TILA	Truth in Lending Act
WPLA	Wool Products Labeling Act

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
A.O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1108	FTCA	1205
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
(D.C. Del. 1975)	403 F. Supp. 1000	FTCA	1474
Approximately 500 Dozen Flammable Berets; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. 3 1972)	458 F. 2d 1277	FFA	270
Approximately 1499 Dozen Flammable Sheer Nylon Scarves; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	FFA	597
Arlen Realty & Development Corp., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
Armas, Terry Lee, III, et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Arrow Food Distributors, Inc. and Richard M. Page, et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1974)	378 F. Supp. 1052	FTCA	1053
Arthur Murray Studio of Washington, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. 5 1972)	458 F. 2d 622	FTCA	254
Ash Grove Cement Co. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA,CA7,FOIA	565
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA,CA7	796
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA,CA7,FOIA	815
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	511 F. 2d 815	FOIA	1321
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	519 F. 2d 934	FOIA	1371
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1533
Atlantic Richfield Company v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	398 F. Supp. 1	FTCA	1385
(D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1407
Atlantic School, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. Kan. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
Automation Machine Training Center, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
Avnet, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1975)	511 F. 2d 70	CA7	1235
Balfour, Co., L. G., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1971)	442 F. 2d 1	FTCA	26
Beatrice Foods Co.; U.S. v.
(D.C. Minn. 1971)	322 F. Supp. 139	FTCA	2
(D.C. Minn. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	19
(D.C. Minn. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	75
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	344 F. Supp. 104	FTCA	320
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	351 F. Supp. 969	CA7, FTCA	437
(C.A. 8 1974)	493 F. 2d 1259	CA7	867
Beltone Electronics Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	402 F. Supp. 590	FTCA	1459
Bendix Corp., The, v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 6 1971)	450 F. 2d 534	CA7	138
Benjamin D. Kalin; U.S. v.
(D.C. N.D. W.D. Ia. 1971)	Not reported	FPLA	1553

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Berkley, Philip T.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D. Calif. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
Beverlee Sheldon, a/k/a Beverlee Choate, et al., (d/b/a Rejuvenation Center Ltd.); F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Blank, Jerome; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. S.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	814
Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al.; Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corporation v.
(C.A. D.C. 1972)	464 F. 2d 838	TILA	314
Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al.; N.C. Freed, Inc., et al. v.
(C.A. 2 1973)	473 F. 2d 1210	TILA	451
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 827
Bodner, John Jr., and Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA, FOIA	1122
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1161
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1227
Borden, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA, CA2	688
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA, CA2	802
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	495 F. 2d 785	FTCA, CA2	931
Bostic, William N.; U.S. v.
(D.C. D. So. Car. 1972)	336 F. 2d 1312	FTCA	185
Certiorari denied (1973)	411 U.S. 966
Botsford, Ralph; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	250
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	572
Bramman, William J., Jr.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	250
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	572
Bristol-Myers Co.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. 2 1972)	469 F. 2d 1116	FTCA	401
British Oxygen Co., Ltd., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	CA7, FTCA	887
(D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	CA7, FTCA	910
Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Brown Auto Stabilizer Co. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 5 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	792
California, State of, ex rel. C.B. Christensen, Director of Food and Agriculture v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1118
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1373
Charles R. Johnson; U.S. v.
(D.C. E.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
Charnita, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 3 1973)	479 F. 2d 684	TILA	701

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Chase Manhattan Bank, The, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1551
Checker Taxi Company, Inc. and Jerry L. Feldman v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1326
Chemical New York Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1551
Chicago Technical College; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
Chiquita Brands, Inc. and United Brands Company v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	499 F. 2d 395	CA2, CA7	1090
Chusid, Frederick; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	912
C.I.T. Financial Corporation and Glen E. Jorgensen; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	TILA	1352
Clark, William R.; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
Claude Thiret, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1975)	512 F. 2d 176	FTCA	1285
Coca-Cola Company, et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1972)	342 F. Supp. 760	FTCA	276
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	446
(C.A. 5 1973)	475 F. 2d 299	FTCA	557
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 877
Cohen, Al, et al.; Gibson, H.R., Sr., et al. v. (D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1510
Coldwater Seafood Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	456
Colonial Stores, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1971)	450 F. 2d 733	CA2	149
Consolidated Foods Corp.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	396 F. Supp. 1344	FTCA	1147
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1163
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1353	FTCA, CA2	1355
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	CA2	1557
Consumer Federation of America, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 367	FTCA	1376
Continental Oil Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	890
Control Data Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Minn. 1974)	Not reported	FOIA	852
(D.C. Minn. 1974)	Not reported	FOIA	1002
(D.C. Minn. 1974)	Not reported	FOIA	1107
(D.C. Minn. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1449
(D.C. Minn. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1500
Corning Glass Works v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	509 F. 2d 293	FTCA	1164
Corrigan-Republic, Inc. (Zale Corporation) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1973)	473 F. 2d 1317	FTCA, TILA	550

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Credit Card Service Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1974)	495 F. 2d 1004	TILA	914
Curtis Brothers, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
CWF Corporation; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
David R. Markin, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mich. 1974)	391 F. Supp. 865	FTCA	1138
Davis, G. Fred; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Texas 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
Del L. Young; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
Diener's, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1974)	494 F. 2d 1132	FTCA	901
Durlacher and Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	FFA	1555
Encyclopaedia Britannica, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	517 F. 2d 1013	FOIA	1360
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; American Brands, Inc. v. (C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Glenn W. Turner v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	767
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Liggett & Myers, Inc. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Loew's Theatres, Inc. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Philip Morris Inc. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Sydney N. Floersheim v. (C.A. D.C. 1973)	494 F. 2d 949	FTCA	766
Environmental Protection Agency v. Patsy T. Mink, et al. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	410 U.S. 73 94 S. Ct. 827	FOIA	457
Exxon Corporation; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	905
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Exxon Corporation v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	384 F. Supp. 755	FOIA	1077
Family Publications Service, Inc.;

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Leila Mourning v. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	411 U.S. 356 93 S. Ct. 1652	TILA	638
Feder, Abraham; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FPLA	1554
Feldman, Jerry L. and Checker Taxi Company, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1326
Firestone Tire & Rubber Company v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1973)	481 F. 2d 246	FTCA	706
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 1112
First National City Bank, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1551
Floersheim, Sydney N. v. Caspar N. Weinberger (D.C. D.C. 1972)	346 F. Supp. 950	FTCA	220
Floersheim, Sydney N. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (C.A. D.C. 1973)	494 F. 2d 949	FTCA	819
Foucha, Norman J., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	356 F. Supp. 21	FTCA	605
Foucha, Norman J., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	759
Frederick Chusid; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	912
Freed, N.C., Company, Inc., et al. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al. (C.A. 2 1973)	473 F. 2d 1210	TILA	451
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 827
Gallo, Julio R.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	782
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	806
Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corporation v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al. (C.A. D.C. 1972)	464 F. 2d 838	TILA	314
Gates Rental, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1442
General Foods Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C. W.D. Mich. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	571
(D.C. W.D. Mich. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	768
Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1971)	445 F. 2d 1382	FTCA	78
Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	518 F. 2d 33	FTCA	1363
Gibson, H. R., Sr., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1972)	460 F. 2d 605	CA2	290
Gibson, H. R., Sr., et al. v. Al Cohen, et al. (D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1510
Gibson, H. R., Sr., et al. v. Harold Hassenfeld, et al. (D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1530
Gifford-Hill & Company, Inc. v.

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1125
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	523 F. 2d 730	NEPA	1537
Gladstone, Emanuel; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA9	6
(C.A. 5 1971)	450 F. 2d 913	FTCA9	167
Glen E. Jorgensen and C.I.T. Financial Corporation; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	TILA	1352
Glenn W. Turner v. Lewis A. Engman, et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	766
Golden Grain Macaroni Co.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. 9 1972)	472 F. 2d 882	CA7	430
Certiorari denied (1973)	419 U.S. 918
Goodhope, Andrew C.; Seven-Up Co. v.
(D.C. E.D. Mo. 1972)	349 F. Supp. 551	FTCA	366
Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, The v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Greater Kansas City Gas & Air Conditioning Company; U.S. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. 5 1972)	460 F. 2d 605	CA2	290
H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al. v. Al Cohen, et al.
(D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1510
H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al. v. Harold Hassenfeld, et al.
(D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1530
Harbor Banana Distributors, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 5 1974)	499 F. 2d 395	CA2,7	1090
Hassenfeld, Harold, et al.; H.R. Gibson, Sr., et al. v.
(D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1530
Heater, John Clifford v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 9 1974)	503 F. 2d 321	FTCA	1099
Helene Curtis Industries, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
Hobart Corporation v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Hoffmann, Royce George, et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. Kansas 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	104
Holiday Magic, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FOIA	602
Hollywood Film Studios; U.S. v.
(D.C. C.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
Inland Steel Company v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Irving Rifkin; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	WPLA	1556
ITT Continental Baking Co.; U.S. v.
(C.A. 10 1972)	462 F. 2d 1104	FTCA, CA7	306
(C.A. 10 1973)	485 F. 2d 16	FTCA, CA7	775
Certiorari granted (1974)	416 U.S. 968
(Sup. Ct. 1975)	420 U.S. 223	CA7	1189

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
	95 S. Ct. 926
ITT Continental Baking Company v. F.T.C.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 367	FTCA	1376
Jackson, Richard, et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Wash. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	842
J. B. Williams Company, Inc., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	354 F. Supp. 521	FTCA	483
(C.A. 2 1974)	498 F. 2d 414	FTCA	938
J. B. Williams Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1502
Jerome Blank, President, National Brands, Inc., etc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. S.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	814
Jerry L. Feldman and Checker Taxi Company, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1326
Jewel Companies, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1972)	Not reported	CA2	245
Jewel Companies, etc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1973)	479 F. 2d 1323	CA2	598
John Bodner, Jr., and Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA, FOIA	1122
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1161
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FOIA	1227
John Clifford Heater, et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 9 1974)	503 F. 2d 321	FTCA	1099
John Spector v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. S.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	612
Jorgensen, Glen E. and C.I.T. Financial Corporation; F.T.C. v.
(D.C D.C. 1975)	Not reported	TILA	1352
Juniperwood Ranch, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. C.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1260
Kalin, Benjamin D.; U.S. v.
(D.C. N.D. W.D. Ia. 1971)	Not reported	FPLA	1553
Kennecott Copper Corp. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 10 1972)	467 F. 2d 67	CA7	341
Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	BA, CA, FTCA	786
Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	CA, FTCA	791
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	CA, FTCA	805
Kroger Co. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 6 1971)	438 F. 2d 1372	CA2	9
Certiorari denied (1971)	404 U.S. 871
La Salle Extension University v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	793
Certiorari denied (1974)	417 U.S. 909
Leila Mourning v. Family Publications Service, Inc.
(Sup. Ct. 1973)	411 U.S. 356 93 S. Ct. 1652	TILA	638
Lever Bros. Co. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. Me. 1971)	325 F. Supp. 371	FTCA	60
(C.A. 1 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	65

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
L. G. Balfour Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1971)	442 F. 2d 1	FTCA	26
Liggett & Myers, Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Lipton, Thomas J., Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Litton Industries; U.S. v. (C.A. 9 1972)	462 F. 2d 14	FTCA	299
Loew's Theatres, Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Love Television & Stereo Rental, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	498 F. 2d 1088	FTCA	1158
Lukens Steel Co. and United States Steel Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1317
Manager, Retail Credit Company, Miami Branch Office; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	357 F. Supp. 347	FCRA	629
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 988	FCRA	1246
Marco Sales Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1971)	453 F. 2d 1	FTCA	174
Markin, David R., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mich. 1974)	391 F. Supp. 865	FTCA	1138
Mellon National Corporation v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1551
Merck & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Mink, Patsy T., et al.; Environmental Protection Agency v. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	410 U.S. 73 93 S. Ct. 827	FOIA	457
Mississippi River Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1972)	454 F. 2d 1083	CA7	199
Missouri Portland Cement Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	250
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	572
Mobil Oil Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	905
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1551
Mourning, Leila v. Family Publications Service, Inc. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	411 U.S. 356 93 S. Ct. 1652	TILA	638
Nabisco, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1972)	459 F. 2d 1023	CA2	287
National Association of Women's and

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Children's Apparel Salesmen, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 5 1973)	479 F. 2d 139	FTCA	660
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 1004
National Bakers Services, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D. Fla. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
National Brands, Inc., (Jerome Blank, President) Etc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. S.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	814
National Commission on Egg Nutrition; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1109
(C.A. 7 1975)	517 F. 2d 485	FTCA	1344
National Dynamics Corporation v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 2 1974)	492 F. 2d 1333	FTCA	862
Certiorari denied (1975)	419 U.S. 993
National Outdoor Display, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. W.D. Tenn. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
National Petroleum Refiners Association, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1972)	340 F. Supp. 1343	FTCA	260
(C.A. D.C. 1973)	482 F. 2d 672	FTCA	714
Certiorari denied (1974)	415 U.S. 951
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	392 F. Supp. 1052	FTCA	1049
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1384
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1410
N.C. Freed, Inc., et al. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al.
(C.A. 2 1973)	473 F. 2d 1210	TILA	541
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 827
Norman J. Foucha, et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	356 F. Supp. 21	FTCA	605
Norman J. Foucha, et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	759
Northwest Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
OKC Corp. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 10 1972)	455 F. 2d 1159	CA7	215
Orian A. Saucke v. F.T.C.
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1971)	333 F. Supp. 1197	FCRA	165
Oscar Mayer & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Page, Richard M. and Arrow Food Distributors, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1974)	378 F. Supp. 1052	FTCA	1053
Papercraft Corporation v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1973)	472 F. 2d 927	CA7	530
Papercraft Corporation; U.S. v.
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 408	CA7	1262
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 415	CA7	1329
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	Not reported	CA7	1557
Patsy T. Mink, et al.; Environmental Protection Agency, et al. v.
(Sup. Ct. 1973)	410 U.S. 73	FOIA	457

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
	93 S. Ct. 827
Paul B. Elder Co.; U.S. v. (D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1097
PepsiCo, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	343 F. Supp. 396	FTCA	295
PepsiCo, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1972)	472 F. 2d 179	FTCA	407
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 876 94 S. Ct. 44
(C.A. 2 1973)	477 F. 2d 24	CA7	614
Periodical Publishers' Service Bureau, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	443
Philip Morris Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Purolator Products, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1973)	Not reported	CA2	769
Ralph Botsford (Botsford Ready-Mix Company); F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	572
Raymond Anderson; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D. Ohio 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
Rejuvenation Center Ltd. (Robert E. Sheldon, Beverlee Sheldon, a/k/a Beverlee Choate, and Terry Lee Armas, III, d/b/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Resort Car Rental Systems, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1975)	518 F. 2d 962	FTCA	1318
Retail Credit Company, Manager, Miami Branch Office; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	357 F. Supp. 347	FCRA	629
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 988	FCRA	1246
Richard Jackson, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Wash. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	842
Richard M. Page and Arrow Food Distributors, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1974)	378 F. Supp. 1052	FTCA	1053
Rifkin, Irving; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	WPLA	1556
R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1446
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1525
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	FTCA	1542
Robert E. Sheldon, et al. (d/b/a Rejuvenation Center Ltd.); F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Rodgers, William H., Jr. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1974)	492 F. 2d 228	FTCA	846
Royce George Hoffmann; U.S. v. (D.C. Kan. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
Saucke, Orlan A. v. F.T.C.

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1971)	333 F. Supp. 1197	FCRA	165
Sav-Cote Chemical Laboratories, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. N.J. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
Seven-Up Co. v. Andrew C. Goodhope
(D.C. E.D. Mo. 1972)	349 F. Supp. 551	FTCA	366
Seven-Up Company v. F.T.C., et al.
(C.A. 8 1973)	478 F. 2d 755	FTCA	670
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 1013
Sheldon, Beverlee (a/k/a Beverlee Choate), et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Sheldon, Robert E., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Shell Oil Company; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	905
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Shell Oil Co., and John Bodner, Jr. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA, FOIA	1122
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA, FOIA	1161
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA, FOIA	1227
Silver Star Chinchilla, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	338
Simeon Management Corporation, et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1975)	391 F. Supp. 697	FTCA	1271
Skylark Originals, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 3 1973)	474 F. 2d 1340	FTCA	572
Smarz, William; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
Smith Fencer Corp., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. E.D. Mich. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
S.O.U.P., Inc. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. D.C. 1971)	449 F. 2d 1142	FTCA	94
Spector, John v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. S.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	612
Sperry & Hutchinson Co.; F.T.C. v.
(Sup. Ct. 1972)	92 S. Ct. 898 405 U.S. 233	FTCA	232
Spiegel, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1974)	494 F. 2d 59	FTCA	891
Certiorari denied (1974)	419 U.S. 896
Standard Educators, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. D.C. 1973)	475 F. 2d 401	FTCA	588
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 828
Standard Oil Company; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Standard Oil Company v. F.T.C.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	540
Standard Oil Co. (Indiana); F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	905
Standard Oil of California; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	905
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Stanley Furs, Inc.; U.S. v.

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
(D.C. S.D. Colo. 1973)	Not reported	FPLA	1555
Stanley Works v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 2 1972)	469 F. 2d 498	FTCA, CA7	367
Certiorari denied (1973)	412 U.S. 928
Star Office Supply Co., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 2, 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	443
Certiorari denied (1972)	406 U.S. 918
State of California, Ex Rel., C. B. Christensen, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1118
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1373
Sterling Drug Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. D.C. 1971)	452 F. 2d 698	CA7	116
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	816
Sunshine Art Studios, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 1 1973)	481 F. 2d 1171	FTCA	760
Superior Oil Company, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	908
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Swingline, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA, CA7	585
(D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1974)	371 F. Supp. 37	CA7	827
(D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	CA7	1556
Sydney N. Floersheim v. Lewis A. Engman, et al.
(C.A. D.C. 1973)	494 F. 2d 949	FTCA	819
Symbra-Ette, (Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc. T/A et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1975)	518 F. 2d 33	FTCA	1363
Techbestos, Inc.; U.S. v.
(D.C. N.J. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
Ted Bates & Company, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 367	FTCA	1376
Terry Lee Armas, III, et al. (d/b/a Rejuvenation Center, Ltd.); F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	623
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	804
Texaco, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	905
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
The Chase Manhattan Bank, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1551
The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1013
The Superior Oil Company, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	FTCA	1411
Thomas J. Lipton, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	FTCA	1293
Turner, Glenn W. v.

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	767
Tysons Corner Regional Shopping Center v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	308
United Brands Company and Chiquita Brands, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	499 F. 2d 395	CA2,7	1090
United States Steel Corp. and Lukens Steel Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1317
United States Steel Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1971)	Not reported	CA7	68
U.S. v. Abraham Feder (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FPLA	1554
U.S. v. Aluminum Exterior Designers, Inc. (D.C. S.D. Ind. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
U.S. v. Alvin O. Langdon (D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
U.S. v. AMF Incorporated (D.C. Colo. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
U.S. v. Amstar Corporation (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
U.S. v. Ancorp National Services, Inc. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	367 F. Supp. 1221	FTCA	808
(C.A. 2 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1312
U.S. v. Arlen Realty & Development Corp., et al. (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
U.S. v. Atlantic School, Inc. (D.C. Kan. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
U.S. v. Automation Machine Training Center, Inc. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
U.S. v. Beatrice Foods Co. (D.C. Minn. 1972)	344 F. Supp. 104	FTCA	437
(C.A. 5 1974)	493 F. 2d 1259	CA7	867
U.S. v. Benjamin D. Kalin (D.C. N.D. W.D. Ia. 1971)	Not reported	FPLA	1553
U.S. v. Charles R. Johnson (D.C. E.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
U.S. v. Chicago Technical College (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
U.S. v. Curtis Brothers, Inc. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
U.S. v. C.W.F. Corporation (D.C. Md. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
U.S. v. Del L. Young (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1558
U.S. v. Durlacher and Co., Inc. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	FFA	1555
U.S. v. G. Fred Davis (D.C. N.D. Texas 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
U.S. v. Greater Kansas City Gas Furnace & Air Conditioning Company (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
U.S. v. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc.

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
U.S. v. Hollywood Film Studies
(D.C. C.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
U.S. v. Irving Rifkin
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	WPLA	1556
U.S. v. ITT Continental Baking Company
(C.A. 10 1972)	462 F. 2d 1104	CA7, FTCA	306
(C.A. 10 1973)	485 F. 2d 16	CA7, FTCA	775
Certiorari granted (1974)	416 U.S. 968
(Sup. Ct. 1975)	420 U.S. 223 95 S. Ct. 926	CA7	1189
U.S. v. J. B. Williams Company, Inc., et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	354 F. Supp. 521	FTCA	483
(C.A. 2 1974)	498 F. 2d 414	FTCA	938
U.S. v. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA, CA	791
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA, CA	805
U.S. v. Litton Industries
(C.A. 9 1972)	462 F. 2d 14	CA7	299
U.S. v. National Bakers Services, Inc.
(D.C. S.D. Fla. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
U.S. v. National Outdoor Display, Inc.
(D.C. W.D. Tenn. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	1555
U.S. v. Papercraft Corporation
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 408	CA7	1262
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 415	CA7	1329
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	Not reported	CA7	1557
U.S. v. Paul B. Elder Co.
(D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1097
U.S. v. Philip T. Berkley
(D.C. S.D. Calif. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
U.S. v. Raymond Anderson
(D.C. S.D. Ohio 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
U.S. v. Royce George Hoffmann
(D.C. Kan. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
U.S. v. Sav-Cote Chemical Laboratories, Inc., et al.
(D.C. N.J. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
U.S. v. Silver Star Chinchilla, Inc.
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	338
U.S. v. Smith Fencer Corp., et al.
(D.C. E.D. Mich. 1971)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
U.S. v. Stanley Furs, Inc.
(D.C. S.D. Colo. 1973)	Not reported	FPLA	1555
U.S. v. Swingline, Inc.
(D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA, CA7	585
(D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1974)	371 F. Supp. 37	CA7	827
(D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	CA7	1556
U.S. v. Techbestos, Inc.
(D.C. N.J. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1554
U.S. v. United Industrial Syndicate, Inc.
(D.C. E.D. Wisc. 1974)	Not reported	CA7	1556
U.S. v. Universal Training Service, et al.
(D.C. E.D. La. 1974)	Not reported	FTCA	1556
U.S. v. Van Raalte Co., Inc., et al.

Title	Reference	Statute involved[1]	Page
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1971)	328 F. Supp. 827	FFA	70
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FFA	1554
U.S. v. William N. Bostic
(D.C. D. So. Car. 1972)	336 F. 2d 1312	FTCA	185
Certiorari denied (1973)	411 U.S. 966
(D.C. D. So. Car. 1972)	473 F. 2d 1388	FTCA	1553
U.S. v. William R. Clark
(D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
U.S. v. William Smarz
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FTCA	1553
U.S. v. Woonsocket Spinning Co., et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	WPLA	1554
U.S. v. W.T. Grant Company
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	TILA	1557
Van Raalte Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1971)	328 F. Supp. 827	FFA	70
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	FFA	1554
Warner-Lambert Co. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1971)	Not reported	CA7	99
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	361 F. Supp. 948	FTCA	694
Weinberger, Caspar N.; Sydney N. Floersheim v.
(D.C. D.C. 1972)	346 F. Supp. 950	FTCA	220
William H. Rodgers, Jr. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 9 1974)	492 F. 2d 228	FTCA	846
Certiorari denied (1974)	419 U.S. 834
William J. Bramman, Jr., (Missouri Portland Cement Company); F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	FTCA	572
William N. Bostic; U.S. v.
(D.C. D. So. Car. 1972)	336 F. 2d 1312	FTCA	185
Certiorari denied (1973)	411 U.S. 966
William R. Clark; U.S. v.
(D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1557
Williams, J. B., Company, Inc., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	354 F. Supp. 521	FTCA	483
(C.A. 2 1974)	498 F. 2d 414	FTCA	938
Windsor Distributing Co. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 3 1971)	437 F. 2d 443	FTCA	1
Winn-Dixie Stores, Inc. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1974)	377 F. Supp. 733	FTCA, CA7	1016
Woonsocket Spinning Co., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	WPLA	1554
World Leisure Time, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. C.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	FTCA	1260
W.T. Grant Company; U.S. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	TILA	1557
Zale Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 5 1973)	473 F. 2d 1317	FTCA, TILA	550

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION CASES

VOLUMES I—IX

1914 to 1975

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
ABC Consolidated Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
Abex Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1970)	420 F. 2d 928	8 S. & D. 1077.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 865
Abraham Feder; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Ace Auto Supply Co., The, et al. (Samuel Sanders) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 375.
Action on Safety and Health, et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 539.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	495 F. 2d 754	9 S. & D. 922.
Adams, Elmer C., Sr., and Adams Dairy Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1961)	296 F. 2d 861	7 S. & D. 269.
Certiorari denied (1962)	369 U.S. 864
Adolph Coors Company v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1974)	497 F. 2d 1178	9 S. & D. 1033.
Certiorari denied (1975)	419 U.S. 1105
Adolph Kastor & Bros., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1943)	138 F. 2d 824	3 S. & D. 612.
Advance Paint Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1926)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 478.
Advertising Specialty National Assn. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1956)	238 F. 2d 108	6 S. & D. 76.
A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	135 F. 2d 453	3 S. & D. 556.
(C.A. 7 1944)	144 F. 2d 221	4 S. & D. 250.
A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. et al.; F.T.C., v. (Sup. Ct. 1945)	324 U.S. 746	4 S. & D. 346.
Aetna Portland Cement Co. et al. (Cement Institute et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	157 F. 2d 533	4 S. & D. 510.
(C.A. 7 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 765.
Aetna Portland Cement Co. et al. (Cement Institute et al.); F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1948)	333 U.S. 683	4 S. & D. 676.
Affiliated Credit Exchange and Business Research (David Bernstein) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1952)	200 F. 2d 404	5 S. & D. 472.
Aimcee Wholesale Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 318	8 S. & D. 338.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	261 F. Supp. 553	8 S. & D. 382.
Air Conditioning Training Corp. et al. (Morris A. Gluck); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Alberty, Adah, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1941)	118 F. 2d 669	3 S. & D. 358.
Certiorari denied (1941)	314 U.S. 630
Alberty et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1950)	182 F. 2d 36	5 S. & D. 184.
Certiorari denied (1950)	340 U.S. 818
Alexander Film Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1951)	193 F. 2d 495	5 S. & D. 326.
Alexander, Joyce; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1969)	298 F. Supp. 1288	8 S. & D. 907.
Algoma Lumber Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1932)	56 F. 2d 774	2 S. & D. 158.
(C.A. 9 1933)	64 F. 2d 618	2 S. & D. 221.
Algoma Lumber Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1934)	291 U.S. 67	2 S. & D. 247.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Alhambra Motor Parts et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1962)	309 F. 2d 213	7 S. & D. 550.
Allen B. Wrisley Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	113 F. 2d 437	3 S. & D. 250.
Allen V. Tornek Co. (Allen V. Tornek t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1960)	276 F. 2d 513	6 S. & D. 726.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 829
Alle-Rhume Remedy Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 170.
Allied Paper Mills et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1948)	168 F. 2d 600	4 S. & D. 751.
Certiorari denied (1949)	336 U.S. 918	3 S. & D. 704.
Allied Pharmacal Co., Inc., etc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 704.
Allied Tire & Battery Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
All-State Industries of North Carolina, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1970)	423 F. 2d 423	8 S. & D. 1114.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 828
Alma's Home Made Candies (Alma Loughran et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1944)	143 F. 2d 431	4 S. & D. 214.
Alterman Foods, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	497 F. 2d 993	9 S. & D. 1065.
Aluminum Co. of America v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1922)	284 Fed. 401	1 S. & D. 215.
Certiorari denied (1923)	261 U.S. 616
(C.A. 3 1924)	299 Fed. 361	1 S. & D. 360.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	390 F. Supp. 301	9 S. & D. 1177.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1328.
Aluminum Exterior Designers, Inc., U.S. v. (D.C. S.D. Ind. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
Alvin D. Langdon; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Amasia Importing Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1947)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 667.
Amber-Ita (Ward J. Miller t/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 6 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 329.
A. McLean & Son et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	84 F. 2d 910	2 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 590
(C.A. 7 1938)	94 F. 2d 802	2 S. & D. 439.
(C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 261.
American Albums, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
American Aluminum Corp. (Norman J. Foucha); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ala. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1092.
American Army and Navy Stores, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1936)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 358.
American Brands, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
American Brands, Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
American Brake Shoe Co. v. Schrup et al. (D.C. Del. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1357.
American Candle Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
American Candy Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1938)	97 F. 2d 1001	2 S. & D. 467.
American Chain & Cable Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1944)	139 F. 2d 622	4 S. & D. 99.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A. 4 1944)	142 F. 2d 909	4 S. & D. 186.
American College et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 222.
American Crayon Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 6 1955)	223 F. 2d 264	5 S. & D. 732.
(Sup. Ct. 1955)	350 U.S. 907	5 S. & D. 775.
(Sup. Ct. 1956)	352 U.S. 806	6 S. & D. 59.
(C.A. 6 1957)	245 F. 2d 236	6 S. & D. 184.
American Cyanamid Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	363 F. 2d 757	8 S. & D. 248.
(C.A. 6 1968)	401 F. 2d 574	8 S. & D. 807.
Certiorari denied (1969)	394 U.S. 920
American Discount Co. et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	109 F. 2d 393	3 S. & D. 188.
Certiorari denied (1940)	310 U.S. 632
American Drug Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1945)	149 F. 2d 608	4 S. & D. 371.
(C.A. 8 1947)	160 F. 2d 103	4 S. & D. 604.
American Extension Service et al. (Don H. Carnerie d/b/a); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 811.
American Field Seed Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 200.
American General Insurance Company, et al. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. S.D. Texas 1973)	359 F. Supp. 887	9 S. & D. 673.
(C.A. 5 1974)	496 F. 2d 197	9 S. & D. 1060.
American Greetings Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Ohio 1958)	168 F. Supp. 45	6 S. & D. 457.
(D.C.N.D. Ohio 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
(D.C.N.D. Ohio 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 520.
American Greetings Corp. v. U.S. (C.A. 6 1959)	272 F. 2d 945	6 S. & D. 714.
American Home Products Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 856.
American Home Products Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1968)	402 F. 2d 232	8 S. & D. 832.
(C.A. 6 1970)	421 F. 2d 845	8 S. & D. 1109.
American Hospital and Life Insurance Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1957)	243 F. 2d 719	6 S. & D. 275.
American Hospital and Life Insurance Co., The; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1958)	357 U.S. 560	6 S. & D. 432.
American Life & Accident Insurance Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1958)	255 F. 2d 289	6 S. & D. 397.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 875
American Medicinal Products, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. C. Div. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 230.
American Medicinal Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1943)	136 F. 2d 426	3 S. & D. 591.
American Motor Specialties Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1960)	278 F. 2d 225	6 S. & D. 791.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 884
American Motors Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1967)	384 F. 2d 247	8 S. & D. 556.
Certiorari denied (1968)	390 U.S. 1012
American News Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	300 F. 2d 104	7 S. & D. 346.
Certiorari denied (1962)	371 U.S. 824
American Oil Co., The; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
American Oil Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	325 F. 2d 101	7 S. & D. 813.
Certiori denied (1964)	377 U.S. 954
American Rug & Carpet Co., Inc.; U.S. v.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
American Seal-Kap Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D.N.Y. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
American Snuff Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1930)	38 F. 2d 547	2 S. & D. 68.
American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey, The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 491.
(C.A. 3 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 367.
American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1947)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 822.
American Tack Co., Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	211 F. 2d 239	5 S. & D. 633.
American Television Institute, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 735.
American Tobacco Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1922)	283 Fed. 999	1 S. & D. 239.
(Sup. Ct. 1924)	264 U.S. 298	1 S. & D. 341.
American Tobacco Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1925)	9 F. 2d 570	1 S. & D. 433.
American Tobacco Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1927)	274 U.S. 543	1 S. & D. 615.
Americana Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 166.
Americana Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
(D.C. Md. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
America's Medicine, etc. (Harry S. Benham t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 642.
AMF Incorporated; U.S. v. (D.C. D. Colo. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Amstar Corporation; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
Anaconda Copper Mining Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	227 F. 2d 825	5 S. & D. 749.
(C.A. 7 1957)	244 F. 2d 312	6 S. & D. 328.
Anaconda Copper Mining Co. et al; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	352 U.S. 419	6 S. & D. 193.
Anchor Hocking Glass Corp. et al. (W. H. Peterson) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1941)	124 F. 2d 187	3 S. & D. 426.
Anchor Serum Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1954)	217 F. 2d 867	5 S. & D. 718.
Ancorp National Services, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	367 F. Supp. 1221	9 S. & D. 808.
(C.A. 2 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1312.
Anderson, R. D. (d/b/a Guaranteed Silverware Distributors, etc.) (D.C.W.D. Ky.)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
Anderson, Raymond; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1959)	265 F. 2d 677	6 S. & D. 547.
(Sup. Ct. 1960)	363 U.S. 536	6 S. & D. 817.
(C.A. 7 1961)	289 F. 2d 835	7 S. & D. 19.
Anheuser-Busch, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1965)	242 F. Supp. 122	7 S. & D. 1265.
(C.A. 8 1966)	359 F. 2d 487	8 S. & D. 1.
(Anheuser-Busch, Inc.) Paul C. Guignon and John H. Pahlman; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1968)	390 F. 2d 323	8 S. & D. 640.
Annis-Stanton Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
Antisepto Products Co., etc. (Edward L. Jenkins et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 649.
A.O. Smith Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1108	9 S. & D. 1205.
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C. Del. 1975)	403 F. Supp. 1000	9 S. & D. 1474.
Appalachian Auto Parts Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965).	346 F. 2d 311	7 S. & D. 1229.
Certiorari dismissed (1965)	382 U.S. 923
Approved Photographers Assn. (Kenneth R. Ogle et al. t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Approximately 500 Dozen Flammable Berets; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1972)	458 F. 2d 1277	9 S. & D. 270.
Approximately 1499 Dozen Flammable Sheer Nylon Scarves; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 597.
A. P. W. Paper Co. Inc. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 2 1945)	149 F. 2d 424	4 S. & D. 361.
(C.A. 2 1947)	160 F. 2d 889	4 S. & D. 626.
(C.A. 2 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 671.
A. P. W. Paper Co. Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1946)	328 U.S. 193	4 S. & D. 483.
Ardelle, Inc., Helen, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	101 F. 2d 718	3 S. & D. 59.
Arden, Inc., Elizabeth, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1946)	156 F. 2d 132	4 S. & D. 490.
Certiorari denied (1947)	331 U.S. 806
Arkansas Wholesale Grocers' Assn. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1927)	18 F. 2d 866	1 S. & D. 593.
Certiorari denied (1927)	275 U.S. 533
Arlen Realty & Development Corp., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
Armand Co., Inc. et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 2 1935)	78 F. 2d 707	2 S. & D. 310.
Certiorari denied (1935)	296 U.S. 650
(C.A. 2 1936)	84 F. 2d 973	2 S. & D. 352.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 597
Armas, Terry Lee, III, et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C.W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C.W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 804.
Armour & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1922)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 721.
Armstrong Cork Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1949)	176 F. 2d 974	5 S. & D. 150.
Army & Navy Trading Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. D.C. 1937)	88 F. 2d 776	2 S. & D. 374.
Arnold Constable Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 97.
Arnold Stone Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1931)	49 F. 2d 1017	2 S. & D. 123.
A. Robbin & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	337 F. 2d 441	7 S. & D. 1012.
Aronberg, Earl (t/a Positive Products Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 647.
Aronberg, Earl (t/a Positive Products Co., etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	132 F. 2d 165	3 S. & D. 528.
Aron, Morris, et al. (t/a Globe Printing Co.) v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1943)	50 F. Supp. 289	3 S. & D. 560.
Arrow Food Distributors, Inc. and Richard M. Page, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1974)	378 F. Supp. 1052	9 S. & D. 1053.
Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Electric Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1933)	63 F. 2d 108	2 S. & D. 211.
(C.A. 2 1933)	65 F. 2d 336	2 S. & D. 233.
(Sup. Ct. 1934)	291 U.S. 587	2 S. & D. 267.
Arrow Metal Products Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1957)	249 F. 2d 83	6 S. & D. 371.
Arthur F. Burns, et al.; Continental Oil Co. v. (D.C. Del. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1251.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Arthur Murray Studio of Washington, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1972)	458 F. 2d 622	9 S. & D. 254
Artloom Corp.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1934)	69 F. 2d 36	2 S. & D. 256.
Art National Manufacturers Distributing Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	298 F. 2d 476	7 S. & D. 319.
Certiorari denied (1962)	370 U.S. 939
Artnell Co.; U.S. v. (C.A. 7 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1016.
Artra Cosmetics, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1949)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 161.
Ash Grove Cement Co. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 565.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 796.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 815.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	511 F. 2d 815	9 S. & D. 1321.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	519 F. 2d 934	9 S. & D. 1371.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1533.
Asheville Textiles, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1959)	263 F. 2d 502	6 S. & D. 507.
(C.A. 4 1961)	294 F. 2d 619	7 S. & D. 220.
Associated Laboratories, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1945)	150 F. 2d 629	4 S. & D. 395.
Assoicated Laboratories (Milton Irwin et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1944)	143 F. 2d 316	4 S. & D. 198.
Associated Merchandising Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 318	8 S. & D. 338.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	261 F. Supp. 553	8 S. & D. 382.
Associated Merchandising Corp. et al. v. William K. Jackson (D.C. Md. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 888.
Associated News Photographic Service, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 527.
Associated Trade Press Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
Astor Industries, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 693.
Atlanta Trading Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1958)	258 F. 2d 365	6 S. & D. 439.
Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., The Great, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	106 F. 2d 667	3 S. & D. 146.
Certorari denied (1940)	308 U.S. 625
Atlantic Coast Oil Co. of New York, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
Atlantic Refining Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	331 F. 2d 394	7 S. & D. 900.
(Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 357	7 S. & D. 1238.
Atlantic Refining Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1965)	344 F. 2d 599	7 S. & D. 1172.
Certiorari denied (1965)	382 U.S. 939
Atlantic Richfield Company v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	398 F. Supp. 1	9 S. & D. 1385.
(D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1407.
Atlantic School, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. Kan. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
Atlas Health Appliance Co. (Jacob L. Goldman et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 696.
Atlas Mfg. & Sales Corp., The, et al. (Roland S. Jenkins); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Audivox, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1960)	275 F. 2d 685	6 S. & D. 751.
Auerbach, Shay (t/a Belvedere Wool Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Augen, Harry (d/b/a Graphited Lubricants Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 599.
Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1952)	194 F. 2d 433	5 S. & D. 349.
(Sup. Ct. 1953)	346 U.S. 61	5 S. & D. 531.
Automation Machine Training Center, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Automobile Owners Safety Insurance Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1958)	255 F. 2d 295	6 S. & D. 405.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 875
Avery Salt Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 216.
Aviation Institute of U.S.A., Inc; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 326.
Avnet, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	511 F. 2d 70	9 S. & D. 1235.
Awnair Corp. of America et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1957)	249 F. 2d 83	6 S. & D. 371.
Axel, Edwin G. (National Clearance Bureau et al.), In re (C.A. 3 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 816.
Ayer, Harriet Hubbard, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1926)	15 F. 2d 274	1 S. & D. 569.
Certiorari denied (1927)	273 U.S. 759
Bakers Franchise Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	302 F. 2d 258	7 S. & D. 464.
Balditt, Rene P. (t/a Clito Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Tex. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 694.
Baldwin Bracelet Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1963)	325 F. 2d 1012	7 S. & D. 832.
Certiorari denied (1964)	377 U.S. 923
Balfour Co., L. G., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Va. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 889.
Balfour, L. G., Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1971)	442 F. 2d 1	9 S. & D. 26.
Balme, Paul; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1928)	23 F. 2d 615	1 S. & D. 666.
Certiorari denied (1928)	277 U.S. 598
Baltimore Grain Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. Md 1922)	284 Fed. 886	1 S. & D. 254.
(Sup. Ct. 1925)	267 U.S. 586	1 S. & D. 408.
Baltimore Luggage Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1961)	296 F. 2d 608	7 S. & D. 251.
Certiori denied (1962)	369 U.S. 860
Baltimore Paint & Color Works Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 4 1930)	41 F. 2d 474	2 S. & D. 75.
Bankers Securities Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1961)	297 F. 2d 403	7 S. & D. 300.
Bantam Books, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1960)	275 F. 2d 680	6 S. & D. 744.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 819
Barager-Webster Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1937)	95 F. 2d 1000	2 S. & D. 434.
Barber, Hiram E. (t/a Motor Equipment Specialty Co.); U.S. v. (D.C. Nebr. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
Barclay Home Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	241 F. 2d 451	6 S. & D. 173.
Certiorari denied (1957)	354 U.S. 942
Barnard Hosiery Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 572.
Barnes Motor & Parts Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	346 F. 2d 311	7 S. & D. 1229.
Certiorari dismissed (1965)	382 U.S. 923
Barton, Duer & Koch Paper Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 733.
Bart Schwartz International Textiles, Ltd. v. F.T.C. (C.C.P.A. 1961)	289 F. 2d 665	7 S. & D. 86.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Bascom Doyle v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	356 F. 2d 381	8 S. & D. 40.
Basic Books, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	276 F. 2d 718	6 S. & D. 781.
Basic Products Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1919)	260 Fed. 472	1 S. & D. 876.
Baskin, Ned R.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. E.D. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Bates & Co., Inc., Ted, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1962)	310 F. 2d 89	7 S. & D. 574.
(C.A. 1 1963)	326 F. 2d 517	7 S. & D. 824.
Bates & Co., Inc., Ted; F.T.C. v. (Sup Ct. 1965)	380 U.S. 374	7 S. & D. 1152.
Battle Creek Appliance Co., Ltd. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 327.
Bauer Cannery, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Bayuk Cigars, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1930)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 106.
(C.A. 3 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 110.
(C.A. 3 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 131.
Bazelon, Mitchell A., et al. (t/a Evans Novelty Co., etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 441.
Bear Mill Mfg. Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	98 F. 2d 67	2 S. & D. 468.
Bear Sales Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1966)	362 F. 2d 96	8 S. & D. 170.
Certiorari denied (1966)	385 U.S. 933
Beatrice Foods Co. and the Kroger Co. v. F.T.C.
(D.C.D.C. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 139.
(C.A.D.C. 1966)	Not reported	8 2. & D. 142.
Beatrice Foods Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 495.
Beatrice Foods Co. (Walter L. Dilger); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 662.
(C.A. 7 1960)	276 F. 2d 739	6 S. & D. 773.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 882
Beatrice Foods Co.; U.S. v.
(D.C. Minn. 1971)	322 F. Supp. 139	9 S. & D. 2.
(D.C. Minn. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 19.
(D.C. Minn. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 75.
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	344 F. Supp. 104	9 S. & D. 320.
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	351 F. Supp. 969	9 S. & D. 437.
(C.A. 8 1974)	493 F. 2d 1259	9 S. & D. 867.
Beautiderm Co. (Louis Zinberg t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 681.
Beech-Nut Packing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1920)	264 Fed. 885	1 S. & D. 54.
Beech-Nut Packing Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1922)	257 U.S. 441	1 S. & D. 170.
Beech-Nut Packing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1922)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 189.
Bee Jay Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1953)	204 F. 2d 272	5 S. & D. 527.
Certiorari denied (1953)	346 U.S. 856
Bee Jay Products, Inc. (Reubin Berkowitz) et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Belmont Laboratories, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	103 F. 2d 538	3 S. & D. 97.
Beltone Electronics Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	402 F. Supp. 590	9 S. & D. 1459.
Belvedere Wool Co. (Shay Auerbach t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
Bendix Corp., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1971)	450 F. 2d 534	9 S. & D. 138.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Bene & Sons, Inc., John v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1924)	299 Fed. 468	1 S. & D. 354.
Benham, Harry S. (t/a America's Medicines, etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 642.
Benham, Leland F. (t/a The Zelle Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 644.
Benjamin D. Kalin; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. W.D. Ia. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
Benmar Sales Co. (Marshall Maltz t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 740.
Bennett, Robert O. (d/b/a National Service Bureau et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1952)	200 F. 2d 362	5 S. & D. 447.
Bennett, William P., and Charles C.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Benrus Watch Co., Inc.; F.T.C v. (C.A. 2 1972)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 521.
Benrus Watch Co., Inc., et al. and Clifford Seigmeister v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1965)	352 F. 2d 313	7 S. & D. 1386.
Certiorari denied (1966)	384 U.S. 939
Benson, John T. (Renor Co., Inc., et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
Benton Announcements, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	130 F. 2d 254	3 S. & D. 495.
Berdy, Martin; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 905.
Berkey & Gay Furniture Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1930)	42 F. 2d 427	2 S. & D. 91.
Berkley, Philip T.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Berkowitz, Reubin (Bee Jay Products, Inc.) v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Bern Products Co. (Bernard Rosten t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	263 F. 2d 620	6 S. & D. 530.
Bernstein, David (Affiliated Credit Exchange and Business Research) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1952)	200 F. 2d 404	5 S. & D. 472.
Berry Seed Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1940)	109 F. 2d 1012	3 S. & D. 201.
Better Living, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1958)	259 F. 2d 271	6 S. & D. 453.
Better Rhinestone Jewelry Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
Beverlee Sheldon, a/k/a Beverlee Choate, et al., (d/b/a Rejuvenation Center Ltd.); F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 804.
B. F. Goodrich Co., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	208 F. 2d 829	5 S. & D. 572.
(D.C.D.C. 1955)	134 F. Supp. 39	5 S. & D. 734.
B. F. Goodrich Co., The et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
B. F. Goodrich Co., The; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
B. F. Goodrich Co., The, and Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 488.
(D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 492.
(C.A.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 494.
(D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 524.
(C.A.D.C. 1964)	336 F. 2d 754	7 S. & D. 956.
(C.A.D.C. 1967)	383 F. 2d 942	8 S. & D. 543.
B. F. Goodrich Co., The, and Texaco, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 739	7 S. & D. 1263.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Biddle Purchasing Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	96 F. 2d 687	2 S. & D. 447.
Certiorari denied (1938)	305 U.S. 634
Biddle Purchasing Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1941)	117 F. 2d 29	3 S. & D. 331.
(C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 354.
(C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 391.
Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1960)	182 F. Supp. 212	6 S. & D. 742.
(D.C.D.C. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 829.
(C.A.D.C. 1961)	294 F. 2d 718	7 S. & D. 80.
Bill The Distributer, Inc., of Mississippi, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Miss. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 680.
Binney & Smith Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 676.
Blackstone Studios, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 527.
Blaine, Sol; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1970)	308 F. Supp. 932	8 S. & D. 1100.
Blank, Jerome; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 814.
Blanton Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1957)	244 F. 2d 720	6 S. & D. 332.
Block, Sol, et al. (t/a Rittenhouse Candy Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1938)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 436.
Blumenthal, Sidney, et al. (t/a Rittenhouse Candy Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1938)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 436.
Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al.; Garnder and North Roofing and Siding Corporation v. (C.A. D.C. 1972)	464 F. 2d 838	9 S. & D. 314.
Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al.; N.C. Freed, Inc., et al. v. (C.A. 2 1973)	473 F. 2d 1210	9 S. & D. 451.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 827
Bob Hofeller Candy Co. (Robert Hofeller t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1936)	82 F. 2d 647	2 S. & D. 338.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 557
(C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 473.
Bockenstette, J.A., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1943)	134 F. 2d 369	3 S. & D. 539.
(C.A. 10 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 423.
Bodner, John Jr., and Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1122.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1161.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1227.
Bogolub, William (doing business as Fabricon Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
Bond Crown & Cork Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1949)	176 F. 2d 974	5 S. & D. 150.
Bonita Co., The, et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	84 F. 2d 910	2 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 590
(C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 267.
Book-of-the-Month Club, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1953)	202 F. 2d 486	5 S. & D. 508.
Borden Co., The (Douglas T. Orton); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	175 F. Supp. 77	6 S. & D. 658.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	177 F. Supp. 241	6 S. & D. 661.
Borden Co., The; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	383 U.S. 637	8 S. & D. 123.
Borden Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1964)	339 F. 2d 133	7 S. & D. 1039.
(C.A. 5 1967)	381 F. 2d 175	8 S. & D. 515.
(C.A. 7 1964)	339 F. 2d 953	7 S. & D. 1070.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 688.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 802.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	495 F. 2d 785	9 S. & D. 931.
Bork Mfg. Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1952)	194 F. 2d 611	5 S. & D. 373.
Bostic, William N.; U.S. v.
(D.C. D. So. Car. 1972)	336 F. 2d 1312	9 S. & D. 185.
Certiorari denied (1973)	411 U.S. 966
Bostwick Laboratores, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 591.
Bostwick Laboratories, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. Conn. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Botsford, Ralph; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 250.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 572.
Boulevard Candy Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 507.
Bourjois, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	Not reported	2 S & D. 475.
Bowman Dairy Co., and Dean Foods Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1966)	356 F. 2d 481	8 S. & D. 21.
(Sup. Ct. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 39.
(C.A. 7 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 474.
Bowman, Fred J.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1957)	149 F. Supp. 624	6 S. & D. 174.
(C.A. 7 1957)	248 F. 2d 456	6 S. & D. 368.
Boyer's Candy, Lee, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1942)	128 F. 2d 261	3 S & D. 487.
Brach & Sons, E.J. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 133.
Bradley, James J., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1929)	31 F. 2d 569	1 S. & D. 700.
Brady & Co., W. H., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 387.
Bramman, Jr., William J.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 250.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 572.
Branch, Joseph G., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	141 F. 2d 31	4 S. & D. 137.
Brandenfels, Carl, v. J. Edward Day et al. (C.A.D.C. 1963)	316 F. 2d 375	7 S. & D. 648.
Certiorari denied (1963)	375 U.S. 824
Brecht Candy Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 10 1937)	92 F. 2d 1002	2 S. & D. 418.
Brewer & Sons, Chas. A., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1946)	158 F. 2d 74	4 S. & D. 588.
Briggs Mfg. Co. v. Crane Co. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1960)	185 F. Supp. 177	6 S. & D. 797.
(C.A. 6 1960)	280 F. 2d 747	6 S. & D. 797n.
Bristol-Myers Co. et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 4 1950)	185 F. 2d 58	5 S. & D. 204.
(C.A. 6 1966)	363 F. 2d 757	8 S. & D. 248.
(D.C.D.C. 1968)	284 F. Supp. 745	8 S. & D. 767.
(C.A.D.C. 1970)	424 F. 2d 935	8 S. & D. 1132.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 824
Bristol-Myers Co.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A. 2 1972)	469 F. 2d 1116	9 S. & D. 401.
Brite Mfg. Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	347 F. 2d 477	7 S. & D. 1201.
British Oxygen Co., Ltd., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 887.
(D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 910.
Broadmore Fashions, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 809.
Broadway Gift Co. (Carl Drath t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1956)	239 F. 2d 452	6 S. & D. 105.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 917
Broch & Co., Henry, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	261 F. 2d 725	6 S. & D. 464.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Broch & Co., Henry; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1960)	363 U.S. 166	6 S. & D. 800.
Broch & Co., Henry, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	285 F. 2d 764	6 S. & D. 843.
Broch & Co., Henry; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1962)	368 U.S. 360	7 S. & D. 305.
Broussard, Joseph J., v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., Inc., et al. (C.A. 5 1965)	350 F. 2d 346	7 S. & D. 1294.
Brown & Haley et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	101 F. 2d 718	3 S. & D. 59.
Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Brown Auto Stabilizer Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 792.
Brown Fence & Wire Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1933)	64 F. 2d 934	2 S. & D. 230.
Browning, Ralph L.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 918.
Browning, Ralph L. (Lehigh Portland Cement Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	435 F. 2d 96	8 S. & D. 1273.
Brown Shoe Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1964)	339 F. 2d 45	7 S. & D. 1047.
Certiorari granted (1965)	382 U.S. 808
Brown Shoe Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	384 U.S. 316	8 S. & D. 171.
Bruning Co., Inc., Charles, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 494.
(C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730
Buchan Baking Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	366 F. 2d 795	8 S. & D. 351.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 932
Buchman Co., Inc., The L., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 344	6 S. & D. 30.
Buchsbaum & Co., S., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	153 F. 2d 85	4 S. & D. 449.
Buchsbaum & Co., S.; F.T.C. v. (Sup Ct. 1946)	328 U.S. 818	4 S. & D. 482.
Buchsbaum & Co., S., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1947)	160 F. 2d 121	4 S. & D. 621.
Buchwalter, Louis, et al. (t/a National Feather & Down Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 344	6 S. & D. 30.
Bundy, Robert C. (t/a The Jackson Sales Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 417.
Bunte Brothers, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1939)	104 F. 2d 996	3 S. & D. 111.
(C.A. 7 1940)	110 F. 2d 412	3 S. & D. 202.
Bunte Brothers, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1941)	312 U.S. 349	3 S. & D. 337.
Burch, Harry A. (t/a Washington Institute of Practical Nursing, etc.); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
Burns, Arthur F., et al.; Continental Oil Co. v. (D.C. Del. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1251.
Burns Cuboid Co. (James H. Sewell d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1956)	240 F. 2d 228	6 S. & D. 60.
Burns Cuboid Co. (James H. Sewell d/b/a); F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	353 U.S. 969	6 S. & D. 60n.
Burton-Dixie Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	240 F. 2d 166	6 S. & D. 153.
Busse, Robert G.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ill. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
Buttenfield, Charles C.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1925)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 1064.
Butterick Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1925)	4 F. 2d 910	1 S. & D. 378.
Butterick Publishing Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.2 1936)	85 F. 2d 522	2 S. & D. 359.
B-X Laboratories, etc. (John Petrie t/a); U.S.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 723.
Cabin Crafts, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	362 F. 2d 435	8 S. & D. 195.
Caldwell, Inc., Dr. W. B., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	111 F. 2d 889	3 S. & D. 218.
California Lumbermen's Council et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	103 F. 2d 304	3 S. & D. 106.
(C.A. 9 1939)	104 F. 2d 855	3 S. & D. 125.
(C.A. 9 1940)	115 F. 2d 178	3 S. & D. 298.
Certiorari denied (1941)	312 U.S. 709
California Rice Industry, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	102 F. 2d 716	3 S. & D. 74.
(C.A. 9 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 376.
California, State of, ex rel. C.B. Christensen, Director of Food and Agriculture v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1118.
(D.C. N.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1373.
Callaghan & Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1947)	163 F. 2d 359	4 S. & D. 644.
Callaway Mills Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	362 F. 2d 435	8 S. & D. 195.
Campbell Co., Joseph, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Campbell Soup Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Canadian Ace Brewing Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
Candymasters, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 443.
Canfield Oil Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1921)	274 Fed. 571	1 S. & D. 136.
Cannan v. U.S. (C.A. 5 1927)	19 F. 2d 823	1 S. & D. 1106.
Cannon, Samuel A., et al. (d/b/a National Employment Information Service) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	295 F. 2d 546	7 S. & D. 238.
Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	101 F. 2d 718	3 S. & D. 59.
Canute Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1948)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 100.
Capital Drug Co. (Max Caplan t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 699.
Capitol Service, Inc., The, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Capon Water Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	107 F. 2d 516	3 S. & D. 162.
Cardinal Co., The, etc. (Charles L. Klapp t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 651.
Carey Mfg. Co., Philip, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1928)	29 F. 2d 49	1 S. & D. 687.
Carlay Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	153 F. 2d 493	4 S. & D. 470.
Carlisle Corp.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Carnerie, Don N. (d/b/a Civil Preparation Service, etc.); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 811.
Carnerie, Don N.; U.S. v. (D.C. Colo. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
Carpentier, Dr. Emilie; U.S. v. (D.C.N.J. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 816.
Carr, Harry, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1962)	302 F. 2d 688	7 S. & D. 322.
Carter Carburetor Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1940)	112 F. 2d 722	3 S. & D. 232.
Carter Paint Co., Mary, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1964)	333 F. 2d 654	7 S. & D. 929.
Carter Paint Co., Mary, et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	382 U.S. 46	7 S. & D. 1403.
Carter Products, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1953)	201 F. 2d 446	5 S. & D. 478.
Carter Products, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup Ct.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1953)	346 U.S. 327	5 S. & D. 581.
Carter Products, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1959)	268 F. 2d 461	6 S. & D. 598.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 884
Carter Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	186 F. 2d 821	5 S. & D. 244.
Carter Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1963)	323 F. 2d 523	7 S. & D. 794.
Casey Concession Co. (Louis Keller et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	132 F. 2d 59	3 S. & D. 520.
Cassoff, L.F.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1930)	38 F. 2d 790	2 S. & D. 72.
Caulk Co., L.D., The, and the Dentists' Supply Co. of New York; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
Cement Institute et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	157 F. 2d 533	4 S. & D. 510.
Cement Institute et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1948)	333 U.S. 683	4 S. & D. 676.
Rehearing denied (1948)	334 U.S. 839
Cement Institue, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 765.
C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	241 F. 2d 37	6 S. & D. 144.
C. E. Niehoff & Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1958)	355 U.S. 411	6 S. & D. 382.
Rehearing denied (1958)	356 U.S. 905
Central Retailer-Owned Grocers, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	319 F. 2d 410	7 S. & D. 724.
Century Metalcraft Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	112 F. 2d 443	3 S. & D. 224.
Century Metalcraft Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 812.
Certane Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 737.
C. F. Pease Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730
Chain Institute, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1957)	246 F. 2d 231	6 S. & D. 343.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 895
Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1922)	280 Fed. 45	1 S. & D. 193.
(C.A. 8 1926)	13 F. 2d 673	1 S. & D. 502.
Chanel, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 353.
Chapman Health Products Co., The, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 654.
Chas. A. Brewer & Sons v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1946)	158 F. 2d 74	4 S. & D. 588.
Charles Bruning Co., Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 494.
(C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730
Charles C., and William P. Bennett; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Charles N. Miller Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 1 1938)	97 F. 2d 563	2 S. & D. 464.
Charles of the Ritz Dist. Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	143 F. 2d 676	4 S. & D. 226.
Chas. Pfizer & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	363 F. 2d 757	8 S. & D. 248.
Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1968)	401 F. 2d 574	8 S. & D. 807.
Certiorari denied (1969)	394 U.S. 920
Charles R. Johnson; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
Charlotte Novelty Co. (Jack Salup); U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Charnita, Inc. v. F.T.C.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A. 3 1973)	479 F. 2d 684	9 S. & D. 701.
Chase & Sanborn (John Moir, et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1926)	12 F. 2d 22	1 S. & D. 489.
Chase Candy Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1938)	97 F. 2d 1002	2 S. & D. 437.
Chase Manhattan Bank, The, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1551.
Checker Taxi Company, Inc. and Jerry L. Feldman v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1326.
Cheff, Paul Theodore (Holland Furnace) v. Elmer J. Schnackenberg et al. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	384 U.S. 373	8 S. & D. 176.
Chemical New York Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1551.
Chemway Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 500.
Cherry, Albert T., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1941)	121 F. 2d 451	3 S. & D. 377.
Chesapeake Distilling & Distributing Co.; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 727.
Chicago Board Co. (R.B. James et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	253 F. 2d 78	6 S. & D. 385.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 821
Chicago Portrait Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1925)	4 F. 2d 759	1 S. & D. 373.
Chicago Silk Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1937)	90 F. 2d 689	2 S. & D. 410.
Certiorari denied (1937)	302 U.S. 753
Chicago Technical College; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Chief Statistician, etc. (Michel Lipman, et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1945)	148 F. 2d 823	4 S. & D. 322.
Chipman Knitting Mills, etc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1930)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 74.
Chiquita Brands, Inc. and United Brands Company v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	499 F. 2d 395	9 S. & D. 1090.
C. Howard Hunt Pen Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1952)	197 F. 2d 273	5 S. & D. 405.
Christie, James H. (d/b/a United Surveys); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 813.
Chun King Sales, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Chusid, Frederick; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 912.
C. H. Wheeler Mfg. Co. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Cinader, Mitchell, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	141 F. 2d 1022	4 S. & D. 177.
Cinderella Career and Finishing Schools, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 470.
(C.A.D.C. 1970)	425 F. 2d 583	8 S. & D. 1118.
Cinderella Career and Finishing Schools, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1968)	404 F. 2d 1308	8 S. & D. 660.
C.I.T. Financial Corporation and Glen E. Jorgensen; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1352.
Civil Preparation Service et al. (Don N. Carnerie d/b/a); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 811.
Civil Service Training Bureau, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 6 1935)	79 F. 2d 113	2 S. & D. 306.
Claire Furnace Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1922)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 190.
Claire Furnace Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1923)	285 Fed. 936	1 S. & D. 259.
(Sup. Ct. 1927)	274 U.S. 160	1 S. & D. 602.
Clairol Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1969)	410 F. 2d 647	8 S. & D. 910.
Clara Stanton, Druggist to Women v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1942)	131 F. 2d 105	3 S. & D. 508.
Clark, William R.; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Clarke, Frederick A.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 406.
Clarke, Frederick A. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1942)	128 F. 2d 542	3 S. & D. 488.
Claude Thiret, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1975)	512 F. 2d 176	9 S. & D. 1285.
Clayton Mark & Co. et al. (Triangle Conduit & Cable Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1948)	168 F. 2d 175	4 S. & D. 741.
(Sup. Ct. 1949)	336 U.S. 956	5 S. & D. 102.
Clean-Rite Vacuum Stores, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 734.
Clein, Max L., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 355.
Clifford Seigmeister and Benrus Watch Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1965)	352 F. 2d 313	7 S. & D. 1386.
Certiorari denied (1966)	384 U.S. 939
Clinton Watch Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1961)	291 F. 2d 838	7 S. & D. 184.
Certiorari denied (1962)	368 U.S. 952
Clito Co. (Rene P. Balditt t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Tex. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 694.
Coca-Cola Company, et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1972)	342 F. Supp. 760	9 S. & D. 276.
(D.C. N.D. Ga. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 446.
(C.A. 5 1973)	475 F. 2d 299	9 S. & D. 557.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 877
Cohen, Al, et al.; Gibson, H.R., Sr., et al. v. (D.C.S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1510.
Coldwater Seafood Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 456.
Cole, Ben (Hallmark, Inc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)9	170 F. Supp. 24	6 S. & D. 452.
(C.A. 7 1959)	265 F. 2d 433	6 S. & D. 539.
Colgate-Palmolive Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1962)	310 F. 2d 89	7 S. & D. 574.
(C.A. 1 1963)	326 F. 2d 517	7 S. & D. 824.
Colgate-Palmolive Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	380 U.S. 374	7 S. & D. 1152.
Collier, P.F., & Son Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1970)	427 F. 2d 261	8 S. & D. 1188.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 926
Colon, Jacob, et al. (d/b/a E. & J. Distributing Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	193 F. 2d 179	5 S. & D. 349.
Certiorari denied (1952)	344 U.S. 823
Colonial Bead Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Colonial Stores, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1971)	450 F. 2d 733	9 S. & D. 149.
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1969)	414 F. 2d 974	8 S. & D. 981.
Certiorari denied (1970)	397 U.S. 907
Comforte, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 792.
Commercial Distributors of America et al. (Gene J. Davidson); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Community Blood Bank of the Kansas City Area, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1969)	405 F. 2d 1011	8 S. & D. 865.
Concrete Materials Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	189 F. 2d 359	5 S. & D. 282.
Consolidated Book Publishers, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1931)	53 F. 2d 942	2 S. & D. 152.
Certiorari denied (1932)	286 U.S. 553
Consolidated Foods Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	329 F. 2d 623	7 S. & D. 881.
Consolidated Foods Corp.; F.T.C. v.
(Sup. Ct. 1965)	380 U.S. 592	7 S. & D. 1189.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1147.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1163.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1353	9 S & D. 1355.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Consolidated Mfg. Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4, 1952)	199 F. 2d 417	5 S. & D. 426.
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Consolidated Royal Chemical Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 896	5 S. & D. 320.
Constable Corp., Arnold v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 97.
Consumer Federation of America, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 367	9 S. & D. 1376.
Consumer Sales Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	198 F. 2d 404	5 S. & D. 419.
Certiorari denied (1953)	344 U.S. 912
Consumers Home Equipment Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1947)	164 F. 2d 972	4 S. & D. 669.
Certiorari denied (1947)	331 U.S. 860
Consumers Products of America, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1968)	400 F. 2d 930	8 S. & D. 801.
Certiorari denied (1969)	393 U.S. 1088
Container Mfg. Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1952)	199 F. 2d 417	5 S. & D. 426.
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Continental Baking Co. v. Caspar W. Weinberger et al. (D.C. Del. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1140.
Continental Baking Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	366 F. 2d 795	8 S. & D. 351.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 932
Continental Baking Co. v. Paul Rand Dixon et al. (D.C. Del. 1968)	283 F. Supp. 285	8 S. & D. 679.
Continental Can Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1967)	267 F. Supp. 713	8 S. & D. 491.
Continental Oil Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 890.
Continental Oil Co. v. Arthur F. Burns, et al. (D.C. Del. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1251.
Continental Wax Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	330 F. 2d 475	7 S. & D. 891.
Control Data Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. Minn. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 852.
(D.C. Minn. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1002.
(D.C. Minn. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1107.
(D.C. Minn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1449.
(D.C. Minn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1500.
Cooper, George A. (Valve Manufacturers Assn.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 477.
Coradio, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Cordes, J. V., et al. (d/b/a Martha Beasley Associates); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 635.
Corn Products Refining Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	144 F. 2d 212	4 S. & D. 234.
(Sup. Ct. 1945)	324 U.S. 726	4 S. & D. 331.
Corning Glass Works v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	509 F. 2d 293	9 S. & D. 1164.
Coro, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Coro, Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1964)	338 F. 2d 149	7 S. & D. 1022.
Certiorari denied (1965)	380 U.S. 954
Corrigan-Republic, Inc. (Zale Corporation) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1973)	473 F. 2d 1317	9 S. & D. 550.
Cosner Candy Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 10 1937)	92 F. 2d 1002	2 S. & D. 419.
Cotherman, Lester S., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1969)	417 F. 2d 587	8 S. & D. 1008.
Cotton States, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1961)	287 F. 2d 512	7 S. & D. 41.
Certiorari denied (1961)	368 U.S. 838
Coty, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 464.
(C.A. 3 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 647.
Coty, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Del. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Country Tweeds, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	326 F. 2d 144	7 S. & D. 835.
Courtaulds (Alabama) Inc. v. Earl W. Kintner et al. (D.C.D.C. 1960)	182 F. Supp. 207	6 S. & D. 736.
(D.C.D.C. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 842.
Courtaulds (Alabama) Inc. v. Paul R. Dixon et al. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	294 F. 2d 899	7 S. & D. 97.
Cox & Cox; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1923)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 329.
Crafts, James F., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1957)	244 F. 2d 882	6 S. & D. 204.
Crafts, James F.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	355 U.S. 9	6 S. & D. 204n.
Rehearing denied (1957)	355 U.S. 885
Crancer, L.A., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1935)	76 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 291.
Crane Co.; Briggs Mfg. Co. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1960)	185 F. Supp. 177	6 S. & D. 797.
(C.A. 6 1960)	280 F. 2d 747	6 S. & D. 797n.
Cream of Wheat Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1926)	14 F. 2d 40	1 S. & D. 539.
Credit Card Service Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1974)	495 F. 2d 1004	9 S. & D. 914.
Crosse & Blackwell Co. (John T. Menzies, et al.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1956)	145 F. Supp. 164	6 S. & D. 42.
Crosse & Blackwell Co. (John T. Menzies, et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1957)	242 F. 2d 81	6 S. & D. 225.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 957
Crosse & Blackwell Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1959)	262 F. 2d 600	6 S. & D. 483.
Crown Mfrs. Ass'n. of America et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1949)	176 F. 2d 974	5 S. & D. 150.
Crown Manufacturing Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
Crown Zellerbach Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1946)	156 F. 2d 927	4 S. & D. 507.
Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1961)	296 F. 2d 800	7 S. & D. 126.
Certiorari denied (1962)	370 U.S. 937
Crowther, Walter E., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1070.
Crowther, Walter E.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in--
Cubberley, U.S. ex rel. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1933)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 240.
Curtis Brothers, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
Curtis Publishing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1921)	270 Fed. 881	1 S. & D. 93.
Curtis Publishing Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1923)	260 U.S. 568	1 S. & D. 271.
Curtiss-Wright Corp. and Martin A. Sherry; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 935.
CWF Corporation; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
Dalton et al., Mick; U.S. v. (D.C. Nebr. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Damar Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 323	7 S. & D. 566.
Dandy Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	332 F. 2d 985	7 S. & D. 920.
Certiorari denied (1965)	379 U.S. 961
Daniel Brokerage Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1940)	109 F. 2d 268	3 S. & D. 184.
Daresh Garment Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
Dartmouth Finishing Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1276.
David R. Markin, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mich. 1974)	391 F. Supp. 865	9 S. & D. 1138.
David Rettinger v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1968)	392 F. 2d 454	8 S. & D. 743.
David W. Erickson (d/b/a Erickson Hair and Scalp Specialists) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1959)	272 F. 2d 318	6 S. & D. 697.
Certiorari denied (1960)	362 U.S. 940
David W. Margulies v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1964)	339 F. 2d 603	7 S. & D. 1076.
Davidson, Gene J. (Commercial Distributors of America Inc.); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
Davis, G. Fred; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Texas 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Davis, John H., et al (t/a Normandie Et Cie) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 465.
Dayco Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	362 F. 2d 180	8 S. & D. 327.
Day, J. Edward, et al.; Carl Brandenfels v. (C.A.D.C. 1963)	316 F. 2d 375	7 S. & D. 648.
Certiorari denied (1963)	375 U.S. 824
Dayton Rubber Co., The; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
D. D. D. Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	125 F. 2d 679	3 S. & D. 455.
Dean Foods Co. and Bowman Dairy Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1966)	356 F. 2d 481	8 S. & D. 21.
(Sup. Ct. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 39.
(C.A. 7 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 474.
Dean Foods Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	384 U.S. 597	8 S. & D. 208.
Dean Milk Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1968)	395 F. 2d 696	8 S. & D. 699.
Dearborn Supply Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	146 F. 2d 5	4 S. & D. 303.
Deckelbaum, Howard (Sun Cut Rate Drug Store); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. W. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 689.
Decker, Amiel F., et al. (t/a Decker Products Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 212.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 786
(C.A.D.C. 1949)	176 F. 2d 461	5 S. & D. 137.
Certiorari denied (1949)	338 U.S. 878
Deer et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1945)	152 F. 2d 65	4 S. & D. 437.
Deeter, Larry M. (Educational Surveys); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
De Forest's Training, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1943)	134 F. 2d 819	3 S. & D. 552.
De Gorter, Jacques, et al. (t/a Pelta Furs) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1957)	244 F. 2d 270	6 S. & D. 310.
Dejay Stores, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	200 F. 2d 865	5 S. & D. 475.
Del L. Young; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
DeLaval Steam Turbine Co. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Delaware Watch Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	332 F. 2d 745	7 S. & D. 915.
Delco Novelty Co. and DeLuxe Products Co. (Alvin B. Wolf t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	135 F. 2d 564	3 S. & D. 564.
Delco Novelty Co. and DeLuxe Products Co. (Alvin B. Wolf t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 824.
Denman Rubber Manufacturing Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Dentists' Supply Co. of New York, The, and The L. D. Caulk Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
Deran Confectionery Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 724.
Dictograph Products, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	217 F. 2d 821	5 S. & D. 707.
Certiorari denied (1955)	349 U.S. 940
Diener's, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1974)	494 F. 2d 1132	9 S. & D. 901.
Dietzgen Co., Eugene, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730
Dietz Gum Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1939)	104 F. 2d 999	3 S. & D. 116.
Certiorari denied (1939)	308 U.S. 610
Dilger, Walter L. (Beatrice Foods Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 662.
(C.A. 7 1960)	276 F. 2d 739	6 S. & D. 773.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 882
Directory Publishing Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1953)	208 F. 2d 632	5 S. & D. 593.
Distinctive Emblem & Uniform Corp. et al. (Seymour S. Hindman); U.S. v. (D.C.D. N.J. 1960)	179 F. Supp. 926	6 S. & D. 715.
(D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
Dixon, Paul Rand, et al.; Continental Baking Co. v. (D.C. Del. 1968)	283 F. Supp. 285	8 S. & D. 679.
Dixon, Paul Rand, et al.; Knoll Associates, Inc. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	232 F. Supp. 283	7 S. & D. 937.
Dixon, Paul Rand, et al.; The Elmo Division of Drive-X Co., Inc., et al. v. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	348 F. 2d 342	7 S. & D. 1124.
D. J. Mahler Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.R.I. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 691.
Dlutz, Walter v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1969)	406 F. 2d 227	8 S. & D. 880.
Certiorari denied (1969)	395 U.S. 936
Rehearing denied (1969)	396 U.S. 869
Dodson, J. G. et al. (t/a Ironized Yeast Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 303.
Certiorari denied (1935)	296 U.S. 623
Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1968)	392 F. 2d 921	8 S. & D. 725.
Dolcin Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1954)	219 F. 2d 742	5 S. & D. 646.
Certiorari denied (1955)	348 U.S. 981
Dolcin Corp. et al., In re (C.A.D.C. 1956)	247 F. 2d 524	6 S. & D. 123.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 988
Dollar Co., Robert; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 9 1929)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 682.
Domestic Diathermy Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 803.
Dooley, Inc., Paul R., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Dorfman et al. (Stetson Felt Mills) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1944)	144 F. 2d 737	4 S. & D. 278.
Double Eagle Lubricants, Inc. v. The State of Texas (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	248 F. Supp. 515	7 S. & D. 1416.
Appeal dismissed (1966)	384 U.S. 434
Double Eagle Lubricants, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1965)	360 F. 2d 268	7 S. & D. 1413.
Double Eagle Refining Co. (Frank A. Kerran et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1959)	265 F. 2d 246	6 S. & D. 533.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 818
Douglas Candy Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1942)	125 F. 2d 665	3 S. & D. 449.
Douglas Fir Exploitation & Export Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1922)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 197.
Douglass Candy Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	102 F. 2d 69	3 S. & D. 51.
Doyle, Bascom v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	356 F. 2d 381	8 S. & D. 40.
Dr. A. Posner Shoes, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 789.
(C.A.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 789.
Drath, Carl (t/a Broadway Gift Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1956)	239 F. 2d 452	6 S. & D. 105.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 917
Drew & Co., Inc., E.F. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 735	6 S. & D. 34.
Certiorari denied (1957)	352 U.S. 969
Drew Corp., The Irving; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
Dr. F. A. Newcomb v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 199.
Dr. Hiss Shoes, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Dr. W. B. Caldwell, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	111 F. 2d 889	3 S. & D. 218.
Dubinoff, Louis (t/a Famous Pure Silk Hosiery Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1938)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 459.
Dunlop Tire and Rubber Corp.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Duon, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Fla. 1959, 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
Durkee-Atwood Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Durlacher and Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
Dyche, William A. v. Wayne E. Kaplan et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Eagle-Picher Co., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	227 F. 2d 825	5 S. & D. 749.
Certiorari denied (1956)	351 U.S. 964
(C.A. 7 1957)	244 F. 2d 312	6 S. & D. 328.
Eagle-Picher Co., The, et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	352 U.S. 419	6 S. & D. 193.
E. & J. Distributing Co. (Jacob Colon et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	193 F. 2d 179	5 S. & D. 349.
Certiorari denied (1952)	344 U.S. 823
Eastman Kodak Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1946)	158 F. 2d 592	4 S. & D. 585.
Certiorari denied (1947)	330 U.S. 828
Eastman Kodak Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1925)	7 F. 2d 994	1 S. & D. 422.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Eastman Kodak Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1927)	274 U.S. 619	1 S. & D. 616.
E. B. Muller & Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1944)	142 F. 2d 511	4 S. & D. 151.
Eclipse Sleep Products of New England Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 525.
Eclipse Sleep Products of New England Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 773.
Edelmann & Co., E., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1956)	239 F. 2d 152	6 S. & D. 113.
Certiorari denied (1958)	355 U.S. 941
Educational Surveys (Larry M. Deeter); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
Educators Association, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1939)	108 F. 2d 470	3 S. & D. 171.
(C.A. 2 1940)	110 F. 2d 72	3 S. & D. 208.
(C.A. 2 1941)	118 F. 2d 562	3 S. & D. 356.
Edward P. Paul & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1948)	169 F. 2d 294	4 S. & D. 734.
Edwin Cigar Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1933)	67 F. 2d 993	2 S. & D. 246.
F. F. Drew & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 735	6 S. & D. 34.
Certiorari denied (1957)	352 U.S. 969
Eghan, Eli (t/a Ox'O Gas Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1947)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 666.
E. Griffiths Hughes Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1933)	63 F. 2d 362	2 S. & D. 213.
(C.A. 2 1935)	77 F. 2d 886	2 S. & D. 300.
Certiorari denied (1935)	296 U.S. 617
Einiger Mills, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
E. J. Brach & Sons v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 133.
Ekco Products Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	347 F. 2d 745	7 S. & D. 1278.
Electric Bond & Share Co. (A. E. Smith, et al.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1929)	34 F. 2d 323	1 S. & D. 709.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1932)	1 F. Supp. 247	2 S. & D. 191.
Electrolysis Associates, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 681.
Electro Thermal Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1937)	91 F. 2d 477	2 S. & D. 412.
Certiorari denied (1937)	302 U.S. 748
Elizabeth Arden, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1946)	156 F. 2d 132	4 S. & D. 490.
Certiorari denied (1947)	331 U.S. 806
Elliot Knitwear, Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	266 F. 2d 787	6 S. & D. 566.
Elliot Knitwear, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 366.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
Elmer C. Adams, Sr., and Adams Dairy Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1961)	296 F. 2d 861	7 S. & D. 269.
Certiorari denied (1962)	369 U.S. 864
Elmer Candy Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. La. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 725.
Elmer J. Schnackenberg et al.; Paul Theodore Cheff (Holland Furnace) v. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	384 U.S. 373	8 S. & D. 176.
Elmo Co., Inc., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1967)	389 F. 2d 550	8 S. & D. 610.
Certiorari denied (1968)	392 U.S. 905
Elmo Division of Drive-X Co., Inc., The, et al. v. Paul Rand Dixon et al. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	348 F. 2d 342	7 S. & D. 1124.
El Moro Cigar Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1939)	107 F. 2d 429	3 S. & D. 166.
Emile M. LaPeyre et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	366 F. 2d 117	8 S. & D. 343.
Empire Builders Co. (Harry Stroiman d/b/a);

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1970)	428 F. 2d 808	8 S. & D. 1229.
Empire Merchandise Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 183.
Empire Press, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
Encyclopaedia Britannica, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	517 F. 2d 1013	9 S. & D. 1360.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; American Brands, Inc. v. (C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Glenn W. Turner v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 767.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Liggett & Myers, Inc. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Loew's Theatres, Inc. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Philip Morris Inc. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Engman, Lewis A., et al.; Sydney N. Floersheim v. (C.A. D.C. 1973)	494 F. 2d 949	9 S. & D. 766.
Enurtone Co. (Maurice J. Feil et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1960)	285 F. 2d 879	6 S. & D. 875.
Environmental Protection Agency v. Patsy T. Mink, et al. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	410 U.S. 73 94 S. Ct. 827	9 S. & D. 457.
Epstein, Murray, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
Erickson Hair and Scalp Specialists v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1959)	272 F. 2d 318	6 S. & D. 697.
Certiorari denied (1960)	362 U.S. 940
Erie Laboratories, Inc., etc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 704.
Erie Sand and Gravel Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1961)	291 F. 2d 279	7 S. & D. 118.
E. R. Page Co., Inc., The; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
Estrin, Louis, et al. (t/a Hudson Fur Dyeing Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 441.
Etablissements Rigaud, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	125 F. 2d 590	3 S. & D. 446.
Eugene Dietzgen Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730
Eugene I. Woodle, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 656.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Evans Fur Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1937)	88 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 380.
Evans Novelty Co., etc. (Mitchell A. Bazelon et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 441.
Evis Manufacturing Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1961)	287 F. 2d 831	7 S. & D. 52.
Certiorari denied (1961)	368 U.S. 824
Excelsior Laboratory, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1948)	171 F. 2d 484	4 S. & D. 792.
Exposition Press, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1961)	295 F. 2d 869	7 S. & D. 240.
Certiorari denied (1962)	370 U.S. 917
Exquisite Form Brassiere, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	301 F. 2d 499	7 S. & D. 259.
Certiorari denied (1962)	369 U.S. 888
(C.A.D.C. 1965)	360 F. 2d 492	7 S. & D. 1291.
Certiorari denied (1966)	384 U.S. 959
Exxon Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 905.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Exxon Corporation v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	384 F. Supp. 755	9 S. & D. 1077.
Fabricon Co. (William Bogolub doing business as); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
Fair, Albert E., et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 178.
Fair, The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1959)	272 F. 2d 609	6 S. & D. 708.
Fairyfoot Products Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1935)	80 F. 2d 684	2 S. & D. 330.
Fairyfoot Products Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1938)	94 F. 2d 844	2 S. & D. 444.
F. A. Martoccio Co. (t/a/ Hollywood Candy Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1937)	87 F. 2d 561	2 S. & D. 381.
Certiorari denied (1937)	301 U.S. 691
Family Publications Service, Inc.; Leila Mourning v. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	411 U.S. 356 93 S. Ct. 1652	9 S. & D. 638.
Family Record Plan, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
Famous Pure Silk Hoisery Co. (Louis Dubinoff t/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1938)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 459.
Farm Journal, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 739.
Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1940)	114 F. 2d 80	3 S. & D. 269.
(Sup. Ct. 1941)	312 U.S. 457	3 S. & D. 345.
Feder, Abraham; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Federated Department Stores, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 318	8 S. & D. 338.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	261 F. Supp. 553	8 S. & D. 382.
Federated Nationwide Wholesalers Service, Garydean Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1968)	398 F. 2d 253	8 S. & D. 785.
Feil, Maurice J., et al. (t/a Enurtone Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1960)	285 F. 2d 879	6 S. & D. 875.
Feitler, Bernice, et al. (t/a Gardner & Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1953)	201 F. 2d 790	5 S. & D. 491.
Certiorari denied (1953)	346 U.S. 814
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Feldman, Jerry L. and Checker Taxi Company, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1326.
Fifteen Cases of Silk Scarves, More or Less,

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Containing Approximately 7414 Dozen Scarves; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 704.
Fioret Sales Co., Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	100 F. 2d 358	2 S. & D. 481.
(C.A. 2 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 108.
Fire Safety Services, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., The; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	360 F. 2d 470	8 S. & D. 145.
Certiorari denied (1967)	385 U.S. 1002
(C.A. 6 1973)	481 F. 2d 246	9 S. & D. 706.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 1112
First National City Bank, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1551.
Firth, Lemuel, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 426.
Floersheim Sales Co., etc. (Sydney N. Floersheim trading as) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1969)	411 F. 2d 874	8 S. & D. 920.
Certiorari denied (1970)	396 U.S. 1002
Floersheim, Sydney, In re (C.A. 9 1963)	316 F. 2d 423	7 S. & D. 666.
Floersheim, Sydney N. (trading as Floersheim Sales Co., etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1969)	411 F. 2d 876	8 S. & D. 920.
Certiorari denied (1970)	396 U.S. 1002
Floersheim, Sydney N. v. Caspar N. Weinberger (D.C. D.C. 1972)	346 F. Supp. 950	9 S. & D. 220.
Floersheim, Sydney N. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (C.A. D.C. 1973)	494 F. 2d 949	9 S. & D. 819.
Flotill Products, Inc. F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 665.
Flotill Products, Inc.; v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1960)	278 F. 2d 850	6 S. & D. 798.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 920
Flotill Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	358 F. 2d 224	8 S. & D. 69.
Flotill Products, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1967)	389 U.S. 179	8 S. & D. 596.
Fluegelman & Co., Inc., N. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1930)	37 F. 2d 59	2 S. & D. 62.
Fluidless Non-Tact Lenses, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Flynn & Emrich Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1931)	52 F. 2d 836	2 S. & D. 141.
Folds et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	187 F. 2d 658	5 S. & D. 271.
Folger & Co., J. A. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 857.
Fong Poy et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1941)	124 F. 2d 398	3 S. & D. 427.
Fong Poy et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Food Marketers, Inc., and W. Earl Graham; F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. La. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 663.
Ford Motor Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 310.
(C.A. 6 1941)	120 F. 2d 175	3 S. & D. 378.
Certiorari denied (1941)	314 U.S. 668
Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1148.
Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1965)	348 F. 2d 674	7 S. & D. 1303.
Certiorari denied (1965)	382 U.S. 959
Foremost-McKesson, Inc., and William W. Morison; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1231.
Forster Mfg. Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1964)	335 F. 2d 47	7 S. & D. 943.
Certiorari denied (1965)	380 U.S. 906
(C.A. 1 1966)	361 F. 2d 340	8 S. & D. 166.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Certiorari denied (1967)	385 U.S. 1093
Rehearing denied (1967)	387 U.S. 938
Fort Howard Paper Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	156 F. 2d 899	4 S. & D. 496.
Certiorari denied (1946)	329 U.S. 795
Foster Canning, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Foster Wheeler Corp. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Foucha, Norman J. (American Aluminum Corp.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ala. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1092.
Foucha, Norman J., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	356 F. Supp. 21	9 S. & D. 605.
Foucha, Norman J., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 759.
Fox Film Corporation v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1924)	296 Fed. 353	1 S. & D. 331.
Fox, I. J., Inc. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Frank Sibert et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1966)	367 F. 2d 364	8 S. & D. 375.
Fred Meyer, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	359 F. 2d 351	8 S. & D. 82.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 908
Certiorari granted limited to one question (1967)	386 U.S. 907
Fred Meyer, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1968)	390 U.S. 341	8 S. & D. 684.
Frederick Chusid; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 912.
Freed, N.C., Company, Inc., et al. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al. (C.A. 2 1973)	473 F. 2d 1210	9 S. & D. 451.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 827
Freeman, Joseph (Gift Products, Inc. et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 786.
Freeman, Orville L.; The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Inc. v. (C.A.D.C. 1966)	369 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 368.
Freeman, Orville; Safeway Stores, Inc. v. (C.A.D.C. 1966)	396 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 368.
Frelich, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
Fresh Grown Preserve Corp. et al., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	125 F. 2d 917	3 S. & D. 460.
(C.A. 2 1943)	139 F. 2d 200	3 S. & D. 617.
Fried, Leo, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 527.
Fried Woolen Corp., Joe, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
Frito-Lay, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Tex. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 143.
(C.A. 5 1967)	380 F. 2d 8	8 S. & D. 504.
Frito-Lay, Inc., and PepsiCo, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1310.
Froman, Harry (t/a Supreme Sales Co., etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 181.
Fruchtman, Irwin; U.S. v. (C.A. 6 1970)	421 F. 2d 1019	8 S. & D. 1103.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 849
Fruit Growers' Express, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1921)	274 Fed. 205	1 S. & D. 134.
Application dismissed (1923)	261 U.S. 629
Fruitvale Canning Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 172.
Fry, Lloyd A., Roofing Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1966)	371 F. 2d 277	8 S. & D. 401.
Fulton Co., John J. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1942)	130 F. 2d 85	3 S. & D. 499.
Certiorari denied (1942)	317 U.S. 679

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
G. Leach & Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 819.
Gallo, Julio R.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 782
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 806
Galter v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	186 F. 2d 810	5 S. & D. 252.
Certiorari denied (1951)	342 U.S. 818
Gamble-Skogmo, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1954)	211 F. 2d 106	5 S. & D. 603.
Gardner & Co. (Bernice Feitler et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1953)	201 F. 2d 790	5 S. & D. 491.
Certiorari denied (1953)	346 U.S. 814
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corporation v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al. (C.A. D.C. 1972)	464 F. 2d 838	9 S. & D. 314.
Garment Mfrs. Assn., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1934)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 265.
Garofalo, C. James (Masterkraft Guild Weavers, Inc.); U.S. v. (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Gartner, Robert J. (Charles F. Gomez et al.); U.S. v. (D.C. Nebr. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
Gates Rental, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1442
Gay Games, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1953)	204 F. 2d 197	5 S. & D. 514.
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Gelb et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	144 F. 2d 580	4 S. & D. 271.
Gellman Brothers; U.S. v. (D.C. Minn. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 737.
Gellman, Nate, et al. (d/b/a Gellman Brothers) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1961)	206 F. 2d 666	7 S. & D. 111.
General Auto Supplies, Inc., et al. (National Parts Warehouse et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	346 F. 2d 311	7 S. & D. 1229.
Certiorari dismissed (1965)	382 U.S. 923
General Electric Co. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
General Foods Corp. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 770.
(C.A. 3 1959)	267 F. 2d 439	6 S. & D. 575.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 923
(C.A. 3 1967)	386 F. 2d 936	8 S. & D. 581.
Certiorari denied (1968)	391 U.S. 919
(D.C. W.D. Mich. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 571.
(D.C. W.D. Mich. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 768.
General Merchandise Co. (David Kritzik d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	125 F. 2d 351	3 S. & D. 444.
General Motors Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1940)	114 F. 2d 33.	3 S. & D. 282.
Certiorari denied (1941)	312 U.S. 682
(C.A. 6 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 506.
(C.A. 6 1965)	352 F. 2d 415	7 S. & D. 1409.
General Portland Cement Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.
General Products Corp. (Ray S. Kalwajtys et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1956)	237 F. 2d 654	6 S. & D. 72.
Certiorari denied (1957)	352 U.S. 1025
General Products Corp. (Ray S. Kalwajtys et al. d/b/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
General Tire & Rubber Co., The; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31.	6 S. & D. 220.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Gen-O-Pak (Lester Rothschild t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1952)	200 F. 2d 39	5 S. & D. 441.
Certiorari denied (1953)	345 U.S. 941
Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1970)	313 F. Supp. 855	8 S. & D. 1180.
(C.A. 5 1971)	445 F. 2d 1382	9 S. & D. 78.
George H. Lee Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1935)	76 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 291.
George H. Lee Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1940)	113 F. 2d 583	3 S. & D. 277.
George's Radio and Television Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
George T. Robertson et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1969)	415 F. 2d 49	8 S. & D. 995.
George Ziegler Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1937)	90 F. 2d 1007	2 S. & D. 397.
Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	518 F. 2d 33	9 S. & D. 1363.
Gerrard Co., Inc., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 491.
Gerson, Jonas (t/a Haven Co.) F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	325 F. 2d 93	7 S. & D. 821.
Giant Food Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1962)	307 F. 2d 184	7 S. & D. 483.
Certiorari denied (1963)	372 U.S. 910
(C.A.D.C. 1963)	322 F. 2d 977	7 S. & D. 710.
Certiorari dismissed (1964)	376 U.S. 967
Gibson, H. R., Sr., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1972)	460 F. 2d 605	9 S. & D. 290.
Gibson, H. R., Sr., et al. v. Al Cohen, et al. (D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D.
Gibson, H. R., Sr., et al. v. Harold Hassenfeld, et al. (D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1530.
Gifford-Hill & Company, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1125.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	523 F. 2d 730	9 S. & D. 1537.
Gift Products, Inc., et al. (Joseph Freeman); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 786.
Gimbel Brothers v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 549.
Gimbel Brothers, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	116 F. 2d 578	3 S. & D. 314.
Glade Candy Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1939)	106 F. 2d 962	3 S. & D. 139.
Certiorari denied (1940)	309 U.S. 675
Gladstone-Arcuni, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 856.
Gladstone, Emanuel; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 6.
(C.A. 5 1971)	450 F. 2d 913	9 S. & D. 167.
Glen E. Jorgensen and C.I.T. Financial Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1352.
Glenn W. Turner v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 766.
Globe Cardboard Novelty Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1951)	192 F. 2d 444	5 S. & D. 342.
Globe Feather & Down Co. (Buryl J. Lazar et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	240 F. 2d 176	6 S. & D. 167.
Globe Printing Co. (Morris Aron et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1943)	50 F. Supp. 289	3 S. & D. 560.
Globe Readers Service, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1961)	285 F. 2d 692	7 S. & D. 1.
Gluck, Morris A. (Air Conditioning Training

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Corp. et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Goldberg, Max H. (t/a Novel Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	283 F. 2d 299	6 S. & D. 839.
Goldcraft Portrait Studio, etc. (Eugene D. Petrey t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 327.
Golden Grain Macaroni Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 9 1972)	472 F. 2d 882	9 S. & D. 430.
Certiorari denied (1973)	419 U.S. 918
Goldfine, Bernard, et al. (Northfield Mills, Inc.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Vt. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
Goldman, Jacob L., et al. (t/a Atlas Health Appliance Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 696.
Gold Tone Studios, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1950)	183 F. 2d 257	5 S. & D. 200.
Gomez, Charles F. et al. (Robert J. Gartner); U.S. v. (D.C. Nebr. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
Good-Grape Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 6 1930)	45 F. 2d 70	2 S. & D. 95.
Goodhope, Andrew C.; Seven-Up Co. v. (D.C. E.D. Mo. 1972)	349 F. Supp. 551	9 S. & D. 366.
Goodman, Abel Allan (t/a Weavers Guild) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1957)	244 F. 2d 584	6 S. & D. 284.
Goodrich Co., The B. F., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. D.C. 1953)	208 F. 2d 829	5 S. & D. 572.
(D.C. D.C. 1955)	134 F. Supp. 39	5 S. & D. 734.
(D.C. D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 488.
(D.C. D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 492.
(C.A. D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 494.
(D.C. D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 524.
(C.A. D.C. 1964)	336 F. 2d 754	7 S. & D. 956.
(C.A. D.C. 1967)	383 F. 2d 942	8 S. & D. 543.
Goodrich Co., The B.F., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
(Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 739	7 S. & D. 1263.
Goodrich Co., The B.F.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 6 1937)	92 F. 2d 677	2 S. & D. 422.
(C.A. 6 1939)	101 F. 2d 620	3 S. & D. 63.
Certiorari denied (1939)	308 U.S. 557
(D.C.D.C. 1950)	88 F. Supp. 789	5 S. & D. 162.
(C.A. 7 1964)	331 F. 2d 394	7 S. & D. 900.
(Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 357	7 S. & D. 1238.
Rehearing denied (1965)	382 U.S. 873
(D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(Sup. Ct. 1938)	304 U.S. 257	2 S. & D. 456.
(C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Gotlieb, Lenard, et al. (t/a Reed's Cut Rate Drug Store, etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. W. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 686.
Graber Mfg. Co., Inc., et al. v. Paul Rand Dixon et al. (D.C.D.C. 1963)	233 F. Supp. 1020	7 S. & D. 810.
Graham, W. Earl, and Food Marketers, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. La. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 663.
Gramer, Walter W. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 348.
Gramer, Walter W.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
Grand Jury Proceedings, In re (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Grand Rapids Furniture Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
3 1943)	134 F. 2d 332	3 S. & D. 550.
Grand Rapids Varnish Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 6 1929)	41 F. 2d 996	1 S. & D. 724.
Grand Union Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	300 F. 2d 92	7 S. & D. 329.
Graphited Lubricants Co. (Harry Augen d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 599.
Gratz et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1919)	258 Fed. 314	1 S. & D. 43.
(Sup. Ct. 1920)	253 U.S. 421	1 S. & D. 69.
Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	106 F. 2d 667	3 S. & D. 146.
Certiorari denied (1940)	308 U.S. 625
Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Inc., The, v. Orville L. Freeman (C.A.D.C. 1966)	369 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 368.
Great Minneapolis Surplus Store, Inc., The, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Great Western Distributing Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1964)	338 F. 2d 967	7 S. & D. 1029.
Greater Kansas City Gas & Air Conditioning Company, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Green, Harry W.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	252 F. Supp. 153	8 S. & D. 53.
Green Supply Co., etc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 510.
Gross, Herman (Elliot Knitwear, Inc., et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	266 F. 2d 787	6 S. & D. 566.
Grove Laboratories v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1969)	418 F. 2d 489	8 S. & D. 1041.
Grove Laboratories, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 858.
Guaranteed Silverware Distributors, etc. (R. D. Anderson d/b/a); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Ky. 1965)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
Guarantee Veterinary Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1922)	285 Fed. 853	1 S. & D. 246.
Guignon, Paul C., et al. (Anheuser-Busch, Inc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1966)	261 F. Supp. 215	8 S. & D. 377.
(C.A. 8 1968)	390 F. 2d 323	8 S. & D. 640.
Gulf Oil Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1945)	150 F. 2d 106	4 S. & D. 374.
Gulf Refining Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1922)	282 Fed. 81	1 S. & D. 226.
Gulf Refining Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1923)	261 U.S. 463	1 S. & D. 306.
Guziak, John A. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1966)	361 F. 2d 700	8 S. & D. 188.
Certiorari denied (1967)	385 U.S. 1007
Gynex Corp. (Bureau of Hygiene); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 731.
H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1972)	460 F. 2d 605	9 S. & D. 290.
H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al. v. Al Cohen, et al. (D.C. S.D. Texas 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1510.
H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al. v. Harold Hassenfeld, et al. (D.C. E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1530.
Hall Clothes, Inc., Robert, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Hall, James B., Jr., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1933)	67 F. 2d 993	2 S. & D. 246.
Hall, Joseph B., et al. and The Kroger Co. v. William F. Lamke (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 470.
Hallmark, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	170 F. Supp. 24	6 S. & D. 452.
(C.A. 7 1959)	265 F. 2d 433	6 S. & D. 539.
Halperin, Abe (Universal Educational Guild, Inc., et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Halperin, Isadore, et al. (t/a Wellworth Sales		3 S. & D. 472.
Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported.
Halseth, Perry (t/a Perry Sales Co.) v.		5 S. & D. 678.
F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1954)	Not reported.
Certiorari denied (1955)	348 U.S. 928
Hamilton Manufacturing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1952)	194 F. 2d 346	5 S. & D. 360.
Hammond Lumber Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 9 1929)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 682.
Hammond, Snyder Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1922)	284 Fed. 886	1 S. & D. 254.
(Sup. Ct. 1925)	267 U.S. 586	1 S. & D. 408.
Hansen Baking Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	366 F. 2d 795	8 S. & D. 351.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 932
Harbor Banana Distributors, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	499 F. 2d 395	9 S. & D. 1090.
Hargo Woolen Mills, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D.N.H. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
Harlem Paper Products Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1957)	240 F. 2d 341	6 S. & D. 136.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 820
Harlich Mfg. Co. (Leo Lichtenstein d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1952)	194 F. 2d 607	5 S. & D. 367.
Certiorari denied (1952)	344 U.S. 819
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Harrell, John R. and Natalia E.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Ill. 1962)	205 F. Supp. 17	7 S. & D. 474.
(C.A. 7 1963)	313 F. 2d 854	7 S. & D. 643.
Harriet Hubbard Ayer, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1926)	15 F. 2d 274	1 S. & D. 569.
Certiorari denied (1927)	273 U.S. 759
Harry W. Green; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	252 F. Supp. 153	8 S. & D. 53.
Harsam Distributors, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	263 F. 2d 396	6 S. & D. 528.
Hartman Wholesale Drug Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1938)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 629.
Haskelite Manufacturing Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	127 F. 2d 765	3 S. & D. 485.
Hassenfeld, Harold, et al.; Gibson, H.R. Sr., et al. v. (D.C.E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1530.
Hastings Manufacturing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1946)	153 F. 2d 253	4 S. & D. 460.
Certiorari denied (1946)	328 U.S. 853
Hauptman Feather Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
Hauptman, Jacob; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
Haven Co. (Jonas Gerson t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	325 F. 2d 93	7 S. & D. 821.
Haynes & Co., Inc., Justin, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1939)	105 F. 2d 988	3 S. & D. 134.
Certiorari denied (1939)	308 U.S. 616
Hearst Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Heater, John Clifford v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1974)	503 F. 2d 321	9 S. & D. 1099.
Heavenly Creations, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	339 F. 2d 7	7 S. & D. 1035.
Certiorari denied (1965)	380 U.S. 955

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Heinz Co., H.J., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Heinz W. Kirchner (d/b/a Universe Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1964)	337 F. 2d 751	7 S. & D. 1018.
Helbros Watch Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1962)	310 F. 2d 868	7 S. & D. 596.
Certiorari denied (1963)	372 U.S. 976
Helen Ardelle, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	101 F. 2d 718	3 S. & D. 59.
Helene Curtis Industries, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
Heller & Son, Inc., L., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Henry Broch & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	261 F. 2d 725	6 S. & D. 464.
(C.A. 7 1960)	285 F. 2d 764	6 S. & D. 843.
Henry Broch & Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1960)	363 U.S. 166	6 S. & D. 800.
Henry Broch & Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1962)	368 U.S. 360	7 S. & D. 305.
Herbal Medicine Co. (George Earl McKewen et al. t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
Herbal Medicine Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
Herbold Laboratory, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1967)	267 F. Supp. 53	8 S. & D. 485.
(D.C.C.D. Calif. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
Herbold Laboratory, Inc., et al. v. U.S. (C.A. 9 1969)	413 F. 2d 342	8 S. & D. 977.
Hershey Chocolate Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1941)	121 F. 2d 968	3 S. & D. 392.
Herzfeld et al. (d/b/a Stephen Rug Mills) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	140 F. 2d 207	4 S. & D. 109.
Herzog & Co., Jack; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1945)	150 F. 2d 450	4 S. & D. 399.
(C.A. 2 1946)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 582.
Heuser, Herman, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1925)	4 F. 2d 632	1 S. & D. 404.
Heusner & Son, H.N., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	106 F. 2d 596	3 S. & D. 136.
Hill, Joe B., et al. (t/a McAfee Candy Co., etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	124 F. 2d 104	3 S. & D. 436.
Hillman Periodicals, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1949)	174 F. 2d 122	5 S. & D. 103.
Hills Bros. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1926)	9 F. 2d 481	1 S. & D. 467.
Certiorari denied (1926)	270 U.S. 662
Hilton Watch & Clock Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 655.
Hindman, Seymour S. (Distinctive Emblem & Uniform Corp. et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	179 F. Supp. 926	6 S. & D. 715.
(D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
Hires Turner Glass Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1935)	81 F. 2d 362	2 S. & D. 315.
Hirzel Canning Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Hiss Shoes, Inc., Dr.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
H.J. Heinz Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	262 F. Supp. 383	8 S. & D. 1305.
H.N. Heusner & Son v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	106 F. 2d 596	3 S. & D. 136.
Hobart Corporation v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Hoboken White Lead & Color Works Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1931)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 108.
(C.A. 2 1933)	67 F. 2d 551	2 S. & D. 241.
Hofeller Candy Co., Bob, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1936)	82 F. 2d 647	2 S. & D. 338.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 557
(C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 473.
Hoffberger, Samuel H. (Pompeian Olive Oil Corp.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1956)	145 F. Supp. 164	6 S. & D. 42.
Hoffberger, Samuel H. (Pompeian Olive Oil Corp.), v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1957)	242 F. 2d 81	6 S. & D. 225.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 957
Hoffman Aircraft Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. Kans. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
Hoffman Engineering Co. (Nathan Hoffman d/b/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 327.
Hoffmann, Royce George, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. Kansas 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 104.
Holiday Magic, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 602.
Holland Furnace Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1959)	269 F. 2d 203	6 S. & D. 645.
Certiorari denied (1960)	361 U.S. 932
Holland Furnace Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1961)	295 F. 2d 302	7 S. & D. 234.
Holland Furnace Co. et al., In re (C.A. 7 1965)	341 F. 2d 548	7 S. & D. 1101.
Certiorari denied (1965)	381 U.S. 924
Rehearing denied (1965)	382 U.S. 873
Holland Furnace Co. v. James A. Purcell (D.C.W.D. Mich. 1954)	125 F. Supp. 74	5 S. & D. 679.
Holloway & Co., M.J., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	84 F. 2d 910	2 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 590
(C.A. 7 1938)	94 F. 2d 802	2 S. & D. 439.
(C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 263.
Hollywood Candy Co. (F.A. Martoccio Co. t/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1937)	87 F. 2d 561	2 S. & D. 381.
Certiorari denied (1937)	301 U.S. 691
Hollywood Film Studios; U.S. v. D.C. C.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555
Holst Publishing Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Iowa 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 724.
Home Diathermy Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 683.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
Houbigant, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	139 F. 2d 1019	4 S. & D. 107.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 763
Hoving Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1961)	290 F. 2d 803	7 S. & D. 106.
Howard Co., J. M. (Esther Zitserman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1952)	200 F. 2d 519	5 S. & D. 457.
Howe et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1945)	148 F. 2d 561	4 S. & D. 328.
Certiorari denied (1945)	326 U.S. 741
Hudson Co., The J.L., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 373.
Hudson Fur Dyeing Co. (Louis Estrin et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 441.
Hughes, Inc., E. Griffiths v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1933)	63 F. 2d 362	2 S. & D. 213.
(C.A. 2 1935)	77 F. 2d 886	2 S. & D. 300.
Certiorari denied (1935)	296 U.S. 617
Hunter Mills Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1960)	284 F. 2d 70	6 S. & D. 848.
Certiorari denied (1961)	366 U.S. 903
Hunt Foods and Industries, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1959)	178 F. Supp. 448	6 S. & D. 673.
Hunt Foods and Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1960)	286 F. 2d 803	6 S. & D. 850.
Certiorari denied (1961)	365 U.S. 877
Hurst & Son, T.C. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Va. 1920)	268 Fed. 874	1 S. & D. 81.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Huston, George W. v. Wayne E. Kaplan et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Huttner, Daniel (Sanitary Feather Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
Ice Cream Manufacturers, International Association of, et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1936)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 337.
I. J. Fox, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Illinois Lumber & Material Dealers Assn., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1938)	97 F. 2d 1005	2 S. & D. 466.
Imperial Candy Co. et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1939)	101 F. 2d 718	3 S. & D. 59.
In re , See name of party.
Independent Directory Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1951)	188 F. 2d 468	5 S. & D. 277.
Independent Grocers Alliance Distributing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1953)	203 F. 2d 941	5 S. & D. 519.
Indiana Quartered Oak Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1928)	26 F. 2d 340	1 S. & D. 682.
Certiorari denied (1928)	278 U.S. 623
(C.A. 2 1932)	58 F. 2d 182	2 S. & D. 184.
Inecto, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1934)	70 F. 2d 370	2 S. & D. 279.
(C.A. 2 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 288.
Infra Insulation, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 591.
Ingersoll-Rand Co. (Grand Jury Proc.)(C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Ink Co. of America, The, etc. (Cornelius P. Van Schaack, Jr. t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
Inland Rubber Corp.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Inland Steel Company v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293
International Art Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	109 F. 2d 393	3 S. & D. 188.
Certiorari denied (1940)	310 U.S. 632
International Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1936)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 337.
International Association of Photographers et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
International Creditors Corp. (Melvin G. Rabin d/b/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1004.
International Paper Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1956)	241 F. 2d 372	6 S. & D. 119.
International Parts Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	133 F. 2d 883	3 S. & D. 535.
International Salt Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	80 F. Supp. 419	4 S. & D. 779.
(C.A. 7 1949)	174 F. 2d 703	5 S. & D. 125.
(Sup. Ct. 1950)	338 U.S. 632	5 S. & D. 167.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 800.
International Shoe Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1928)	29 F. 2d 518	1 S. & D. 693.
(Sup. Ct. 1930)	280 U.S. 291	2 S. & D. 53.
Iric Manufacturing Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 908.
Ironized Yeast Co. (J.G. Dodson et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 303.
Certiorari denied (1935)	296 U.S. 623
Irving Drew Corp., The; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Irving Rifkin; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
Irwin Fruchtman; U.S. v. (C.A. 6 1970)	421 F. 2d 1019	8 S. & D. 1103.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 849
Irwin, Milton, et al. (t/a Associated Laboratories) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1944)	143 F. 2d 316	4 S. & D. 198.
ITT Continental Baking Co.; U.S. v. (C.A. 10 1972)	462 F. 2d 1104	9 S. & D. 306.
(C.A. 10 1073)	485 F. 2d 16	9 S. & D. 775.
Certiorari granted (1974)	416 U.S. 968
(Sup. Ct. 1975)	420 U.S. 223 95 S. Ct. 926	9 S. & D. 1187.
ITT Continental Baking Company v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 367	9 S. & D. 1376.
Jack Herzog & Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1945)	150 F. 2d 450	4 S. & D. 399.
(C.A. 2 1946)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 582.
Jackson, Richard, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 842.
Jackson Sales Co., The (Robert C. Bundy t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 417.
Jackson, William K.; Associated Merchandising Corp. et al. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 888.
Jacob Siegel Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1944)	150 F. 2d 751	4 S. & D. 294.
(C.A. 3 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 422.
(Sup. Ct. 1946)	327 U.S. 608	4 S. & D. 476.
Jacobson, Irving Roy, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.W. D. Wis. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
Jaffe, Benjamin v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	123 F. 2d 814	3 S. & D. 422.
Jaffe (Eugene Russell) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	139 F. 2d 112	3 S. & D. 610.
Certiorari denied (1944)	321 U.S. 791
J.A. Folger & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 857.
James, R.B., et al. (t/a Chicago Board Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	253 F. 2d 78	6 S. & D. 385.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 821
Jantzen, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 9 1966)	356 F. 2d 253	8 S. & D. 59.
(Sup. Ct. 1967)	386 U.S. 228	8 S. & D. 425.
(C.A. 9 1967)	383 F. 2d 981	8 S. & D. 578.
J.B. Lippincott Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1943)	137 F. 2d 490	3 S. & D. 584.
J.B. Williams Co., Inc., The, and Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1967)	381 F. 2d 884	8 S. & D. 524.
J. B. Williams Company, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1973)	354 F. Supp. 521	9 S. & D. 483.
(C.A. 2 1974)	498 F. 2d 414	9 S. & D. 938.
J. B. Williams Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1502.
J. C. Martin Co.; etc. (John Kaslow d/b/a) v. Paul Rand Dixon, et al. (D.C.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 665.
(C.A.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 703.
Certiorari denied (1964)	377 U.S. 907
J. C. Martin Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1965)	346 F. 2d 147	7 S. & D. 1228.
Certiorari denied (1966)	382 U.S. 975
J. C. Martin Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	242 F. 2d 530	6 S. & D. 251.
Jenkins, Edward L., et al. (t/a Antisepto Products Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 649.
Jenkins, Roland S. (Artas Mfg. & Sales Corp., The, et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Jergens-Woodbury Sales Corp. v. F.T.C. (C. A. 6 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 550.
J.E. Todd, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1944)	145 F. 2d 858	4 S. & D. 291.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Jerome Blank, President, National Brands, Inc., etc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 814.
Jerry L. Feldman and Checker Taxi Company, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1326.
Jewel Companies, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1970)	482 F. 2d 1155	8 S. & D. 1241.
(D.C. N.D. Ill. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 245.
(C.A. 7 1973)	479 F. 2d 1323	9 S. & D. 598.
J.L. Hudson Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 373.
J. M. Howard Co. (Esther Zitserman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1952)	200 F. 2d 519	5 S. & D. 457.
Joe Fried Woolen Corp., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
John A. Guziak v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1966)	361 F. 2d 700	8 S. & D. 188.
Certiorari denied (1967)	385 U.S. 1007
John Bodner, Jr., and Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1122.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1161.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1227.
John Clifford Heater, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1974)	503 F. 2d 321	9 S. & D. 1099.
John H. Pahlman (Anheuser-Busch, Inc.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1968)	390 F. 2d 323	8 S. & D. 640.
John J. Fulton Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1942)	130 F. 2d 85	3 S. & D. 499.
Certiorari denied (1942)	317 U.S. 679
John Spector v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 612.
Johnson Candy Co., Walter H. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1935)	78 F. 2d 717	2 S. & D. 303.
Johnson Hair and Scalp Clinic v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1959)	266 F. 2d 560	6 S. & D. 572.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 914
Jones Co., Inc., H.C.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1922)	284 Fed. 886	1 S. & D. 254.
(Sup. Ct. 1925)	267 U.S. 586	1 S. & D. 408.
Jorgensen, Glen E. and C.I.T. Financial Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1352.
Joseph A. Kaplan & Sons, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	347 F. 2d 785	7 S. & D. 1204.
Joseph Campbell Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Joseph J. Broussard v. Socony Mobile Oil Co., Inc. et al. (C.A. 5 1965)	350 F. 2d 346	7 S. & D. 1294.
Joseph S. Kujawski; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1969)	298 F. Supp. 1288	8 S. & D. 907.
Joyce Alexander; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1969)	298 F. Supp. 1288	8 S. & D. 907.
J. Silverman & Associates, etc. (Jack Silverman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1944)	145 F. 2d 751	4 S. & D. 283.
J. Silverman & Associates, etc. (Michel Lipman et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1945)	148 F. 2d 823	4 S. & D. 322.
Judson L. Thomson Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1945)	150 F. 2d 952	4 S. & D. 412.
Certiorari denied (1945)	326 U.S. 776
Julius Levitt; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1969)	298 F. Supp. 1288	8 S. & D. 907.
Juniperwood Ranch, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. C.D. Calif. 1975	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1260.
Justin Haynes & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1939)	105 F. 2d 988	3 S. & D. 134.
Certiorari denied (1939)	308 U.S. 616
Juvenile Shoe Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1923)	289 Fed. 57	1 S. & D. 313.
Certiorari denied (1923)	263 U.S. 705
J. Weingarten, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Tex. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 736.
J. Weingarten, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1964)	336 F. 2d 687	7 S. & D. 1000.
Certiorari denied (1965)	380 U.S. 908
J. Weller Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
K. & S. Sales Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 723.
Kagen Corp., Theodore, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1960)	283 F. 2d 371	6 S. & D. 837.
Certiorari denied (1961)	365 U.S. 843
Kalin, Benjamin D.; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. W.D. Ia. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
Kalwajtys, Ray S. et al. (d/b/a General Products Corp.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1956)	237 F. 2d 654	6 S. & D. 72.
Certiorari denied (1957)	352 U.S. 1025
Kalwajtys, Ray S., et al., (d/b/a General Products Corp.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
Kaplan & Sons, Inc., Joseph A., v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	347 F. 2d 785	7 S. & D. 1204.
Kaplan, Blanche (t/a Progressive Medical Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 656.
Kaplan, Wayne E., et al.; Eugene T. Wanderer v. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 523.
Kaplan, Wayne E., et al.; Eugene T. Wanderer et al. (Midwest Warehouse Distributors, Inc.) v. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Karns, Saul J.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
Karol, Irene, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
Kaslow, John (d/b/a J.C. Martin Co., etc.). v. Paul Rand Dixon et al. (D.C.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 665.
(C.A.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 703.
Certiorari denied (1964)	377 U.S. 907
Kastor & Bros., Inc., Adolph, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1943)	138 F. 2d 824	3 S. & D. 612.
Kay, Abbott E.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1929)	35 F. 2d 160	1 S. & D. 1162.
Certiorari denied (1930)	281 U.S. 764
Keasbey & Mattison Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1947)	159 F. 2d 940	4 S. & D. 605.
Keele Hair & Scalp Specialists, Inc., et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1960)	275 F. 2d 18	6 S. & D. 719.
Keller, Louis et al. (d/b/a Casey Concession Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	132 F. 2d 59	3 S. & D. 520.
Kelley, James; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1937)	87 F. 2d 1004	2 S. & D. 381.
Kent Fur Co., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1937)	88 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 380.
Ken Whitmore, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 784.
Kennecott Copper Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1972)	467 F. 2d 67	9 S. & D. 341.
Keppel & Bro., Inc., R.F., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1933)	63 F. 2d 81	2 S. & D. 204.
Keppel & Bro., Inc., R.F.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1934)	291 U.S. 304	2 S. & D. 259.
Kerran, Frank A., et al. (d/b/a Double Eagle Refining Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1959)	265 F. 2d 246	6 S. & D. 533.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 818
Keuffel & Esser Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Kidder Oil Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	117 F. 2d 892	3 S. & D. 317.
Kinney-Rome Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1921)	275 Fed. 665	1 S. & D. 140.
Kirchner, Heinz W. (d/b/a Universe Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1964)	337 F. 2d 751	7 S. & D. 1018.
Kirt & Co., James S., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.7 1932)	59 F. 2d 179	2 S. & D. 172.
Certiorari denied (1932)	287 U.S. 663
Kirschmann Lumber Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1929)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 682.
Klapp, Charles L., (t/a The Cardinal Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 651.
Klesner, Alfred (d/b/a Shade Shop); F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1925)	6 F. 2d 701	1 S. & D. 430.
(Sup. Ct. 1927)	274 U.S. 145	1 S. & D. 608.
(C.A.D.C. 1928)	25 F. 2d 524	1 S. & D. 677.
(Sup. Ct. 1929)	280 U.S. 19	1 S. & D. 1166.
Klimate-Pruf Manufacturing Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.M.D.N.C. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 725.
Knoll Associates, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1968)	397 F. 2d 530	8 S. & D. 772.
Knoll Associates, Inc. v. Paul Rand Dixon et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	232 F. Supp. 283	7 S. & D. 937.
Kobi Co., J.W., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1927)	23 F. 2d 41	1 S. & D. 661.
Koch, Carl E., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 730.
Koch et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1953)	206 F. 2d 311	5 S. & D. 552.
Koch Laboratories, Inc. (William F. Koch, et al.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 720.
Koch Laboratories, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 811.
Kongo Chemical Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 818.
Koolish, Philip Harry, et al. (t/a Standard Distributing Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	129 F. 2d 64	3 S. & D. 492.
Certiorari denied (1942)	317 U.S. 683
(C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 497.
Korber Hats, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1962)	311 F. 2d 358	7 S. & D. 611.
Koscot Interplanetary, Inc. (D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 786.
Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 791.
(D.C. M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 805.
Koster-Pearl Furs, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Kritzik, David (d/b/a General Merchandise Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	125 F. 2d 351	3 S. & D. 444.
Kroger Co., The, and Beatrice Foods Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 139.
(C.A.D.C. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 142.
Kroger Co., The, and Joseph B. Hall et al. v. William F. Lemke (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 470.
Kroger Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1971)	438 F. 2d 1372	9 S. & D. 9.
Certiorari denied (1971)	404 U.S. 871
Kuehn, Fred V., v. Wayne E. Kaplan et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 699.
Kujawski, Joseph S.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1969)	298 F. Supp. 1288	8 S. & D. 907.
Kulin Waste Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 906.
Kulin Waste Co., et al. (Michael Silver) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 837.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Lady Carole Coats, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 807.
Lafayette Iron Works, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. N.J. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 917.
Lake Erie Canning Co. of Sandusky et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Lakeland Nurseries Sales Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 593.
L. & C. Mayers Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	97 F. 2d 365	2 S. & D. 460.
Lane, Albert, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1942)	130 F. 2d 48	3 S. & D. 501.
Langendorf United Bakeries, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	366 F. 2d 795	8 S. & D. 351.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 932
Lanteen Laboratories, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 821.
LaPeyre, Emile M., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	366 F. 2d 117	8 S. & D. 343.
La Salle Extension University v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 707.
(C.A. 7 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 793.
Certiorari denied (1974)	417 U.S. 909
La Salle Extension University et al. (Stenographic Machines, Inc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 739.
(C.A. 7 1956)	233 F. 2d 755	6 S. & D. 14.
Lawrence Blanket Company et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. Mass. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Lawrence, Herbert E., v. Wayne E. Kaplan, et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Lazar, Buryl J., et al. (t/a Globe Feather & Down Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	240 F. 2d 176	6 S. & D. 167.
L. Buchman Co., Inc., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 344	6 S. & D. 30.
Leach & Co., G.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 819.
Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1937)	92 F. 2d 1002	2 S. & D. 418.
Leavitt, Louis, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1926)	16 F. 2d 1019	1 S. & D. 582.
Leavitt, Louis, In re (C.A. 2 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 334.
Lee Boyer's Candy v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1942)	128 F. 2d 261	3 S. & D. 487.
Lee Co., George H.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1935)	76 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 291.
Lee Co., George H., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1940)	113 F. 2d 583	3 S. & D. 277.
Lee et al. (Sherwin et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1923)	290 Fed. 517	1 S. & D. 1006.
Lee et al. (Sherwin et al.); U.S. v. (C.A. 5 1924)	297 Fed. 704	1 S. & D. 1046.
(Sup. Ct. 1925)	268 U.S. 369	1 S. & D. 1065.
Lee Rubber & Tire Corp.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Lehigh Portland Cement Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Va. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 523.
(D.C.E.D. Va. 1968)	291 F. Supp. 628	8 S. & D. 849.
(C.A. 4 1969)	416 F. 2d 971	8 S. & D. 1053.
Lehigh Portland Cement Co. (Ralph L. Browning); F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	435 F. 2d 96	8 S. & D. 1273.
Lehrman Furs, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
Leila Mourning v. Family Publications Service, Inc. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	411 U.S. 356 93 S. Ct. 1652	9 S. & D. 638.
Leisenring, Edwin L., et al. (t/a U.S. Drug

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
& Sales Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Colo. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 666.
Lekas & Drivas, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	145 F. 2d 976	4 S. & D. 293.
Lemke, William F.; Joseph B. Hall et al. (and The Kroger Co.) v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 470.
Lenco Spring Co. (Maurice J. Lenett et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 529.
Lenco Spring Co. (Maurice J. Lenett et al. d/b/a); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
Lenett, Maurice J., et al. (d/b/a Lenco Spring Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 529.
Lenett, Maurice J., et al. (d/b/a Lenco Spring Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
Lenox, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1969)	417 F. 2d 126	8 S. & D. 1037.
Leon A. Tashof v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	437 F. 2d 707	8 S. & D. 1291.
Lesinsky Co., H., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1922)	277 Fed. 657	1 S. & D. 181.
Lester S. Cotherman et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1969)	417 F. 2d 587	8 S. & D. 1008.
Lever Bros. Co. v. F.T.C.
(D.C. Me. 1971)	325 F. Supp. 371	9 S. & D. 60.
(C.A. 1 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 65.
Levitt, Julius; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1969)	298 F. Supp. 1288	8 S. & D. 907.
Levore Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 728.
Lewyn Drug, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 633.
L.G. Balfour Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Va. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 889.
(C.A. 7 1971)	442 F. 2d 1	9 S. & D. 26.
L. Heller & Son, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1965)	352 F. 2d 415	7 S. & D. 1409.
Liberty Co., etc. (Joe B. Hill et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	124 F. 2d 104	3 S. & D. 436.
Lichtenstein, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1952)	194 F. 2d 607	5 S. & D. 367.
Certiorari denied (1952)	344 U.S. 819
Lichtenstein, Leo (d/b/a Harlich Mfg. Co.) v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1952)	108 F. Supp. 573	5 S. & D. 450.
Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1953)	203 F. 2d 955	5 S. & D. 527.
Liggett & Myers, Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Lighthouse Rug Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1929)	35 F. 2d 163	1 S. & D. 1172.
Lipman, Michel, et al. (t/a Chief Statistician, etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1945)	148 F. 2d 823	4 S. & D. 322.
Lippincott Co., J.B., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1943)	137 F. 2d 490	3 S. & D. 584.
Lipton, Thomas J., Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Liquor Trades Stabilization Bureau, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1941)	121 F. 2d 455	3 S. & D. 377.
Lisner & Co., L., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Litchfield Woolen Mills Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
Litton Industries; U.S. v. (C.A. 9 1972)	462 F. 2d 14	9 S. & D. 299.
Livingston Automotive Supply Co., Inc., et

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 599.
Livingston, Jules (t/a Maryland Distributors, etc.,); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
L. Lisner & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co. et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1966)	371 F. 2d 277	8 S. & D. 401.
L. M. Clothing Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
Loesch Hair Experts v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1958)	257 F. 2d 882	6 S. & D. 428.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 883
Loesch, William T.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Tex. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Loew's Theatres, Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Lomax, H. L. (t/a Lomax Rug Mills) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1932)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 160.
Lone Star Cement Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 922.
(C.A. 9 1964)	339 F. 2d 505	7 S. & D. 1060.
Loomis, Worth; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.
Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1924)	299 Fed. 733	1 S. & D. 345.
Certiorari denied (1924)	266 U.S. 613
Lorillard Co., P.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1922)	283 Fed. 999	1 S. & D. 239.
(Sup. Ct. 1924)	264 U.S. 298	1 S. & D. 341.
Lorillard Co., P., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1950)	186 F. 2d 52	5 S. & D. 210.
Lorillard Co., P., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1959)	267 F. 2d 439	6 S. & D. 575.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 923
Lorilland Co., P., In re (C.A. 4 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 490.
Loughran, Alma, et al. (t/a Alma's Home Made Candies) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1944)	143 F. 2d 431	4 S. & D. 214.
Love Television & Stereo Rental, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	498 F. 2d 1088	9 S. & D. 1158.
Lowenthal, Edward (t/a Thomas Webster, etc.,); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
(C.A. 7 1957)	248 F. 2d 397	6 S. & D. 365.
(D.C.D. Ariz. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
Lucas, William L.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.
Lukens Steel Co. and United States Steel Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1317.
Luria Brothers and Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1968)	389 F. 2d 847	8 S. & D. 615.
Certiorari denied (1968)	393 U.S. 829
Lustberg, Nast & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 185.
Luxurious Woolens, Ltd., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 790.
Lytle, Andrew J. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 270.
MacFadden Publications, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. S.C. 1929)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 704.
(C.A.D.C. 1930)	37 F. 2d 822	2 S. & D. 65.
MacFadden Publications, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Macher Watch & Jewelry Co., etc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	126 F. 2d 420	3 S. & D. 467.
Macy & Co., Inc., R.H., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1964)	326 F. 2d 445	7 S. & D. 849.
Macy & Co., Inc., R. H., v. Wilmer L. Tinley et al. (D.C.D.C. 1965)	249 F. Supp. 778	7 S. & D. 1430.
Madway Main Line Homes, Inc., et al. (Main Line Lumber & Millwork Co. et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
Magic Weave, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
Magnaflo Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	343 F. 2d 318	7 S. & D. 1122.
Magnecoil Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Utah 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 822.
Mahler Co., Inc., D.J.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.R.I. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 691.
Mahler's, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.R.I. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 634.
Main Line Lumber & Millwork Co. et al. (Madway Main Line Homes, Inc., et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
Maisel Trading Post, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 10 1935)	77 F. 2d 246	2 S. & D. 292.
(C.A. 10 1935)	79 F. 2d 127	2 S. & D. 319.
(C.A. 10 1936)	84 F. 2d 768	2 S. & D. 355.
Maison-Pichel, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1934)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 266.
Maloney Oil & Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1922)	282 Fed. 81	1 S. & D. 226.
Maloney Oil & Mfg. Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1923)	261 U.S. 463	1 S. & D. 306.
Maltz, Marshall (Peerless Products, Inc.), et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	284 F. 2d 825	6 S. & D. 844.
Certiorari denied (1961)	365 U.S. 844
Maltz, Marshall (t/a Benmar Sales Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 740.
Manager, Retail Credit Company, Miami Branch Office; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1973)	357 F. Supp. 347	9 S. & D. 629.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 988	9 S. & D. 1246.
Mandel Brothers, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	254 F. 2d 18	6 S. & D. 388.
Mandel Brothers, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1959)	359 U.S. 385	6 S. & D. 557.
Mandel Brothers, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 371.
Manhattan Brewing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 454.
Mannis, Samuel A. (t/a Samuel A. Mannis & Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1961)	293 F. 2d 774	7 S. & D. 214.
Mansfield Tire & Rubber Co., The; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Marcel Co. (Grady L. Rushing d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1963)	320 F. 2d 280	7 S. & D. 731.
Certiorari denied (1964)	375 U.S. 986
March of Time Candies, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1939)	104 F. 2d 999	3 S. & D. 116.
Certiorari denied (1939)	308 U.S. 610
Marco Sales Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1971)	453 F. 2d 1	9 S. & D. 174.
Marcus, Richard S. (t/a Stanton Blanket Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1965)	354 F. 2d 85	7 S. & D. 1423.
Maremont Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1970)	431 F. 2d 124	8 S. & D. 1233.
Margulies, David W., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1964)	339 F. 2d 603	7 S. & D. 1076.
Marietta Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1931)	50 F. 2d 641	2 S. & D. 129.
Mark & Co., Clayton (Triangle Conduit & Cable

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Co. Inc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1948)	168 F. 2d 175	4 S. & D. 741.
(Sup. Ct. 1949)	336 U.S. 956	5 S. & D. 102.
Markin, David R., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mich. 1974)	391 F. Supp. 865	9 S. & D. 1138.
Marlene's, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1954)	216 F. 2d 556	5 S. & D. 694.
Marlo Furniture Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 536.
Marquette Cement Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1945)	147 F. 2d 589	4 S. & D. 307.
Marshall Field & Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 371.
Martha Beasley Associates (J. V. Cordes et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 635.
Martin Co., J. C., etc. (John Kaslow d/b/a) v. Paul Rand Dixon et al. (D.C.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 665.
(C.A.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 703.
Certiorari denied (1964)	377 U.S. 907
Martin Corp., J.C., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1965)	346 F. 2d 147	7 S. & D. 1228.
Certiorari denied (1966)	382 U.S. 975
Martin Corp., J. C., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	242 F. 2d 530	6 S. & D. 251.
Martin Marietta Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1967)	376 F. 2d 430	8 S. & D. 464.
Certiorari denied (1967)	389 U.S. 923
Martoccio Co., F.A. (t/a Hollywood Candy Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1937)	87 F. 2d 561	2 S. & D. 381.
Certiorari denied (1937)	301 U.S. 691
Marvin Accessories, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Mary Carter Paint Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1964)	333 F. 2d 654	7 S. & D. 929.
Mary Carter Paint Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	382 U.S. 46	7 S. & D. 1403.
Maryland Baking Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1957)	243 F. 2d 716	6 S. & D. 260.
Maryland Distributors, etc. (Jules Livingston t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
Mary Muffet, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
Marx Baking Co.; U.S. v. (D.C. Colo. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1097.
Masland Duraleather Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1929)	34 F. 2d 733	1 S. & D. 1155.
Masterkraft Guild Weavers, Inc. (C. James Garofalo); U.S. v. (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Maxwell Distributing Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 29.
Mayers Co., Inc., L. & C., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	97 F. 2d 365	2 S. & D. 460.
Maynard Coal Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1920)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 60.
(D.C.S.C. 1923)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 294.
Maynard Coal Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1927)	22 F. 2d 873	1 S. & D. 647.
May's Cut Rate Drug Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N. D.W. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 676.
May's Cut Rate Drug Co. of Charleston; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.W. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 674.
McAfee Candy Co., etc. (Joe B. Hill et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	124 F. 2d 104	3 S. & D. 436.
McCormick, Charles P. (McCormick & Co., Inc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1956)	145 F. Supp. 164	6 S. & D. 42.
McCormick, Charles P. (McCormick & Co., Inc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1957)	242 F. 2d 81	6 S. & D. 225.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 957

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
McKewen, George Earl, et al. (t/a Herbal Medicine Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
(D.C.D. Md. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
McKinley-Roosevelt College of Arts and Sciences v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 364.
McLean & Son, A., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	84 F. 2d 910	2 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 590
(C.A. 7 1938)	94 F. 2d 802	2 S. & D. 439.
(C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 261.
Melley, Leonard (National Educators, Inc., et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Mellon National Corporation v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1551.
Mells Manufacturing Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. N.Y. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726. 3 S. & D. 726
Melster Candy Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wis. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
Mennen Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1923)	288 Fed. 774	1 S. & D. 298.
Certiorari denied (1923)	262 U.S. 759
Mennie, F.L., etc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1932)	56 F. 2d 1084	2 S. & D. 161.
Mentho-Mulsion, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 355.
Menzies, John T. (Crosse & Blackwell Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1956)	145 F. Supp. 164	6 S. & D. 42.
Menzies, John T. et al. (Cross & Blackwell Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1957)	242 F. 2d 81	6 S. & D. 225.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 957
Merck & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1968)	392 F. 2d 921	8 S. & D. 725.
Merck & Co., Inc., v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Merit Health Appliance Co. (George S. Mogilner et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 715.
Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Assn. Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1957)	240 F. 2d 341	6 S. & D. 136.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 819
Meyer, Fred, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	359 F. 2d 351	8 S. & D. 82.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 908
Certiorari granted limited to one question (1967)	396 U.S. 907
Meyer, Fred, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1968)	390 U.S. 341	8 S. & D. 684.
Michigan Bulb Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 464.
Mick Dalton et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. Nebr. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
Mid-South Distributors et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1961)	287 F. 2d 512	7 S. & D. 41.
Certiorari denied (1961)	368 U.S. 838
Mid-Tex Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 796.
Mid-West Bottle Cap Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Mid West Mills, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1937)	90 F. 2d 723	2 S. & D. 407.
Mid-West Portrait Service, etc. (Cornelius P. Van Schaack, Jr. t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
Mid-West Sales Syndicate, etc. (Cornelius P. Van Schaack, Jr. t/a): U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
Midwest Studios, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Ore. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 729.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.D. OPRE. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 805.
Midwest Warehouse Distributors, Inc. (Eugene T. Wanderer) v. Wayne E. Kaplan et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1943)	50 F. Supp. 434	3 S. & D. 575.
(C.A.D.C. 1944)	140 F. 2d 683	4 S. & D. 112.
Certiorari denied (1944)	322 U.S. 752
Milk & Ice Cream Can Institute et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	152 F. 2d 478	4 S. & D. 440.
Miller Co., Charles N.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 1 1938)	97 F. 2d 563	2 S. & D. 464.
Miller Drug Co. (Julius Miller t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D.N.Y. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 706.
Millers' National Federation, et al v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1926)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 554.
Millers' National Federation, et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1927)	23 F. 2d 968	1 S. & D. 654.
Millers' National Federation, et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1930)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 79.
Millers' National Federation, et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1931)	47 F. 2d 428	2 S. & D. 110.
Miller, Ward J. (t/a Amber-Ita); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 6 1935)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 329.
Millinery Creators' Guild, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1940)	109 F. 2d 175	3 S. & D. 175.
(Sup. Ct. 1941)	312 U.S. 469	3 S. & D. 352.
Milwaukee Boiler Mfg. Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wis. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1110.
Mink, Patsy T., et al.; Environmental Protection Agency v.	410 U.S. 73	9 S. & D. 457.
(Sup. Ct. 1973)	93 S. Ct. 827
Minneapolis, Chamber of Commerce of, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1922)	280 Fed. 45	1 S. & D. 193.
(C.A. 8 1926)	13 F. 2d 673	1 S. & D. 502.
Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 786	5 S. & D. 307.
Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1952)	344 U.S. 206	5 S. & D. 464.
Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 311	7 S. & D. 1211.
Minter Brothers, etc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1939)	102 F. 2d 69	3 S. & D. 51.
Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1922)	283 Fed. 1022	1 S. & D. 238.
(Sup. Ct. 1923)	260 U.S. 748	1 S. & D. 238.
Mississippi River Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1972)	454 F. 2d 1083	9 S. & D. 199.
Missouri Farmers Assn., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Missouri Portland Cement Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 250.
(D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 572.
M. J. Holloway & Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	84 F. 2d 910	2 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 590
(C.A. 7 1938)	94 F. 2d 802	2 S. & D. 439.
(C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 263.
Mobil Oil Corporation; F.T.C. v. (D.C. D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 905.
(C.A. D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Modell, Henry, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Modern Hat Works (Jacob Schachnow t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 361.
Modernistic Candies, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	145 F. 2d 454	4 S. & D. 288.
Modern Manner Clothes (Joseph Rosenblum et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1951)	192 F. 2d 392	5 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1952)	343 U.S. 905
(C.A. 2 1954)	214 F. 2d 338	5 S. & D. 671.
Modern Marketing Service, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1945)	149 F. 2d 970	4 S. & D. 379.
Modern Rug Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
Moffet, John G., v. Wayne E. Kaplan et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Mogilner, George S., et al. (t/a Merit Health Appliance Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 715.
Mohawk Refining Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1959)	263 F. 2d 818	6 S. & D. 522.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 814
Mohr, Mitchell S. (t/a National Research Co. et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1959)	272 F. 2d 401	6 S. & D. 684.
Certiorari denied (1960)	362 U.S. 920
Moir, John, et al. (d/b/a Chase & Sanborn) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1926)	12 F. 2d 22	1 S. & D. 489.
Monroe Auto Equipment Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	347 F. 2d 401	7 S. & D. 1271.
Certiorari denied (1966)	382 U.S. 1009
Montebello Distillers, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1967)	379 F. 2d 666	8 S. & D. 506.
Moog Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1956)	238 F. 2d 43	6 S. & D. 91.
(Sup. Ct. 1958)	355 U.S. 411	6 S. & D. 382.
Moore & Co., William C.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. N.D. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
Moore Business Forms, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1962)	307 F. 2d 188	7 S. & D. 512.
Moore Products Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
Moretrench Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	127 F. 2d 792	3 S. & D. 480.
Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1551.
Morison, William W., and Foremost-McKesson, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1231.
Morris & Co., Ltd, Inc., Philip, v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 790.
Morrissey & Co., Chas. T., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1931)	47 F. 2d 101	2 S. & D. 113.
Morton Salt Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 215.
(C.A. 7 1947)	162 F. 2d 949	4 S. & D. 627.
Morton Salt Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1948)	334 U.S. 37	4 S. & D. 716.
Morton Salt Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	80 F. Supp. 419	4 S. & D. 779.
(C.A. 7 1949)	174 F. 2d 703	5 S. & D. 125.
(Sup. Ct. 1950)	338 U.S. 632	5 S. & D. 167.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 800.
Morton;s, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1961)	286 F. 2d 158	7 S. & D. 6.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Moss, Inc., Samuel H., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1945)	148 F. 2d 378	4 S. & D. 324.
Certiorari denied (1945)	326 U.S. 734
(C.A. 2 1946)	155 F. 2d 1016	4 S. & D. 495.
Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1952)	194 F. 2d 633	5 S. & D. 380.
Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1953)	344 U.S. 392	5 S. & D. 498.
Motor Equipment Specialty Co. (Hiram Barber d/b/a); U.S. v (D.C. Nebr. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
Mourning, Leila v. Family Publications Service, Inc. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	411 U.S. 356 93 S. Ct. 1652	9 S. & D. 638.
Moye, E. T. (Moye Photographers); U.S. v. (D.C.D.C. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
Mueller Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	323 F. 2d 44	7 S. & D. 785.
Certiorari denied (1964)	377 U.S. 923
Mueller, Sidney J. (Mueller Hair Experts) v. U.S. (C.A. 5 1958)	262 F. 2d 443	6 S. & D. 470.
Mueller, Sidney J. (Mueller Hair Experts); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Tex. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Muffet, Inc., Mary, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
Muller & Co., E.B., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1944)	142 F. 2d 511	4 S. & D. 151.
Murray Space Shoe Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	304 F. 2d 270	7 S. & D. 480.
Mutual Printing Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 728.
Mytinger & Casselberry, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1962)	301 F. 2d 534	7 S. & D. 379.
N & W Enterprises, Inc., et al. (Janet L. Winters); U.S. v. (D.C.M.D. Fla. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Nabisco, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1972)	459 F. 2d 1023	9 S. & D. 287.
Nash-Finch Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	288 F. 2d 407	7 S. & D. 37.
Nash-Finch Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 830.
(D.C. Minn. 1964)	233 F. Supp. 910	7 S. & D. 973.
Nash, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 461.
National Association of Counter Freezer Manufacturer et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.C. 1936)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 337.
National Association of Women's and Children's Apparel Salesmen, Inc., et al., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1973)	479 F. 2d 139	9 S. & D. 660.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 1004
National Bakers Services, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	329 F. 2d 365	7 S. & D. 885.
National Bakers Services, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D. Fla. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
National Biscuit Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1924)	299 Fed. 733	1 S. & D. 345.
Certiorari denied (1924)	266 U.S. 613
(C.A. 5 1968)	400 F. 2d 270	8 S. & D. 796.
National Biscuit Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1937)	18 F. Supp. 667	2 S. & D. 390.
National Biscuit Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1938)	25 F. Supp. 329	2 S. & D. 477.
National Brands, Inc., Jerome Blank, President, Etc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 814.
National Candy Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1939)	104 F. 2d 999	3 S. & D. 116.
Certiorari denied (1939)	308 U.S. 610
National Casualty Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1957)	245 F. 2d 883	6 S. & D. 335.
National Casualty Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1958)	357 U.S. 560	6 S. & D. 432.
National Clearance Bureau, et al. (Edwin G. Axel), In re (C.A. 3 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 816.
National Clearance Bureau v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1958)	255 F. 2d 102	6 S. & D. 396.
National Commission on Egg Nutrition; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1109.
(C.A. 7 1975)	517 F. 2d 485	9 S. & D. 1344.
National Dairy Products Corp. v. F.T.C. (Docket 7318) (C.A. 7 1968)	395 F. 2d 517	8 S. & D. 750.
Certiorari denied (1968)	393 U.S. 977
National Dairy Products Corp. v. F.T.C. (Docket 8548) (C.A. 7 1969)	412 F. 2d 605	8 S. & D. 948.
National Dress Goods Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
National Dynamics Corporation v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1974)	492 F. 2d 1333	9 S. & D. 862.
Certiorari denied (1975)	419 U.S. 933
National Educators, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 741.
National Educators, Inc., et al. (Leonard Melley); U.S. v. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441
National Employment Information Service (Samuel A. Cannon et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	295 F. 2d 546	7 S. & D. 238.
National Feather & Down Co., (Louis Buchwalter et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 344	6 S. & D. 30.
National Harness Mfrs. Assn. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1919)	261 Fed. 170	1 S. & D. 47.
(C.A. 6 1920)	268 Fed. 705	1 S. & D. 86.
National Health Aids, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1952)	108 F. Supp. 340	5 S. & D. 429.
(D.C.D. Md. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 780.
National Kream Co., Inc., and National Foods, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 466.
National Laboratories of St. Louis (Oliver L. Rohlfing t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
National Lead Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	227 F. 2d 825	5 S. & D. 749.
Certiorari denied (1956)	351 U.S. 964
National Lead Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	352 U.S. 419	6 S. & D. 193.
National Lead Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	244 F. 2d 312	6 S. & D. 328.
National Macaroni Mfrs. Assn. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	345 F. 2d 421	7 S. & D. 1181.
National Merchandising Co., etc. (Perce P. Green et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 510.
National Optical Stores Co., etc. (Benjamin D. Ritholz et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 203.
National Outdoor Display, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. W.D. Tenn. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
National Parts Warehouse et al. (General Auto Supplies, Inc. et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	346 F. 2d 311	7 S. & D. 1229.
Certiorari dismissed (1965)	382 U.S. 923
National Petroleum Refiners Association, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C. D.C. 1972	340 F. Supp. 1343	9 S. & D. 260.
(C.A. D.C. 1973)	482 F. 2d 672	9 S. & D. 714.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Certiorari denied (1974)	415 U.S. 951
(D.C. D.C. 1974)	392 F. Supp. 1052	9 S. & D. 1049.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1384.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1410.
National Press Photo Bureau, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 594.
National Research Co. et al. (Mitchell S. Mohr t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1959)	272 F.2D 401	6 S. & D. 684.
Certiorari denied (1960)	362 U.S. 920
National Service Bureau et al. (Robert O. Bennett d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1952)	200 F. 2d 362	5 S. & D. 447.
National Silver Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1937)	88 F. 2d 425	2 S. & D. 399.
(C.A. 2 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 109.
(C.A. 2 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 223.
National Supply Co., et al. (Perce P. Green et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 510.
National Titanium Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 808.
National Toilet Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 429.
National Toliet Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Tenn. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
National Trade Publications Service, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1962)	300 F. 2d 790	7 S. & D. 455.
National Training Service, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Conn. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Nationwide Clothiers, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
N.C. Freed, Inc., et al. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, et al. (C.A. 2 1973)	473 F. 2d 1210	9 S. & D. 541.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 827
Neff, George G. (d/b/a/ Prostex Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1941)	117 F. 2d 495	3 S. & D. 332.
Nelson & Sons, Inc., Sterling; Rangen, Inc., et al. v. (C.A. 9 1965)	351 F. 2d 851	7 S. & D. 1342.
Certiorari denied (1966)	383 U.S. 936
New American Library of World Literature, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	213 F. 2d 143	5 S. & D. 638.
(C.A. 2 1955)	227 F. 2d 384	5 S. & D. 749.
Newcomb, Dr. F.A., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 199.
New Jersey Asbestos Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1920)	264 Fed. 509	1 S. & D. 51.
New Jersey Wood Finishing Co.; Minnesota Mining & Mfg., Co. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 311	7 S. & D. 1211.
New Standard Publishing Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1952)	194 F. 2d 181	5 S. & D. 376.
New York Feather Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
New York Premium Novelty Co. (Alexander Weiler et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 426.
Niehoff & Co., C.E. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	241 F. 2d 37	6 S. & D. 144.
Niehoff & Co., C.E.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1958)	355 U.S. 411	6 S. & D. 382.
Niresk Industries, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	278 F. 2d 337	6 S. & D. 727.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 883
Nitke, Samuel, v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 472.
Noel's Gay Games, Inc. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1953)	204 F. 2d 197	5 S. & D. 514.
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 602.
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Non-Plate Engraving Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1931)	49 F. 2d 766	2 S. & D. 115.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Norden Ship Supply Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1921)	277 Fed. 206	1 S. & D. 166.
Certiorari denied (1922)	258 U.S. 618
Normam J. Foucha (American Aluminum Corp.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ala. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1092.
Norman J. Foucha, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	356 F. Supp. 21	9 S. & D. 605.
Norman J. Foucha, et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ala. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 759.
Normandie Et Cie (John H. Davis et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 465.
North American Accident Insurance Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 451.
North American Philips Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 683.
Northam Warren Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1932)	59 F. 2d 196	2 S. & D. 187.
Northern Feather Works, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1956)	234 F. 2d 335	6 S. & D. 21.
Northfield Mills, Inc. (Bernard Goldfine and Horace Maxwell Goldfine); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Vt. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
Northwest Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Novel Co. (Max H. Goldberg t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	283 F. 2d 299	6 S. & D. 839.
N. Sumergrade & Sons (Bernard H. Sumergrade et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1956)	234 F. 2d 335	6 S. & D. 21.
Nuarc Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	316 F. 2d 576	7 S. & D. 673.
Nu Grape Co. of America v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1932)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 179.
Nulomoline Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1918)	254 Fed. 988	1 S. & D. 35.
Oberlin, Robert C. (t/a Research Products Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 640.
Ogle, Kenneth R., et al. (t/a Approved Photographers Assn.); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Ohio Art Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
Ohio Leather Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1930)	45 F. 2d 39	2 S. & D. 99.
O-Jib-Wa Medicine Co. (Kenneth W. Shafe t/a) et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1958)	256 F. 2d 661	6 S. & D. 435.
OKC Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1972)	455 F. 2d 1159	9 S. & D. 215.
OKC Corp. and Oklahoma Land and Cattle Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1220.
Oklahoma Land and Cattle Co. and OKC Corp.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1220.
Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	363 F. 2d 757	8 S. & D. 248.
Oliver Brothers, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1939)	102 F. 2d 763	3 S. & D. 86.
Olson Rug Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
Omega Manufacturing Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 679.
Oppenheim, Collins & Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 729.
Oppenheim, Oberndorf & Co., Inc. (d/b/a Sealpax Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1925)	5 F. 2d 574	1 S. & D. 409.
Oregon-Washington Plywood Co., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1952)	194 F. 2d 48	5 S. & D. 362.
Orlan A. Saucke v. F.T.C. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1971)	333 F. Supp. 1197	9 S. & D. 165.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Orton, Douglas T. (The Borden Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	175 F. Supp. 77	6 S. & D. 658.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	177 F. Supp. 241	6 S. & D. 661.
Orville Freeman; Safeway Stores, Inc. v. (C.A.D.C. 1966)	369 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 368.
Orville L. Freeman; The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Inc. v. (C.A.D.C. 1966)	369 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 368.
Oscar Mayer & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Ostermoor & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1927)	16 F. 2d 962	1 S. & D. 589.
Ostler Candy Co. et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1939)	106 F. 2d 962	3 S. & D. 139.
Certiorari denied (1940)	309 U.S. 675
Ox'O-Gas Co. (Eli Eghan t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1947)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 666.
Ozment, C.J., etc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1936)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 335.
Pacific Gamble Robinson Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 9 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 573.
Pacific Molasses Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	356 F. 2d 386	8 S. & D. 46.
Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1925)	4 F. 2d 457	1 S. & D. 384.
Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1927)	273 U.S. 52	1 S. & D. 583.
(C.A. 9 1937)	88 F. 2d 1009	2 S. & D. 402.
Pacific Tire & Rubber Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Page Co., Inc., The E. R.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
Page, Richard M. and Arrow Food Distributors, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1974)	378 F. Supp. 1057	9 S. & D. 1053.
Pahlman, John H. (Anheuser-Busch, Inc.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1968)	390 F. 2d 323	8 S. & D. 640.
P. & D. Manufacturing Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	245 F. 2d 281	6 S. & D. 329.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 884
Papercraft Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1970)	307 F. Supp. 1401	8 S. & D. 1084.
(C.A. 7 1973)	472 F. 2d 927	9 S. & D. 530.
Papercraft Corporation; U.S. v. (D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 408	9 S. & D. 1262.
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 415	9 S. & D. 1329.
(D.C. W.D. Penn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1932)	57 F. 2d 152	2 S. & D. 161.
Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. et al. v. U.S. (Sup. Ct. 1930)	282 U.S. 30	2 S. & D. 505.
Parfumerie Lido, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
Parfums Corday, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	120 F. 2d 808	3 S. & D. 392.
Parfums Corday, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Parke, Austin & Lipscomb, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	142 F. 2d 437	4 S. & D. 168.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 753
Parker Pen Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	159 F. 2d 509	4 S. & D. 597.
Park, Inc., Philip R., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1943)	136 F. 2d 428	3 S. & D. 581.
(C.A. 9 1944)	142 F. 2d 460	4 S. & D. 102.
Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., and The J.B. Williams Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1967)	381 F. 2d 884	8 S. & D. 524.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Pati-Port, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1963)	313 F. 2d 103	7 S. & D. 639.
Patsy T. Mink, et al.; Environmental Protection Agency, et al. v. (Sup. Ct. 1973)	410 U.S. 73 93 S. Ct. 827	9 S. & D. 457.
Paul & Co., Inc., Edward P., v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1948)	169 F. 2d 294	4 S. & D. 734.
Paul B. Elder Co.; U.S. v. (D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1097.
Paul C. Guignon et al. (Anheuser-Busch, Inc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1966)	261 F. Supp. 215	8 S. & D. 377.
(C.A. 8 1968)	390 F. 2d 323	8 S. & D. 640.
Paul R. Dooley, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Paul Theodore Cheff (Holland Furnace) v. Elmer J. Schnackenberg et al. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	384 U.S. 373	8 S. & D. 176.
Pearsall Butter Co., B. S., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1923)	292 Fed. 720	1 S. & D. 324.
Pease Co., C.F., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	142 F. 2d 321	4 S. & D. 117.
Certiorari denied (1944)	323 U.S. 730
Peerless Products, Inc. (Marshall Maltz), et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1960)	284 F. 2d 825	6 S. & D. 844.
Certiorari denied (1961)	365 U.S. 844
Pelta Furs (Jacques de Gorter et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1957)	244 F. 2d 270	6 S. & D. 310.
Pep Boys-Manny, Moe & Jack, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1941)	122 F. 2d 158	3 S. & D. 401.
PepsiCo, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	343 F. Supp. 396	9 S. & D. 295.
PepsiCo, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1972)	472 F. 2d 179	9 S. & D. 407.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 876 94 S. Ct. 44
(C.A. 2 1973)	477 F. 2d 24	9 S. & D. 614.
PepsiCo, Inc., and Frito-Lay, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1310.
Perfect Reconditioned Spark Plug Co., The, et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 375.
Perfect Voice Institute et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 524.
Periodical Publishers' Service Bureau, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 443.
Perloff et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1945)	150 F. 2d 757	4 S. & D. 316.
Perma-Maid Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1941)	121 F. 2d 282	3 S. & D. 397.
Perry Sales Co. (Perry Halseth t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 678.
Certiorari denied (1955)	348 U.S. 928
Personal Drug Co. (Doris Savitch et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1955)	218 F. 2d 817	5 S. & D. 727.
Personal Drug Co. (Doris Savitch et al. t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
Peterson, W. H. (t/a Anchor Hocking Glass Corp.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1941)	124 F. 2d 187	3 S. & D. 426.
Petrey, Eugene D. (t/a Rembrandt Studio, etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 327.
Petrie, John (t/a B-X Laboratories, etc.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 723.
P.F. Collier & Son Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1970)	427 F. 2d 261	8 S. & D. 1188.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 926
Pfizer, Charles & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	363 F. 2d 757	8 S. & D. 248.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A. 6 1968)	401 F. 2d 574	8 S. & D. 807.
Certiorari denied (1969)	394 U.S. 920
Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1943)	139 F. 2d 393	3 S. & D. 621.
Philadelphia Carpet Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1965)	342 F. 2d 994	7 S. & D. 1152.
Philip Carey Mfg. Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1928)	29 F. 2d 49	1 S. & D. 687.
Philip Morris & Co., Ltd., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 790.
Philip Morris Inc. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Philip R. Park, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1943)	136 F. 2d 428	3 S. & D. 581.
(C.A. 9 1944)	142 F. 2d 460	4 S. & D. 102.
Pillsbury Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	354 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 5.
Pioneer Advertising Co., etc. (Cornelius P. Van Schaack, Jr. t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
Pittsburgh Cut Rate Drug Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Pa. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 671.
Piuma, Joseph A.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	40 F. Supp. 119	3 S. & D. 412.
Piuma, Joseph A., v. U.S. (C.A. 9 1942)	126 F. 2d 601	3 S. & D. 468.
Certiorari denied (1942)	317 U.S. 637
Piuma, Joseph A.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 728.
Plantation Chocolate Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 727.
P. Lorillard Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1922)	283 Fed. 999	1 S. & D. 239.
(Sup. Ct. 1924)	264 U.S. 298	1 S. & D. 341.
P. Lorillard Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1950)	186 F. 2d 52	5 S. & D. 210.
P. Lorillard Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1959)	267 F. 2d 439	6 S. & D. 575.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 923.
P. Lorillard Co., In re (C.A. 4 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 490.
Pompeian Olive Oil Corp. (Samuel H. Hoffberger); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1956)	145 F.Supp 164	6 S. & D. 42.
Pompeian Olive Oil Corp. (Samuel H. Hoffberger) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1957)	242 F. 2d 81	6 S. & D. 225.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 957.
Pond's Extract Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 534.
Portwood Co. (Joseph L. Portwood et al. trading as) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1969)	418 F. 2d 419	8 S. & D. 1053.
Portwood, Joseph L., et al. (trading as Portwood Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1969)	418 F. 2d 419	8 S. & D. 1053.
Positive Products Co., etc. (Earl Aronberg t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 647.
Positive Products Co., etc. (Earl Aronberg t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	132 F. 2d 165	3 S. & D. 528.
Posner Shoes, Inc., Dr. A., v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 789.
(C.A.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 789.
Post-Graduate School of Nursing, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D 793.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 145
Post Institute Sales Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 270.
Powe Lumber Co., Thos. E.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1929)	35 F. 2d 1017	1 S. & D. 682.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Poy, Fong, et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Poy, Fong, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1941)	124 F. 2d 398	3 S. & D. 427.
Precision Electrotype Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 512.
Premium Sales Co., etc. (Mitchell A. Bazelon, et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 441.
Preparatory Training Institute v. F.T.C.(C.A. 3 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 315.
Prima Products, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1954)	209 F. 2d 405	5 S. & D. 593.
Prince, H. M., Textiles, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	262 F. Supp. 383	8 S. & D. 1305.
Procter & Gamble Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1926)	11 F. 2d 47	1 S. & D. 475.
Certiorari denied (1926)	273 U.S. 717
Procter & Gamble Co., The, v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 462.
Procter & Gamble Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	358 F. 2d 74	8 S. & D. 107.
Procter & Gamble Co., The; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1967)	386 U.S. 568	8 S. & D. 439.
Progressive Medical Co., etc. (Blanche Kaplan t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 656.
Progress Tailoring Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	153 F. 2d 103	4 S. & D. 455.
(C.A. 7 1953)	Not reported	5 S & D. 592.
Prostex Co. (George G. Neff d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1941)	117 F. 2d 495	3 S. & D. 332.
Pruvo Pharmacal Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wis. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
P. Sorensen Manufacturing Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	246 F. 2d 687	6 S. & D. 332.
Pure Silk Hosiery Mills, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1924)	3 F. 2d 105	1 S. & D. 371.
Purofied Down Products Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Purolator Products, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	352 F. 2d 874	7 S. & D. 1364.
Certiorari denied, (Jan. 15, 1968)	389 U.S. 1045
(C.A. 7 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 769.
Pyramid Books; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
Q.R.S. Music Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1926)	12 F. 2d 730	1 S. & D. 498.
Quality Bakers of America et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1940)	114 F. 2d 393	3 S. & D. 287.
Queen Anne Candy Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	84 F. 2d 910	2 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1936)	299 U.S. 590
(C.A. 7 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 265.
Queen Chemical Co. (Charles Shrader t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 718.
Rabhor Co., Inc., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 477.
Rabiner & Jontow, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1967)	386 F. 2d 667	8 S. & D. 604.
Certiorari denied (1968)	390 U.S. 1004
Rabin, Melvin G. (d/b/a International Creditors Corp.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1004.
Radio-Television Training School v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 513.
Radio Training Assn. of America et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Radio Wire Television, Inc., of New York, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 309.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Radley Furs, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1450.
Raladam Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1930)	42 F. 2d 430	2 S. & D. 81.
(C.A. 6 1941)	123 F. 2d 34	3 S. & D. 417.
Raladam Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1931)	283 U.S. 643	2 S. & D. 116.
(Sup. Ct. 1942)	316 U.S. 149	3 S. & D. 474.
Ralph Botsford (Botsford Ready-Mix Company); F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 572.
Ralph L. Browning; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 918.
Rand, Howard, et al. (t/a Green Supply Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 4th Div. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 510.
Rangen, Inc., et al. v. Sterling Nelson & Sons, Inc. (C.A. 9 1965)	351 F. 2d 851	7 S. & D. 1342.
Certiorari denied (1966)	383 U.S. 936
Rango Tablet Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 819.
Rayex Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1963)	317 F. 2d 290	7 S. & D. 696.
Ray Film Industries, Inc., Reid H., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1951)	190 F. 2d 207	5 S. & D. 300.
Raymond Anderson; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D. Ohio 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Raymond Bros.-Clark Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1922)	280 Fed. 529	1 S. & D. 212.
Raymond Bros.-Clark Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1924)	263 U.S. 565	1 S. & D. 336.
Raymond's, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
Real Products Corp., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1937)	90 F. 2d 617	2 S. & D. 404.
Red & White Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1945)	149 F. 2d 970	4 S. & D. 379.
Redd, Oland D. (Woelfel Studio et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
Reddi-Spred Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1956)	229 F. 2d 557	6 S. & D. 1.
Reed, William T. (Reed Candy Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 26.
(C.A. 7 1957)	243 F. 2d 308	6 S. & D. 282.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 823
Reed's Cut Rate Drug Store, etc. (Lenard Gotlieb et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. W. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 686.
Regal Accessories, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Regina Corp., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1963)	322 F. 2d 765	7 S. & D. 775.
Reid H. Ray Film Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1951)	190 F. 2d 207	5 S. & D. 300.
Reiffe & Sons, Inc., S., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797n.
Rejuvenation Center Ltd. (Robert E. Sheldon, Beverlee Sheldon, a/k/a Beverlee Choate, and Terry Lee Arms, III, d/b/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 923.
Reliable Premium House, etc. (Harry Froman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 181.
Rembrandt Studio, etc. (Eugene D. Petrey t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 327.
Renaire Corp. (Pennsylvania) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 258.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 829

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A.D.C. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 259n.
(C.A. 3 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 682.
Renaire Corp. (Pennsylvania) v. Joseph Callaway (C.A. 3 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 258.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 829
Renor Co., Inc., et al. (John T. Benson); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
Research Products Co. (Robert C. Oberlin t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 640.
Resort Car Rental System, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1975)	518 F. 2d 962	9 S. & D. 1318.
Retail Credit Company, Manager, Miami Branch Office; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. D.C. 1973)	357 F. Supp. 347	9 S. & D. 629.
(D.C. D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 988	9 S. & D. 1246.
Retail Service Bureau, etc. (Edward Lowenthal t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
Retonga Medicine Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 815.
Rettinger, David and Israel; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
Rettinger, David, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1968)	392 F. 2d 454	8 S. & D. 743.
Revlon Products Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 731.
Rex Products Co., etc. (Earl Aronberg t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	132 F. 2d 165	3 S. & D. 528.
Rex Products Co., etc. (Earl Aronberg t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 647.
Reynolds Metals Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1962)	309 F. 2d 223	7 S. & D. 527.
Reynolds Tobacco Co., R.J., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	192 F. 2d 535	5 S. & D. 332.
R. H. Macy & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	326 F. 2d 445	7 S. & D. 849.
R. H. Macy & Co., Inc. v. Wilmer L. Tinley et al. (D.C.D.C. 1965)	249 F. Supp. 778	7 S. & D. 1430.
Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 262.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 777.
(Sup. Ct. 1955)	348 U.S. 940	5 S. & D. 728.
Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.
(C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 744	5 S. & D. 301.
(C.A. 7 1953)	208 F. 2d 382	5 S. & D. 582.
Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v.
(D.C.E.D. Pa. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 801.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
Rice, Gerald A., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 804.
Richard Jackson, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Wash. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 842.
Richard M. Page and Arrow Food Distributors, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1974)	378 F. Supp. 1052	9 S. & D. 1053.
Richard S. Marcus (t/a Stanton Blanket Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1965)	354 F. 2d 85	7 S. & D. 1423.
Richter Concrete Corp. and Stewart Concrete and Material Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 490.
Rifkin, Irving; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
Ritholz, Benjamin D.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1936)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 344.
Ritholz, Benjamin D., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1938)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 475.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A.D.C. 1939)	105 F. 2d 937	3 S. & D. 126.
Ritholz, Benjamin D., et al. (National Optical Stores Co. etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 203.
Rittenhouse Candy Co. (Sol Block et al. t/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1938)	Not reported	2 S & D. 436.
R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	192 F. 2d 535	5 S. & D. 332.
R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1446.
(D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1525.
(C.A. 2 1975)	527 F. 2d 115	9 S. & D. 1542.
Robbin & Co., A., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	337 F. 2d 441	7 S. & D. 1012.
Robert E. Sheldon, et al. (d/b/a Rejuvenation Center Ltd.); F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 804.
Robert Hall Clothes, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Robertson, George T., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1969)	415 F. 2d 49	8 S. & D. 995.
Robins Paper Co. of Baltimore City v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1957)	240 F. 2d 341	6 S. & D. 136.
Rock, Monica M., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	117 F. 2d 680	3 S. & D. 335.
Rodale Press, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1968)	407 F. 2d 1252	8 S. & D. 840.
Rodgers, William H., Jr. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1974)	492 F. 2d 228	9 S. & D. 846.
Rogers Candy Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.9. 1939)	101 F. 2d 718	3 S. & D. 59.
Rogers Redemption Bureau, etc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Minn. 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 820.
Rohlfing, Oliver L. (t/a National Laboratories of St. Louis); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
Ron-Al Medicine Co., Dr., etc. (Irving Sofronski. t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 638.
Rorer, William H., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1967)	374 F. 2d 622	8 S. & D. 432.
Rosenblum, Joseph, et al. (d/b/a Modern Manner Clothes) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1951)	192 F. 2d 392	5 S. & D. 347.
Certiorari denied (1952)	343 U.S. 905
(C.A. 2 1954)	214 F. 2d 338	5 S. & D. 671.
Rose, Stanley L. (Sew-Ezy Machine Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Rosten, Bernard (t/a Bern Products Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	263 F. 2d 620	6 S. & D. 530.
Rothschild, Lester (t/a Gen-O-Pak Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1952)	200 F. 2d 39	5 S. & D. 441.
Certiorari denied (1953)	345 U.S. 941
Royal Baking Powder Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1922)	281 Fed. 744	1 S. & D. 202.
(D.C.S.C. 1927)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 624.
(D.C.S.C. 1927)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 650.
(D.C.S.C. 1927)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 651.
(C.A.D.C. 1929)	32 F. 2d 966	1 S. & D. 701.
Certiorari denied (1929)	280 U.S. 572.
(D.C.S.C. 1929)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 703.
Royal Bead Novelty Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	191 F. 2d 954	5 S. & D. 327.
Royal Milling Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1932)	58 F. 2d 581	2 S. & D. 180.
Royal Milling Co. et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1933)	288 U.S. 212	2 S. & D. 217.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Royal Oil Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1959)	262 F. 2d 741	6 S. & D. 477.
Royce George Hoffmann; U.S. v. (D.C. Kan. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
R. T. Vanderbilt Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 815.
Ruberoid Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1951)	189 F. 2d 893	5 S. & D. 295.
(C.A. 2 1951)	191 F. 2d 294	5 S. & D. 316.
Ruberoid Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1952)	343 U.S. 470	5 S. & D. 388.
Ruberoid Co. v. F.T.C. (Sup. Ct. 1952)	343 U.S. 470	5 S. & D. 388.
Rubin, William B. (The Sweets Co. of America, Inc.), et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1956)	145 F. Supp. 171	6 S. & D. 52.
(C.A. 2 1957)	245 F. 2d 60	6 S. & D. 333.
Rushing, Grady L. (d/b/a Marcel Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1963)	320 F. 2d 280	7 S. & D. 731.
Certiorari denied (1964)	375 U.S. 986.
Ryan Candy Co. (Southern Premium Mfg. Co. t/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1936)	83 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 342.
Safeway Stores, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1966)	366 F. 2d 795	8 S. & D. 351.
Certiorari denied (1967)	386 U.S. 932.
Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Orville Freeman (C.A. D.C. 1966)	369 F. 2d 952	8 S. & D. 368.
Safeway Stores, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1210.
Saks & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 363.
Salisbury Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1956)	230 F. 2d 954	6 S. & D. 5.
Salt Producers Assn. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	134 F. 2d 354	3 S. & D. 542.
Salup, Jack (Charlotte Novelty Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Samuel A. Mannis & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1961)	293 F. 2d774	7 S. & D. 214.
Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1945)	148 F. 2d 378	4 S. & D. 324.
Certiorari denied (1945)	326 U.S. 734.
(C.A. 2 1946)	155 F. 2d 1016	4 S. & D. 495.
Sanders, Peter, et al. (d/b/a The Perfect Reconditioned Spark Plug Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 375.
S. & S. Pharmaceutical Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1969)	408 F. 2d 487	8 S. & D. 892.
Sandura Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1964)	339 F. 2d 847	7 S. & D. 1077.
Sanitary Feather & Down Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1956)	235 F. 2d 344	6 S. & D. 30.
Sanitary Feather Co. (Daniel Huttner); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
San Juan Lumber Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Colo. 1969)	313 F. Supp. 703	8 S. & D. 1061
Saucke, Orlan A. v. F.T.C. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1971)	333 F. Supp. 1197	9 S. & D. 165.
Saunders Company et al., W.B.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
Savage Candy Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 10 1937)	92 F. 2d 1003	2 S. & D. 421.
Sav-Cote Chemical Laboratories, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.J. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
(D.C.N.J. 1969)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
Savitch, Doris, et al. (t/a Personal Drug Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1955)	218 F. 2d 817	5 S. & D. 727.
Savitch, Doris, et al. (t/a Personal Drug Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
Sax, Chester (Consolidated Mfg. Co.), et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1952)	199 F. 2d 417	5 S. & D. 426.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
Sax, Max (Container Mfg. Co.), et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1952)	199 F. 2d 417	5 S. & D. 426.
(D.C.D.C. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 677.
S. Buchsbaum & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	153 F. 2d 85.	4 S. & D. 449.
(C.A. 7 1947)	160 F. 2d 121	4 S. & D. 621.
S. Buchsbaum & Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1946)	328 U.S. 818	4 S. & D. 482.
Schachnow, Jacob (t/a Modern Hat Works) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 361.
Schambach, Fred, v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 580.
Schick Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	288 F. 2d 407	7 S. & D. 36.
Schiff, Harold, et al. (Sun Vacuum Cleaner Co.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Schnackenberg, Elmer J., et al.; Paul Theodore Cheff (Holland Furnace) v. (Sup. Ct. 1966)	384 U.S. 373	8 S. & D. 176.
Schrup et al.; American Brake Shoe Co. v. (D.C.D. Del. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1357.
Schwartz International Textiles, Ltd., Bart v. F.T.C. (C.C.P.A. 1961)	289 F. 2d 665	7 S. & D. 86.
Scientific Living, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.M.D. Pa. 1957)	150 F. Supp. 495	6 S. & D. 263.
(C.A. 3 1958)	254 F. 2d 598	6 S. & D. 394.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 867
Rehearing denied (1959)	358 U.S. 938
Scientific Manufacturing Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1941)	124 F. 2d 640	3 S. & D. 430.
Scotch Woolen Mills v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1947)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 644.
Scott Paper Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	301 F. 2d 579	7 S. & D. 448.
(C.A. 3 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 898.
Screen Broadcast Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 178.
Sea Island Thread Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1927)	22 F. 2d 1019	1 S. & D. 654.
Sealpax Co. (Oppenheim, Oberndorf & Co. Inc. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1925)	5 F. 2d 574	1 S. & D. 409.
Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1919)	258 Fed. 307	1 S. & D. 36.
(D.C.D.C. 1962)	210 F. Supp. 67	7 S. & D. 561.
Sears, Roebuck & Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Seborne Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	135 F. 2d 676	3 S. & D. 570.
Seeburg Corp., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Tenn. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 393.
Seeburg Corp., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1970)	425 F. 2d 124	8 S. & D. 1146.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 866
S. Dean Slough v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1968)	396 F. 2d 870	8 S. & D. 782.
Certiorari denied (1968)	393 U.S. 980
Segal Lock & Hardware Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	143 F. 2d 935	4 S. & D. 266.
Certiorari denied (1945)	323 U.S. 791
Segal Optical Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	142 F. 2d 255	4 S. & D. 150.
Seiberling Rubber Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Seigmeister, Clifford, and Benrus Watch Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1965)	352 F. 2d 313	7 S. & D. 1386.
Certiorari denied (1966)	384 U.S. 939
Sekov Corp. et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 669.
Select Magazines, Inc., and Time, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
Seven-Up Co. v. Andrew C. Goodhope (D.C. E.D. Mo. 1972)	349 F. Supp. 551	9 S. & D. 366.
Seven-Up Company v. F.T.C., et al.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A. 8 1973)	478 F. 2d 755	9 S. & D. 670.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 1013
Sewell, James H. (d/b/a Burns Cuboid Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1956)	240 F. 2d 228	6 S. & D. 60.
Sewell, James H. (d/b/a Burns Cuboid Co.); F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	353 U.S. 969	6 S. & D. 60n.
Sew-Ezy Machine Co. (Stanley L. Rose); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
Seydel Chemical Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. N.J. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
Seymour Sales Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1954)	216 F. 2d 633	5 S. & D. 700.
Certiorari denied (1955)	348 U.S. 928
Sgro, Leonard; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
Shade Shop (Alfred Klesner); F.T.C. v. (C.A. D.C. 1925)	6 F. 2d 701	1 S. & D. 430.
(Sup. Ct. 1927)	274 U.S. 145	1 S. & D. 608.
(C.A.D.C. 1928)	25 F. 2d 524	1 S. & D. 677.
(Sup. Ct. 1929)	280 U.S. 19	1 S. & D. 1166.
Shafe, Kenneth W. (t/a O-Jib-Wa Medicine Co.) et al v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1958)	256 F. 2d 661	6 S. & D. 435.
Shakespeare Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1931)	50 F. 2d 758	2 S. & D. 126.
Shapiro Felt Rug Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. N.J. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 807.
Shapiro William, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 527.
Sheffield Silver Co., Inc., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1938)	98 F. 2d 676	2 S. & D. 472.
(C.A. 2 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 260.
Shelbrooke Coats et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 807.
Sheldon, Beverlee (a/k/a Beverlee Choate), et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 804.
Sheldon, Robert E., et al.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C. W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 804.
Shell Oil Company; F.T.C. v.
(D.C.D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 905.
(C.A.D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Shell Oil Co., and John Bodner, Jr. v. F.T.C., et al
(D.C.D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1122.
(D.C.D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1161.
(D.C.D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1227.
Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1966)	360 F. 2d 470	8 S. & D. 145.
Certiorari denied (1967)	385 U.S. 1002
Sherry, Martin A., and Curtiss-Wright Corp.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 935.
Sherry's Cut Rate Drug Co., Inc., F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.W.Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 701.
Sherwin Charles, et al. (Lee et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1923)	290 Fed. 517	1 S. & D. 1006.
Sherwin Charles, et al. (Lee et al.) v. U.S. (C.A. 5 1924)	297 Fed. 704	1 S. & D. 1046.
(Sup. Ct. 1925)	268 U.S. 369	1 S. & D. 1065.
Sherwin-Williams Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1955)	227 F. 2d 825	5 S. & D. 749.
Certiorari denied (1956)	351 U.S. 964
(C.A. 7 1957)	244 F. 2d 312	6 S. & D. 328.
Sherwin-Williams Co., The; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1957)	352 U.S. 419	6 S. & D. 193.
Shimmerlik, George, et al. (In re Dolcin Corp.)

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A.D.C. 1956)	247 F. 2d 524	6 S. & D. 123.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 988
Shrader, Charles (t/a Queen Chemical Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 718.
Shreveport Macaroni Mfg. Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1963)	321 F. 2d 404	7 S. & D. 747.
Certiorari denied (1964)	375 U.S. 971
Shulton, Inc., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1962)	305 F. 2d 36	7 S. & D. 472.
Shupe-Williams Candy Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1939)	106 F. 2d 962	3 S. & D. 139.
Certiorari denied (1940)	309 U.S. 675
Sibert, Frank, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1966)	367 F. 2d 364	8 S. & D. 375.
Siegel Co., Jacob, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1944)	150 F. 2d 751	4 S. & D. 294.
(C.A. 3 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 422.
(Sup. Ct. 1946)	327 U.S. 608	4 S. & D. 476.
Sifers Confection Co. (H. I. Sifers, etc. t/a); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1936)	84 F. 2d 999	2 S. & D. 346.
Signode Steel Strapping Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1942)	132 F. 2d 48	3 S. & D. 511.
Silk Scarves, Fifteen Cases of, More or Less, Containing Approx. 7414 Dozen Scarves; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 704.
Silver Co., L.B. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1923)	289 Fed. 985	1 S. & D. 278.
(C.A. 6 1923)	292 Fed. 752	1 S. & D. 327.
Silver, Michael (Kulin Waste Co. et al.), v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 837.
Silver Star Chinchilla, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. Minn. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 338.
Silverman & Associates, J., etc. (Jack Silverman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1944)	145 F. 2d 751	4 S. & D. 283.
Silverman & Associates, J., etc. (Michel Lipman et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1945)	148 F. 2d 823	4 S. & D. 322.
Simeon Management Corporation, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Calif. 1975)	391 F. Supp. 697	9 S. & D. 1271.
Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1958)	258 Fed. 673	6 S. & D. 409.
(Sup. Ct. 1959)	360 U.S. 55	6 S. & D. 587.
Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1959)	360 U.S. 55	6 S. & D. 587.
Sinclair Refining Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1921)	276 Fed. 686	1 S. & D. 145.
Sinclair Refining Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1923)	261 U.S. 463	1 S. & D. 306.
Skylark Originals, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1973)	474 F. 2d 1340	9 S. & D. 572.
Slough, S. Dean, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1968)	396 F. 2d 870	8 S. & D. 782.
Certiorari denied (1968)	393 U.S. 980
Smarz, William; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
Smith, A.E., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1929)	34 F. 2d 323	1 S. & D. 709.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1932)	1 F. Supp. 247	2 S. & D. 191.
Smith Fencer Corp., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Mich. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
S.M.S.A. Corp. et al. (Stamina Industries); U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
Snap-On Tools Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 610.
(C.A. 7 1963)	321 F. 2d 825	7 S. & D. 753.
Snappy Fashions, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. N.Y. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
Socony Mobil Oil Co., Inc., et al.; Joseph J. Broussard v. (C.A. 5 1965)	350 F. 2d 346	7 S. & D. 1294.
Sofronski, Irving (t/a Dr. Ron-Al Medicine Co., etc.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 638.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Sol Blaine; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1970)	308 F. Supp. 932	8 S. & D. 1100.
Sorensen Manufacturing Co., Inc., P., v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	246 F. 2d 687	6 S. & D. 332.
S.O.U.P., Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1971)	449 F. 2d 1142	9 S. & D. 94.
Southern Hardware Jobbers Assn. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1923)	290 Fed. 773	1 S. & D. 316.
Southern Premium Mfg. Co. (t/a Ryan Candy Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1936)	83 F. 2d 1008	2 S. & D. 342.
Southgate Brokerage Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1945)	150 F. 2d 607	4 S. & D. 403.
Certiorari denied (1945)	326 U.S. 774
Sowles, M.H.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Utah 1920)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 638.
Spalding & Bros., Inc., A.G. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	301 F. 2d 585	7 S. & D. 391.
Spector, John v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 612.
Spencer Gifts, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1962)	302 F. 2d 267	7 S. & D. 469.
Sperry and Hutchinson Co., The, v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 136	8 S. & D. 236.
(C.A. 5 1970)	432 F. 2d 146	8 S. & D. 1259.
Certiorari granted (1971)	401 U.S. 992
Sperry Rand Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1961)	288 F. 2d 403	7 S. & D. 31.
Sperry & Hutchinson Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1972)	405 U.S. 233 92 S. Ct. 898	9 S. & D. 232.
Spicer, William Edgar, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 270.
Spiegel, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1969)	411 F. 2d 481	8 S. & D. 942.
(C.A. 7 1974)	494 F. 2d 59	9 S. & D. 891.
Certiorari denied (1974)	419 U.S. 896
S. Reiffe & Sons, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
S.S.S. Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1969)	416 F. 2d 226	8 S. & D. 1030.
Stadley, Nolan B. (t/a Sterling Appliance Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 712.
Staley Mfg. Co., A.E., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	135 F. 2d 453	3 S. & D. 556.
(C.A. 7 1944)	144 F. 2d 221	4 S. & D. 250.
Staley Mfg. Co., A.E., et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1945)	324 U.S. 746	4 S. & D. 346, 495.
Stancato, Joseph (d/b/a Stancato School of Accordion, etc.) v. Department of Justice, Federal Trade Commission (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 994.
Stancato School of Accordion, etc. (Joseph Stancato d/b/a) v. Department of Justice, Federal Trade Commission (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 994.
Standard American, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1961)	195 F. Supp. 801	7 S. & D. 188.
(C.A. 3 1962)	306 F. 2d 231	7 S. & D. 501.
Standard Brands, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1951)	189 F. 2d 510	5 S. & D. 287.
Standard Container Manufacturers' Assn., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1941)	119 F. 2d 262	3 S. & D. 364.
Standard Distributing Co. (Philip Harry Koolish et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1942)	129 F. 2d 64	3 S. & D. 492.
Certiorari denied (1942)	317 U.S. 683
Rehearing denied (1942)	317 U.S. 711
(C.A. 7 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 497.
Standard Distributors, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(C.A. 2 1954)	211 F. 2d 7	5 S. & D. 619.
Standard Distributors, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1967)	267 F. Supp. 7	8 S. & D. 479.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
Standard Education Society; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1926)	14 F. 2d 947	1 S. & D. 567.
Standard Education Society et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1936)	86 F. 2d 692	2 S. & D. 366.
(Sup. Ct. 1937)	302 U.S. 112	2 S. & D. 429.
(C.A. 2 1938)	97 F. 2d 513	2 S. & D. 366.
Certiorari denied (1938)	305 U.S. 642
Standard Education Society et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 525.
Standard Education Society; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1945)	148 F. 2d 931	4 S. & D. 357.
Standard Education Society et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	55 F. Supp. 189	3 S. & D. 603.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 810.
Standard Educators, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1973)	475 F. 2d 401	9 S. & D. 588.
Certiorari denied (1973)	414 U.S. 828
Standard Mills, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 914.
Standard Motor Products, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	265 F. 2d 674	6 S. & D. 553.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 826
Standard Motor Products, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1967)	371 F. 2d 613	8 S. & D. 413.
Standard Oil Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1949)	173 F. 2d 210	5 S. & D. 89.
(Sup. Ct. 1951)	340 U.S. 231	5 S. & D. 221.
(C.A. 7 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 600.
(C.A. 7 1956)	233 F. 2d 649	6 S. & D. 6.
(D.C.D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 540.
Standard Oil Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1958)	355 U.S. 396	6 S. & D. 373.
(C.A.D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Standard Oil Co. (Indiana); F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 905.
Standard Oil Co. of California; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 905.
(C.A.D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1922)	282 Fed. 81	1 S. & D. 226.
Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1923)	261 U.S. 463	1 S. & D. 306.
Standard Oil Co. of New York v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1921)	273 Fed. 478	1 S. & D. 129.
Standard Sewing Equipment Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 738.
Stanley Furs, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. Colo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
Stanley Laboratories, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1943)	138 F. 2d 388	3 S. & D. 596.
Stanley Works v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1972)	469 F. 2d 498	9 S. & D. 367.
Certiorari denied (1973)	412 U.S. 928
Stanton Blanket Co. (Richard S. Marcus t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1965)	354 F. 2d 85	7 S. & D. 1423.
Stanton, Druggist to Women, Clara, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1942)	131 F. 2d 105	3 S. & D. 508.
Star Office Supply Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 443.
Certiorari denied (1972)	406 U.S. 918

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Startup Candy Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1939)	102 F. 2d 1015	3 S. & D. 106.
State of California, Ex. Rel. C.B. Christensen, et al. v. F.T.C., et al.
(D.C.N.D. Calif. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1118.
(D.C.N.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1373.
Stauffer Laboratories, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1965)	343 F. 2d 75	7 S. & D. 1133.
Steelco Stainless Steel, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1951)	187 F. 2d 693	5 S. & D. 265.
Steelco Stainless Steel, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
Steffy, William C., et al., U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 735.
Stenographic Machines, Inc. (La Salle Extension University) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1956)	233 F. 2d 755	6 S. & D. 14.
Stephen Rug Mills (Herzfeld et al. d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	140 F. 2d 207	4 S. & D. 109.
(C.A. 7 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 739.
Sterling Appliance Co. (Nolan B. Stadley t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 712.
Sterling Drug, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1963)	215 F. Supp. 327	7 S. & D. 655.
(C.A. 2 1963)	317 F. 2d 669	7 S. & D. 683.
Sterling Drug, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1285.
(C.A.D.C. 1971)	452 F. 2d 698	9 S. & D. 116.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 816.
Sterling Materials Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Sterling Nelson & Sons, Inc.; Rangen, Inc., et al. v. (C.A. 9 1965)	351 F. 2d 851	7 S. & D. 1342.
Certiorari denied (1966)	383 U.S. 936
Stern & Stern Textiles, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Stetson Felt Mills (Dorfman et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1944)	144 F. 2d 737	4 S. & D. 278.
Stevenson Corp., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 411.
Stewart Concrete and Material Co. and Richter Concrete Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 490.
Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Stone Co., Arnold, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1931)	49 F. 2d 1017	2 S. & D. 123.
St. Regis Paper Co. (Horace G. Barden et al.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1962)	304 F. 2d 731	7 S. & D. 495.
St. Regis Paper Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1960)	181 F. Supp. 862	6 S. & D. 754.
(C.A. 2 1960)	295 F. 2d 607	6 S. & D. 863.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1965)	240 F. Supp. 36	7 S. & D. 1145.
(C.A. 2 1966)	355 F. 2d 688	8 S. & D. 23.
St. Regis Paper Co. v. U.S. (Sup. Ct. 1961)	368 U.S. 208	7 S. & D. 284.
Rehearing denied (1962)	368 U.S. 972
Stroiman, Harry (d/b/a Empire Builders Co.); F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1970)	428 F. 2d 808	8 S. & D. 1229.
Stuart & Co., C.H., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
Suburban Propane Gas Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 830.
(C.A. 2 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 831.
Sumergrade & Sons, N. (Bernard H. Sumergrade

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1956)	234 F. 2d 335	6 S. & D. 21.
Sun Cut Rate Drug Store (Howard Deckelbaum t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. W. Va. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 689.
Sun Oil Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1961)	294 F. 2d 465	7 S. & D. 191.
(C.A. 5 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 808.
(C.A. 7 1965)	350 F. 2d 624	7 S. & D. 1324.
Certiorari denied (1966)	382 U.S. 982
Sun Oil Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1963)	371 U.S. 505	7 S. & D. 621.
Sun Vacuum Cleaner Co. (Harold Schiff et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.D. Md. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
Sunshine Art Studios, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1973)	481 F. 2d 1171	9 S. & D. 760.
Sunshine Biscuits, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1962)	306 F. 2d 48	7 S. & D. 507.
Superior Oil Company, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 908.
(C.A.D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Superior Products et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1952)	199 F. 2d 417	5 S. & D. 426.
Superior Wool Batting, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
Supreme Sales Co., etc. (Harry Froman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 181.
Surf Sales Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	259 F. 2d 744	6 S. & D. 453.
Surprise Brassiere Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1969)	406 F. 2d 711	8 S. & D. 881.
Swanee Paper Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1961)	291 F. 2d 833	7 S. & D. 175.
Certiorari denied (1962)	368 U.S. 987
Sweet Candy Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1940)	112 F. 2d 168	3 S. & D. 229.
Sweet Candy Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.D. Utah 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 731.
Sweets Co. of America, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1940)	109 F. 2d 296	3 S. & D. 180.
Sweets Co. of America, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. N.J. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
Sweets Co. of America, Inc., The (William B. Rubin), et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1956)	145 F. Supp. 171	6 S. & D. 52.
(C.A. 2 1957)	245 F. 2d 60	6 S. & D. 333.
Swift & Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1925)	8 F. 2d 595	1 S. & D. 392.
(Sup. Ct. 1926)	272 U.S. 554	1 S. & D. 575.
Swingline, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 585.
(D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1974)	371 F. Supp. 37	9 S. & D. 827.
(D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
Sydney, Floersheim, In re (C.A. 9 1963)	316 F. 2d 423	7 S. & D. 666.
Sydney N. Floersheim v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (C.A.D.C. 1973)	494 F. 2d 949	9 S. & D. 819.
Symbra-Ette, (Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc. t/a) et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1975)	518 F. 2d 33	9 S. & D. 1363.
Tag Manufacturers Institute et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1949)	174 F. 2d 452	5 S. & D. 105.
Tashof, Leon A., v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	437 F. 2d 707	8 S. & D. 1291.
Techbestos, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.J. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Ted Bates & Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1962)	310 F. 2d 89	7 S. & D. 574.
(C.A. 1 1963)	326 F. 2d 517	7 S. & D. 824.
(C.A.D.C. 1975)	515 F. 2d 367	9 S. & D. 1376.
Ted Bates & Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	380 U.S. 374	7 S. & D. 1152.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Temple Anthracite Coal Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1931)	51 F. 2d 656	2 S. & D. 132.
Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1949)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 101.
Terry Lee Armas, III, et al. (d/b/a Rejuvenation Center, Ltd.); F.T.C. v.
(D.C.W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 623.
(D.C.W.D. Texas 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 804.
Texaco, Inc.; F.T.C. v.
(D.C.D.C. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 905.
(C.A.D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1962)	301 F. 2d 662	7 S. & D. 463.
Certiorari denied (1962)	371 U.S. 822
Texaco, Inc., and The B.F. Goodrich Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 488.
(D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 492.
(C.A.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 494.
(D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 524.
(C.A.D.C. 1964)	336 F. 2d 754	7 S. & D. 956.
(C.A.D.C. 1967)	383 F. 2d 942	8 S. & D. 543.
Texaco, Inc., and The B.F. Goodrich Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1965)	381 U.S. 739	7 S. & D. 1263.
Texaco, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1968)	393 U.S. 223	8 S. & D. 856.
Texas Co. (Standard Oil Co. of N.Y.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1921)	273 Fed. 478	1 S. & D. 129.
Texas, The State of; Double Eagle Lubricants, Inc. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	248 F. Supp. 515	7 S. & D. 1416.
Appeal dismissed (1966)	384 U.S. 434
Textile and Apparel Group, American Importers Association et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1969)	410 F. 2d 1052	8 S. & D. 895.
Certiorari denied (1969)	396 U.S. 910
Thatcher Mfg. Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 3 1925)	5 F. 2d 615	1 S. & D. 411.
Thatcher Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C. (Sup. Ct. 1926)	272 U.S. 554	1 S. & D. 575.
The Chase Manhattan Bank, et al. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1551.
The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1013.
The Superior Oil Company, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1975)	517 F. 2d 137	9 S. & D. 1411.
Theodore Kagen Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1960)	233 F. 2d 371	6 S. & D. 837.
Certiorari denied (1961)	365 U.S. 843
Thomas J. Lipton, Inc. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C. Del. 1975)	396 F. Supp. 1125	9 S. & D. 1293.
Thomas Management Corp. et al,; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 802.
Thomas Quilt Factories (Chester L. Thomas d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 10 1940)	116 F. 2d 347	3 S. & D. 310.
Thomasville Chair Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1962)	306 F. 2d 541	7 S. & D. 515.
Thompson Ramo Wooldridge, Inc. (Thompson Products, Inc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 838.
Thomsen-King & Co., Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 658.
(C.A. 7 1940)	109 F. 2d 516	3 S. & D. 195.
Thomson Mfg. Co., Judson L., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 1 1945)	150 F. 2d 952	4 S. & D. 412.
Certiorari denied (1945)	326 U.S. 776
Thyrole Products Co. (I. Ralph Weinstock t/a);

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 684.
Time Inc., and Select Magazines, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
Timken Roller Bearing Co., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1962)	299 F. 2d 839	7 S. & D. 362.
Certiorari denied (1962)	371 U.S. 861
Tinley, Wilmer L., et al.; R.H. Macy & Co., Inc. v. (D.C.D.C. 1965)	249 F. Supp. 778	7 S. & D. 1430.
Tobacco Institute, The, v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 749.
Todd, Inc., J.E. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1944)	145 F. 2d 858	4 S. & D. 291.
Toledo Pipe-Threading Machine Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1925)	6 F. 2d 876	1 S. & D. 432.
(C.A. 6 1926)	11 F. 2d 337	1 S. & D. 479.
Topps Chewing Gum, Inc. v. Herman Tocker et al. (D.C.D.C. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 809.
Tornek, Allen V. (t/a Allen V. Tornek Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1960)	276 F. 2d 513	6 S. & D. 726.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 829
Tractor Training Service et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1955)	227 F. 2d 420	5 S. & D. 741.
Certiorari denied (1956)	350 U.S. 1005
Trade Union Courier Publishing Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1956)	232 F. 2d 636	6 S. & D. 14.
Trade Union Courier Publishing Corp. et al.; In re (C.A. 3 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 750.
Travelers Health Assn. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1959)	262 F. 2d 241	6 S. & D. 492.
Travelers Health Assn.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1960)	362 U.S. 293	6 S. & D. 763.
Travelers Health Assn. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1962)	298 F. 2d 820	7 S. & D. 311.
Triangle Conduit & Cable Co., Inc. (Clayton Mark & Co. et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1948)	168 F. 2d 175	4 S. & D. 741.
(Sup. Ct. 1949)	336 U.S. 956	5 S. & D. 102.
Tri Valley Growers (formerly known as Tri-Valley Packing Association) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1969)	411 F. 2d 985	8 S. & D. 915.
Certiorari denied (1969)	396 U.S. 929.
Tri-Valley Packing Assn.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. N.D. Calif. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 664.
Tri-Valley Packing Association (now known as Tri Valley Growers) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1964)	329 F. 2d 694	7 S. & D. 859.
(C.A. 9 1969)	411 F. 2d 985	8 S. & D. 915.
Certiorari denied (1969)	396 U.S. 929
Tru-Health Garments Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
Tubular Rivet & Stud Co. v. F.T.C. (D.C. D.C. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 423.
Turner, Glenn W. v. Lewis A. Engman, et al. (D.C.D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 767.
Tuseck Enterprises, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 282.
Tuttle, W.W.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 27.
(C.A. 2 1957)	244 F. 2d 605	6 S. & D. 230.
Certiorari denied (1957)	354 U.S. 925
Tysons Corner Regional Shopping Center v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 308.
Ultra-Violet Products Co., Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1944)	143 F. 2d 814	4 S. & D. 219.
Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp. v. F.T.C. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	233 F. Supp. 660	7 S. & D. 991.
Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
S.D.N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1117, 1449.
Union Carbide Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 843.
Union Circulation Co. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. N.D. Ga. 1970)	311 F. Supp. 576	8 S. & D. 1113, 1310.
Union Circulation Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1957)	241 F. 2d 652	6 S. & D. 185.
Union News Co., The, and American News Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	300 F. 2d 104	7 S. & D. 346.
Certiorari denied (1962)	371 U.S. 824
United Biscuit Co. of America v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	350 F. 2d 615	7 S. & D. 1313.
Certiorari denied (1966)	383 U.S. 926
United Brands Company and Chiquita Brands, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1974)	499 F. 2d 395	9 S. & D. 1090.
United Corporation et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1940)	110 F. 2d 473	3 S. & D. 209.
United Diathermy, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 709.
United Diathermy, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
United Film Service, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1953)	204 F. 2d 694	5 S. & D. 528.
United States Association of Credit Bureaus, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1962)	299 F. 2d 220	7 S. & D. 358.
United States Maltsters Assn., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1945)	152 F. 2d 161	4 S. & D. 428.
United States Navy Weekly, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	207 F. 2d 17	5 S. & D. 549.
United States Pipe and Foundry Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	304 F. Supp. 1254	8 S. & D. 1021.
United States Retail Credit Assn., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1962)	300 F. 2d 212	7 S. & D. 366.
United States Rubber Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
United States Steel Corp. and Lukens Steel Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1317.
United States Steel Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 367.
(C.A. 3 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 789.
United States Steel Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1970)	426 F. 2d 592	8 S. & D. 1154.
(C.A. 6 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 68.
United Surveys (James H. Christie d/b/a); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 813.
Universal Educational Guild Inc., et al. (Abe Halperin); U.S. v. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Universal-Rundle Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1965)	352 F. 2d 831	7 S. & D. 1380.
(C.A. 7 1967)	382 F. 2d 285	8 S. & D. 540.
Universal-Rundle Corp.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1967)	387 U.S. 244	8 S. & D. 498.
Universal Wool Batting Corp. et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 283
Universe Co. (Heinz W. Kirchner d/b/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1964)	337 F. 2d 751	7 S. & D. 1018.
Upjohn Co., The. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1966)	363 F. 2d 757	8 S. & D. 248.
U.S. Drug & Sales Co., etc (Edwin L. Leisenring

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
et al t/a) F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Colo. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 666.
U.S. ex rel. Cubberley v. F.T.C. (D.C.D.C. 1933)	Not reported	2 S. & D. 240.
U.S. Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 5.
U.S. Printing & Novelty Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1953)	204 F. 2d 737	5 S. & D. 529.
Certiorari denied (1953)	346 U.S. 830
U.S. Printing & Novelty Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. ABC Consolidated Corp. et al. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
U.S. v. Abe Halperin (Universal Educational Guild, Inc., et al.) (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. Abraham Feder (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Aimcee Wholesale Corp. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 318	8 S. & D. 338.
U.S. v. Air Conditioning Training Corp. et al. (Morris A. Gluck) (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. Aluminum Exterior Designers, Inc. (D.C.S.D. Ind. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
U.S. v. Alvin B. Wolf et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. E.D. 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 824.
U.S. v. Alvin O. Langdon (D.C.E.D. Tenn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. American Albums, Inc., et al. (D.C. N.D. Ohio 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
U.S. v. American Candle Co., Inc. (D.C.E.D. N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. American Greetings Corp. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1958)	168 F. Supp. 45	6 S. & D. 457.
(D.C.N.D. Ohio 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
(D.C.N.D. Ohio 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 520.
U.S.; American Greetings Corp. v. (C.A. 6 1959)	272 F. 2d 945	6 S. & D. 714.
U.S. v. American Rug & Carpet Co., Inc. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. American Seal-Kap Corp. et al. (D.C. N.D.N.Y. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1947)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 822.
U.S. v. American Television Institute, Inc. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 735.
U.S. v. American Corp. et al. (D.C.D. Md. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
(D.C.D. Md. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. AMF Incorporated (D.C. Colo. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Amstar Corporation (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
U.S. v. Ancorp National Services, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1973)	367 F. Supp. 1221	9 S. & D. 808.
(C.A. 2 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1312.
U.S. v. Annis Stanton Co. et al. (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
U.S. v. Approved Photographers Assn. (D.C. S.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Arlen Realty & Development Corp., et al. (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
U.S. v. Artnell Co. (C.A. 7 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1016.
U.S. v. Asheville Textiles, Inc. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Associated Merchandising Corp. et al.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 318	8 S. & D. 338.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	261 F. Supp. 553	8 S. & D. 382.
U.S. v. Associated Trade Press Inc., et al. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Atlantic Coast Oil Co. of New York, Inc. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
U.S. v. Atlantic School, Inc. (D.C. Kan. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
U.S. v. Atlas Mfg. & Sales Corp., The, et al. (Roland S. Jenkins) (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. Auerbach, Shay (t/a Belvedere Wool Co.) (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
U.S. v. Automation Machine Training Center, Inc. (D.C.W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. Barber, Hiram E. (t/a Motor Equipment Specialty Co.) (D.C. Nebr. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
U.S. v. Basic Products Co. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1919)	260 Fed. 472	1 S. & D. 876.
U.S. v. Baskin, Ned R. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Beatrice Foods, Co.
(D.C. Minn. 1972)	344 F. Supp. 104	9 S. & D. 437.
(C.A. 5 1974)	493 F. 2d 1259	9 S. & D. 867.
U.S. v. Belvedere Wool Co. (Shay Auerbach t/a) (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
U.S. v. Benjamin D. Kalin (D.C.N.D.W.D. Ia. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. Bennett, William P. and Charles C. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Benson, John T. (Renor Co., Inc., et al.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Better Rhinestone Jewelry Corp. et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
U.S. v. B.F. Goodrich Co., The (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. Bogolub, William (doing business as Fabricon Co.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Bostwick Laboratories, Inc. (D.C.D. Conn. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Broadmore Fashions, Inc., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 809.
U.S. v. Burch, Harry A. (t/a Washington Institute of Practical Nursing, etc.) (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. Busse, Robert G. (D.C.S.D. Ill. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
U.S. v. Buttenfield, Charles C. (D.C.W.D. Pa. 1925)	Not reported	1 S. & D. 1064.
U.S. v. B-X Laboratories (John Petrie t/a) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 723.
U.S. v. Canadian Ace Brewing Co. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
U.S.; Cannan v. (C.A. 5, 1927)	19 F. 2d 823	1 S. & D. 1106.
U.S. v. Capitol Service, Inc., The, et al. (D.C. E.D. Mich. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Carnerie, Don N. (d/b/a Civil Preparation Service, etc.) (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 811.
U.S. v. Carnerie, Don N. (D.C. Colo. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Carpentier, Dr. Emile (D.C.N.J. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 816.
U.S. v. Caulk Co., L.D., The, and The Dentists' Supply Co. of New York (D.C.E.D.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
U.S. v. Century Metalcraft Corp. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 812.
U.S. v. Certane Co. et al (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 737.
U.S. v. Charles C., and William P. Bennett (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Charles R. Johnson (D.C.E.D. Md. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
U.S. v. Charlotte Novelty Co. (Jack Salup) (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Chesapeake Distilling & Distributing Co. (D.C.D. Md. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 727.
U.S. v. Chicago Technical College (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Christie, James H. (d/b/a United Surveys) (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 813.
U.S. v. Chun King Sales, Inc. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Civil Preparation Service, et al. (D.C. W.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 811.
U.S. v. Commercial Distributors of America (Gene J. Davidson) (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
U.S. v. Coradio, Inc. (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
U.S. v. Cornelius P. Van Schaack, Jr. (The Ink Co. of America, etc.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
U.S. v. Coty, Inc. (D.C. Del. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Crown Manufacturing Co., Inc., et al. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
U.S. v. Curtis Brothers, Inc. (D.C.D.C. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. C.W.F. Corporation (D.C. Md. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. Dalton et al., Mick (D.C. Nebr. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Davidson, Gene J. (Commercial Distributors of America) (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
U.S. v. Deeter, Larry M. (Educational Surveys) (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. Del L. Young (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1558.
U.S. v. Delco Novelty Co. and DeLuxe Products Co. (Alvin B. Wolf t/a) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 824.
U.S. v. Dentists' Supply Co. of New York, The, and The L.D. Caulk Co. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
U.S. v. Deran Confectionery Co. (D.C.D. Mass. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 724.
U.S. v. Distinctive Emblem & Uniform Corp., et al. (Seymour S. Hindman) (D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	179 F. Supp. 926	6 S. & D. 715.
(D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Domestic Diathermy Co. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 803.
U.S. v. Don N. Carnerie (Civil Preparation Service, etc.) (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 811.
U.S. v. Don N. Carnerie (D.C. Colo. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Dooley, Inc., Paul R., et al. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Drew Corp., The Irving (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Dr. Emile Carpentier (D.C.D.N.J. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 816.
U.S. v. Dr. Hiss Shoes, Inc. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. Duon, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. Fla. 1959, 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
U.S. v. Durlacher and Co., Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
U.S. v. Educational Surveys (Larry M. Deeter) (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. Einiger Mills, Inc., et al. (D.C.D. Mass. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
U.S. v. Elliot Knitwear, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 366.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
U.S. v. Elmer Candy Co. (D.C.E.D. La. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 725.
U.S. v. Empire Press, Inc., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
U.S. v. Epstein, Murray, et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
U.S. v. E.R. Page Co., Inc., The (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
U.S. v. Fabricon Co. (William Bogolub doing business as) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Family Record Plan, Inc., et al. (D.C. C.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1309.
U.S. v. Federated Department Stores, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1966)	256 F. Supp. 318	8 S. & D. 338.
U.S. v. Fire Safety Services, Inc., et al. (D.C. Md. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. Fluidless Non-Tack Lenses, Inc., et al. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Fong Poy, et al. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Fox, I.J., Inc., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Freeman, Joseph (Gift Products, Inc., et al.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 786.
U.S. v. Fried Woolen Corp., Joe, et al. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
U.S. v. Frito-Lay, Inc., and PepsiCo, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1310.
U.S. v. Fruchtman, Irwin (C.A. 6 1970)	421 F. 2d 1019	8 S. & D. 1103.
Certiorari denied (1970)	400 U.S. 849
U.S. v. G. Fred Davis (D.C.N.D. Texas 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Garofalo, C. James (Masterkraft Guild Weavers, Inc.) (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. Gartner, Robert J. (Charles F. Gomez et al.) (D.C. Nebr. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. Gellman Brothers (D.C.D. Minn. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 737.
U.S. v. General Products Corp. (Ray S. Kalwajtys et al. d/b/a) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
U.S. v. George's Radio and Television Co., Inc., et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
U.S. v. Gerald A. Rice, et al. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 804.
U.S. v. Gift Products, Inc., et al. (Joseph Freeman) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 786.
U.S. v. G. Leach & Co. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 819.
U.S. v. Gluck, Morris A. (Air Conditioning Training Corp., et al.) (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Goldfine, Bernard, et al. (Northfield Mills, Inc.) (D.C.D. Vt. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
U.S. v. Gomez, Charles F., et al. (Robert J. Gartner) (D.C. Nebr. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. Goodrich Co., The B. F. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. Gramer, Walter W. (D.C.D. Minn. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
U.S. v. Great Minneapolis Surplus Store, Inc., The, et al. (D.C. Minn. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Greater Kansas City Gas Furnace & Air Conditioning Company (D.C.W.D. Mo. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. Gynex Corp. (Bureau of Hygiene) (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 731.
U.S. v. Hall Clothes, Inc., Robert, et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Hargo Woolen Mills, Inc., et al. (D.C. D.N.H. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
U.S. v. Hauptman, Jacob (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. Hauptman Feather Co., Inc., et al. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. Hearst Corp. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. Herbal Medicine Co., et al. (D.C.D. Md. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
(D.C.D. Md. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
U.S. v. Herbold Laboratory, Inc., et al. (D.C. C.D. Calif. 1967)	267 F. Supp. 53	8 S. & D. 485.
(D.C.C.D. Calif. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S.; Herbold Laboratory, Inc., et al. v. (C.A. 9 1969)	413 F. 2d 342	8 S. & D. 977.
U.S. v. Hindman, Seymour S. (Distinctive Emblem & Uniform Corp., et al.) (D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	179 F. Supp. 926	6 S. & D. 715.
(D.C.D.N.J. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Hiss Shoes, Inc., Dr. (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. H.M. Prince Textiles, Inc., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1966)	262 F. Supp. 383	8 S. & D. 1305.
U.S. v. Hoffman Aircraft Co. et al. (D.C. Kans. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. Holst Publishing Co., et al. (D.C.S.D. Iowa 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 724.
U.S. v. Home Diathermy Co., Inc. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 683.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
U.S. v. Huttner, Daniel (Sanitary Feather Co.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. I.J. Fox, Inc., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. International Association of Photographers et al. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. International Salt Co. (D.C.N.D. Ill. E.D. 1949)	80 F. Supp. 419	4 S. & D. 779.
(C.A. 7 1949)	174 F. 2d 703	5 S. & D. 125.
(Sup. Ct. 1950)	338 U.S. 632	5 S. & D. 167.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 800.
U.S. v. Irving Drew Corp., The (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
U.S. v. Irving Rifkin

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. Irving Roy Jacobson, et al. (D.C.W.D. Wis. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
U.S. v. ITT Continental Baking Company
(C.A. 10 1972)	462 F. 2d 1104	9 S. & D. 306.
(C.A. 10 1973)	485 F. 2d 16	9 S. & D. 775.
Certiorari granted (1974)	416 U.S. 968
(Sup. Ct. 1975)	420 U.S. 223	9 S. & D. 1189.
	95 S. Ct. 926.
U.S. v. J.B. Williams Company, Inc., et al.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1973)	354 F. Supp. 521	9 S. & D. 483.
(C.A. 2 1974)	498 F. 2d 414	9 S. & D. 938.
U.S. v. Jacobson, Irving Roy, et al. (D.C.W.D. Wis. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
U.S. v. James H. Christie (United Surveys) (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 813.
U.S. v. Joe Fried Woolen Corp. et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 817.
U.S. v. K & S. Sales Co., et al (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 723.
U.S. v. Kalwajtys, Ray S. et al. (d/b/a General Products Corp.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
U.S. v. Karns, Saul J. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. Klimate-Pruf Manufacturing Co. (D.C.M.D.N.C. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 725.
U.S. v. Koch, Carl E., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 730.
U.S. v. Kongo Chemical Co., Inc. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 818.
U.S. v. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc.
(D.C.M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 791.
(D.C.M.D. Fla. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 805.
U.S. v. Koster-Pearl Furs, Inc., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Lady Carole Coats Inc., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 807.
U.S. v. Lafayette Iron Works, Inc. (D.C.D. N.J. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 917.
U.S. v. Lanteen Laboratories, Inc., et al. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 821.
U.S. v. Lawrence Blanket Company, et al. (D.C. Mass. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Leach & Co., G. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 819.
U.S. v. Lee et al. (Sherwin et al.) (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1923)	290 Fed. 517	1 S. & D. 1006.
U.S.; Lee et al. v. (Sherwin et al.) (C.A. 5 1924)	297 Fed. 704	1 S. & D. 1046.
U.S. v. Lehrman Furs, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
U.S. v. Lenco Spring Co. (Maurice J. Lenett et al.) (D.C. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. Lenett, Maurice J., et al. (Lenco Spring Co.) (D.C. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. Levore Co. et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 728.
U.S. v. Litchfield Woolen Mills Co., et al. (D.C. Minn. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
U.S. v. Litton Industries
(C.A. 9 1972)	462 F. 2d 14	9 S. & D. 299.
U.S. v. Livingston, Jules (t/a Maryland Distributors etc.) (D.C.D. Md. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. L.M. Clothing Co., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Loesch, William T. (D.C.S.D. Tex. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Lowenthal, Edward (t/a Thomas Webster, etc.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
(C.A. 7 1957)	248 F. 2d 397	6 S. & D. 365.
(D.C.D. Ariz. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. MacFadden Publications, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Madway Main Line Homes, Inc., et al. (Main Line Lumber & Millwork Co., et al.) (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
U.S. v. Magic Weave, Inc., et al. (D.C. Mass. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. Magnecoil Co., Inc. (D.C.D. Utah 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 822.
U.S. v. Main Line Lumber & Millwork Co., et al. (Madway Main Line Homes, Inc., et al.) (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
U.S. v. Marvin Accessories, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Marx Baking Co. (D.C. Colo. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1097.
U.S. v. Maryland Distributors, etc. (Jules Livingston t/a) (D.C.D. Md. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. Masterkraft Guild Weavers, Inc. (C. James Garofalo) (D.C.D.N.J. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. McKewen, George Earl, et al. (t/a Herbal Medicine Co.) (D.C.D. Md. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
(D.C.D. Md. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 817.
U.S. v. Melley, Leonard (National Educators, Inc. et al.) (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Mells Manufacturing Co. (D.C.E.D. N.Y. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
U.S. v. Melster Candy Co. (D.C.W.D. Wis. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
U.S. v. Mick Dalton, et al. (D.C. Nebr. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. Mid-West Bottle Cap Co. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Mid-West Portrait Service, etc. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
U.S. v. Mid-West Sales Syndicate, etc.	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
U.S. v. Midwest Studios, Inc. (D.C.D. Oreg. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 729.
(D.C.D. Oreg. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 805.
U.S. v. Milwaukee Boiler Mfg. Co. (D.C.E.D. Wis. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1110.
U.S. v. Modell, Henry, et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Modern Rug Co., Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
U.S. v. Montebello Distillers, Inc. (D.C.D. Md. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 726.
U.S. v. Moore & Co., William C. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
U.S. v. Moore Products Corp., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. Morton Salt Co. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	80 F. Supp. 419	4 S. & D. 779.
(C.A. 7 1949)	174 F. 2d 703	5 S. & D. 125.
(Sup. Ct. 1950)	338 U.S. 632	5 S. & D. 167.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 800.
U.S. v. Motor Equipment Specialty Co. (Hiram Barber t/a) (D.C.D. Nebr. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
U.S. v. Moye, E.T. (Moye Photographers)

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.D.C. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 917.
U.S.; Mueller, Sidney J. (Mueller Hair Experts) v. (C.A. 5 1958)	262 F. 2d 443	6 S. & D. 470.
U.S. v. Mueller, Sidney J. (Mueller Hair Experts) (D.C.S.D. Tex. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Mutual Printing Co. (t/a Mutual Sales Promotion Service) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 728.
U.S. v. National Bakers Services, Inc. (D.C.S.D. Fla. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. N & W Enterprises, Inc., et al (Janet L. Winters) (D.C.M.D. Fla. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. National Biscuit Co. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1938)	25 F. Supp. 329	2 S. & D. 477.
U.S. v. National Educators, Inc., et al. (Leonard Melley (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. National Laboratories of St. Louis (Oliver L. Rohlfing trading as) (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. National Outdoor Display, Inc. (D.C.W.D. Tenn. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
U.S. v. National Titanium Co. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 808.
U.S. v. National Toilet Co. (D.C.W.D. Tenn. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
U.S. v. National Training Service, Inc., et al. (D.C. Conn. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Nationwide Clothiers, Inc., et al. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. New York Feather Co., Inc., et al. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Northfield Mills, Inc. (Bernard Goldfine et al.) (D.C.D. Vt. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 919.
U.S. v. Ogle, Kenneth R., et al. (t/a Approved Photographers Assn.) (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Ohio Art Co. (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. Oland D. Redd (Woelfel Studio, et al.) (D.C.W.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
U.S. v. Olson Rug Co. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Oppenheim, Collins & Co. Inc. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 729.
U.S. v. Page Co. Inc., The E.R. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 734.
U.S. v. Papercraft Corporation
(D.C.W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 408	9 S. & D. 1262.
(D.C.W.D. Penn. 1975)	393 F. Supp. 415	9 S. & D. 1329.
(D.C.W.D. Penn. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. Parfumerie Lido, Inc., et al. (D.C.E. D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
U.S. v. Parfums Corday, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Paul B. Elder Co. (D.C. Del. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1097.
U.S. v. Paul R. Dooley, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. PepsiCo, Inc., and Frito-Lay, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1310.
U.S. v. Personal Drug Co. (Doris Savitch, et al.) (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
U.S. v. Petrie, John (t/a B-X Laboratories, etc.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 723.
U.S. v. Philip T. Berkley (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Pioneer Advertising Co. etc. (Cornelius P. Van. Schaack, Jr., t/a) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
U.S. v. Piuma, Joseph A. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	40 F. Supp. 119	3 S. & D. 412
U.S. Piuma, Joseph A. v. (C.A. 9 1942)	126 F. 2d 601	3 S. & D. 468.
Certiorari denied (1942)	317 U.S. 637
U.S. v. Plantation Chocolate Co., Inc. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 727.
U.S. v. Post Graduate Hospital School of Nursing, Inc., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1963, 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 793
U.S. v. Poy, Fong, et al. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Pruvo Pharmacal Co., et al. (D.C.E.D. Wis. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. Purofied Down Products Corp. et al. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. Pyramid Books (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1443.
U.S. v. Radio Training Assn. of America, et al. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Radley Furs, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1450.
U.S. v. Rango Tablet Co., et al. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 819.
U.S. v. Raymond Anderson (D.C.S.D. Ohio 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. Raymond's, Inc., et al. (D.C.D. Mass. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1305.
U.S. v. Redd, Oland D. (Woelfel Studio, et al.) (D.C.W.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
U.S. v. Regal Accessories, Inc., et al. (D.C.E. D.N.Y. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. Renor Co., Inc., et al. (John T. Benson) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
U.S. v. Retail Service Bureau, etc. (Edward Lowenthal t/a) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
U.S. v. Retonga Medicine Co. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 815.
U.S. v. Rettinger, David and Israel (D.C.E. D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
U.S. v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1951)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 801.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. Rice, Gerald A., et al. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 804.
U.S. v. Robert Hall Clothes, Inc., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Rogers Redemption Bureau, etc. (D.C. D. Minn. 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 820.
U.S. v. Rohlfing, Oliver L. (trading as National Laboratories of St. Louis) (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. Rose, Stanley L. (Sew-Ezy Machine Co.) (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Royce George Hoffmann (D.C. Kan. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. R.T. Vanderbilt, Co., Inc., et al. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 815.
U.S. v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1210.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Salup, Jack (Charlotte Novelty Co.) (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Sanitary Feather Co. (Daniel Huttner) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. San Juan Lumber Co., Inc. (D.C.D. Colo. 1969)	313 F. Supp. 703	8 S. & D. 1061, 1309.
U.S. v. Saunders Company, et al., W.B. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
U.S. v. Sav-Cote Chemical Laboratories, Inc., et al.
(D.C.N.J. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
(D.C.N.J. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. Savitch, Doris, et al. (t/a Personal Drug Co.) (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1440.
U.S. v. Schiff, Harold, et al. (Sun Vacuum Cleaner Co.) (D.C. Md. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Select Magazines, Inc., and Time, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
U.S. v. Sew-Ezy Machine Co. (Stanley L. Rose) (D.C.D. Md. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 915.
U.S. v. Seydel Chemical Co., et al. (D.C.D. N.J. 1958)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 914.
U.S. v. Sgro, Leonard (D.C.N.D. Ohio 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1447.
U.S. v. Shapiro Felt Rug Co., et al. (D.C.D. N.J. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 807.
U.S. v. Shelbrooke Coats, et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 807.
U.S. v. Sherwin, Charles, et al. (Lee, et al.) (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1923)	290 Fed. 517	1 S. & D. 1006.
U.S.; Sherwin, Charles, et al. (Lee, et al.) (C.A. 5 1924)	297 Fed. 704	1 S. & D. 1046.
(Sup. Ct. 1925)	268 U.S. 369	1 S. & D. 1065.
U.S. v. Silver Star Chinchilla, Inc. (D.C. Minn. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 338.
U.S. v. Smith Fencer Corp., et al. (D.C.E.D. Mich. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. S.M.S.A. Corp., et al. (Stamina Industries) (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1445.
U.S. v. Snappy Fashions, Inc. (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. S. Reiffe & Sons, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
U.S. v. Standard Distributors, Inc., et al. (D.C. N.D. Ill. 1967)	267 F. Supp. 7	8 S. & D. 479.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1968)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1308.
U.S. v. Standard Education Society, et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	55 F. Supp. 189	3 S. & D. 603.
(D.C.N.D. Ill. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 810.
U.S. v. Stanley Furs, Inc. (D.C.S.D. Colo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1555.
U.S. v. Steelco Stainless Steel, Inc., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
U.S. v. Steffy, William C., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 735.
U.S. v. Sterling Materials Co., Inc., et al. (D.C. E.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Stern & Stern Textiles, Inc. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. St. Regis Paper Co. (D.C.S.D.N.Y.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1960)	181 F. Supp. 862	6 S. & D. 754.
(C.A. 2 1960)	285 F. 2d 607	6 S. & D. 863.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
(C.A. 2 1966)	355 F. 2d 688	8 S. & D. 23.
U.S.; St. Regis Paper Co. v. (Sup. Ct. 1961)	368 U.S. 208	7 S. & D. 284.
U.S. v. St. Regis Paper Co. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1965)	240 F. Supp. 36	7 S. & D. 1145.
U.S. v. Stuart & Co., Inc., C.H., et al. (D.C. W.D. Wash. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
U.S. v. Sun Vacuum Cleaner Co. (Harold Schiff, et al.) (D.C. Md. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1441.
U.S. v. Superior Wool Batting, Inc. (D.C.E.D. N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. Sweet Candy Co. (D.C.D. Utah 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 731.
U.S. v. Sweets Co. of America, Inc. (D.C.D. N.J. 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
U.S. v. Swingline, Inc.
(D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 585.
(D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1974)	371 F. Supp. 37	9 S. & D. 827.
(D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. Techbestos, Inc. (D.C.N.J. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Thomas Management Corp., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 802.
U.S. v. Time, Inc. and Select Magazines, Inc. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448,
U.S. v. Tru-Health Garments Corp. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 911.
U.S. v. Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1117
U.S. v. Union Circulation Co., et al. (D.C.N.D. Ga. 1970)	311 F. Supp. 576	8 S. & D. 1113
U.S. v. United Industrial Syndicate, Inc. (D.C.E.D. Wisc. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. United Surveys (James H. Christie d/b/a) (D.C.E.D. Wash. 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 813.
U.S. v. Universal Educational Guild, Inc., et al. (Abe Halperin) (D.C.E.D.N.Y. 1966)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. Universal Training Service, et al. (D.C.E.D. La. 1974)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1556.
U.S. v. Universal Wool Batting Corp., et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 283
U.S. v. U.S. Printing & Novelty Co., Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
U.S. v. Valley Steel Products Co. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Van Raalte Co., Inc., et al.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1971)	328 F. Supp. 827	9 S. & D. 70.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Vanderbilt Co., Inc., R.T., et al. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 815.
U.S. v. Van Schaack, Jr., Cornelius P. (t/a Pioneer Advertising Co., etc.) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
U.S. v. Velox Service, Inc., et al. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
U.S. v. Vitasafe Corp. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	212 F. Supp. 397	7 S. & D. 607.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	234 F. Supp. 710	7 S. & D. 981.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1017.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
(C.A. 2 1965)	352 F. 2d 62	7 S. & D. 1363.
U.S. v. Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Co. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1959)	178 F. Supp. 723	6 S. & D. 703.
(D.C.E.D. Pa. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
(C.A. 3 1961)	288 F. 2d 257	7 S. & D. 73
Certiorari denied (1961)	368 U.S. 821
U.S. v. Walker Manufacturing Co. (D.C.E.D. Wis. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 675.
U.S. v. Washington Institute of Practical Nursing, etc. (Harry A. Burch t/a) (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. Waterville Woolen Mills, Inc. (D.C. Maine 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
U.S. v. W.B. Saunders Company, et al. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
U.S. v. Webster, Thomas, etc. (Edward Lowenthal t/a) (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1965)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
(C.A. 7 1957)	248 F. 2d 397	6 S. & D. 365.
(D.C.D. Ariz. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
U.S. v. Western Auto Supply Co. (D.C.W.D. Mo. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
U.S. v. Westville Oil and Manufacturing, Inc. (D.C.N.D. Ind. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 806.
U.S. v. Willard Tablet Co. (C.A. 7 1944)	141 F. 2d 141	4 S. & D. 145.
U.S. v. William C. Moore & Co. (D.C.W.D. Wash. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
U.S. v. William C. Steffy, et al. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 735.
U.S. v. William N. Bostic (D.C.D. So. Car. 1972)	336 F. 2d 1312	9 S. & D. 185.
Certiorari denied (1973)	411 U.S. 966
(D.C.D. So. Car. 1972)	473 F. 2d 1388	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. William P. and Charles C. Bennett (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
U.S. v. William R. Clark (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. William Smarz (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1553.
U.S. v. Wilson Chemical Co., Inc. (D.C.M.D. Penn. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
(D.C.W.D. Penn. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 538.
(D.C.W.D. Penn. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
(C.A. 3 1963)	319 F. 2d 133	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. Woonsocket Spinning Co., et al. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
U.S. v. Wilson Chemical Co., Inc. (D.C.M.D. Pa. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
(D.C.W.D. Pa. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 538
(C.A. 3 1963)	319 F. 2d 133	7 S. & D. 1444.
U.S. v. W.T. Grant Company (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
U.S. v. Winters, Janet L. (N & W Enterprises, Inc., et al.) (D.C.M.D. Fla. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
U.S. v. Woelfel Studio, et al. (Oland D. Redd) (D.C.W.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
U.S. v. Wolf, Alvin B. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 824.
U.S. v. Woody Fashions, Inc., et al. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1964)	190 F. Supp. 709	7 S. & D. 13.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
U.S. v. Worthmore Sales Promotion Service, Inc. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
Utah-Idaho Sugar Co.; v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1927)	22 F. 2d 122	1 S. & D. 638.
Vacu-Matic Carburetor Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1946)	157 F. 2d 711	4 S. & D. 576.
Certiorari denied (1947)	331 U.S. 806
Valley Steel Products Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Mo. 1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1444.
Valve Manufacturers Assn. (George A. Cooper); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 477.
Van Camp, Inc., Stokely, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Van der Linde, Victor, et al., In re Dolcin Corp. and: (C.A.D.C. 1956)	247 F. 2d 524	6 S. & D. 123.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 988
Van Raalte Co., Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1971)	328 F. Supp. 827	9 S. & D. 70.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
Vanderbilt Co., Inc., R.T., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C. S.D.N.Y. 1944)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 815.
Vanity Fair Paper Mills, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1962)	311 F. 2d 480	7 S. & D. 583.
Van Schaack, Jr., Cornelius P. (t/a The Ink Co. of America, etc.); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
Velox Service, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D. N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
Venus Foods v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 183.
Virginia Excelsior Mills, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1958)	256 F. 2d 538	6 S. & D. 424.
Vitasafe Corp.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1962)	212 F. Supp. 397	7 S. & D. 607.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	234 F. Supp. 710	7 S. & D. 981.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1017.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
(C.A. 2 1965)	352 F. 2d 62	7 S. & D. 1363.
Vivaudou, Inc., V. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1931)	54 F. 2d 273	2 S. & D. 146.
Viviano Macaroni Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1969)	411 F. 2d 255	8 S. & D. 926.
Von Schrader Manufacturing Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 425.
Voss Hair Experts of Georgia (George M. Voss t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1960)	275 F. 2d 24	6 S. & D. 718.
Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1958)	258 F. 2d 684	6 S. & D. 423.
Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1959)	178 F. Supp. 723	6 S. & D. 703.
(D.C.E.D. Pa. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 918.
(C.A. 3 1961)	288 F. 2d 257	7 S. & D. 73
Certiorari denied (1961)	368 U.S. 821
Walker, James, et al. (t/a Merit Health Appliance Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Calif. 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 715.
Walker Manufacturing Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.E.D. Wis. 1954)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 675.
Walker's New River Mining Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 4 1935)	79 F. 2d 457	2 S. & D. 320.
Wallace, E.J.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1935)	75 F. 2d 733	2 S. & D. 280.
Walter Dlutz v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1969)	406 F. 2d 277	8 S. & D. 880.
Certiorari denied (1969)	395 U.S. 936
Rehearing denied (1969)	396 U.S. 869
Walter E. Crowther, et al; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D.C. 1969)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1070.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Walter E. Crowther; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.
Walter H. Johnson Candy Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1935)	78 F. 2d 717	2 S. & D. 303.
Waltham Precision Instrument Co., Inc., et al. (formerly Waltham Watch Co., et al.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	327 F. 2d 427	7 S. & D. 844.
Certiorari denied (1964)	377 U.S. 992
Waltham Watch Co.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1959)	169 F. Supp. 614	6 S. & D. 498.
Waltham Watch Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1963)	318 F. 2d 28	7 S. & D. 705.
Certiorari denied (1963)	375 U.S. 944
Rehearing denied (1964)	375 U.S. 998
(C.A.D.C. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1111.
Certiorari denied (1965)	382 U.S. 813
Rehearing denied (1965)	382 U.S. 922
Wanderer, Eugene T., v. Wayne E. Kaplan, et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 523.
Wanderer, Eugene T. (Midwest Warehouse Distributors, Inc.) v. Wayne E. Kaplan, et al. (D.C.D.C. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 599.
Wantz, Albert T., et al., In re Dolcin Corp. (C.A.D.C. 1956)	247 F. 2d 524	6 S. & D. 123.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 988
Ward Baking Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1920)	264 Fed. 330	1 S. & D. 49.
Ward Laboratories, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1960)	276 F. 2d 952	6 S. & D. 787.
Certiorari denied (1960)	364 U.S. 827
Warner-Lambert Co. v. F.T.C., et al. (D.C.D.C. 1971)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 99.
(D.C.D.C. 1973)	361 F. Supp. 948	9 S. & D. 694.
Warner's Renowned Remedies Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1944)	140 F. 2d 18	4 S. & D. 106.
Certiorari denied (1944)	322 U.S. 754
Washington Fish & Oyster Co., Inc.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 9 1959)	271 F. 2d 39	6 S. & D. 666.
(C.A. 9 1960)	282 F. 2d 595	6 S. & D. 831.
Washington Institute of Practical Nursing, etc. (Harry A. Burch t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.W. D. Wash. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
Waterville Woolen Mills, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C. Maine 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1307.
Wax Bros. & Rosenberg Dress Co., Inc., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	194 F. 2d 504	5 S. & D. 374.
W.B. Caldwell, Inc., Dr., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	111 F. 2d 889	3 S. & D. 218.
W.B. Saunders Company, et al,; U.S. v. (D.C. E.D. Pa. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1448.
Weavers Guild (Abel Allan Goodman t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1957)	244 F. 2d 584	6 S. & D. 284.
Webb-Crawford Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1940)	109 F. 2d 268	3 S. & D. 184.
Certiorari denied (1940)	310 U.S. 638
Webster, Thomas, etc. (Edward Lowenthal t/a); U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1956)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 912.
(C.A. 7 1957)	248 F. 2d 397	6 S. & D. 365.
(D.C.D. Ariz. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 916.
Weiler, Alexander, et al. (d/b/a New York Premium Novelty Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1941)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 426.
Weinberger, Caspar N.; Sydney N. Floersheim v. (D.C.D.C. 1972)	346 F. Supp. 950	9 S. & D. 220.
Weingarten, Inc., J., v. F.T.C. (D.C.E.D. Tex.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
1963)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 736.
Weingarten, Inc., J.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 5 1964)	336 F. 2d 687	7 S. & D. 1000.
Certiorari denied (1965)	380 U.S. 908
Weinstock, I. Ralph (t/a Thyrole Products Co.); F.T.C. v. (D.C.E.D. Pa. 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 684.
Weiss, David M.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 2 1945)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 410.
(C.A. 2 1946)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 583.
Weller Co., J., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Wellworth Sales Co. (Isidore Halperin, et al. t/a) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1942)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 472.
Western Auto Supply Co.; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1957)	242 F. 2d 31	6 S. & D. 220.
Western Auto Supply Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Mo. 1957)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 913.
Western Chemicals, Inc., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C. W.D. Wash. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 632.
Western Fruit Growers Sales Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1963)	322 F. 2d 67	7 S. & D. 781.
Certiorari denied (1964)	376 U.S. 907
Western Meat Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1924)	1 F. 2d 95	1 S. & D. 365.
(C.A. 9 1925)	4 F. 2d 223	1 S. & D. 399.
Western Meat Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1926)	272 U.S. 554	1 S. & D. 575.
Western Meat Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1929)	33 F. 2d 824	1 S. & D. 705.
Certiorari dismissed (1930)	281 U.S. 771
Western Radio Corp. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1964)	339 F. 2d 937	7 S. & D. 1030.
Certiorari denied (1965)	381 U.S. 938
Western Sugar Refinery Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1921)	275 Fed. 725	1 S. & D. 149.
Westinghouse Electric Corp. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Westville Oil and Manufacturing, Inc,; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ind. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 806.
W.H. Brady & Co., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 387.
Wheeler Mfg. Co., C.H. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Whitaker Cable Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1956)	239 F. 2d 253	6 S. & D. 107.
Certiorari denied (1957)	353 U.S. 938
Whitmore, Inc., Ken, et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1953)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 784.
Whitney & Co., et al.; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 8 1951)	192 F. 2d 746	5 S. & D. 340.
(C.A. 9 1955)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 729.
Whitney & Co., In re (C.A. 9 1959)	273 F. 2d 211	6 S. & D. 691.
Wholesale Dry Goods Institute, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1943)	139 F. 2d 230	3 S. & D. 615.
Certiorari denied (1944)	321 U.S. 770
Wholesale Grocers' Assn. of El Paso, Tex., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1922)	277 Fed. 657	1 S. & D. 181.
Willard Tablet Co.; U.S. v. (C.A. 7 1944)	141 F. 2d 141	4 S. & D. 145.
William C. Moore & Co.; U.S. v. (D.C.W.D. Wash. N.D. 1961)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1439.
William H. Rodgers, Jr. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 9 1974)	492 F. 2d 228	9 S. & D. 846.
Certiorari denied (1974)	419 U.S. 834
William H. Rorer, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1967)	374 F. 2d 622	8 S. & D. 432.
William J. Bramman, Jr., (Missouri Portland Cement Company); F.T.C. v. (D.C.W.D. Mo. 1973)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 572.
Williams L. Lucas; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.
William N. Bostic; U.S. v. (D.C.D. So. Car. 1972)	336 F. 2d 1312	9 S. & D. 185.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
Certiorari denied (1973)	411 U.S. 966
William P. and Charles C. Bennett; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Tex. 1965)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1449.
William R. Clark; U.S. v. (D.C. Md. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
William W. Morison and Foremost-McKesson, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Calif. 1970)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1231.
Williams, J.B. Co., Inc., The, and Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 6 1967)	381 F. 2d 884	8 S. & D. 524.
Williams, J.B., Company, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1973)	354 F. Supp. 521	9 S. & D. 483.
(C.A. 2 1974)	498 F. 2d 414	9 S. & D. 938.
Wilmer L. Tinley, et al.; R.H. Macy & Co., Inc. v. (D.C.D.C. 1965)	249 F. Supp. 778	7 S. & D. 1430.
Wilson Chemical Co., Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.M.D. Pa. 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 732.
(D.C.W.D. Pa. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 538.
(D.C.W.D. Pa. 1962)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1442.
(C.A. 3 1963)	319 F. 2d 133	7 S. & D. 1444.
Windsor Distributing Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1971)	437 F. 2d 443	9 S. & D. 1.
Winn-Dixie Stores, Inc. v. F.T.C. (D.C.M.D. Fla. 1974)	377 F. Supp. 733	9 S. & D. 1016.
Winorr Canning Co. et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1957)	246 F. 2d 458	6 S. & D. 355.
Winship Corp., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.S.D. Iowa 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 663.
Winslow, D.A., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1921)	277 Fed. 206	1 S. & D. 166.
Winsted Hosiery Co. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1921)	272 Fed. 957	1 S. & D. 125.
Winsted Hosiery Co.; F.T.C. v. (Sup. Ct. 1922)	258 U.S. 483	1 S. & D. 198.
Winston Co., John C., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1925)	3 F. 2d 961	1 S. & D. 401.
Certiorari denied (1925)	269 U.S. 555
Winters, Janet L. (N & W Enterprises, Inc., et al.); U.S. v. (D.C.M.D. Fla. 1967)	Not reported	8 S. & D. 1306.
Wire Rope and Strand Mfrs. Assn., Inc., The, v. F.T.C. (C.A. 4 1943)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 574.
Wise Co., Inc., Wm. H., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1957)	246 F. 2d 702	6 S. & D. 334.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 856
Witkower Press, Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1960)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 844.
Wm. H. Wise Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. D.C. 1957)	246 F. 2d 702	6 S. & D. 334.
Certiorari denied (1957)	355 U.S. 856
W.M.R. Watch Case Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A.D.C. 1965)	343 F. 2d 302	7 S. & D. 1098.
Certiorari denied (1965)	381 U.S. 936
Rehearing denied (1965)	382 U.S. 873
Woelfel Studio, et al. (Oland D. Redd); U.S. v. (D.C.W.D.N.Y. 1950)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 798.
Wolf, Alvin B., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1948)	Not reported	4 S. & D. 824.
Wolf, Alvin B., et al. (d/b/a DeLuxe Products Co., etc.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1943)	135 F. 2d 564	3 S. & D. 564.
Woodle, Inc., Eugene I., et al.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.D. Mass. 1959)	Not reported	6 S. & D. 656.
Woody Fashions, Inc., et al.; U.S. v. (D.C.S. D.N.Y. 1961)	190 F. Supp. 709	7 S. & D. 13.
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1964)	Not reported	7 S. & D. 1446.
Woolley, E.R., v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1927)	22 F. 2d 122	1 S. & D. 638.
Woonsocket Spinning Co., et al.; U.S. v.

Name of Case	Reference	Reported in—
(D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1972)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1554.
World Leisure Time, Inc.; F.T.C. v. (D.C.C.D. Calif. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1260.
World Syndicate Publishing Co., The, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1952)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 386.
World Wide Television Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 3 1965)	352 F. 2d 303	7 S. & D. 1341.
Certiorari denied (1966)	384 U.S. 928
Worthington Corp., et al. (Grand Jury Proc.) (C.A. 3 1962)	309 F. 2d 440	7 S. & D. 567.
Worth Loomis; F.T.C. v. (C.A.D.C. 1970)	430 F. 2d 510	8 S. & D. 1212.
Worthmore Sales Promotion Service, Inc.; U.S. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1949)	Not reported	5 S. & D. 797.
Wren Sales Co., Inc., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1961)	296 F. 2d 456	7 S. & D. 257.
Wrisley Co., Allen B., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1940)	113 F. 2d 437	3 S. & D. 250.
W.T. Grant Company; U.S. v. (D.C.S.D.N.Y. 1975)	Not reported	9 S. & D. 1557.
Wybrant System Products Corp., et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1959)	266 F. 2d 571	6 S. & D. 565.
Certiorari denied (1959)	361 U.S. 883
Yardley of London, Inc. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 2 1940)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 297.
Zale Corporation, et al. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 5 1973)	473 F. 2d 1317	9 S. & D. 550.
Zelle Co., The (Leland F. Benham t/a); F.T.C. v. (D.C.N.D. Ill. 1939)	Not reported	3 S. & D. 644.
Zenith Radio Corp. v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1944)	143 F. 2d 29	4 S. & D. 194.
Ziegler Co., George; F.T.C. v. (C.A. 7 1937)	90 F. 2d 1007	2 S. & D. 397.
Zitserman, Ester (t/a J.M. Howard Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 8 1952)	200 F. 2d 519	5 S. & D. 457.
Zurla, Patrick, et al. (t/a Chicago Board Co.) v. F.T.C. (C.A. 7 1958)	253 F. 2d 78	6 S. & D. 385.
Certiorari denied (1958)	358 U.S. 821
Rehearing denied (1958)	358 U.S. 896

DECISIONS OF THE COURTS

IN CASES INSTITUTED AGAINST OR BY THE COMMISSION

WINDSOR DISTRIBUTING CO., ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 18897—F.T.C. Docket 8773

(Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, Jan. 7, 1971)

ORDER PROHIBITING SELLING PRACTICES OF VENDING MACHINE MANUFACTURER HELD NOT TOO BROAD FOR COMPLIANCE

Order of Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist certain selling practices on complaint alleging that sellers had engaged in unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in interstate sale of vending machines and vending machine supplies was not so broad or vague as to render compliance impossible and was within area of Commission discretion in framing relief appropriate to termination of unfair practices found to exist.

(The syllabus, with substituted caption, is taken from 437 F.2d 443.)

On appeal Court held that order prohibiting unfair sales practices by seller of vending machines and vending machine supplies was not so broad as to render compliance impossible.

Sanford A. Middleman, Middleman & Dixon, Pittsburgh, Pa., for petitioners.

Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, F.T.C., Washington, D.C., (J. B. Truly, Gerald Harwood, Attys., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., on the brief) for respondent.

Before HASTIE, Chief Judge, and FREEDMAN and GIBBONS, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Petitioners seek review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist certain selling practices. The order was issued at the conclusion of an administrative proceeding upon a complaint alleging that petitioners had engaged in unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in the interstate sale of vending machines and vending machine supplies, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1)(1964). The Commission adopted the initial decision of the hearing examiner as its final order. Petitioners do not contend that the hearing examiner's conclusions with respect to violations of Section 5 are erroneous. They complain only that the cease and desist order is so broad and vague as to render compliance impossible, and goes beyond the relief appropriate in the circumstances. We have reviewed the transcript of proceedings before the hearing examiner and we conclude that the order is well within the area of Commission discretion in framing relief appropriate to termination of the unfair practices found to exist. Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 428 (1957); Viviano Macaroni Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 411 F.2d 255, 260 (3 Cir. 1969); The Regina Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 322 F.2d 765, 769 (3 Cir. 1963); Arrow Metal Products Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 249 F.2d 83, 85 (3 Cir. 1957).

---

*Reported in 437 F.2d 443 (1971). For case before the Commission, see 77 F.T.C. 204.

The order of the Commission will be affirmed and enforced.

UNITED STATES v. BEATRICE FOODS CO.*

No. 4-70 Civ. 459—F.T.C. Docket 6653

(United States District Court, D. Minnesota, Fourth Division
Jan. 11, 1971)

1. PRETRIAL MOTION OF RESPONDENT TO STAY PENALTY PROVISIONS OF F.T.C. ACT FROM DATE OF LITIGATION FORWARD WAS PREMATURE

   Pretrial motion of defendant alleged to have violated order of Federal Trade Commission for order staying penalty provisions of Federal Trade Commission Act from date of institution of litigation forward was premature.

2. FAILURE OF RESPONDENT TO SEEK ORDER STAYING PENALTY PROVISIONS OF F.T.C. ACT WOULD NOT PLACE RESPONDENT IN JEOPARDY DURING LITIGATION

   Failure of a defendant charged with violating order of Federal Trade Commission to seek, upon commencement of litigation, an order staying penalty provisions of Federal Trade Commission Act would not cause defendant to be in jeopardy during litigation.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 322 F. Supp. 139)

On pre-trial motion to stay penalty provisions of F.T.C. Act from date of litigation forward held that motion was premature.

---

*Reported in 322 F. Supp. 139. For case before the Commission see 68 F.T.C. 1003; modified 71 F.T.C. 797.

Robert G. Renner, U.S. Atty., J. Earl Cudd, Asst. U.S. Atty., Henry Banta, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

Cant, Haverstock, Gray, Plant & Mooty, Edward J. Callahan, Minneapolis, Minn., Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson, by Ronald Butler, Chicago, Ill., for defendant.

NEVILLE, District Judge:

This is a suit in which the government in Count I of its civil complaint alleges a violation by the defendant of certain sections of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Defendant is alleged to be one of the largest manufacturers, processors and distributors of dairy products in the United States. As the result of a Federal Trade Commission proceeding and a subsequent appeal, a modified order dated June 7, 1967 was entered providing for certain divestitures by defendant and requiring defendant to cease for a period of ten years "from acquiring, directly or indirectly any interest in any firm, corporate or noncorporate engaged principally * * * in the business of manufacturing, processing or distributing at wholesale or on retail milk routes * * *" certain dairy products. The government alleges that on or about September 1, 1968 defendant violated this above injunction by acquiring an interest in Maple Island Dairies, Inc. a Minnesota corporation. The government prays judgment in the amount of $5,000 per day from September 1, 1968 until the date of the filing of the complaint in this lawsuit on October 23, 1970. The statute involved, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l) provides that one who violates an order of the Federal Trade Commission:

> * * * shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation [and] * * * each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense. [Emphasis added]

The defendant, promptly after service of the summons and complaint herein, moved the court for an order staying the penalty provisions of the above quoted statute from the date of the institution of the litigation forward. It asserts that its activities do not constitute a violation of the Commission's order and that in good faith it intends to defend the lawsuit and ultimately to demonstrate to the trier of fact that its conduct in connection with the alleged acquisition of an interest in the aforesaid Minnesota corporation—if in fact any such has been acquired—does not constitute a violation of the Commission's order. Defendant's counsel in effect takes the position that the possible continued running of a penalty amounting to $5,000 a day has a "chilling effect," so to speak, on the defendant's right to litigate its case and to defend its position. If defendant were now to cease and desist from what the government claims to be a violation, at least it would not be incurring any further penalties but if in fact defendant is wrong, and if its counsel is in error in his advice and belief that defendant has a good faith defense, defendant is taking the risk of a daily penalty which can be a very substantial amount before the litigation finally is terminated.

Counsel cites particularly the cases of St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208, 82 S.Ct. 289, 7 L.Ed.2d 240 (1961), and Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co., 274 U.S. 160, 47 S.Ct. 553, 71 L.Ed. 978 (1927). It also sees some support in United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 654, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950). Defendant seems to contend that the teachings of the St. Regis Paper case particularly require such a pretrial motion as is now addressed to the court in order to stay the possible running of penalties during the period of litigation.

[1] The government asserts first that defendant's motion is premature in that the complaint demands penalties only up to the date of the filing thereof and not thereafter and that defendant in effect is attempting to secure a preliminary ruling against the possibility that the government may at some future time file a supplemental complaint under Rule 15(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure praying additional penalties from the date of filing the complaint forward. Defendant is thus seeking to have the court bind itself now not to assess post complaint penalties should the government at some future time seek such or should the court after hearing the evidence do so on its own motion. Second, the government points out that the penalties referred to in Section 45(l) above is for "not more than $5,000" and thus are not at this time certain or determined and the amount thereof, if any, rests in the court's discretion. Both points seem to this court to have merit. First, the motion is premature. The proof of good faith, if such exists, and if such constitutes a defense or mitigating circumstance, can be established on the part of the defendant for consideration by the court as a factor in the amount of penalty, if any, to be assessed up to the time of the filing of the complaint and to be assessed thereafter if the government ever seeks such. Penalties could range all the way from $5,000 a day down to zero or $1.00 a day. The court is granted discretion under the statute. United States v. American Greetings Corp., 168 F. Supp. 45 (N.D. Ohio 1958), aff'd 272 F.2d 945 (6th Cir. 1959). Obviously until it has heard the evidence and a finding has been made by the trier of fact, the court cannot determine the merits of the case as to whether defendant actually is in violation of the Commission's order, and if so, whether the violation is merely a technical or inadvertent one or is a bad faith, negligent or other type of violation. Whatever the circumstances, defendant is not prejudiced by denial of its motion at this time. Should the government at some future time seek to recover penalties accruing after the filing of the complaint, the court then will have to determine whether any such should be assessed and if so the amount thereof.

[2] On the government's second point the fact that the amount of the penalty here, if any, is discretionary and not a flat sum per diem distinguishes this case from St. Regis Paper and Claire Furnace Co. where the penalty—there $100 a day—by statute is automatic and mandatory for each day of violation and is not a discretionary matter with the court. Under the statute when the court in St. Regis Paper [1] found a violation, the penalty of $100 a day had continued to run subsequent to the filing of the complaint. The court stated:

> Petitioner's final point is that to impose the forfeitures will deprive it of property without due process of law. This argument is based on the premise that the orders of the Commission were not judicially reviewable except at the risk of paying daily forfeitures accumulating throughout the period of noncompliance, including the period of judicial review. We need not consider this point at length for it appears that petitioner did not try to obtain judicial review prior to the commencement of this action by the Government, nor did petitioner seek a stay once the litigation had begun. This inaction was in part based upon petitioner's reliance on Federal Trade Comm. v. Claire Furnace Co., 274 U.S. 160, [47 S.Ct. 553, 71 L.Ed. 978] (1927). * * * 368 U.S. at 225, 82 S.Ct. at 299 (Emphasis added)

Defendant apparently takes the reference in the above language that petitioner did not seek a stay once the litigation had begun, as requiring it now to do so in this case for fear that upon failure thereof it is in jeopardy during litigation. The court does not so read 15 U.S.C. § 45(l), the statute involved in the case at bar, and does not believe that the St. Regis Paper case is controlling here.

A separate order has been entered.

---

[1] The St. Regis Paper Co. case is further distinguishable from the case at bar in that there petitioner was contesting the validity of the allegedly violated order on constitutional and other grounds whereas here the validity of the modified order is not in question, the same having heretofore been appealed to the Circuit Court and affirmed (as modified) leaving the only matter to be presented to this court the question as to whether the actions, if any, taken by defendant constitute a violation of the terms of an established valid order. Further, St. Regis Paper Co. was claimed to involve a period of time during which judicial review was not available until the Federal Trade Commission had taken some affirmative action, a position not apposite to the case at bar.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. EMANUEL GLADSTONE PRESIDENT, SOUTHERN CROSS DISCOUNT CO., INC.*

Civ. A. No. 13,903—F.T.C. Docket 8882

(United States District Court, Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division. February 24, 1971)

The president of a company, in willfully and intentionally altering records, by removing and destroying certain of those records, constituted criminal contempt of a court order enforcing an FTC investigative subpoena. His explanation that in having the documents destroyed he merely wanted to avoid duplication and bring his files up to date was unbelievable. Evidence indicated beyond a reasonable doubt that the president directed workers to remove and destroy certain documents in the company files. He was given a ten-day prison sentence.

William D. Ruckelshaus, Asst. Atty. Gen., Harland F. Leathers, Chief, General Litigation Sec. Civil Div., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., Julian M. Longley, Jr., U.S. Atty., Atlanta, Ga., Joseph Martin, Jr., General Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. General Counsel and Charles C. Moore, Jr., F.T.C., Washington, D.C. for plaintiff.

Lipshutz, Macey, Zusmann & Sikes, Atlanta, Ga., and Bryan, Carter, Ansley & Smith, Atlanta, Ga., for defendant.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

EDENFIELD, District Judge:

This matter having come before the Court on December 3, 1970, on the Federal Trade Commission's Motion for Show Cause Hearing for Contempt Citation and the Court having considered the exhibits and testimony presented at the trial on December 3, 1970, including the testimony of respondent and others as hereinafter described, and the parties having submitted briefs, the Court hereby makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. In the course of an investigation of the business practices of Southern Cross Discount Co., Inc., the Federal Trade Commission on September 22, 1969, issued a subpoena duces tecum to Emanuel Gladstone, president of Southern Cross Discount Co., Inc., requiring him to appear and produce the documents described in fifteen Specifications attached thereto. The Specifications that are particularly pertinent to

---

Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. (1971 Trade Cases) ¶73,507 at p. 90,063, 5th Cir., 1971, reported at ¶73,740 and 450 F. 2d 913. For case before the Commission, see 83 F.T.C. 1126.

this proceeding are Specifications 8 and 9 which require the production of:

> 8. All files showing all contracts, credit applications, promissory notes, mortgages and other documents on customers who purchased the aluminum siding, swimming pool and carpeting at the advertised prices of Southern Cross Discount Company, Inc. during the period of time from January 1, 1968 to the date upon which return is made to this subpoena.
>
> 9. The originals or, in lieu thereof, copies of all contracts, credit applications, promissory notes and mortgages relating to every residential siding, swimming pool and carpeting job done by or for Southern Cross Discount Company, Inc. during the period of April 1, 1968 to September 30, 1968.

2. On respondent's failure to appear and produce files in accordance with the aforesaid subpoena, the Federal Trade Commission, acting under the authority of Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. 49, petitioned this Court for an order requiring respondent to comply. Respondent resisted the enforcement petition and filed a motion to dismiss and a brief in support thereof.

3. The matter came up for hearing before the Court on July 31, and August 25, 1970. It was at the second hearing on Tuesday, August 25, 1970, that this Court issued an order requiring respondent to produce and turn over to the Federal Trade Commission the documents described in the aforesaid subpoena duces tecum by the following Friday, August 28, 1970.

4. The testimony of respondent Gladstone himself and the testimony of Messrs. Robert White, Jerry Coleman and Rowland Campbell establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that on August 25 (the day this Court's order was entered), August 26, August 27 and August 28, 1970 (the day respondent produced his files), at respondent's direction, workers were hired from Manpower, Inc., to remove material from respondent's files. Those files consisted of jackets or envelopes, each of which, prior to the aforesaid alteration, contained all of respondent's records with regard to a specific transaction and customer. At respondent's direction, three items were taped to a wall: (1) a credit application, (2) a contract, and (3) a work order sheet and the workers were instructed to remove and destroy any item contained in the files other than those similar to the three taped on the wall. During the aforementioned period of time, the employees from Manpower, Inc., worked 111 man-hours removing documents from the files and respondent himself and other permanent employees also participated in such removal and destruction.

5. By his own voluntary testimony, respondent Gladstone admitted that he did not know what documents the various employees, acting under his instructions, had actually removed from the files. His explanation, that he merely wanted to avoid duplication and bring his files up to date, is unbelievable.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Specification 8 of the Commission's subpoena duces tecum and this Court's order enforcing that Specification required respondent to produce all files containing credit applications, promissory notes, mortgages and other documents on customers who purchased respondent's products at the advertised price since January 1, 1968. The evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that respondent willfully and intentionally altered such files by having documents removed therefrom and destroyed. That action constituted a willful criminal contempt of this Court.

2. Specification 9 of the aforesaid subpoena duces tecum and this Court's enforcement order required production of contracts, credit applications, promissory notes and mortgages executed during the period April 1, 1968, to September 30, 1968. Respondent's action of having material removed from files involving transactions occurring between those dates without regard to whether any of the specific items mentioned were being discarded also constituted a willful criminal contempt of this Court.

The Court therefore finds respondent Emanuel Gladstone convicted of criminal contempt this 17th day of February 1971.

JUDGMENT AND COMMITMENT

On this 24th day of February 1971, came the attorney for the Government and the respondent appeared in person and by counsel.

It is Adjudged that the respondent has been convicted of criminal contempt of this Court as charged in the Federal Trade Commission's Motion for Show Cause Hearing for Contempt Citation; and the Court having asked the respondent whether he has anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced and no sufficient cause to the contrary being shown or appearing to the Court.

It is Adjudged that the respondent is guilty of criminal contempt.

It is Adjudged that the respondent is hereby committed to the custody of the Attorney General or his authorized representative for imprisonment for a period of ten days.

It is Further Ordered that the defendant be allowed to make an appeal bond in the amount of $1,000.00, and that he be allowed to sign his own bond.

It is Ordered that the Clerk deliver a certified copy of this judgment and commitment to the United States Marshal or other qualified officer and that the copy serve as the commitment of the respondent.

THE KROGER CO. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 20233—F.T.C. Docket 8663

(Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit. Feb. 25, 1971)

1. PARTY CHARGED WITH PRICE DISCRIMINATION MAY SHOW SUCH LOWER PRICE WAS MADE IN GOOD FAITH TO MEET PRICE OF COMPETITOR

   In order for a buyer to be sheltered through exoneration of seller under Clayton Act section providing that upon proof that there has been discrimination in price the burden of rebutting prima facie case by showing justification is upon person charged with a violation of the section, but that nothing contained in the statute shall prevent rebutting of prima facie case made by showing that such lower price was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, prices induced must come within defenses of that section not only from seller's point of view but also from that of buyer's; to hold otherwise would violate the purposes of the Act and frustrate the intent of Congress.

2. SELLER'S SUCCESSFUL DEFENSE DID NOT EXCULPATE PURCHASER SINCE PURCHASER KNEW PRICES WERE NOT WITHIN DEFENSES OF CLAYTON ACT

   Where Federal Trade Commission found that seller of dairy products made a bona fide attempt to meet third-party bid which seller had been told by purchaser was the lower, seller was acting in good faith under Clayton Act, and where purchaser knew that third-party bid was not lower and that the bid of seller was, therefore, not in fact responsive to an actual lower bid, seller's successful defense in Clayton Act prosecution did not exculpate purchaser since purchaser knew that prices offered by seller and received by purchaser were not within defense of Clayton Act section relating to meeting an equally low price of a competitor.

3. COMMISSION MAINTAINED THAT MANAGER HAD MISREPRESENTED THIRD-PARTY BID WHERE SUCH WAS THE THEORY ON WHICH COMMISSION ACTED

   Price-discrimination case was not tried on a different theory before Federal Trade Commission than that pursued before hearing examiner, where release of purchaser by hearing examiner on theory that such was required because of acquittal of buyer was attacked before the Commission and caused more attention to be focused on testimony of division manager of purchaser, but where counsel for the Commission maintained to examiner that manager had misrepresented third-party bid, and where such was the theory on which Commission acted in finding purchaser responsible.

4. PURCHASER NOT PLACED AT HIS PERIL WHEN HE FAILED TO CONVEY INFORMATION ABOUT PRICE LEVELS BEING QUOTED BY OTHERS

   Holding of Federal Trade Commission that purchaser was guilty of price discrimination did not place purchaser at his peril whenever he engaged in price bargaining, where use by Commission of the "hard bargaining" language as well as failure of purchaser to convey any correct information about price levels being quoted by others was but a warning, not a command.

5. PRICE DISCRIMINATION IN ONE AREA IS SUFFICIENT FOR CLAYTON ACT

   Evidence of price discrimination in only one area is sufficient to meet requirements of the Clayton Act.

---

*Reported in 438 F. 2d 1372, cert. denied, 404 U.S. 871 (1971). For case before the Commission, see 76 F.T.C. 719.

6. Substantial Injury to Competition Milk and Cottage Cheese Properly Inferred Where Price Discriminations Were High

Federal Trade Commission, in price discrimination case involving milk and cottage cheese, properly inferred that there was a reasonable probability of substantial injury to competition since discriminations were as high as 41% in cottage cheese, averaged in one market more than 28%, for other markets 17% and in the most important area more than 12%.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 438 F.2d 1372)

On appeal, Court held that where purchaser knew that prices offered by seller were not within defense of Clayton Act section relating to meeting an equally low price of competitor, respondent violated Clayton Act. Order affirmed and enforced.

Norman Diamond, Washington, D.C. (Daniel A. Rezneck, Patrick J. Macrory, Washington, D.C., on the brief), for petitioner. Arnold & Porter, Washington, D.C., George A. Leonard, vice president and general counsel, The Kroger Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, of counsel.

Karl H. Buschmann, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C. (Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Miles J. Brown, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., on the brief), for respondent.

Before TOM C. CLARK, Associate Justice,* WADE H. MCCREE, Jr., and WILLIAM E. MILLER, Circuit Judges.

CLARK, Associate Justice:*

The Kroger Company brings this petition for review in which it complains of a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission holding Kroger in violation of section 2(f) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 13(f) [1] for having knowingly induced and received from Beatrice Food Company discriminatory prices on fluid milk and cottage cheese as prohibited by section 2(a) of the Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 13(a).[2] In the same order the Commission absolved Beatrice from responsibility under section 2(a) of the Act on the ground that its lower price was offered in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, a defense authorized under section 2(b) of the Act, 15 U.S.C.

---

*Associate Justice, Supreme Court of the United States, retired, sitting by designation.

[1] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section."

[2] "It shall be unlawful * * * to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality * * * where the effect of such discrimination may be * * * to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered. * * *"

Sec. 13(b).[3] Kroger seizes upon this circumstance contending that as a matter of law the discharge of Beatrice requires the acquittal of Kroger because there cannot be a violation of section 2(f) without there being one under section 2(a). While ordinarily this may be true—a matter we need not and do not pass upon—it is not true under the peculiar circumstances here, where Kroger was found by the Commission to have given "false price information" to Beatrice as to Broughton's competing bid which induced Beatrice in perfect good faith to meet Broughton's equally low price. Nor do we find substance to the other points raised—all of which we will discuss in more detail—and, therefore, affirm the order of the Commission and direct its enforcement. The portions of the order having to do with Beatrice and other parties who were before the Commission and included in its order are not before us and therefore we express no opinion concerning them.

1. The course of the proceeding.

The administrative proceeding began on July 30, 1965, with the filing of a complaint charging Beatrice with discriminating in prices in the sale of fluid milk and other dairy products to the Kroger Company, and other parties, not involved here, in violation of section 2(a) of the Act, as amended. Kroger was charged with knowingly inducing or receiving prices for fluid milk under its own and other private label brands, cottage cheese and other dairy products in its transactions with Beatrice which were discriminatory under section 2(f) of the Act.

It was over two years later that the Hearing Examiner dismissed the complaint because (1) the prosecution under section 2(a) against Beatrice failed since the discrimination charged did not have the effect condemned by section 2(a); (2) the charge against Kroger under section 2(f) must be dismissed because of the failure of the Beatrice prosecution under section 2(a); and (3) as further grounds, that Beatrice had established a good faith meeting of competition defense under section 2(b) and, as to Kroger, that there was no evidence that Kroger knew or had reason to believe that the prices Beatrice offered were not in fact cost justified or were not offered in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.

On appeal to the Commission the dismissal of the complaint by the Hearing Examiner was set aside as to Kroger and a cease and desist order was entered against it based upon a violation of section 2(f); Chairman Dixon with Commissioners Jones and MacIntyre made up the majority, and Commissioners Elman and Nicholson dissented. The charge against Beatrice was dismissed on its section 2(b) defense and no review was sought; the majority consisted of Commissioners Jones, Elman and Nicholson with Chairman Dixon and Commissioner MacIntyre dissenting. It is significant to note that none of the dissenters took issue with the Commission's finding concerning the initial bid that the Broughton dairy made to Kroger which led to the resulting discriminatory pricing by Beatrice.

---

[3] "Upon proof being made * * * that there has been discrimination in price * * * the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section * * * Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price * * * was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor * * *."

2. The background of the parties.

In 1963 Kroger operated a chain of over 1400 retail grocery stores located in some 19 states and which sold a variety of products. Its national volume of sales ran over $2 billion a year, including its milk and other dairy products. Kroger's competition in its Charleston Division included national chains such as A & P as well as regional chains and independent supermarkets.

Beatrice is the third largest dairy company in the United States, with $569 million annual sales in 1963. In 1962 Beatrice was one of several dairies serving the various areas within Kroger's Charleston Division. Prior to 1962, all dairy products in this area were vendor branded, and the supermarkets generally carried two or more brands in their dairy cases. Most customers generally received the "full service" method of milk distribution, requiring the routeman to deliver and also stock the dairy case. Prices were generally based on wholesale list prices with discounts to large purchasers. This price structure began to erode in 1962 when larger buyers, led by Kroger, began to demand and get formula prices based on the fluctuating cost of raw milk, and then by private branding of dairy products.

3. The circumstances surrounding the bidding.

In the fall of 1961, Kroger decided to explore private label sales in the hope that its own label might permit it to compete more profitably and effectively. Mr. Francis Casserly, manager of Kroger's Columbus Division, which was then operating a private label milk program, was designated to negotiate with dairies in the Charleston area. Casserly invited several companies, including Valley Bell, Broughton, Borden and Fairmont, to submit bids for bottling Kroger label milk for the Charleston Division.

The first bid received was from Broughton on January 6, 1962. It was in the form of tabulations covering each Kroger store location, showing the existing retail price, the prevailing wholesale price in the market, and a percentage figure for Kroger's gross profit. The Hearing Examiner found that Broughton offered discounts approximating 20 per cent from its list prices. The Commission found that the average discount amounted to "a little less than 11 per cent." It is uncontested that prices in the bid averaged a discount of 10.9 per cent. (Appendix 646)

In January, 1962, Beatrice officials, who had heard rumors that Kroger was seeking private label milk, contacted Casserly and arranged a meeting on January 12. At that meeting the volume of business and area to be served were discussed. The Beatrice representatives were asked if they had an offer to make, and they said they were thinking in terms of a 15 per cent discount. Casserly replied, "Well, forget it, I have already got one at 20" off the "existing list price." (Appendix 197) It stands undenied in the record that a 20 per cent discount was unheard of in the market area at that time. On January 25th Beatrice quoted 21 cents a pound on cottage cheese and Casserly "just told us right quick we weren't in the ballpark." (Appendix 234)

By letter of January 18, 1962, Casserly had informed the dairy companies that the bidding would be for a sales volume of dairy products in excess of $2 million annually. He indicated that Kroger was interested in some form of reduced service which would cut distribution costs, and requested bid prices based upon the cost of milk rather than discounts from the prevailing price structure.

Beatrice presented its first proposal to Kroger at a meeting with Casserly on February 9, 1962. The proposal included a price of 71 cents for a gallon of homogenized milk, arrived at by applying a discount of 16 to 18 percent for volume to the average price of 85 cents. Casserly told Beatrice representatives that they "might as well go back home" if that was all that they had to offer. (Appendix 207)

Casserly had not received any quotations lower than the Beatrice 71 cents per gallon bid at this time. The gallon jug was "the big item. That was the thing that really controlled this whole situation" (Appendix 206) and as the Hearing Examiner indicated, "the award of the contract might hinge on the gallon-jug price—since the 'gallon-jug was the big volume item.' " (Appendix ID–126) The first Broughton proposal contained prices per gallon ranging from slightly over 73 cents to more than 81 cents per gallon. Beatrice Division manager Stollings testified that Casserly nonetheless "told us of the 20 per cent Broughton price and he said, you don't have to be a very good mathematician to take an 85-cent average jug price and 20 per cent will show you that 71 cents is high." (Appendix 237) The discussion was promptly terminated. The Commission found that Casserly's rejection was not based on "any true appraisal" of the earlier Broughton offer, but that he simply thought he could get a better price. (Appendix O–25)

Other companies submitted bids. Broughton submitted a second proposal in February for $.7224 for a gallon of milk, and in March proposed prices ranging from $.6586 to $.6879. Fairmont's first proposal quoted prices ranging from $.6585 to $.8168, and later in February quoted prices ranging from $.6526 to $.7255. Borden submitted an offer, which varied according to the service and type of delivery.

On March 14, Beatrice representatives again met with Casserly and "quoted a 66 cents price." As Stollings reported it: "We talked about some of the other pricing. That is on a gallon jug * * * We talked about one or two other prices * * * We sat down across * * * the desk from Mr. Casserly and talked about a method of tying this price. That 66 cent price—I first talked about a 68 which was a 20 per cent discount, the Broughton discount from the 85 cent jug. At the time we were talking about this * * * Casserly said that he had received a bid from Fairmont that was better than this, and also mentioned that prices were 'collapsing' in the Charleston market (Appendix 239) * * * we worked out—me on one side and Mr. Casserly on the other—the mechanics—he did the mechanics. He had a calculator over there * * * and between the two of us we worked out a formula." (Appendix 240) Stollings further testified that he talked with Casserly about the 66 cent price, and Casserly replied that "now you are getting—you are in a position of being competitive with some of the other people." (Appendix 239)

Beatrice's representatives made it clear that the 66 cent price would have to be approved by the Chicago office. In early April Stollings reviewed the proposal with Beatrice's house counsel and an accounting specialist. On April 9, 1962, Stollings met with Casserly and delivered a revision of the Beatrice proposal which has been approved by the home office. Prices were based on 66 cents per gallon of milk, and 17.5 cents per pound of cottage cheese. Kroger accepted the proposal and the companies began to operate under it in June, 1962.

4. The Section 2(f) violation.

Kroger claims that it cannot be found in violation of the discrimination clause of section 2(f) because Beatrice was absolved from its violation of the anti-discrimination provision of section 2(a) on its defense under section 2(b). It relies on a sentence in Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U.S. 61 (1953), "that a buyer is not liable under Sec. 2(f) if the lower prices he induces are either within one of the seller's defenses such as the cost justification or not known by him not to be within one of those defenses" at 74, Emphasis being added. But this was just another way of saying, as the Court did earlier in the opinion, that section 2(f) was "roughly the counterpart, as to buyers, of sections of the Act dealing with discriminations by sellers." At p. 63. That is to say, a buyer may not be prosecuted for inducing discriminatory prices which it knows a seller may offer with impunity under section 2(b). As the Court itself put it:

> the discriminatory price that buyers are forbidden by Sec. 2(f) to induce * * * cannot be read as declaring out of bounds price differentials within one or more of the "defenses" available to sellers, such as that the price differentials reflect cost differences, fluctuating market conditions, or bona fide attempts to meet competition, as those defenses are set out in the provisos of Secs. 2(a) and 2(b). At 70–71.

[1,2] At first blush it might appear that Kroger's claim might have some merit, i.e. that a defense absolving its seller under section 2(b) operated ipso facto for its own acquittal. However, even granting the validity of such a deduction it would not be available here. American Canteen only holds that buyers may avail themselves of discriminatory prices that a seller may lawfully grant or those that are "not known by him [the buyer] not to be within one of these defenses." Id. The Commission found that Beatrice made a bona fide attempt to meet the Broughton bid which it was told by Kroger was the lower one. In so doing Beatrice was in good faith acting within a defense offered by section 2(b). On the other hand, Kroger knew that the Broughton bid was not lower and that the one of Beatrice was, therefore, not in fact responsive to an actual lower bid. In such a factual situation the seller's successful defense under § 2(b) cannot exculpate the buyer since Kroger knew that the prices offered by Beatrice and received by Kroger were not in fact within the defense of section 2(b). To hold otherwise in this case would put a premium on the buyer's artifice and cunning in inducing discriminatory prices. See Kintner, A Robinson-Patman Primer 261. 315–331. In order for the buyer to be sheltered through the exoneration of the seller under section 2(b) the prices induced must come within the defenses of that section not only from the seller's point of view but also from that of the buyer. To hold otherwise would violate the purposes of the Act and frustrate the intent of the Congress.

The findings of the Commission with regard to the misrepresentation of the Broughton bid are fully supported by substantial evidence throughout the record. Casserly himself testified that the bid was "an average of 20 per cent * * * a little above on some, a little below on others" (Appendix 299). Hutchinson, one of the Beatrice negotiators, testified that Casserly told him "I have already got one at 20" (Appendix 197). And Stollings (another Beatrice negotiator) testified that Casserly said that "he had 20 per cent off from Broughton on this business" (Appendix 230) The bid actually averaged 10.9 per cent discount off the wholesale list price. (Appendix 646). We find no denial of this fact in the appellant's briefs. It does contend that Commission counsel agreed before the Hearing Examiner that the bid was 20 percent. But Commission Counsel fully explained this. They admitted that in its orignial proposed findings to the Examiner it stated that the Broughton bid was 20 per cent off. But soon thereafter in its reply findings it told the Examiner that this was an error. It said that only four stores "were granted prices as low as .658, .66 and .68" (CX103, B–C, G, Z 5) while all of the others ranged from 73.2 cents to 85.65 cents per gallon. (CX 103 B–Z–8). It further stated that cottage cheese—an important item—was "extremely high" in comparison to the final Beatrice proposal. At the time of the Broughton bid the one of Beatrice was 2 cents below Broughton on forty of the forty four stores and the four lower price stores were comparatively small outlets of Kroger. Moreover, in its appeal brief to the Commission counsel discussed and denounced the bid under the heading: "Kroger Misled the Dairies Concerning Receipt of a 20% Discount Offer" (Appendix 560). And at argument before the Commission when Kroger pointed to the proposed finding to the Examiner as an admission that Broughton's bid was 20 percent off the Commission counsel again repudiated this claim and called the attention of the Commission to its prior rejection.

5. Other Contentions.

[3] We need not pause long with the remaining claims. The complaint clearly charges Kroger in the exact terms of the Act which, of course, is sufficient. Nor is there substance to the objection that the case was tried on a different theory before the Commission than that pursued before the Hearing Examiner. The release of Kroger by the Hearing Examiner on the theory that it was required because of the acquittal of Beatrice was, of course, attacked before the Commission and caused more attention to be focused on Casserly's testimony. But counsel for the Commission maintained to the Examiner that Casserly had misrepresented the Broughton bid. It necessarily had to give more emphasis to the Casserly testimony in its presentation to the Commission in order to meet the Hearing Examiner's order exculpating Kroger. Indeed, Kroger's strategy before the Hearing Examiner emphasized that its responsibility could not be judged by the acts of Beatrice. Kroger's own counsel repeatedly objected before the Hearing Examiner to the relevance of certain evidence as to Kroger but not to Beatrice on the ground that "independent acts of Party A had nothing to do with the responsibility of Party B." That is exactly the theory on which the Commission acted in finding Kroger responsible.

[4] Moreover, we find no support for the charge that the Commission holding places the buyer at his peril whenever he engages in price bargaining. The use by the Commission of the "hard bargaining" language as well as the failure of Kroger "to convey" any correct information about the price levels being quoted by others is but a warning, not a command. The controlling point here is not the "hard bargaining" nor the "price levels" but the misrepresentation of the Broughton bid.

Finally, Kroger argues that the Commission failed to meet the burden of proving that Kroger knew or should have known that Beatrice's prices were not cost justified and there was no substantial evidence that the differentials on Kroger's private label product injured competition. We find that there is substantial evidence supporting each of the Commission's findings, including these.

As to cost justification, the showing of Beatrice was found by both the Hearing Examiner and the Commission to be entirely inadequate. We agree with this finding. In addition, Kroger was specifically warned by two dairy suppliers of Robinson-Patman Act problems that might result from the lower prices it sought. Still its expert in the purchasing and selling of dairy products, Mr. Casserly, pursued his course. He was a man of extremely wide experience in every line of the dairy industry, including the production, processing and retailing of such products. He knew trade discounts, market conditions and cost accounting. Indeed, Casserly himself built up the cost formula which resulted in discriminations aggregating 39 per cent in some markets and as high as 41 per cent on cottage cheese. In these lights—coupled with the other circumstances surrounding the transaction—it is beyond question that Kroger knew—or should have known—that Beatrice's prices were not cost justified.

[5] Likewise the differentials that Kroger received impaired competition. We start with the proposition that evidence of discrimination in only one area is sufficient to meet the requirements of the Act. Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 348 F. 2d 674, 681 (5 C.A. 1965), certiorari denied, 382 U.S. 959. Moreover, "a substantial price advantage can afford a favored buyer a material capital advantage * * * which will give him a substantial advantage over his competition." Therefore, as the Fifth Circuit said in Foremost, supra: "It is unnecessary that there be evidence that the favored customer actually undersold his rivals." At 680. See also National Dairy Products Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 395 F. 2d 517, 522 (7 C.A. 1968), certiorari denied 393 U.S. 977.

In this case Kroger contends that its purchase of vendor labeled milk from Beatrice should be aggregated with its purchases of private label milk. Federal Trade Commission v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637 (1966). We think that the Commission correctly rejected the application of this principle since Beatrice labeled milk was only sold in 11 of the 44 stores in the relevant areas (CX 37, 64 F-H, 65 A-H; Appendix 296– 297, 319, 519–527, 631–645). Moreover, the large Charleston and Logan areas received no Beatrice labeled products and the all-important gallon jug was not available under the Beatrice label in any Kroger store. Furthermore, Borden recognizes the competitive advantage which results when disadvantaged competitors are denied a label which the favored buyer receives. Kroger reaped this very advantage. It received Kroger labeled milk at cheaper prices than it received Beatrice labeled milk and consequently placed its label in a competitively superior position. It did not reduce the retail price of its private label milk and, thereby, pass on lower prices to the consumer, but reaped higher profits for itself. The result was that it sold enormous quantities of milk at higher profits, as is clearly shown by its own chart in Addendum I to its brief filed in this court.

However, the point that the Commission should have treated the private labeled product and the nationally branded one as "goods of like grade and quality," Borden, supra, need not be labored. Beyond any question in the three market areas where both labels were sold the discrimination ran from 9.7 to 30.8 percent and averaged 16 percent (CX 390).

[6] The Commission properly inferred that there was a reasonable probability of substantial injury to competition since the discriminations were as high as 41 per cent (in cottage cheese); averaged in one market more than 28 per cent for other markets 17 per cent, and in Charleston, the most important area, more than 12 per cent. See chart, page 34, Commission's brief. The discrimination here is among the highest in a litigated case under the Clayton Act.[4] The record shows that in the retail food business "competition is keen and profit margins are low" Foremost Dairies, Inc., supra, at 681; National Dairy Products Corp., supra, at 522; Federal Trade Commission v. Fred Meyer, Inc., supra, at 367. In addition it is uncontested that dairy products are often used as "leaders" to attract customers. It follows that the injury found to be present involving a secondary-line here permits wide inferences of adverse competitive effects based on the existence of substantial price differentials. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46–47 (1948); American Motors Corporation v. F.T.C., 384 F. 2d 247, 250–251 (6 C.A. 1967) cert. denied 390 U.S. 1012; Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, at 679–680; National Dairy Products, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, at 522, United Biscuit Co. v.

---

[4] Examples of discounts in secondary-line injury cases may be found in United States v. Borden Co., 370 U.S. 460, 463–464 (11%); Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 41 (5% to 10%); National Dairy Products Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 395 F. 2d 517, 521 (7th Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 977 (12%); Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 348 F. 2d 674, 675 (5th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 959 (5%); Dean Milk Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 395 F. 2d 696, 708 (2% to 10%); and Fred Meyer, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 359 F. 2d 351, 364 (9th Cir. 1966), rev'd on other grounds, 390 U.S. 341, 358 (33%).

F.T.C., 350 F. 2d 615, 622 (7 C.A. 1965) cert. denied 383 U.S. 926. Indeed, in wholesale fluid milk sales discounts from 5 per cent to 12 per cent have been held to have the required competitive effect on the secondary-line level, Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C., supra, at 679; Dean Milk Co. v. F.T.C., 395 F. 2d 696, 708–709 (7 C.A. 1968); National Dairy Products Corp. v. F.T.C., supra, at 522.

We follow the teaching of Automatic Canteen, supra, where the court emphasized:

> [T]he buyer whom Congress in the main sought to reach was the one who, knowing full well that there was little likelihood of a defense for the seller, nevertheless proceeded to exert pressure for lower prices. Enforcement of the provisions of Sec. 2(f) against such a buyer should not be difficult. At 79.

The order of the Federal Trade Commission is affirmed and enforced.

UNITED STATES v. BEATRICE FOODS CO.[*]

No. 4–70 Civ. No. 459—F.T.C. Docket 6653

(U.S. District Court, District of Minnesota, Fourth Division, March 12, 1971)

In a civil penalty suit against a national dairy company for allegedly violating an FTC merger consent order, 8 S & D 495, dated May 23, 1967, an interrogatory requiring the government to identify "the name and address of each person who negotiated the terms of the contract which constitutes the settlement decree referred to in the complaint" was not objectionable as it may be relevant on the issue of damages. The government also requests protective order against respondent's request that Commission "state with particularly" any "interest" which respondent has acquired in Maple Island Dairies, Inc. Because the government failed to sustain objections to the interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3 is denied. However, the dairy company was not entitled to the disclosure of certain FTC legal memoranda, because these documents were protected under the doctrine of "executive privilege."

ORDER ON OBJECTIONS TO INTERROGATORIES

NEVILLE, District Judge:

The plaintiff, United States of America, has objected to certain interrogatories directed to it by defendant Beatrice Foods Company (Beatrice) and moves for protective orders in connection therewith. The motions were argued before the court on January 14, 1971 in Minneapolis, Minnesota and extensive and exhaustive briefs have been submitted on the issues raised. Robert G. Renner, United States Attorney, by Neal J. Shapiro, Esq., Assistant United States Attorney, together with H. Robert Field and James E. Corky, Esqs., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C. appeared for the plaintiff; Cant, Haverstock, Gray, Plant and Mooty, Minneapolis, Minnesota, by Robert E. Bowen, Esq. and Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson, Chicago, Illinois, by Ronald Butler, Esq. appeared for the defendant.

---

[*] Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. (1971 Trade Cases) ¶73,556 at p. 90,313. For Commission case see 68 F.T.C. 1003.

A brief summary of the case is necessary to an understanding of the government's objections. Pursuant to a complaint filed by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) attorneys in 1956, an FTC Trial Examiner after voluminous hearings entered a decision in 1964 finding Beatrice in violation of 15 U. S. C. § 45 and requiring divestiture of certain interests and holdings and prohibiting acquisition of similar interests without FTC approval. This decision was sustained by a final order of the Commission on December 10, 1965, and Beatrice filed a petition for review with the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. During the pendency of that appeal, the parties arrived at a negotiated agreement modifying the original order to some extent, and by joint motion sought its adoption by formal decree of the Ninth Circuit. On May 23, 1967, the court entered a final order [1967 TRADE CASES ¶ 72,124] affirming this negotiated agreement as filed by the parties.[1] The FTC's subsequent modified Order, issued June 7, 1967, in accordance with the Ninth Circuit's decree, is the binding Order upon which this enforcement action is brought.

Shortly before the negotiation of the Beatrice agreement, the FTC apparently reached similar agreements with at least three other major dairy companies, which agreements forbade the acquisition of "the whole or any part of the stock, share capital, or assets" of any milk or milk products firm. The FTC's original Order in the Beatrice proceedings and the settlement decree ultimately negotiated and approved by the Ninth Circuit, however, prohibited (at Paragraph III therein) the acquisition of "any interest" in such firms.

This Section 45(1) enforcement action alleges, inter alia, at Paragraph 7 of the complaint, that defendant Beatrice "acquired an interest" in Maple Island Dairies, Inc., a corporation operating in Minnesota on or about September 1, 1968, in violation of the Order. Such allegation obviously draws into question the scope and effect of the Order's prohibition of acquiring an "interest" in such firms.

Beatrice apparently takes the position that the word "interest" in the 1967 Order must be construed as substantively equivalent to the language "stock, share capital, or assets" which appears in the consent decrees entered between the FTC and the other dairy products companies prior to the negotiation of the final Beatrice Order, and that the meaning of "interest" is thus governed by the subsequent judicial and administrative decisions, if any, and the "practical construction" given the language used in those other decrees. It seeks to establish the equivalence of these terms by reconstructing the negotiations between Beatrice and the FTC to demonstrate the intentions behind the modification of the original Order. Evidence of such negotiations, it contends, will be relevant under the exception to the parol evidence rule to establish the intentions of the contracting parties as to ambiguous contractual language.

---

[1] The negotiated settlement without any court order would have enjoyed the full force and effect of law, and would thus be a basis for subsequent enforcement actions under 15 U.S.C. § 45(1), without the approval or acquiescence of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. The parties apparently sought the imprimatur of the court perhaps to permit recourse to contempt proceedings if for no other reason than as an alternative enforcement mechanism in the event of an alleged violation.

It is against this background that the following motions must be considered:

[Identity of FTC Negotiators]

I. The Government has moved for a protective order which would entitle it to ignore Interrogatory #1, which reads:

> State the name and address of each person who negotiated the terms of the contract which constitutes the settlement decree referred to in the complaint.

The Government objects to this interrogatory on the ground that its answer would not conceivably lead to the discovery of facts relevant to the issues in the case. It contends that the order by definition expresses the intention of the approving court, and that evidence of the intentions of the parties is irrelevant to the issue of the meaning of the word "interest". The parties have briefed the court in extensio on the question whether evidence as to the negotiations which underlie the 1967 final order is admissible in the trial of the case.[2] The court deems it unnecessary and inappropriate to resolve that issue at this stage of the litigation.

---

[2] The parties seem to agree that the character of the order will determine the admissibility of evidence surrounding its negotiation and tending to explain the intended meaning of any ambiguous terms. The only decision precisely in point in Leona Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,419], 13 F. R. D. 438 (S. D. N. Y. 1952), which permitted discovery of information about such negotiations without ruling on the eventual evidentiary question. If the order in this case can be characterized as a contractual undertaking, the parol evidence rule and its exceptions would presumably apply.

30 C. J. S. Equity, § 681 ("Consent Decree"), p. 858 states: "being in the nature of a contract . . . a consent decree should be construed as a contract is construed." See Hart Schaffner & Marx v. Alexander's Dept. Stores, Inc., 341 F.2d 101 (2d Cir. 1965); Artvale, Inc. v. Rugby Fabrics Corp., 303 F.2d 283 (2d Cir. 1962); United Steelworkers of America v. Copperweld Steel Co., 230 F.Supp. 383 (W. D. Pa. 1964); Butler v. Denton, 57 F. Supp. 656 (E. D. Okla. 1944), aff'd 150 F.2d 687 (10th Cir. 1945); United States v. Hartford-Empire Co., 1 F. R. D. 424 (N. D. Ohio 1940).

On the other hand, there is authority for the proposition that the Order is a Judicial act expressive of the court's intent, so that evidence as to the intentions of the parties is irrelevant in the construction. Gila Valley Irrigation District v. United States, 118 F.2d 507, 510 (9th Cir. 1941). Cf. United States v. Swift & Co. [1932-1939] TRADE CASES ¶ 55,005], 286 U.S. 106, 115 (1932); Siebring v. Hanson, 346 F.2d 474, 477 (8th Cir. 1965), cert. denied 382 U.S. 943 (1965); The government is particularly insistent upon the application of that rule in this case, where the Ninth Circuit acted on a fully developed administrative record. Its act of approving the negotiated order, it is argued, can be readily distinguished from the usual approved "consent decree" entered before the dispute reaches the hearing stage for adjudication at the administrative level.

The statute under which this action is brought, 15 U. S. C. § 45(1), provides for a penalty "of not more than $5,000 for each violation" of the FTC's order, and "each day of continuance of such failure or neglect to obey such order shall be deemed a separate offense." While good faith is not a defense to such an action, it is clearly relevant to the court's discretionary determination of the extent of civil penalties to be assessed under that provision. United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc. [1967 TRADE CASES ¶ 72,039], 262 F.Supp. 383 388–89 (S. D. N. Y. 1966); United States v. Vitasafe Corp. [1962 TRADE CASES ¶ 70,591], 212 F.Supp. 397 (S. D. N. Y. 1962), aff'd 352 F.2d 62 (2d Cir. 1965). Thus, evidence tending to establish that the defendant's allegedly violative conduct was consistent with its reasonable understanding of the scope of the governing order may well be relevant on the issue of damages. The court thus overrules the government's objection to Interrogatory No. 1 and hereby orders it to answer the same.

The court recognizes that its inquiry on this motion is not as to the ultimate admissibility of any evidence garnered as a result of the government's answer to Interrogatory No. 1. As indicated above, the court does not now decide whether the language of the order is ambiguous or whether the exception to the parol evidence rule applies to the construction of such order. This ruling should govern objections on the same theory which might be lodged by the government if and when counsel for Beatrice attempt to depose under the discovery rules those individuals whose identities are disclosed pursuant to Interrogatory No. 1.

["Interest" Allegedly Acquired]

II. The government also requests protective orders with respect to defendant's Interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3, which read:

> No. 2. Referring to Paragraph 7 of Count I of the complaint, state with particularity any "interest" in Maple Island Dairies, Inc. owned by the defendant.
>
> No. 3. Referring to Paragraph 7 of Count I of the complaint, state with particularity any "interest" in Maple Island Dairies, Inc. in which the defendant has any "direct or indirect" ownership.

The government objects first to the terminology of the Interrogatories, specifically to the characterization of the action as involving only "ownership" of Maple Island Dairies, Inc. The complaint unequivocally alleges acquisition of an "interest" in Maple Island, which language conforms to the term used in the order as discussed hereinabove. Certainly the government cannot be bound by any gloss applied to the language of its complaint by the defendant, and resolution of the question whether "interest" means something other than "ownership" will not be influenced by the defendant's choice of words in discovery proceedings. Therefore, such is not a valid ground for issuance of a protective order or sustaining an objection to Interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3. The government in its answers to interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3 regarding "ownership" should deal with all alleged acquisitions of "interest" in Maple Island Dairies and not omit certain transactions which it intends to demonstrate constitute acquisitions of "interests," within the prohibition of the order, which somehow fall short of "ownership" as that term is understood in the context of this case. To fail to do so just invites further interrogatories and creates delay. The government also objects to Interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3 as calling for a full exposure of "each segment of its legal theory as involving transactions which were engineered, refined and consummated by the defendant itself." [3] It contends that the information sought by such Interrogatories is within Beatrice's present possession inasmuch as the complaint charges violations of the order by virtue of the Beatrice relationship with Maple Island. As such, it is argued, requiring response would place a heavy burden on the government with no countervailing benefit to Beatrice.

Beatrice, on the other hand, argues that its purpose is "to find out what the government's contentions are when it charges a violation of the agreed order so it can prepare a defense to them." [4] A further purpose, not argued by Beatrice, would be to discover information relevant to the claimed acquisitions which might be beyond the information available to Beatrice. If such information exists, it ought to be made available to Beatrice.

The scope of inquiry by Interrogatories under Fed. R. Civ. P. Rule 33 is governed in part by Rule 26 as most recently amended, which reads at 26(b) (1) in pertinent part:

> Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action.

As the Supreme Court noted in Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1946), one of the purposes of discovery under the Federal Rules is to narrow the issues for trial. Thus, courts have consistently held that a party may propound interrogatories calling for the disclosure of the opposing party's specific position as to the facts underlying his claim, notwithstanding that such facts, divorced from their application to the legal principles governing the case, may already be known or accessible to the propounding party. United States v. Article of Drug, 43 F. R. D. 181 (D. Del. 1967); Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Philco Distribututors, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,626], 25 F. R. D. 86 (E. D. N. Y. 1957); Wright, [3] Government's Brief of December 8, 1970, at page 6.

---

[4] Beatrice's Brief of January 11, 1971, at page 21.

Federal Courts (2nd Ed., 1970), § 81, p. 356. Cf. Leumi Financial Corp. v. Accident & Indemnity Co., 295 F.Supp. 539 (S. D. N. Y. 1969); Diversified Products Corp. v. Sports Center Co., 42 F. R. D. 3 (D. Md. 1967). The court in Baim & Blank, supra, accordingly reasoned:

> The purpose of the deposition-discovery procedure is not only for the ascertainment of facts, but also to determine what the adverse party contends they are, and what purpose they will serve, so that the issues may be narrowed, the trial simplified, and time and expense conserved. It has also been held that inquiry, either by deposition or interrogation, into facts within the discoverer's own knowledge, and of which he already has information, are proper. Benevanto v. A. & P. Food Stores, Inc., D. C. E. D. N. Y., 26 F.Supp. 424; Nakken Patents Corp. v. Rabinowitz, D. C. E. D. N. Y., 1 F. R. D. 90; Moore's Federal Practice, 2nd Ed., Secs. 26.21, 33.13.

25 F. R. D. at 87.

Against the foregoing body of case law, the court must consider the following 1970 amendment to Rule 33:

> An interrogatory otherwise proper is not necessarily objectionable merely because an answer to the interrogatory involves an opinion or contention that relates to fact or the application of law to fact, but the court may order that such an interrogatory need not be answered until after designated discovery has been completed or until a pretrial conference or other later time.

The Notes of the Advisory Committee responsible for that amendment indicate that it was not intended to constrict the scope of discovery of specific facts and contentions of the parties:

> Rule 33 is amended to provide that an interrogatory is not objectionable merely because it calls for an opinion or contention that relates to fact or the application of law to fact. Efforts to draw sharp lines between facts and opinions have invariably been unsuccessful and the clear trend of the cases is to permit "factual" opinions. As to requests for opinions or contentions that call for the application of law to fact, they can be most useful in narrowing and sharpening the issues, which is a major purpose of discovery.

Under the circumstances, the court concludes that responses to Interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3 may substantially aid in narrowing the issues for trial, and that the government has not demonstrated adequate basis upon which to issue the requested protective order or to sustaining objections to such interrogatories. Therefore, the government's motion with respect to Interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3 is denied.

[Executive Privilege]

III. Finally, the government requests a protective order as to certain categories of documents, the existence of which was disclosed pursuant to defendant's Interrogatory No. 4(e). That Interrogatory reads:

> Identify each and every document or memorandum in your possession referring to the matters alleged in the complaint.

The government's brief listed, inter alia, the following categories of such documents, as to all of which it claims protection under the doctrines of Work Product and Attorney-Client privilege:

1. Category A—Legal Memorandum from Joseph J. Gercke, Chief, Compliance Division, to the Commission concerning Compliance Reports of Defendant, the issuance of compulsory process under Section 6(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41(b)) and recommendations as to the bringing of the present suit.

2. Category E—Legal Memoranda, and attached exhibits submitted to the Department of Justice outlining the theory of the case and setting forth the facts, evidence and anticipated defenses.

3. Category J—Legal Memoranda from Joseph J. Gercke to the Commission concerning the eventual divestiture of the assets which are the subject matter of Count II.

At the hearing copies of those documents were submitted to the court for its in camera inspection. On the basis of the court's perusal of the documents, it concludes that disclosure may be protected under the doctrine of "executive privilege." See Judge Robinson's lengthy discussion in Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. E. B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, 40 F. R. D. 318 (D. D. C. 1966), aff'd per curiam without opinion 384 F.2d. 979 (D. C. Cir. 1967), cert. denied 88 S. Ct. 334 (1967). See also Detroit Screwmatic Co. v. United States, 49 F. R. D. 77 (S. D. N.Y. 1970); Freeman v. Seligson, 405 F.2d. 1326 (D. C. Cir. 1968); Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F.Supp. 939 (Ct. Cl. 1958). Cf. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 38 F. R. D. 57 (N. D. Ohio 1964).

As the decisions indicate, the existence of the privilege is determined by a balancing of the necessity for invocation of the privilege, on the one hand, against the potential value of the private litigant of the requested production on the other. The balance weighs heavily against Beatrice. It has argued that access to such documents is essential to an understanding of the specific contentions of the government as to particular incidents, transactions or conditions alleged to violate the order, because the government has heretofore refused to disclose such facts and contentions with particularity. That arguable justification for production of these documents no longer obtains in light of the court's ruling that the government must respond to Interrogatories No. 2 and No. 3. And even accepting, arguendo, Beatrice's theory that evidence outside the order itself may be admissible as tending to clarify the intended meaning of its allegedly ambiguous terminology, government memoranda speculating after the fact as to the scope of the order if such they do would be irrelevant. As to the

FTC's interest in protecting this kind of document from disclosure, its counsel stated its position at the hearing as follows:

> The necessity of the agencies involved for frank and open advice and ready access to the staff is of overriding public importance. If these memoranda had to be written with one eye toward their eventual use in court, I think the possibilities of frankness and openness and full discussion of the merits and demerits of the case involved would be very limited.

The court subscribes to this position.

Since the court finds that the documents in Categories A, E, and J are protected from the requested disclosure by the doctrine of executive privilege, it is unnecessary to discuss the applicability of the Work Product rule and the Attorney-Client privilege, though there may well be merit to the contention as to their applicability in this situation.

At the hearing on January 14th (Tr., page 34), the court indicated that it would order and thus it does hereby order that all discovery proceedings by both parties be completed by August 15, 1971. The court hereby sets a date for a pretrial conference for Friday, August 27, 1971 at 9:00 A.M. at Minneapolis to the end that the case may be ready if possible for trial at the September-October term of this court to be held in Minneapolis.

So ordered in accordance with the above memorandum.

L. G. BALFOUR COMPANY, ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 17236—F.T.C. Docket 8435

(Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. April 5, 1971)

1. COMMISSION NEED NOT FOLLOW ANTITRUST STANDARDS AS STRICTLY AS COURTS MUST IN SHERMAN AND CLAYTON ACT CASES

   Federal Trade Commission under provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition is not bound to follow antitrust standards as strictly as courts must in cases under Sherman and Clayton Acts.

2. NATIONAL COLLEGE FRATERNITY INSIGNIA-BEARING GOODS CONSTITUTE A RELEVANT MARKET AND COMMISSION PROPERLY REFUSED TO CONSIDER EACH FRATERNITY A SEPARATE MARKET

   In proceeding asserting that manufacturer and its subsidiary engaged in practices which were alleged to unlawfully restrain, lessen and eliminate competition and create a monopoly to prejudice of public in violation of Federal Trade Commission Act, national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods constituted relevant market and Commission properly refused to consider each national college fraternity as a separate market or to include suppliers of all emblematic jewelry, rather than fraternity products, in the product market.

---

*Reported in 442 F. 2d 1. For case before the Commission, see 74 F.T.C. 345, modified 79 F.T.C. 486.

3. MONOPOLY POWER SHOWN IN CORPORATION'S SHARE OF MARKET IS ELEMENT OF OFFENSE IN SHERMAN ACT

Proof of a corporation's share of the market is generally used to show monopoly power, an element of offense under provision of Sherman Act making monopolization illegal.

4. SUBSTANTIAL PERCENTAGE SHARE OF MARKET CARRIES MONOPOLISTIC POWERS WHICH ANTITRUST LAWS ARE DESIGNED TO PROHIBIT

A company with substantial percentage share of a market would have power to preclude entry and advancement and set prices without paying heed to those forces which would exist in a healthy and competitive market and such powers are the powers which a monopolist possesses and which antitrust laws are designed to prohibit.

5. EXCLUSIVE DEALING CONTRACTS WITH 90% OF NATIONAL COLLEGE FRATERNITIES SUPPORTS FINDING OF MONOPOLY POWER IN RELEVANT MARKET

Manufacturer's and its subsidiary's exclusive dealing contracts with over 90% of national college fraternities supported finding of monopoly power in relevant market of national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods in proceeding asserting that manufacturer and subsidiary engaged in practices which were alleged to unlawfully restrain, lessen and eliminate competition and create monopoly to prejudice of public in violation of provision of Federal Trade Commission Act.

6. COMPANY WITH MONOPOLISTIC SHARE OF MARKET MUST CONDUCT ITSELF IN A MANNER NOT TO VIOLATE THE UNFAIR METHOD OF COMPETITION PROVISION OF FTC ACT

In proceeding asserting violation of provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, company with monopolistic share of market must be shown to have conducted its business with goals of building ahead of demand and taking the initiative in dealings wih purchasers, suppliers and competitors but the conduct itself need not amount to an unfair method of competition under the provision of the Federal Trade Commission Act or constitute a violation under Sherman and Clayton Acts.

7. FACT THAT LOCAL CHAPTERS MIGHT BREAK NATIONAL CONTRACT DOES NOT DIMINISH THE ANTICOMPETITIVE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR MARKET OF COMPETITION

Where manufacturer and its subsidiary were shown to have monopoly power in relevant market of national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods, official jeweler contracts, which admittedly were exclusive dealing contracts, were anticompetitive and constituted an unfair method of competition under Federal Trade Commission Act as monopolization and since overwhelming majority of local chapters of fraternities honored agreements and considered them binding, the anticompetitive effects of the exclusive contracts were not significantly weakened because they might be breached or disregarded by the local chapters.

8. ADVANTAGES OF TRADE PRACTICES ON INDIVIDUAL COMPANIES CANNOT EXCUSE OTHERWISE ILLEGAL BUSINESS PRACTICE

In proceeding for violation of provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, though it is relevant to consider advantages of trade practice on individual companies in market, advantages cannot excuse an otherwise illegal business practice.

9. ACCUMULATION OF OFFICIAL JEWELER CONTRACTS NOT LAWFUL SIMPLY BECAUSE SOME FRATERNITIES WERE BENEFITED

Where official jeweler contracts in context of proof of manufacturer's monopoly power were anticompetitive and constituted an unfair method of competition under Federal Trade Commission Act as monopolization, accumulation and enforcement of official jeweler contracts were not lawful simply because it benefited some fraternities in relevant market.

10. COMMON LAW AND STATUTORY RIGHTS TO FRATERNITIES' INSIGNIA WILL NOT BE IMMUNIZED FROM ANTITRUST LAWS THE ILLEGAL ACCUMULATION OF THOSE RIGHTS

Even though all fraternities might have full common law and statutory rights in their insignia and exclusive dealing contracts between manufacturer and its subsidiary and each fraternity might be legal assignments of those rights, manufacturer's and subsidiary's illegal accumulation and enforcement of agreements could not, because of that, be immunized from antitrust laws.

11. RULE THAT MERE ACCUMULATION OF PATENTS OR COPYRIGHTS IS NOT UNLAWFUL IS APPLICABLE TO TRADEMARK LAW

Rule that mere accumulation of patents or copyrights does not in itself constitute unlawful monopolization is applicable to trademark law.

12. USE OF MANUFACTURER'S COUNCIL TO POLICE MARKET AND THREATEN COMPETITORS WITH LITIGATION WAS AN UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICE

Where person who had controlling interest in manufacturer and its subsidiary organized council and manufacturer and subsidiary were official jewelers of 137 of the 140 fraternities that were members of council and had monopoly power in relevant market of national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods, manufacturer's and subsidiary's use of council to police market, threaten competitors with litigation, institute litigation and petition Federal Trade Commission to institute proceedings against one of its competitors was an unfair trade practice.

13. WHEN NO NOTICE WAS GIVEN OF ALLEGED VIOLATION OF LANHAM ACT ANY PART OF FINAL ORDER DEPENDING ON THIS WILL BE REVISED

Where manufacturer and its subsidiary which assertedly engaged in practices which were alleged to unlawfully restrain, lessen and eliminate competition and create a monopoly to prejudice of public in violation of Federal Trade Commission Act were given no notice of alleged unfair practice of misrepresenting to fraternities, suppliers and competitors that all or practically all fraternities had their insignia protected by Lanham Act when only a minority had such protection and first time it was mentioned was in Federal Trade Commission counsel's proposed findings to the Commission on that issue and final order insofar as it depended upon that finding alone would be reversed.

14. FTC ACT PUNISHES THOSE STATEMENTS WHICH CREATE A DECEPTIVE IMPRESSION ON PURCHASERS THOUGH THEY MAY BE TECHNICALLY TRUE

Provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition punishes those statements which create a deceptive impression on purchasers even though they may be technically interpreted as true or partially true.

15. STATEMENTS DEROGATING RIGHT OF COMPETITORS TO MAKE SALES TO FRATERNITY MEMBERS AMOUNTED TO VIOLATION OF FTC ACT

Indiscriminate nature of statements by manufacturer of organizations insignia jewelry and its subsidiary, which held monopoly power in relevant market, derogating right of competitors to make sales to fraternity members, quality of their goods, and ethics of their trade practices amounted to violation of Federal Trade Commission Act for disparagement.

16. ALL REFERENCES TO EVENTS PRIOR TO JUNE 16, 1951, BARRED BY CONSENT ORDER AND STRICKEN FROM RECORD

Where consent order was entered in proceedings instituted by manufacturer and subsidiary against Federal Trade Commission in the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia providing that all oral and documentary evidence relating to events, transactions and business conduct occurring before June 16, 1951 be physically excised from administrative record and that allegations of administrative complaint be limited to ten years prior to June 16, 1961, all references in Commission's findings in proceeding for violation of Federal Trade Commission Act to secret acquisition of subsidiaries which occurred before 1951 were barred by consent order and should be stricken.

17. SECRET OPERATION OF SUBSIDIARIES WHICH PERMITTED MANUFACTURER TO INCREASE ITS MONOPOLIZATION VIOLATED FTC ACT

Secret operation of subsidiaries by manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry while manufacturer held them out as competitors allowing manufacturer to maintain and increase monopolization of national college fraternity market while maintaining a facade of vigorous competition and permitting manufacturer and one subsidiary to obtain exclusive official jeweler contracts with fraternities that required co-official jewelers violated provision of Federal Trade Commission Act as monopolistic conduct.

18. PURPOSE OF COMPLAINT IS TO GIVE RESPONDENT NOTICE OF CHARGES

There is no requirement that a complaint in an administrative proceeding enumerate precisely every event to which a hearing examiner may finally attach significance, and purpose of administrative complaint is to give responding party notice of charges against him.

19. NO PREJUDICIAL ERROR IN FINDING THAT MANUFACTURER OF INSIGNIA JEWELRY SECRETLY OPERATED SUBSIDIARIES

Where there was no claim that manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and subsidiary were misled by complaint before Federal Trade Commission and no evidence in record that they could have been so misled and issue of secret operation of subsidiaries by manufacturer was fully and fairly litigated before hearing examiner and argued before Commission, there was no prejudicial error in finding that manufacturer secretly operated subsidiaries over claim that administrative complaint did not charge manufacturer with secret operation of subsidiaries and that they were deprived of right to be apprised of charges against them.

20. MARKET FORECLOSURE IN RELEVANT MARKET NOT NECESSARY IN AN EXCLUSIVE DEALING CONTRACT CASE

Specific evidence of market foreclosure in a relevant market in which exclusive contracts with suppliers exist is not necessary in an exclusive dealing contract case under provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition.

21. EXCLUSIVE SUPPLY CONTRACTS OF INSIGNIA JEWELRY MANUFACTURER WERE ANTICOMPETITIVE AND VIOLATED FTC ACT

Where manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and its subsidiary entered exclusive dealing contracts with suppliers which were being used by competitors and some competitors were unable to find and maintain suppliers, there was sufficient showing that exclusive supply contracts were anticompetitive, and contracts violated provision of Federal Trade Commission Act as monopolistic business practice.

22. USE OF TERM PURCHASE AGREEMENTS IN HIGH SCHOOL CLASS RING SALES SUPPORTS UNFAIR METHOD OF COMPETITION PROHIBITION

Manufacturer's use of term purchase agreements in connection with sales of class rings to high schools that were anticompetitive at schools at which they were in effect supported finding of violation of provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition.

23. CASES ATTACKING EXCLUSIVE DEALING CONTRACTS DO NOT REQUIRE DEFINITION OF A MARKET BUT ONLY LESSENING OF COMPETITION

Under provision of Federal Trade Commission Act which offers general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, cases attacking validity of exclusive dealing contracts do not require definition of a market but rather some showing of a lessening of competition.

24. WHEN MANUFACTURER HAD OPPORTUNITY TO DEFEND THE TERM PURCHASE AGREEMENTS FOR HIGH SCHOOL CLASS RINGS THERE WAS NO LACK OF FAIR HEARING

Where Federal Trade Commission rejected hearing examiner's findings on monopolization in connection with term purchase agreements for high school class rings but held term purchase agreements illegal and issue of legality of agreements was litigated before Commission and manufacturer had opportunity to defend on that issue, manufacturer was aware at hearing level that legality of term purchase agreements was an issue in the litigation and was not deprived of fair hearing.

25. SINCE CHOICE OF REMEDY IS IN DISCRETION OF COMMISSION COURTS WILL NOT REVERSE OR MODIFY COMMISSION'S CHOICE

Choice of remedial order is committed to discretion of Federal Trade Commission; except where remedy selected bears no reasonable relation to unfair practices found to violate provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, the courts will not reverse or modify Commission's choice.

26. COMMISSION MAY ORDER DIVESTITURE TO RESTORE COMPETITION

Federal Trade Commission in proceeding for violation of provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition has power to order divestiture to restore competition.

27. ORDER THAT SUBSIDIARY BE DIVESTED WAS PROPER WHERE MANUFACTURER OF INSIGNIA JEWELRY HAD MONOPOLY POWER IN RELEVANT MARKET

Where manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and subsidiary in proceeding for violation of Federal Trade Commission Act were found to have monopoly power in relevant market and to have engaged in anticompetitive practices, order that subsidiary be divested from manufacturer was proper.

28. PROHIBITION OF CONTRACTS WITH DIVESTED SUBSIDIARY FOR FIVE YEARS WAS PROPER TO ALLOW RENEWAL OF COMPETITIVE VIGOR

In proceeding charging manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and its subsidiary with violation of provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, where it was ordered that subsidiary be divested from manufacturer, it was also proper for Federal Trade Commission to impose against manufacturer a five years' prohibition against contracts with divested subsidiary's customers in order to allow divested subsidiary of reacquire competitive vigor.

29. COMMISSION MAY NOT PROHIBIT TELLING OF A TRUE STATEMENT EVEN IF IT PERPETUATES THE DOMINANCE OF A MONOPOLIST

In proceeding asserting that manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and its subsidiary engaged in practices which were alleged to unlawfully restrain, lessen and eliminate competition and create a monopoly to prejudice of public in violation of Federal Trade Commission Act, Federal Trade Commission could not prohibit telling of a true statement even if representation perpetuated dominance of monopolist and part of order enjoining manufacturer and subsidiary from representing that any competitor had manufactured, distributed or sold any types of fraternity products without permission or authorization of fraternity would be reversed.

30. COMMISSION MAY ENTER ORDER AGAINST ONE FIRM WITH ILLEGAL PRACTICE

Federal Trade Commission has power to enter an order against one firm that is practicing an industry-wide illegal trade practice.

31. COMMISSION ORDERS SOME REMEDIAL NOT PUNITIVE FUNCTION

Federal Trade Commission's orders are to serve a remedial and not a punitive function.

32. COMMISSION ORDERS MAY NOT ARBITRARILY DESTROY ONE OF MANY VIOLATORS IN FIELD

Federal Trade Commission may not issue orders which would arbitrarily destroy one of many violators in the market.

33. IN BANNING USE OF FIRM PURCHASE AGREEMENT IN SALE OF HIGH SCHOOL CLASS RINGS COMMISSION DID NOT ABUSE ITS DISCRETION

In proceeding asserting that manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and its subsidiary violated provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, Federal Trade Commission did not abuse its discretion in ordering manufacturer to cease and desist from use of term purchase agreements in connection with sales of high school class rings though device had been used by all major competitors for past 30 years.

34. ANY ERROR IN ALLEGED DENIAL OF ACCESS TO FIVE WITNESSES' STATEMENTS WAS HARMLESS WHERE NO PART OF COMMISSION OPINION RESTED SOLELY ON TESTIMONY OF FIVE WITNESSES

In proceeding asserting that manufacturer of organizational insignia jewelry and subsidiary violated provision of Federal Trade Commission Act offering general prohibition against unfair methods of competition, any error in alleged denial of access to five witnesses' statements was harmless where proceedings before hearing examiner lasted over five years, resulted in about 6,000 pages of testimony, hundreds of exhibits and 429 detailed findings of fact and not one of findings or any part of Commission's opinion rested solely on testimony of five witnesses in question, witnesses were five of 21 competitors that testified and manufacturer and subsidiary were given expurgated testimony of four of the witnesses.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 442 F.2d 1)

On appeal, Court held that exclusive dealing contracts with over 90% of national college fraternities for insignia-bearing goods constituted an unfair method of competition under FTC Act as monopolization. Enforced in part, reversed in part.

Edward F. Howrey, A. Duncan Whitaker, Gerald Kadish, Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D.C., for petitioners.

Thomas M. Clarke, Chicago, Ill., amicus curiae.

John V. Buffington, Gen. Counsel, J. B. Truly, Asst. Gen. Counsel, Miles J. Brown, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Before FAIRCHILD and KERNER, Circuit Judges, and STECKLER, Chief District Judge.*

KERNER, Circuit Judge.

This is a petition for review of an order and opinion issued by the respondent, Federal Trade Commission (Commission), in which it found petitioners, L. G. Balfour Company (Balfour) and Burr, Patterson & Auld Company (BPA), in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §45.[1] After lengthy proceedings before a hearing examiner, the Commission concluded that petitioners had used unfair methods of competition in the national college fraternity insignia market and the national high school class ring market, and entered a comprehensive order which attempts to restore competitive conditions in these markets.

---

*The Honorable William E. Steckler, Chief Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, is sitting by designation.

[1] Section 5(a) (1) provides: "Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful."

Section 5(a) (6) provides: "The Commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."

The complaint, issued by the Commission on June 16, 1961, charged petitioners with Section 5 violations in connection with the manufacturing, processing, sale and distribution of insignia-bearing fraternity products and high school class rings. The complaint alleged that Balfour and BPA had unreasonably foreclosed actual and potential competitors from access to the fratnerity insignia and high school class ring product markets and had monopolized and attempted to monopolize these markets. More specifically, the complaint alleged that the petitioners had entered into exclusive dealing contracts with nearly all national Greek letter social and professional fraternities; had entered into exclusive supply contracts with suppliers of fraternity insignia-bearing goods; had policed and controlled the entry of competitors into the national fraternity insignia goods market through the offices of the Interfraternity Research and Advisory Council (IRAC); had disparaged competitors; had entered into exclusive dealing contracts with representatives of high schools and colleges in the sale of class rings; had acquired three competitors between 1927 and 1952; and had enticed and attempted to entice away employees from competitors. Such practices were alleged to unlawfully restrain, lessen and eliminate competition and create a monopoly to the prejudice of the public in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Hearings were commenced before an examiner in October, 1961, and completed in June, 1966. In November, 1963, petitioners filed suit in the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia seeking to limit the evidence before the Commission to the ten-year period prior to the issuance of the administrative complaint. A consent order was reached which provided that "all oral and documentary evidence relating to events, transactions and business conduct occurring before June 16, 1951, be physically excised from the administrative record," except insofar as otherwise agreed upon by counsel, and that "the allegations of the administrative complaint * * * be limited to ten years prior to June 16, 1961."

At the conclusion of the hearings in 1966, the examiner filed his findings and decision. He concluded that the petitioners had monopolized and utilized unfair methods of competition in the national college fraternity insignia goods market. He also found there was insufficient evidence on which to sustain the charge that petitioners monopolized or utilized any other unfair methods of competition in the college and high school class ring market. On appeal to the Commission, the examiner's findings with respect to the national college fraternity insignia goods market were affirmed. The Commission, however, reversed the examiner's dismissal of charges in the class ring market, and held that Balfour's use of term purchase agreements with high schools in this market were exclusive dealing contracts which violated Section 5. Based upon these findings and consequent Section 5 violations, the Commission issued its detailed order from which the petitioners appeal.

Balfour and BPA launch extensive attacks upon the Commission's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and scope and content of its order as well as claims of prejudicial procedural irregularity during the hearing. We are aided in the disposition of this appeal by amicus curiae briefs and statements filed on behalf of several national fraternal organizations. We note at the outset that the scope of this review is twofold. We must determine if the Commission applied incorrect legal standards which prejudiced its findings against petitioners. We must also determine whether the administrative decision is supported by substantial evidence in the hearing record before the examiner. Consolo v. Federal Maritime Commission, 383 U.S. 607, 620, 86 S.Ct. 1018, 16 L.Ed.2d 131 (1966); National Dairy Products Corporation v. F.T.C., 412 F. 2d 605, 620 (7th Cir. 1969).

NATIONAL COLLEGE FRATERNITY PRODUCTS

Balfour, a Massachusetts corporation, is engaged in the manufacturing, distribution and sale of organizational insignia jewelry and other products bearing organizational insignia. Its purchasers include college fraternities, professional, honorary and other social organizations, as well as high schools and colleges. Its total sales in 1960 were $22 million. Of that, approximately $7 million were attributable to the sales of its Fraternity Division. The sales to national college fraternities from that division were $5.3 million in 1960. The Class Ring Division accounted for $11 million in sales to high schools and colleges. The Commercial Division realized $2.6 million for sales of jewelry to commercial organizations and $1.5 million for sales of jewelry to non-college fraternal organizations and clubs. Balfour's subsidiary, BPA, totalled $1.3 million in 1960 for sales of fraternity insignia-bearing products.

The Fraternity Division sells both jewelry products, such as fraternity pins, and other insignia-bearing fraternity products, such as paddles, beer mugs, party favors and pennants. Each buyer fraternity has its own distinctive insignia and crest. The major buyers of Balfour's fraternity division products are national college fraternities, each of which possesses distinctive insignia composed of the two or three Greek letters which comprise its name. Approximately a third of the national college fraternities have registered their insignia under the Lanham Trade-Mark Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1114 et seq., but most have not sought statutory trademark protection.

At least 90% of the fraternity chapters on college campuses are governed by a national organization. Ultimate authority for decisions binding on all local chapters rests in the fraternity convention, held once every year or two years. Between conventions, decisions are made by the national executive committees of the fraternities. All have constitutions or by-laws which are binding on the local chapters. Most of these national college fraternities are members of one of five nationally organized interfraternity conferences.

The five interfraternity organizations are members of the Interfraternity Research and Advisory Council (IRAC). In 1960, 140 national college fraternity organizations were members of the IRAC. The IRAC was organized, financed, and for a period of years, directed by Lloyd Balfour, who has a controlling interest in both Balfour and BPA.

Balfour and BPA sell their fraternity insignia-bearing products under exclusive dealing contracts executed with the various national fraternities. These exclusive dealing contracts, referred to as official jeweler contracts, designate the petitioners as the sole official jeweler, co-official jeweler or official jeweler of the fraternity, and name them as the exclusive supplier of insignia-bearing items of the fraternity. The national fraternities' by-laws or constitutions generally provide that the local chapters buy only from the seller designated as the official jeweler. No other competing seller of insignia goods may send a salesman to the local chapters for solicitation. The contracts also set certain standards for design and quality. They are of indefinite duration, terminable upon either six months or one year's notice.

The IRAC has endorsed these exclusive official jeweler contracts and has frequently warned against unauthorized sales by fraternal insignia goods suppliers. A vast majority of the national college fraternities who are members of the IRAC have official jeweler contracts with either Balfour or BPA. Balfour and BPA had in 1960 official jeweler contracts with 279 of 288 fraternities listed in an authoritative fraternity register.

The Commission found that Balfour and BPA controlled 86.9% of the national college fraternity insignia goods market. The remaining 13.1% sales in this market was shared by approximately 36 competitors. The Commission concluded that the petitioners' monopolistic share of the market enabled them to set prices uncontrolled by the competitive conditions which would exist in a free market and enabled them to exclude actual and potential competitors from the market.

Numerous instances of monopolistic conduct were found by the Commission. The official jeweler contracts were found to be an unfair method of competition, used by the petitioners to perpetuate their enormous share and control of the market. Other activities found violative of Section 5 include the following:

(1) Petitioners falsely represented that almost all national college fraternity insignias were protected by statutory trademark registration.

(2) Petitioners operated the IRAC for their own benefit while cloaking it with the appearance of an impartial and respectable third party.

(3) Petitioners used the IRAC to police the market by informing fraternities and competitor-suppliers that sales to fraternities by suppliers not designated as official jewelers were unauthorized because of the trademark status of the fraternal insignia.

(4) Petitioners disparaged the quality of their competitor's goods and their business practices and referred to them as "pirates."

(5) Petitioners utilized exclusive contracts with those who supplied them with insignia products.

(6) Petitioners hired some of its competitors' employees.

(7) Balfour secretly acquired and operated BPA as its subsidiary while giving the appearance that BPA was a competitor.

These activities by Balfour and BPA were found to be unfair methods of competition rather than the result of inevitable economic factors, and to constitute monopolization within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act offers a general prohibition against "unfair methods of competition" and does not, as the Sherman and Clayton Acts do, list the specific acts and practices which would amount to a Section 5 violation. The Commission, however, is empowered to use Section 5 to prohibit practices and remedy conditions in monopolistic or oligopolistic markets which "* * * [run] counter to the public policy declared in the Sherman and Clayton Acts * * *." Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, 312 U.S. 457, 463, 61 S.Ct. 703, 706, 85 L.Ed. 949 (1941). See Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Adv. Service Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394–395, 73 S.Ct. 361, 97 L.Ed. 426 (1952); F.T.C. v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 453–455, 42 S.Ct. 150, 66 L.Ed. 307 (1922); Rader v. Balfour, 440 F.2d 469 (7th Cir., Mar. 22, 1971).

With this broad standard in mind, the Commission determined that Balfour's monopolization of the national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods market violated Section 5. Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, makes monopolization illegal. Our review, then, is based on an examination of criteria which constitute an offense under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. We understand that facts amounting to a Section 5 violation of monopolization should be sustained if they contravene the policies of Section 2, though they might not constitute a violation of Section 2 itself. See Rader v. Balfour, supra.

The Supreme Court in United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570–571, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L.Ed.2d 778 (1966), outlined the elements of Section 2 as:

> (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Petitioners contend that the Commission misapplied the law in defining the relevant market as the national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods market, and that there is insufficient evidence to support the finding that petitioner held a monopolistic share of the market. In addition, petitioners assert that none of their activities in the market—from their use of the official jeweler contracts to their manipulation of the IRAC and Balfour's secret operation of BPA—constitute conduct amounting to monopolization.[2]

1. The Relevant Market.

The Commission determined that national college fraternity insignia-bearing goods constituted the relevant market in this case. For this, it relied on the definition of submarkets, as stated in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962). The Commission said that "the relevant market for purposes of Section 7 [of the Clayton Act] must be determined by reference to:

> "such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes and specialized vendors."

Brown at 325, 82 S. Ct. at 1524.

See Reynolds Metals Co. v. F.T.C., 114 U.S. App. D.C. 2, 309 F. 2d 223, 226–229 (1962). The Commission concluded, after an examination of the facts, that the relevant market was national college insignia-bearing goods:

> In the instant case competing jewelers testified that they considered national college fraternity jewelry as a separate and distinct sales market. Entry into this market would require a separate and unique sales and distribution system, additional production facilities and the training of specialized sales personnel. Furthermore, the national college fraternity system constitutes a unique and distinct class of purchasers whose interests are different from other organizations purchasing emblematic jewelry. The existence of several small firms, devoted solely to the sale > of insignia products to national college fraternities gives added support to the examiner's market definition. [Petitioners] themselves maintain a separate sales department, known as the Fraternity Division, limited to the sale of fraternity insignia products. This Division has its own organizational structure, sales bulletin and commission schedules and utilizes its own competitive methods which differ from the sales methods employed by [petitioners'] other product sales divisions. [Reference to pages in record omitted.]

---

[2] Since we hold that there is substantial evidence that the various practices of petitioners in the national college fraternity goods market constitute monopolization under Section 5, we need not decide whether the acts themselves would violate Section 5 without a showing of monopoly power. See discussion infra.

We do not agree with petitioners' argument that the geographic market should have included local, as well as national, college fraternities. The Commission based its market analysis on the relationship of the purchaser fraternities to the suppliers and the nature and organization of the fraternities themselves as that affects the suppliers' distribution and sales system. Also relevant to this market definition is the existence of the national organizational structure of the fraternities, inter-fraternities and the IRAC. The fact that the national fraternal organizations imposed the official jeweler contracts on their local chapter adds to the logic of considering the fraternity market a national one.[3]

Petitioners argue that the criteria of submarkets, taken out of context by the Commission from Brown Shoe, which involved a merger under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, is inapplicable to a monopolization case. Rather, they urge that the relevant product market is determined by reference to the test which is stated in United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S.Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956), a monopolization case. In du Pont, the Court explained the test to be used in Section 2 monopolization cases: "* * * no more definite rule can be declared than that commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes make up that 'part of the trade or commerce', monopolization of which may be illegal." Id. at 395, 76 S.Ct. at 1007. This test examines the cross-elasticity of demand by the purchasers, i.e., if purchasers can substitute the products of one supplier with the products of other suppliers, then those suppliers constitute a market in a Section 2 monopolization case.

On the basis of this standard, petitioners claim that the delineation of a national fraternity market is erroneous since products bearing the insignia of one fraternity could not be substituted for products bearing the insignia of another fraternity. This is true. If, for example, the price of goods with Sigma Alpha Mu insignia were increased by the seller, a member of that fraternity could not purchase the goods with the insignia of another fraternity no matter how low the price would be. A member of one fraternity has no demand for the insignia-bearing products of another fraternity. Thus, the price of goods for one fraternity would be unaffected by the prices of goods for any other fraternity.

---

[3] The hearing examiner found that: * * * in their communications (1) telling retail jewelers that fraternity insignia products are sold only through [petitioners], (2) policing competitors, (3) urging the fraternities to register their insignia as trademarks, (4) urging the fraternities to refuse to buy from [petitioners'] competitors, (5) disparaging competitors, (6) threatening competitors with litigation, (7) urging fraternities to file complaints with the Federal Trade Commission against [petitioners'] competitors, and (8) telling [petitioners'] suppliers that they must sell only to [petitioners], [petitioners] make constant and continual references to the national college fraternities, but never to local college fraternities.

Yet, this would be true of any market where there is a substantial degree of product differentiation. If the elasticity of demand test were a required standard for market definition in every case, then no market in which there were inelastic demand curves could be delineated. Such a result would preclude analysis of markets with inelastic demand and would deny the realities of the market situation. In this case, the petitioners would have us conclude that each national college fraternity should be considered a separate market, even though the evidence indicates that the sales and distribution systems of the sellers and the organization of the fraternities and interfraternities is on a national level. We believe that if the Commission utilized the elasticity of demand test strictly, there could be no sensible market analysis or market definition. While the use of the cross-elasticity of demand test has been cited with approval in monopoly cases, we believe that the Commission was not in error in rejecting its use in this case.

[1] We believe, moreover, that the propriety of the standards of market definition used by the Commission is controlled by United States v. Grinnell Corp., supra, 384 U.S. at 572–573, 86 S. Ct. at 1704–1705, in which the Court said: "* * * in § 2 cases under the Sherman Act, as in § 7 cases under the Clayton Act [citing Brown Shoe] there may be submarkets that are separate economic entities. * * * We see no reason to differentiate between 'line' of commerce in the context of the Clayton Act and 'part' of commerce for purposes of the Sherman Act." [4] See Columbia Broadcasting System v. F.T.C., 414 F.2d 974 (7th Cir. 1969). Although the statements in Grinnell are dicta, no policies have been proffered by petitioners to show why the submarket analysis of Section 7 should not also be applicable to Section 2 cases. The ultimate objective of the criteria is to delineate markets which conform to areas of effective competition and to the realties of competitive practice. Further, the Commission under Section 5 is not bound to follow antitrust standards as strictly as the courts must in cases under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. See Fashion Originators' Guild v. F.T.C., 312 U.S. 457, 61 S.Ct. 703,

---

[4] The Commission cited Grinnell in a footnote and stated that "[t]he law is clear that similar standards [of submarkets as defined in Brown Shoe] are applicable in defining relevant markets in a monopolization case."

85 L.Ed. 949 (1941); see also, F.T.C. v. Brown Shoe Co., Inc., 384 U.S. 316, 86 S.Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966).

Petitioners, in the alternative, assert that the suppliers of all emblematic jewelry, rather than fraternity products, should be included in the product market. They base this claim on the cross-elasticity of supply test which is an examination of the production flexibility of suppliers. As petitioners explain, a college fraternity could, if necessary, buy its goods from a manufacturer of any kind of emblematic jewelry—and not one producing merely insignia-bearing goods—since the manufacturer could easily convert its facilities designed for production of emblematic jewelry to production of insignia-bearing fraternity goods. This alternative source of supply test, however, has been rejected by the courts as the only standard to be used for definition of the market. See Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. F.T.C., 296 F. 2d 800 (9th Cir. 1961). The D.C. Circuit in Reynolds Metals Co. v. F.T.C., 114 U.S.App.D.C. 2, 309 F.2d 223 (1962), looked to factors other than those dealing with the flexibility of supply. We agree with the court in United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F. Supp. 576 (S.D.N.Y. 1958), that any test "which ignores the buyers and focuses on what the sellers do, or theoretically can do, is not meaningful." While these decisions concerned Section 7 of the Clayton Act, the discussion of the limitations of the cross-elasticity of supply test apply in shaping the standards for market definition in this monopoly case.

[2] For the above reasons, we sustain the Commission's determination of the relevant market.

2. Petitioners' Share of the Market.

The Commission found that the petitioners had official jeweler-exclusive dealing contracts with over 90% of the national college fraternities, and the petitioners sold 86.9% of the market's goods in 1960. Petitioners accept the 90% figure, but assert that the latter figure, to which the Commission gave weight in holding that the petitioners possessed monopoly power, was not based on substantial evidence. The 86.9% figure was reached by the examiner by adding petitioners' total sales for 1960, $5.3 million, to the sales of their competitors that testified before the Commission, which amounted to $800,000. Total market sales, then, was determined to be $6.1 million, against which petitioners' sales of $5.3 million gave them 86.9%.

Petitioners contend that the Commission neglected to include the sales of twenty-six competitors that did not testify before the Commission. They assert that their market share was no greater than 33⅓% because two of their competitors, called as witnesses for the Commission, testified that annual sales in the market were between $15 and $18 million.

[3, 4] Proof of a corporation's share of the market is generally used to show monopoly power, an element of the offense under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed.2d 778 (1966). The share, expressed as a percentage, can be based on annual sales. It has been held that the shares probably must be greater than sixty percent. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945). A company with substantial percentage share of a market would have the power to preclude entry and advancement and set prices without paying heed to those forces which would exist in a healthy and competitive market. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945). These are the "powers" which a monopolist possesses and which the antitrust laws are designed to prohibit. There is no doubt that the record and findings before the hearing examiner establish that petitioners possessed this power and control in the national college fraternity goods market.

An undisputed and significant fact is that petitioners were the exclusive suppliers of over 90% of the national fraternities in the market. The hearing examiner found that of 288 fraternities listed in an authoritative register, petitioners were the exclusive dealer of 279. He also concluded that BPA was the exclusive jeweler for 14.5% of the fraternities, and 18% of them, including those contracts in which it was co-official jeweler with Balfour. Of 6,205,336 total fraternity members, petitioners had 6,115,440 under contract, or 98.6% of all membership. These figures indicate that petitioners have exclusive dealing contracts not only with substantially all of the national fraternity organizations, but also with nearly all members.

The standard provisions of the official jeweler contract give petitioners the right to supply the goods to the fraternity, and the fraternity agrees to use its "best endeavors" to have all its chapters and members buy from petitioners. And, as the hearing examiner found:

> The fraternities, themselves, look upon these official jeweler contracts as authorizing only [Balfour and BPA] to manufacture, sell and distribute jewelry or other products which bear the fraternity's insignia. This is clear from documents written by the fraternity officials (1) refusing to permit any company to manufacture items for the fraternity and (2) warning or threatening any company or individual which does manufacture or display such items. Numerous such letters are in this record. An example of this type of letter is a letter from Alpha Xi Delta to a manufacturer of women's compacts and cigarette lighters that had requested permission to use the sorority's insignia on such products for sale to Alpha Xi Delta members. The letter stated:
>
> "We regret to say that the use of this emblem is restricted by the National Fraternity and use of it in any merchandise such as that described in your letter must be cleared through the official jeweler."

The fraternities regularly advise their chapters that they can only buy from the exclusive jeweler. Exhibits in the record of letters and announcements of the fraternities bear this out. Some fraternities have provisions in their constitutions and by-laws making the official jeweler contract a requirement on the local chapters. Threats of fines and expulsion, the hearing examiner found, "can result from making unauthorized purchases." Both the national fraternities and the petitioners have consistently warned against unauthorized sales not under the exclusive dealing contracts. The IRAC has been especially active in this area in its letters and announcements to local chapters and its encouragement of litigation against unauthorized suppliers.

We find no evidence that any significant number of the official jeweler contracts were not honored by the local chapters. In a letter written in 1960, Mr. Balfour said: "Never in the history of the L. G. Balfour Company have we ever had a contract cancelled. * * *" Because of the tremendous pressure put on the local chapters by the national fraternities, the IRAC and petitioners themselves, few unauthorized sales could take place.

This conclusion is buttressed by the fact that numerous sellers of fraternity goods were not given access to the fraternities and that, frequently, orders by the fraternities with them were cancelled after they were placed. It was extremely difficult for competitors to advertise their fraternity goods in the two publications with national circulation. Salesmen were, in many cases, barred from visiting local chapters. Because of the existence of these numerous official jeweler contracts with petitioners, only one competing firm has entered the fraternity jewelry market in the five years prior to the issuance of the complaint. Many competitors have ceased their attempts to cultivate the fraternity goods market because they believe Balfour has it "tied up."

Thus, the evidence eliminates the possibility that those chapters not buying under official jeweler contracts constituted a significant share of the market. The record also indicates that competitors were barred from effective competition because of these contracts. This, we believe, constitutes substantial evidence of monopoly power.

Further, petitioners were able to dictate the prices of goods they sold to their purchaser fraternities. When petitioners announced that they would raise the prices on their goods, "the fraternities," the examiner found, "accepted without question." The evidence shows them as unconcerned about the pricing policies of their competitors and the purchasing power of the fraternities. Representatives of Balfour testified that the determination of prices in the fraternity market is based on a flat figure determined by them, in comparison to its pricing policies in other markets where it depends upon the prices of competitors.

[5] While we believe that it was error for the Commission to conclude that the petitioners controlled 86.9% of the market,[5] without evidence of the sales of all the firms in the market, we hold that petitioners' exclusive dealing contracts with over 90% of the fraternities supports a finding of monopoly power. The most effective proof, we admit, would be a total sales figure which included all competitors in the market. Absent this, however, the other evidence which revealed that the petitioners were under exclusive dealing contracts with nearly all of the national fraternities, satisfies us that petitioners possessed illegal monopoly power. The case before us, we repeat, is not a Section 2 monopolization case, but one under Section 5, a flexible and remedial law. See Radar v. Balfour, 440 F.2d 469 (7th Cir., March 22, 1971).

3. Petitioners' Monopolistic Practices.

[6] In addition to its finding of monopoly power, the Commission determined that petitioners engaged in a number of practices which proved their monopolistic intent. A company with a monopolistic share of the market must be shown to have conducted its business with the goals of building ahead of demand and taking the initiative in dealings with purchasers, suppliers and competitors. United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F. Supp. 295, 341 (D.Mass. 1953); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 16 L.Ed.2d 778 (1966). The conduct itself need not amount to an unfair method of competition under Section 5 or constitute a violation under the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

The Commission found a number of practices which it concluded were monopolistic.

A. Official Jeweler Contracts.

Petitioners' accumulation and enforcement of official jeweler contracts—admittedly exclusive dealing contracts—were found to be anti-competitive and monopolistic. In its opinion, the Commission stated:

> The record clearly shows that the "official jeweler contracts" as used by [Balfour and BPA] were exclusive and, by [Balfour's and BPA's] own admission, anti-competitive. Without determining whether this type of contract would be illegal in some other context, we are of the opinion that in the present factual situation, with the purpose, intent and competitive effects of these contracts, official jeweler contracts, as accumulated and enforced by [Balfour and BPA], are an unfair method of competition and violate Section 5.

---

[5] The testimony of two witnesses that annual sales in the market were between $15 and $18 million was opinion evidence and could be discounted by the Commission. One of these witnesses admittedly had not been involved in this market in recent years, which militates against the accuracy of his testimony.

The official jeweler contracts were found to be exclusive dealing arrangements of long term, indefinite duration, and their accumulation and use were anti-competitive.

Exclusive dealing contracts have been held to be illegal under Section 3 of the Clayton Act and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act if they have an anti-competitive effect on the market. See F. T. C. v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 86 S.Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 69 S.Ct. 1051, 93 L.Ed. 1371 (1949). We do not, nor need we, decide whether the existence of these agreements themselves would violate Section 5 without a showing of monopoly power.

[7] We simply hold that, in the context of proof of monopoly power, these contracts are anti-competitive and constitute an unfair method of competition under Section 5 as monopolization. These contracts are no less anti-competitive because some national fraternities do not make performance of them mandatory on their local chapters or forbid purchases from other local suppliers. The fact is that the overwhelming majority of local chapters honor the agreements and consider them binding. The anti-competitive effects of these exclusive contracts is not significantly weakened because they may be breached or disregarded by the local chapters. See our discussion, infra. See Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. F. T. C., 381 U.S. 357, 85 S. Ct. 1498, 14 L.Ed.2d 443 (1965).

Petitioners interpose several arguments justifying the use of exclusive official jeweler contracts. They assert that the fraternities' insignias are protected by trademark, and that the official jeweler contracts are designed to maintain that protection. Also, they give several reasons showing that such contracts are necessary and advantageous to the fraternities.

There are admitted advantages to the fraternities that use the official jeweler contracts. Maintaining one exclusive jeweler for the national fraternity ensures uniformity in the design of the insignia and workmanship of all the insignia goods sold to the local chapters. Additionally, the fraternities can limit the number of salesmen visiting the local chapters and cut down on the paper work and time that would be necessary when dealing with more than one possible supplier.

[8, 9] Nonetheless, the accumulation and enforcement of official jeweler contracts does not become lawful because it benefits some fraternities. While it is relevant to consider the advantages of a trade practice on individual companies in the market, this cannot excuse an otherwise illegal business practice. F.T.C. v. Motion Picture Adv. Serv. Co., Inc., 344 U.S. 392, 73 S.Ct. 361, 97 L.Ed. 426 (1953). Congress has embodied in the antitrust laws the theory that the long run advantage of the economic community depends upon the removal of restraints upon competition. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (2d Cir. 1945); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 309, 69 S.Ct. 1051, 93 L.Ed. 1371 (1949).

No business necessity can justify petitioners' use of official jeweler contracts. Assuming that it is necessary for the fraternities' existence for them to maintain a high quality for their jewelry, it is by no means true that exclusive official jeweler contracts are the only means with which to accomplish this goal. Neither does it follow that petitioners must be the official jeweler for substantially all the fraternities. There is no showing that petitioners' competitors could not satisfy these needs of the fraternities.

[10] Approximately 33% of the national college fraternities have obtained statutory protection under the Lanham Act, mostly at the urging of Balfour. The insignia rights of the remaining fraternities, if any, stem from common law rather than registration. We do not here decide whether fraternities have trademark protection, the extent of that protection and the duties necessary to maintain that protection. Even though all fraternities may have full common law and statutory rights in their insignia and that the exclusive dealing contracts between petitioners and each fraternity may be legal assignments of those rights, petitioners' illegal accumulation and enforcement of these agreements cannot, because of that, be immunized from the antitrust laws.

[11] Petitioners contend, however, that their practices fall within the rule that the mere accumulation of patents or copyrights does not in itself constitute unlawful monopolization. See Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827, 834, 70 S.Ct. 894, 94 L.Ed. 1312 (1950); Transparent Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith Co., 329 U.S. 637, 67 S.Ct. 610, 91 L.Ed. 563 (1947); United States v. Winslow, 227 U.S. 202, 33 S.Ct. 253, 57 L.Ed. 481 (1913). We agree with petitioners that this general principle of patent-copyright law is equally applicable to trademark law. However, none of the cases cited by petitioners stands for the proposition that the accumulation of patents or copyrights may never constitute a violation of the antitrust laws.

The Third Circuit decision in Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 270 F.2 d 146 (3d Cir. 1959), cert. denied 362 U.S. 922, 80 S.Ct. 676, 4 L.Ed.2d 742 (1960), relied on by petitioners, is distinguishable. In Lawlor, eight major motion picture producers each granted an exclusive license under their film copyright to National Screen Service Corp. to manufacture and distribute advertising accessories for films. Plaintiff, a competing distributor, contended that the accumulation of exclusive licenses violated the antitrust laws. The Third Circuit held that since the accessories for each movie under the licenses were non-competitive with those for all other movies, the accumulation of licenses did not amount to an illegal restraint of trade. In Lawlor, however, all distributors had an equal opportunity to secure licenses from the motion picture producers. Licenses were not a prerequisite for participation in the movie accessory market. There were alternative sources of supply for accessories, and defendants in no way engaged in any unfair practice either with respect to competition for licenses or for the ultimate sale of accessories. In fact, in concluding its discussion, the court stated: "a careful study of the record convinces us that this accumulation of copyright licenses was not used for improper purposes." Id., 270 F.2d at 154. Lawlor, in contrast to this case, did not involve a supplier-licensee with monopoly power.

B. IRAC.

[12] The evidence amply supports the Commission's findings that petitioners organized, financed and operated the IRAC for their own benefit while cloaking it with the aura of impartiality. Through the IRAC, petitioners were able to police the market, threaten competitors with litigation, institute litigation, and petition the Federal Trade Commission to institute proceedings against one of its competitors. At the same time, petitioners were the official jewelers of 137 of the 140 fraternities that were members of the IRAC. In view of the history, direction and activities of the IRAC, the evidence precludes any conclusion other than that its use by petitioners was an unfair trade practice.

Lloyd Balfour, who has a controlling interest in petitioners, organized the IRAC and was its first chairman from 1946 to 1954. After serving as administrative secretary-treasurer for two years, and after retiring from the operation of the Balfour Company, he became an advisor for the IRAC. Even at this time, the funds of the IRAC were held in Balfour's name and at his office at Attleboro, Massachusetts.[6] IRAC offices were maintained in Attleboro at a personal expense to Mr. Balfour of $35,000 a year. Mr. Balfour was consulted on all IRAC decisions and approved of all IRAC activities which involved the petitioners.

Mr. Balfour used the IRAC as an organization by which to prohibit all unauthorized sales to fraternities by petitioners' competitors. He believed that the fraternities' trademark protection entitled them to maintain its exclusive dealings with petitioners. Actually, there had been no court decision or rule which held that the local chapters could not have dealings with suppliers other than the official jeweler. It was

---

[6] It was only when Balfour was involved in litigation against a fraternity goods competitor that he transferred the IRAC funds from Attleboro to IRAC's office in Washington, D.C.

Balfour's belief that such sales were unauthorized that led to the IRAC's vigorous activities in this area. Letters were written on IRAC stationery to petitioners' competitors that their few sales of insignia goods violated the trademark laws and would be considered the basis of a lawsuit instituted by the IRAC. At the same time, the IRAC urged the fraternities to obtain statutory trademark protection. One of the hearing examiner's findings is pertinent:

> On March 11, 1955, Balfour employee Margaret O'Leary released the IRAC Bulletin, * * * This bulletin lists the names of more than 100 national college fraternities which "according to our IRAC files held in Attleboro * * * are registered in Attleboro," The Bulletin then states:
>
> "We understand that a comparatively few [national college fraternities] have covered all official insignia including the coat-of-arms as well as your names and Greek letters. * * *
>
> "If you are not registered IRAC strongly recommends your giving this subject careful consideration. Your registered claim of ownership will prevent duplication of your name and insignia * * * and will further assist you to legally control the manufacture and distribution of all approved items." [Emphasis supplied.]

In addition, the IRAC persuaded two fraternities to institute suit under the trademark laws against petitioners' competitors and promised to finance the litigation.

C. Misrepresentation of Fraternities' Trademark Protection.

The Commission found that petitioners had misrepresented to fraternities, suppliers and competitors that "all" or "practically all" fraternities had their insignia protected by the Lanham Act when only a minority had such protection. By this, petitioners discouraged competitors from entering the field. Petitioners do not contest the truth of these statements, but maintain that this charge is not contained in the complaint.

[13] We agree with petitioners that they were given no notice of this unfair practice. The first time it was mentioned was in the Commission counsel's proposed findings to the Commission [see N.L.R.B. v. Majestic Weaving Co., 355 F.2d 854 (2d Cir. 1966); Northeastern Indiana Building & Construction Trade Council v. N.L.R.B., 122 U.S. App. D.C. 220, 352 F.2d 696, 699 (1965)]. The findings of the Commission on this issue and the final order insofar as it depends upon this finding alone are reversed. The evidence of misrepresentation of the fraternities' trademark protection, however, does add weight to the finding of the more general unlawful use of the IRAC and its role in harassing petitioners' competitors.

D. Disparagement.

The hearing examiner made 27 detailed findings which document petitioners' continuous policy of derogating the right of competitors to make sales to fraternity members, the quality of their goods and the ethics of their trade practices. The Commission, briefly mentioning this issue in its opinion, stated:

> [Balfour's and BPA's] contentions that they have not disparaged their competitors are contradicted by the record evidence. * * * They have also stated the competitors' products were of secondary quality, poor workmanship and so forth. They introduced no evidence to support these statements.

Petitioners argue that the Commission has shifted the burden of proof to petitioners in violation of Section 7 of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 556. Yet, in the context of the Commission's opinion and the findings of the hearing examiner, a correct interpretation of the Commission's position is that petitioners offered no rebuttal testimony to the overwhelming case of disparagement made against them.

[14, 15] Similarly, we find no merit in the petitioners' contention that the Commission made no explicit finding of falsity of the alleged disparaging statements. Section 5 punishes those statements which create a deceptive impression on purchasers even though they may be technically interpreted as true or partially true. See Kalwajtys v. F. T. C., 237 F.2d 654 (7th Cir. 1956), cert. denied 352 U.S. 1025, 77 S.Ct. 591, 1 L.Ed.2d 597 (1957); P. Lorillard Co. v. F. T. C., 186 F.2d 52 (4th Cir. 1950). The indiscriminate nature of petitioners' statements about competitors amounts to a Section 5 violation for disparagement. The evidence indicates that the fraternities relied on the statements made by petitioners in attacking the quality of its competitors' goods. Further, petitioners' attacks on the poor workmanship of their competitors' goods is false since, in some instances, both the petitioners and these competitors used the same suppliers, and the goods received were the same.

We sustain the Commission's findings that the use of the word "pirate" constitutes disparagement. "Pirate" may be a term of art in the trademark field, referring to an infringer. See Oneida Ltd. v. National Silver Co., 25 N.Y.S.2d 271, 275 (Sup. 1940). However, as used by petitioners to persons unversed in trademark law, without distinguishing authorized or unauthorized transactions, and coupled with petitioners' other disparaging statements, the term "pirate" becomes an instrument of disparagement.

E. BPA and Edwards Haldeman.

The findings of the hearing examiner establish that at times relevant to this proceeding Balfour owned BPA and Edwards Haldeman, which is no longer in existence, Balfour operated these subsidiaries secretly, Edwards Haldeman during its existence, and BPA until 1959, when it was announced that Balfour's acquisition of BPA was imminent, although the actual acquisition had occurred some 35 years earlier.

The secret operation of BPA allowed petitioners to maintain and increase their monopolization of the national college fraternity market while maintaining a facade of vigorous competition. Similarly, by operating separately, Balfour and BPA were able to obtain exclusive official jeweler contracts with fraternities that required co-official jewelers.

The Commission held that the secret acquisition and operation of BPA by Balfour constituted monopolization and foreclosed the market. The Commission stated:

> We are unpersuaded by [Balfour's and BPA's] * * * arguments that their acquisition and operation of BPA plus Edwards Haldeman was well known and did not adversely affect competition. The complaint did not charge these acquisitions as violations of Section 7; rather, it clearly alleged that by secretly acquiring and operating these competitors Balfour increased its market control while projecting an image of extant competition. * * * An examination of the facts as found by the examiner requires us to conclude that Balfour covertly purchased and operated BPA and Edwards Haldeman in order to maintain and increase their monopolistic position. As such this action constituted an unfair method of competition.

Petitioners challenge this ruling of the Commission in two respects. They argue that any finding regarding the acquisition of BPA and Edwards Haldeman, which concededly occurred before 1951, violates the consent order entered in proceedings instituted by petitioners against the Commission in the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia; and further, that there was no allegation in the complaint of secret acquisition or secret operation, thereby depriving petitioners of notice of the charges against them.

The provisions of the consent order which are relevant provide:

> 1. That all oral and documentary evidence relating to events, transactions and business conduct occurring prior to June 16, 1951, will be physically excised from the record. * * *
>
> 2. Both the initial decision of the hearing examiner * * * and the decision and final order of the defendant commission * * * will be based solely upon the excised administrative record. * * *
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> 6. The allegations of the administrative complaint in the aforesaid administrative proceeding shall be limited to ten years prior to June 16, 1961.

[16, 17] The import of this consent order is that all conduct occurring before June 16, 1951, should not be considered relevant for purposes of the instant proceeding. The record as excised pursuant to the consent order and the findings of the hearing examiner support the fact that Balfour "covertly purchased * * * BPA and Edwards Haldeman in order to maintain and increase [its] * * * monopolistic position." Although the acquisitions themselves are admitted, there is no direct evidence in the excised record of the manner, motive or effect of the acquisitions. However, any inference from the post-

June 16, 1951, secret operation of BPA and Edwards Haldeman of the manner of acquisition, its motives or effects, violates the terms of the consent order. All references in the Commission's findings to the secret acquisition of BPA and Edwards Haldeman by Balfour is barred by the consent order and should be stricken. We believe, however, that, disregarding the evidence on the acquisition, Balfour's secret operation of BPA and Edwards Haldeman, while it held them out as competitors, violates Section 5 as monopolistic conduct.

The record and findings of the Commission overwhelmingly support the conclusion that Balfour secretly operated BPA until an announcement of impending acquisition was made in 1959, and secretly operated Edwards Haldeman until it went out of existence in 1954. Petitioners contended, however, that since the administrative complaint did not charge Balfour with the secret operation (and acquisition) of BPA and Edwards Haldeman, they were deprived of their right to be apprised of the charges against them as guaranteed by the due process clause of the fifth amendment, the Administative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 554, the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(b), the and Commission's Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. § 3.11(b).

[18, 19] There is no requirement that a complaint in an administrative proceeding enumerate precisely every event to which a hearing examiner may finally attach significance. The purpose of the administrative complaint is to give the responding party notice of the charges against him. See 1 Davis—on Administrative Law Treatise §§ 8.04–8.05 and cases cited therein. The complaint is adequate if "the one proceeded against be reasonably apprised of the issues in controversy, and any such notice is adequate in the absence of a showing that a party was misled." Cella v. United States, 208 F.2d 783, 789 (7th Cir. 1953), cert. denied 347 U.S. 1016, 74 S. Ct. 864, 98 L.Ed. 1138 (1954); Swift & Co. v. United States, 393 F.2d 247, 252 (7th Cir. 1968). As the Commission case against petitioners unfolded, there was a "reasonable opportunity to know the claims of the opposing party and to meet them." Morgan v. United States, 304 U.S. 1, 18, 58 S.Ct. 773, 776, 82 L.Ed. 1129 (1938); Swift & Co. v. United States, supra, 393 F.2d at 252. In the instant case, there is no claim that the petitioners were misled by the complaint, nor is there any evidence in the record that they could have been so misled. The issue of the secret operation of BPA and Edwards Haldeman was fully and fairly litigated before the hearing examiner and argued before the Commission. We find no prejudicial error.

F. Exclusive Supply Contracts.

The Commission also found that the petitioners' exclusive dealing contracts with their suppliers in which the suppliers agreed not to sell to petitioners' competitors, violated Section 5 as a monopolistic business practice. Evidence indicates that petitioners entered into these contracts with suppliers who were also being used by the competitors. Some competitors were unable to find and maintain suppliers.

[20, 21] Petitioners assert that these exclusive contracts have not been shown to violate Section 5 because there was no evidence of foreclosure of the relevant market. A case under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, must have specific evidence of market foreclosure in a relevant market in which the exclusive contracts exist. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961). But no such proof is necessary in an exclusive dealing contract case under Section 5. F.T.C. v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 86 S. Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966). In this case, however, there is substantial evidence that the exclusive supply contracts were anti-competitive. National college fraternity insignia-bearing goods was defined as relevant market. Several suppliers were cited as parties to these exclusive dealing contracts. Competitors testified of their inability to obtain certain suppliers.

HIGH SCHOOL CLASS RINGS

The other phase of the Commission's opinion and order relates to Balfour's activities in the manufacture, distribution and sale of class rings to high schools throughout the country. It is customary for high school students in their junior or senior year to purchase class rings bearing the school's insignia. Annual sales in this market total between $45 and $50 million. Balfour and two of its competitors share about 60% of the market; in 1960, Balfour's sales of $7.7 million constituted 17% of total market sales. Balfour uses term purchase agreements in connection with the sales of high school rings. The contracts, in which the purchaser schools appoint Balfour as their exclusive seller, are usually of three to five years in duration, but are terminable by the schools at any time and, admittedly, are not legally binding. The Commission found, however, that they are usually honored and renewed.

The agreement itself contains a provision in which the high school official indicates his intention to order all of the required rings for the school from Balfour for the term of the agreement if he is satisfied with Balfour's performance. It does not establish specifications as to the exact nature, price or delivery of the rings. A binding contract with more specific terms is made when an order is placed by the high school for a stated number of rings. On some occasions, Balfour and one of its competitors annually rotate as alternate exclusive suppliers.

Balfour explains that these term purchase agreements enable the school to buy at a less expensive price since the cost of production can be amortized by Balfour over the contract's specified life span. By appointing one company as the exclusive supplier, the agreements save the time and bother of the school officials and keep to a minimum the contacts between vying sellers and students. Between 85 to 90% of Balfour's sales in high school class rings are effectuated under these agreements. Its competitors use these agreements for only 30 to 50% of their sales.

The Commission found that Balfour's use of term purchase agreements with high schools constituted exclusive dealing contracts, which foreclose competition, prevent entry of new competitors and serve to stabilize the market in a fixed position in conflict with the policy of Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. For that reason, the Commission concluded that their use in this case was a Section 5 violation.

[22] The record supports the finding that the term purchase agreements were anti-competitive at the schools in which they were in effect. The question petitioners present is whether this mere finding of market foreclosure is sufficient to support a Section 5 violation.

Exclusive dealing contracts are not illegal per se under Section 3 of the Clayton Act; it must be shown that they substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the relevant market. There must also be proof that the user of the exclusive dealing contract controls a "substantial" share of the market. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293 ,69 S.Ct. 1051, 93 L.Ed. 1371 (1949).

The Commission, however, need not find all the elements necessary to establish a Section 3 Clayton Act violation in holding exclusive dealing contracts illegal under Section 5. F.T.C. v. Motion Picture Adv. Service Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394–395, 73 S.Ct. 361, 97 L.Ed. 426 (1952). See also, Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. F.T.C., 381 U.S. 357, 85 S.Ct. 1498, 14 L.Ed.2d 443 (1965); Fashion Originators' Guild v. F.T.C., 312 U.S. 457, 61 S.Ct. 703, 85 L.Ed. 949 (1941).

We believe that F.T.C. v. Brown Shoe Co., Inc., 384 U.S. 316, 86 S.Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966), controls. In that case, Brown offered inducements in contracts to retailers to sell Brown's shoes only and none of its competitors. The Commission, without a finding of substantial lessening of competition, held that Brown's exclusive dealing contracts were illegal under Section 5. The Supreme Court, in upholding the Commission decision, stated:

> The Commission has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair. This broad power of the Commission is particularly well established with regard to trade > practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws. * * * [Brown's] program obviously conflicts with the central policy of both § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act against contracts which take away freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market. Brown nevertheless contends that the Commission had no power to declare the franchise program unfair without proof that its effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly" which of course would have to be proved if the Government were proceeding against Brown under § 3 of the Clayton Act rather than § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. We reject the argument that proof of this § 3 element must be made. Id. at 321–322, 86 S.Ct. at 1504.

[23] Further, the petitioners assert that the Commission erroneously failed to define a relevant market. However, the hearing examiner considered evidence which showed that high school class rings was a relevant market when considering whether petitioners monopolized the market. There is additional evidence concerning Balfour's share in that market. See supra. We agree with these findings. Besides this, cases under Section 5, in contrast to Section 3 of the Clayton Act, attacking the validity of exclusive dealing contracts do not require the definition of a market, but rather some showing of a lessening of competition. F.T.C. v. Brown Shoe Co., Inc., 384 U.S. 316, 86 S.Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 69 S.Ct. 1051, 93 L.Ed. 1371 (1949).

The evidence demonstrates that these term purchase agreements had an anticompetitive effect on the market. A number of competitors testified that it was difficult to break into markets which utilized these contracts. A smaller company found it difficult to enter the high school market in Southern California: "* * * Most of the schools, upon being contacted, would answer that they were under contract and that the contract had not yet expired." Those who used term purchase agreements said they were valuable because they protected them from open competition and provided for stability and planning.

[24] Finally, petitioners claim that the Commission deprived them of a fair hearing by shifting its theory of the case on appeal. The Commission rejected the hearing examiner's findings on monopolization, but held the term purchase agreements illegal. But, the issue of the legality of these agreements was litigated before the Commission, and the petitioners had an opportunity, to defend on this issue. This is not "an entire abandonment of the very substance of the dispute to which the defendant was summoned, and the substitution of another which he could not have anticipated, and which he had no opportunity to meet." Armand Co. v. F.T.C., 84 F. 2d 973, 974–975 (2d Cir. 1936). Rodale Press, Inc. v. F.T.C., 132 U.S. App. D.C. 317, 407 F. 2d 1252 (1968), cited by petitioners, holds that a party would be deprived of no right if he had an opportunity to respond to the new or different charges. We find that the petitioners were aware, at the hearing level, that the legality of the term "purchase agreements" was an issue in the litigation.

THE COMMISSION'S ORDER

The Commission entered a detailed order designed to prohibit those activities found to be violative of Section 5. With respect to that portion of the order remedying the conditions in the national college fraternity insignia market, the Commission stated its broad objectives:

> If competition is to be recreated in this industry, it is essential that the inertia engendered by [Balfour's and BPA's] monopolization be broken. [Balfour's and BPA's] customers must be stimulated to re-examine their purchasing policies, and [Balfour's and BPA's] competitors, actual and potential, must be afforded some opportunity to gain access to the reopened market. The provisions of the * * * order are appropriately designed to breathe new vitality into this field.

The order, in pertinent part, provides:

Part I—Petitioners shall terminate all existing contracts with any fraternity relating to the sale or distribution of fraternity products.

Part II—(1) Petitioners shall not engage in any plan or device, by contract or otherwise, which has the effect of foreclosing competition for the fraternity market;

(2) Shall not enter into or maintain sole official jeweler contracts or any contract which requires fraternities to purchase all of their requirements from petitioners;

(3) Shall not, for a period of 5 years, enter into or maintain any contract with any fraternity of more than one year's duration;

(4) Shall not represent that they are the sole official jewelers of any fraternity;

(5) Shall not participate in any manner, financially or otherwise, in the affairs of any organization composed of more than one fraternity.

Part III—(1) Petitioners shall not represent that any competitor is making unauthorized sales of fraternity products;

(2) Shall not induce fraternities not to deal with competitors;

(3) Shall not acquire for a period of 10 years any company having more than 10% of its total sales in fraternity products without the consent of the Commission;

(4) Shall not enter into exclusive supply contracts with suppliers of fraternity products.

Part IV—Balfour shall divest itself of BPA insofar as BPA is engaged in the fraternity market and shall not deal with those fraternities for 5 years which were under contract to BPA as of June 16, 1961 (date of issuance of the complaint).

Part V—(1) Petitioners shall cease from "[F]alsely imputing to any competitor dishonorable conduct, inability to perform contracts, questionable credit standing, or falsely disparaging any competitor's products, business methods, selling prices, values, credit terms, policies or services;"

(2) Shall cease from enticing employees away from competitors for the purpose of injuring competitors;

(3) Shall cease from entering into any exclusive contract with suppliers of "findings." [7]

The portion of the order relating to the Section 5 violation in the high school class ring market states:

Part VI—Petitioners shall cease from entering into or maintaining any contract with any high school for class rings which:

(1) Fails to set forth all of the terms essential to enable performance of such contract;

(2) Continues for more than one year. Under certain conditions, however, contracts for a 3-year duration are permitted;

* * * * * * *

(4) Is signed "more than sixty days prior to the date upon which the terms of such contract * * * is to begin;"

(5) Allows Balfour to alternate or rotate with any competitor as the exclusive supplier.

[25] It is well settled that the choice of the remedial order is committed to the discretion of the Commission. F.T.C. v. Mandel Bros., Inc., 359 U.S. 385, 392–393, 79 S.Ct. 818, 3 L.Ed.2d 893 (1959); Niresk Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C., 278 F.2d 337, 343 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied 364 U.S. 883, 81 S.Ct. 173, 5 L.Ed.2d 104 (1960). Except where the remedy selected bears no reasonable relation to the unfair practices found to violate Section 5, the courts will not reverse or modify the Commission's choice. F.T.C. v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 428–429, 77 S.Ct. 502, 1 L.Ed.2d 438 (1957); National Baker Services, Inc. v. F.T.C., 329 F.2d 365, 367 (7th Cir. 1964).

We find that the order in this case is reasonably related to the unfair practices and adequately designed to restore competition in both the national college fraternity goods and high school class ring markets.

[26, 27] The Commission has the power to order divestiture to restore competition. F.T.C. v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597, 606 n. 4, 86 S.Ct. 1738, 16 L.Ed.2d 802 (1966); see Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 312–313 nn. 17 and 18, 83 S.Ct. 476, 9 L.Ed.2d 325 (1963). Further, an order of divestiture is no less proper even though it is not used where "other effective methods, less harsh, are available." Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 603, 71 S.Ct. 971, 977, 95 L.Ed. 1199 (1951). To this point, the Commission stated:

---

[7] "Findings" are jewelry which, when delivered to Balfour, do not bear insignia. The insignia is later added by Balfour prior to its distribution to the fraternities.

> [I]t would be a manifestly vain act simply to prohibit [petitioners] from making future acquisitions of their competitors. * * * In order to restore competition it is essential that BPA be divested from Balfour so that it can resume its independence and offer fraternities the competition which—prior to May, 1959—they believed they were getting.

We agree. We also believe that this order of divestiture is not affected by the fact that some evidence barred by the consent order concerning Balfour's acquisition of BPA might have seeped into the record. The divestiture order is based on the other and proper findings in the record which show that Balfour secretly operated BPA as its subsidiary but held it out as a competitor.

[28] It was also proper for the Commission to forbid Balfour from selling fraternity products to any fraternity that an official, co-official or sole official contract with BPA as of June 16, 1961. We cannot accept Balfour's argument that this remedial provision is anti-competitive. Competition cannot be revived instantly in a market which has been dominated by one firm for many years. The five years prohibition against contracts with BPA's customers is reasonable in order to allow BPA to reacquire competitive vigor. Without such a prohibition, the ordered divestiture of BPA might well be a futile gesture. Similarly, the ordered termination of official jeweler contracts with the fraternities and a prohibition against entering into new exclusive dealing contracts are designed to eliminate petitioners' monopoly power. See United States v. International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., 171 F.Supp. 841, 842 (S.D. N.Y. 1957), affirmed, 358 U.S. 242, 247 79 S.Ct. 245, 3 L.Ed.2d 270 (1959).

[29] Petitioners also attack that part of the order which prohibits them from representing that "any competitor has manufactured, distributed or sold any or all types of fraternity products without permission or authorization of any fraternity or fraternities." Petitioners argue that this prohibits them from telling the truth and is therefore a violation of their First Amendment rights. We agree with this contention. The Commission may, of course, prohibit false statements or true statements which in total effect are misleading. Murray Space Shoe Corp. v. F.T.C., 304 F.2d 270, 272 (2d Cir. 1962); Ward Laboratories v. F.T.C., 276 F.2d 952, 954, cert. denied 364 U.S. 827, 81 S.Ct. 65, 5 L.Ed.2d 55 (1960). But, the Commission may not prohibit the telling of a true statement even if that representation perpetuates the dominance of a monopolist. See Crosby v. Bradstreet Co., 312 F.2d 483 (2d Cir. 1963), cert. denied 373 U.S. 911, 83 S.Ct. 1300, 10 L.Ed.2d 412 (1963); Scientific Mfg. Co. v. F.T.C., 124 F.2d 640 (3d Cir. 1941). The order must be modified to prohibit only false statements.

We also find that the Commission's order relating to the exclusive supply contracts and the petitioners' enticing away of employees from competitors to be proper and reasonable.

[30,32] With respect to the order relating to the high school class ring market, petitioners contend that the Commission abused its discretion in ordering Balfour to cease and desist from use of term purchase agreements, when that device has been used by all major competitors for the past thirty years. The law is clear, however, that the Commission has the power to enter an order against one firm that is practicing an industry-wide illegal trade practice. F.T.C. v. Universal Rundel Corp., 387 U.S. 244, 87 S.Ct. 1622, 18 L.Ed.2d 749 (1967); Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 69 S.Ct. 1051, 93 L.Ed. 1371 (1949); Moog Industries Inc. v. F.T.C., 355 U.S. 411, 78 S.Ct. 377, 2 L.Ed.2d 370 (1958). Indeed, there have been no instances where an order has been set aside simply because it was directed against a single violator in the face of industry-wide violations. Rabiner & Jontow, Inc. v. F.T.C., 386 F.2d 667, 669 (2d Cir. 1967). However, the Commission's orders are to serve a remedial and not a punitive function. F.T.C. v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 72 S.Ct. 800, 96 L.Ed. 1081 (1952); Niresk Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C., 278 F.2d 337 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 883, 81 S.Ct. 173, 5 L.Ed.2d 104 (1960), and the Commission may not issue orders which would arbitrarily destroy one of many violators in the market. F.T.C. v. Universal Rundel Corp., 387 U.S. 244, 251, 87 S.Ct. 1622, 18 L.Ed.2d 749 (1967). It is the responsibility of the Commission to perform a "reasonable evaluation" of the competitive situation to ascertain whether a particular order would be contrary to the purpose of the laws sought to be enforced. Id. at 251–252, 87 S.Ct. 1622.

[33] The Commission performed this evaluation and entered an order which is neither punitive nor likely to destroy petitioner Balfour. The Commission must be accorded latitude in forming its orders for "the Commission alone is empowered to develop that enforcement policy best calculated to achieve the ends contemplated by Congress and to allocate its available funds and personnel in such a way as to execute its policy efficiently and economically." Moog Industries, Inc., v. F.T.C., 355 U.S. 411, 413, 78 S.Ct. 377, 379, 2 L.Ed.2d 370 (1958).

PROCEDURE BEFORE THE HEARING EXAMINER

In 1961, counsel for the Commission adduced the testimony of officials from twenty-one competitors of the petitioners. In general, these officials testified about the nature of their businesses, their competition, and the effect of the petitioners' practices on their businesses. At the end of cross-examination, counsel for petitioners moved for discoverery of all correspondence and signed statements of five of the witnesses and moved that certain interview reports be submitted to the hearing examiner for a determination of whether they contained "substantially verbatim recitals" of the witnesses' oral statements. Upon representations of Commission counsel that there were no signed statements other than correspondence and that the interview reports did not contain a "substantially verbatim recital" of the witnesses' statements, the hearing examiner denied the discovery motion and the alternative motion to strike the witnesses' testimony.

In 1965, during its rebuttal case, petitioners once again moved to strike the testimony of the five witnesses on the ground that Commission counsel had failed to produce statements, letters and other writings relating to their testimony. Thereupon, counsel for the Commission produced to the hearing examiner for his inspection materials relating to the testimony of four of these witnesses. The hearing examiner, over objection, turned all of the records over to petitioners. After petitioners' counsel briefly examined these documents in the hearing room, they were returned to the Commission counsel for the purpose of having copies made. Before returning the copies to the petitioners, Commission counsel took an interlocutory appeal to the full Commission which ruled that the hearing examiner erred in turning over the documents. The Commission held that discovery is to be available in F.T.C. proceedings when allowable under the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500(e).

Section (e) limits discovery to statements within the following categories:

(1) "a written statement made by said witness and signed or otherwise adopted or approved by him;" (2) "a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or transcription thereof, which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement made by said witness to an agent of the Government and recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement."

On remand to the hearing examiner, he was given the documents to determine whether they fell within these categories. Portions of the materials were furnished to the petitioners.

[34] Petitioners here contend that the Jencks case (Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103 (1957)) is applicable and that the denial of access to the witnesses' statements deprived them of due process and constituted reversible error. Since we are convinced that any error of the Commission or hearing examiner in this regard is harmless on this record, we need not reach this issue.[8]

The proceedings before the hearing examiner lasted over five years, and resulted in about 6,000 pages of testimony, hundreds of exhibits and four hundred and twenty-nine detailed findings of fact. Not one of the findings nor any part of the Commission's opinion rests solely on the testimony of the five witnesses in question. These witnesses were five of twenty-one competitors that testified. Besides this, petitioners were given the expurgated testimony of four of the witnesses which conformed to the Jencks Act. After examining these statements, counsel for the petitioners did not recall the witnesses, but entered into a stipulation with respect to the testimony of one witness.

Therefore, we hold that the error, if any, did not prejudice the decision of the Commission and is not reversible.

Accordingly, for the reasons stated, we enforce the order of the Commission and affirm its decision with the following exceptions: (1) We reverse that part of the Commission's order enjoining the petitioners from representing that "any competitor [in the national college fraternity insignia goods market] has manufactured, distributed or sold any or all types of fraternity products without permission or authorization of any fraternity or fraternities." The order is limited to prohibiting only false statements. (2) We reverse the Commission's findings that petitioners misrepresented the extent of the fraternities' trademark protection. (3) We reverse the Commission's findings as to Balfour's secret acquisition and operation of BPA and Edwards Haldeman to the extent that it relied on pre-1951 evidence which was barred by the 1964 consent order. Nonetheless, we enforce the divestiture order since it is based on evidence of post-1951 conduct.

Enforced in part, reversed in part.

---

[8] We note that in the context of both criminal and civil proceedings there has been a marked and strong movement of the courts towards full and free discovery of all matters relevant to the case. As the Supreme Court said in Dennis v. United States, 384 U.S. 855, 870, 86 S.Ct. 1840, 1849, 16 L.Ed.2d 973 (1966):

"These developments are entirely consonant with the growing realization that disclosure, rather than suppression, of relevant materials ordinarily promotes the proper administration of criminal justice."

It is clear that the Jencks Act does not bind the Commission. That statute, enacted to restrict the impact of the Jencks case, is by its very terms peculiarly concerned with and applicable to criminal judicial proceedings. On the other hand, the rules in the Jencks case, based not upon due process but upon the Court's power to prescribe procedures for the administration of criminal justice, have not yet been applied to the F.T.C. although they have been applied to several other agencies. See Harvey Aluminum, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 335 F.2d 749 (9th Cir. 1964), and cases cited therein; 1 Davis on Administrative Law Treatise, § 8.15 (1958) (Supp.).

LEVER BROTHERS CO., ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civil A. No. 12–82—F.T.C. File No. 215–32

(United States District Court, D. Maine, S.D. April 19, 1971)

1. WHERE COMMISSION MERELY PROPOSED RULE FOR LABELING DETERGENT PACKAGES MANUFACTURER'S CLAIM FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF IS NOT RIPE FOR ADJUDICATION

Where Federal Trade Commission had merely proposed rule governing labeling of detergent packages which might never be adopted or enforced, detergent manufacturers' claim for injunctive relief against the pending rule-making proceeding was not yet ripe for adjudication.

2. COURT MUST DETERMINE WHETHER ISSUES ARE RIPE FOR DECISION AND TO EVALUATE HARDSHIP TO PARTIES IF CONSIDERATION DENIED

In determining whether challenge to administrative regulation is ripe for judicial resolution, the court must determine whether the issues are fit for judicial decision and must evaluate the hardship to the parties of denying court consideration at the time.

3 RULE SHOULD BE CHALLENGED WHEN AGENCY SEEKS TO ENFORCE IT AGAINST A PLAINTIFF

Proper time to challenge validity of administrative regulation or to seek injunction against its enforcement is when the rule is adopted or at such a time as the administrative agency takes steps to enforce the rule as against a plaintiff.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 325 F.Supp. 371)

On motions to dismiss or for temporary injunction by detergent manufacturers Court held that the rule on labeling was merely proposed and that injunctive relief was not yet ripe for adjudication. Motion to dismiss granted.

Fred C. Scribner, Jr., Ralph I. Lancaster, Jr., Peter S. Plumb, Portland, Me., William Rogers, Stuart J. Friedman, Washington, D.C., Donald J. Lunghino, New York City, for Lever Brothers Co.

Herbert H. Sawyer, Sumner Bernstein, Portland, Me., Raymond L. Falls, Jr., Cahill, Gordon, Sonnett, Reindel & Ohl, LeRoy H. Hurlbert, New York City, for Colgate-Palmolive Co. (intervenor).

Roger A. Putnam, Portland, Me., Daniel M. Gribbon, Charles Lister, John S. Koch, Covington & Burling, Washington, D.C., Richard W. Barrett, Proctor & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, for Proctor & Gamble Co. (intervenor).

John G. Marshall, John B. Beliveau, Lewiston, Me., David Machanic, Washington, D.C., for Soap and Detergent Assn. (intervenor).

---

* Reported in 325 F.Supp. 371 [1971].

Peter Mills, U.S. Atty., John B. Wlodkowski, Asst. U.S. Atty., Portland, Me., Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Gerald Harwood, Atty., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for the F.T.C. and others.

MEMORANDUM OF OPINION AND ORDER OF THE COURT

GIGNOUX, District Judge:

On January 25, 1971, the Federal Trade Commission issued a "Notice of Public Hearing and Opportunity to Submit Data, Views or Arguments Regarding a Proposed Trade Regulation Rule" (36 Fed. Reg. 1012 (1971)). The Notice states that the Commission has undertaken a trade regulation rule proceeding to consider whether it should promulgate a rule by the terms of which it would become an unfair method of competition and an unfair or deceptive act or practice within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, to sell or distribute any synthetic detergent in commerce without (1) listing on the container all the detergent's ingredients by name, percentage and weight per use; and (2) incorporating in all labeling, and in all advertising of every detergent containing phosphorous, a "warning" that the product contains phosphorous and that phosphorous contributes to water pollution. The Notice (and a subsequent press release) further states that interested persons may participate in the proceeding by submitting written comments on the proposed rule by April 19, 1971 and by presenting oral statements on the proposed rule at hearings to be held on April 26 and 27, 1971.

The present action was filed in this Court on March 31, 1971. Plaintiff and intervenors (hereinafter collectively referred to as plaintiffs) are all detergent manufacturers and an association of detergent manufacturers. They bring this action against the Federal Trade Commission and its individual members seeking declaratory and injunctive relief enjoining the Commission from conducting further proceedings with respect to the proposed trade regulation rule, on the grounds that the Commission's proceedings, with respect to the proposed rule (1) violate the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1451 et seq., and Section 701 of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C. § 371; (2) violate Section 102 of the Environmental Policy Act of 1969, 42 U.S.C. § 4332; and (3) exceed the Commission's authority under the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq.

Presently before the Court are: (1) plaintiffs' motions for a temporary injunction; (2) defendants' motion to dismiss or, in the alternative, for summary judgment; and (3) plaintiff Proctor and Gamble Company's cross-motion for summary judgment. The parties have filed extensive supporting papers, affidavits, and briefs and have presented oral argument at a hearing held this date, all of which have been considered by the Court.

Without reaching the merits of the case, the Court is persuaded that defendants' motion to dismiss or for summary judgment (which, since matters outside the pleadings are to be considered, will be treated as a motion for summary judgment, Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)) must be granted. It follows that the motions for preliminary injunction and the cross-motion for summary judgment must be denied.

[1] Plaintiffs seek in this action to enjoin the Federal Trade Commission from continuing its pending rule-making proceeding on the ground that the Commission has no statutory authority to promulgate its proposed rule by means of the procedures which the Commission allegedly intends to follow. This Court, however, agrees with the views expressed by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, when presented with the substantially identical question in Bristol-Myers Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 138 U.S.App. D.C. 22, 424 F.2d 935, cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824, 91 S.Ct. 46, 27 L.Ed.2d 52 (1970), that plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief is not yet ripe for adjudication. In this case, as in Bristol-Myers, the Commission has merely proposed a rule, which may never be adopted or enforced. We do not know today what type of rule, if any, will eventually be promulgated by the Commission. Nor can we ascertain at this stage the procedures which the Commission may follow before finally adopting any such rule. Here, as in Bristol-Myers, the proper time to challenge the Commission's rule-making power or procedures will be when, and if, a rule is adopted.

[2] Plaintiffs argue, however, that their challenge to the pending rule-making proceeding is "ripe" for judicial review under the standards elaborated by the Supreme Court in Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148–156, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967), and applied by the Court in that case and in the companion cases of Toilet Goods Assn. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 158, 87 S.Ct. 1520, 18 L.Ed.2d (1967) and Gardner v. Toilet Goods Assn., 387 U.S. 167, 87 S.Ct. 1526, 18 L.Ed.2d 704 (1967). In Abbott Laboratories, the Supreme Court announced that in determining whether a challenge to an administrative regulation is ripe for judicial resolution, a two-fold inquiry must be made: first to determine whether the issues are fit for judicial decision, and second to evaluate the hardship to the parties of denying court consideration at the time. Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra, 387 U.S. at 149, 87 S.Ct. 1507; Toilet Goods Assn. v. Gardner, supra, 387 U.S. at 162, 87 S.Ct. 1520. Neither standard is met in this case.

As to the first factor, the Court in Abbott Laboratories based its determination that the issue there presented was appropriate for judicial resolution on two grounds: first that the issue presented was a purely legal one, and second that the challenged regulations, which has been formally promulgated and were presently in effect, constituted "final agency action" within the meaning of § 10 of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 704. Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra, 387 U.S. at 149–152, 87 S.Ct. 1507. See also Gardner v. Toilet Goods Assn., supra, 387 U.S. at 170–171, 87 S.Ct. 1526. It may be conceded, arguendo, that the issues tendered in the instant case present purely legal questions. But it can hardly be contended that the pending rule-making proceeding constitutes "final agency action" within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act. The rule-making process is far from complete. The Commission has served notice only that it may promulgate a rule of the type proposed. Certainly, it has as yet made no "considered and formalized determination." Toilet Goods Assn. v. Gardner, supra, 387 U.S. at 162, 87 S.Ct. 1520. At this juncture, there is no assurance as to whether or when a rule will be adopted, the form it will take, or the basis the Commission will give therefor. In this respect the present case follows a fortiori from Toilet Goods Assn. v. Gardner, supra, where the Court denied pre-enforcement judicial review of a regulation which, although already in effect, served notice only that the agency might impose sanctions upon those failing to comply. Id. at 163, 87 S.Ct. 1520. In Abbott Laboratories the Supreme Court summarized the reasons for the ripeness doctrine in the following words, which are clearly applicable to this situation:

> [I]t is fair to say that its basic rationale is to prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties. Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra, at 148–149, 87 S.Ct. at 1515.

[3] The second of the factors delineated by the Supreme Court in Abbott Laboratories requires evaluation of the present effect of challenged administrative action upon those seeking judicial relief. In Abbott Laboratories and in Gardner v. Toilet Goods Assn., supra, the Court found the requisite hardship to the complaining parties where the agency had promulgated a regulation which "requires an immediate and significant change in the plaintiffs' conduct of their affairs with serious penalties attached to noncompliance." Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra at 153, 87 S.Ct. at 1518. The Court noted that the adoption of the regulations put the plaintiffs in the dilemma of choosing between compliance at substantial expense and disruption of their operations, and noncompliance at the risk of serious criminal and civil penalties. Accordingly, the Court found "the impact of the regulations upon the [plaintiffs] is sufficiently direct and immediate as to render the issue appropriate for judicial review at this stage." Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra at 152–154, 87 S.Ct. at 1517; Gardner v. Toilet Goods Assn., supra, 387 U.S. 171–174, 87 S.Ct. 1526. The agency action here challenged, however, is in no way analogous to the regulations involved in Abbott Laboratories and Gardner v. Toilet Goods Assn. The Commission's pending rule-making proceeding requires no "immediate and significant change in the plaintiffs' conduct of their affairs with serious penalties attached to noncompliance."

As in Toilet Goods Assn. v. Gardner, supra, where the Court denied pre-enforcement judicial review of a regulation which was not "self-executing," this is not a situation "where the impact of the administrative action could be said to be felt immediately by those subject to it in conducting their day-to-day affairs." Id. 387 U.S. at 164, 87 S.Ct. at 1524. And as in that case, "no irremedial adverse consequences flow from requiring a later challenge" to whatever the Commission's final action may be. Id. If and when a rule is adopted, the rule can be challenged and a judicial determination of its validity obtained, either immediately (Compare Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, supra, and Gardner v. Toilet Goods Assn., supra, with Toilet Goods Assn. v. Gardner, supra) or at such time as the Commission takes steps to enforce the rule as against a plaintiff. Federal Trade Commission Act §5(c), 15 U.S.C. §45(c); Administrative Procedure Act §§10(c), 10(e)(B)(3), 5 U.S.C. §§704, 706(2) (C). At this juncture, such a challenge is premature.

The Court will add only one further comment. Plaintiffs cite several cases to support their position that an injunction is appropriate at this stage of the administrative process. See, e.g., Jewel Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 432 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970); Elmo Division of Drive-X Co. v. Dixon 121 U.S.App.D.C. 113, 348 F.2d 342 (1962); Amos Treat Co. v. Security ond Exchange Commission, 113 U.S.App.D.C. 100, 306 F.2d 260 (1962); Deering Milliken, Inc. v. Johnston, 295 F.2d 856 (4th Cir. 1961); Yanish v. Wixon, 81 F.Supp. 499 (N.D.Cal.1948). None of these cases is apposite. First, except for Jewel Companies, all arose before the Supreme Court in Abbott Laboratories outlined the standards to be applied in determining whether a controversy is ripe for judicial review. Second, in each case adjudicatory proceedings had been commenced against the plaintiff. Finally, a reading of these cases discloses that, with the possible exception of Amos Treat Co., their premise is that, unlike the present situation, the plaintiffs there involved would not have had opportunities to obtain effective judicial review at the conclusion of the administrative proceedings.

Since plaintiffs' claims are not yet "ripe" for judicial resolution, defendants' motion to dismiss is granted, and plaintiffs' motions for preliminary injunction and cross-motion for summary judgment are denied.

It is so ordered.

LEVER BROTHERS COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Misc. 466—F.T.C. File 215-32

(United States Court of Appeals, First Circuit, April 20, 1971)

The plaintiffs here having been denied an injunction staying the Commission hearings by the district court below apply to this court on the grounds that plaintiffs will suffer irreparable damage if the injunction is not granted. Plaintiffs assert several hardships they will suffer, such as loss of the right to cross examine, if Commission's hearings are held without determination of several items in advance. The court, however, held that every issue the plaintiffs seek to raise at this stage are all premature and to allow them to be tried piecemeal would delay the main case unduly. Plaintiffs' motion for an injunction pending appeal from the district court's determination that the plaintiff's contentions are not yet ripe for adjudication is denied.

ON MOTION FOR INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

COFFIN, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs, under exceptional time pressure, have applied to me as a single judge under Rule 8(a), F.R.A.P., for an injunction pending appeal from the district court's granting of defendant's motion for summary judgment. The district court determined that plaintiff's application for an injunction staying Commission hearings, which plaintiffs allege are illegal, was not yet ripe for adjudication. In considering plaintiffs' motion for an injunction pending appeal, this court must be convinced that plaintiffs have a probability of prevailing on the merits of their appeal and that plaintiffs will suffer irreparable harm if the injunction is not granted. Automatic Radio Mfg. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 390 F.2d 113, 115 (1st Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 391 U.S. 914 (1968).

In this case the issue on the merits is whether the district court abused its discretion in holding that plaintiffs' claims were not yet "ripe" for judicial resolution. That such a determination is discretionary and not lightly to be overruled is clear. Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148 (1967). In Abbott Laboratories the Court pointed to two reasons why the issue was fit for adjudication. First, the issue was a purely legal one. 387 U.S. at 149. There is no dispute that the issues here are also purely legal. Second, the regulations in issue were "final agency action" within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act. 387 U.S. at 149–150. There is no dispute that no such final regulations are at issue here; the question is the legality of the procedure not the legality of a rule which might result from the procedure. The district court, with some support from another circuit, Bristol-Myers Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 424 F.2d 935, 940 (D.C. Cir. 1970), cert. denied*, 400 U.S. 824 (1971), found that the procedure could not be challenged until a final agency rule was adopted. Plaintiffs argue that no such final rule is required in order for them to challenge agency action at a more preliminary stage so long as a real question of the legality of the agency proceedings is presented. See, e.g., Jewel Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 432 F.2d 1115 (7th Cir. 1970); Elmo Division of Drive-X Co. v. Dixon, 348 F.2d 342 (D.C. Cir. 1962); Amos Treat Co. v. Security and Exchange Commission, 306 F.2d 260 (D.C. Cir. 1962); Deering Milliken, Inc. v. Johnston, 295 F.2d 856 (4th Cir. 1961); Yanish v. Wixon, 81 F. Supp. 499 (N.D. Col. 1948). Although all of these cases are lower court opinions and all but one were written before Abbott Laboratories, they are still somewhat troublesome.

---

*Not otherwise reported.

Whether or not "final agency action" may be required as a predicate to judicial intervention even where the initiation of agency proceedings is attacked is, I conclude, not necessary for me to decide. For Abbott also required, in addition to a determination of fitness of the issue for judicial decision, a determination that hardship to the parties stemming from withholding court consideration was such as to justify intervention. As to this issue plaintiffs make two contentions: that no hardship need be shown, other than that of suffering proceedings which are allegedly infected with illegality; and, that, in any event they have alleged sufficient hardship aliunde.

Plaintiffs stated in oral argument, in support of the first contention, that, in substance, any party with standing could properly seek to enjoin illegal agency action. Abbott Laboratories, however, seems to accept as a necessary spring for judicial intervention "an immediate and significant change in the plaintiffs' conduct of their affairs with serious penalties attached to noncompliance. * * *" 387 U.S. at 153. Moreover, none of the cases relied on by plaintiffs, supra, addresses the requirement of a showing of hardship. In the light of such authorities as well as of general principles of judicial restraint with regard to untimely intervention in administrative proceedings, I cannot say that plaintiffs are likely to prevail in their assertion that standing plus an assertion of illegal agency action are enough to justify injunctive relief, without a showing of hardship threatened by judicial abstinence.

Plaintiffs, however, vigorously assert several hardships they will suffer if the Commission hearings are held without a determination of their legality in advance. First, they will lose the procedural safeguards, such as the right to cross-examine, which they say are not a part of the procedure the Commission has chosen but are a part of the procedure the Commission should have chosen. Thus, they say, they will be unable to refute harmful evidence and the Commissioners will be prejudiced on their case even if the Commission is subsequently required to conduct the hearing according to the proper procedure. This alleged hardship presupposes that the evidence that will be introduced at the hearing will be overwhelmingly opposed to plaintiffs' position. But plaintiffs too will introduce evidence on the proposed rule which will also not be filtered through cross-examination. I cannot automatically assume—for the purpose of predicting plaintiffs' likelihood of prevailing on appeal—that the hearing will influence the Commission against plaintiffs; it may influence them in plaintiffs' favor. Nor can I say that plaintiffs are likely to persuade the court of appeals that the Commission would be unable subsequently to grant plaintiffs a fair hearing if they were compelled to grant a second hearing under a different procedure. Adjudicatory bodies, like courts, must often retry an issue a second time, and I cannot now assume that a second hearing would prove less fair.

Plaintiffs' second alleged hardship is that they will not receive a statement from the Commission the environmental impact of the proposed ruling before the hearings. The Commission has stated that it will file such a statement if it decides to adopt the proposed rule, but plaintiffs assert that will be too late. I would thing that plaintiffs are not harmed so long as the statement is filed in time to allow the proposed environmental impact to be analyzed before the rule goes into effect. Plaintiffs, it is true, argue that the pressures of publicity place them in the dilemma of adhering to their present products despite increasing resistance or of using different, untested, and possibly deleterious ingredients. But, since they would hazard the latter course only because of fear of falling sales, this argument is really an aspect of the final hardship alleged.

This is the alleged loss of sales which will result from the hearings, True, so long as the ecological implications of products are not satisfactorily laid to rest, there will be unease and ferment. But plaintiffs are assuming not only that the hearings will be overwhelmingly negative toward their products but also that they will have a convincing and disastrously additive effect on the public. At this juncture, I cannot say that either assumption is sufficiently likely. Plaintiffs may make their case that their products are less harmful than available substitutes. Even if plaintiffs do not convince the public, there is no sufficient assurance that the public will pay such attention that sales will be significantly affected. I therefore conclude that this alleged hardship is not such that plaintiffs have a likelihood of prevailing on the merits before the entire court.

Plaintiffs' showing of hardship fails to convince me that they are likely to prevail on the merits of the appeal. The procedural issue which plaintiffs seek to raise at this premature stage in the process can be raised after the Commission takes final action along with any issues on the merits which may present themselves. Unless plaintiffs make a substantial showing of hardship, the court of appeals is unlikely to risk the piecemeal litigation which may result if plaintiffs are permitted to raise procedural issues now and substantive issues at a later date. Such a policy is essential to prevent litigants from further delaying already attenuated agency procedures.

Plaintiffs' showing of the irreparable harm which will result if this injunction is denied is the same as their showing of hardship. Since I have concluded that the showing of hardship is likely to prove insufficient to convince the court of appeals that this case is ripe for adjudication, it follows that plaintiffs have also made an insufficient showing of irreparable harm.

The motion is denied.

UNITED STATES STEEL CORP. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 19, 423—F.T.C. Docket 8655

(United States Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, May 26, 1971)

The remand of an F.T.C. divestiture order in a merger proceeding to enable the parties to determine in applying the failing company doctrine, whether the prospects of the acquired firm emerging from the reorganization as a competitive unit were "dim or non-existent" was not ambiguous when construed in the light of Citizen Publishing Co. v. U.S., 394 U.S. 131 (1969). Moreover, any ambiguity which might exist as to the scope of admissibility of evidence with regard to the phrase "prospects of reorganization" may be gleaned from the United States Supreme Court's decision in F.T.C. v. Proctor and Gamble, 386 U.S. 568 (1967), which provides a framework for determining a "prediction of merger's impact on competition." Accordingly, a motion for clarification of the court's mandate by the acquiring corporation was denied. Motion for clarification dismissed.

---

*Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. (1971 Trade Cases) ¶ 73,598 at p. 90,466. Main case at 426 F. 2d 592, 8 S. & D. 1154.

Before: Phillips, Chief Judge, Celebrezze, Circuit Judge, and O'Sullivan, Senior Circuit Judge.

This matter comes before this Court on a motion by the United States Steel Corporation for clarification of the mandate issued by the Court on May 27, 1970. The motion is opposed by the Federal Trade Commission on the grounds that the Commission believes the Court's mandate to be unambiguous and not in need of any clarification. Further, the Commission contends that United States Steel has failed to exhaust its administrative remedies.

This Court has the power to order clarification of an ambiguous mandate. Regal Knitwear Co. v. N.L.R.B., 324 U.S. 9, 15, (1945). Our initial remand was compelled by the United States Supreme Court's decision in Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131 (1969). In Citizen Publishing Co., the United States challenged a stock acquisition which occurred in 1965, twenty-five years after the acquired and acquiring companies had entered into a joint operating agreement with certain unlawful provisions. The District Court determined that at the time the two newspapers first entered into their operating agreement, "Citizen Publishing was not then on the verge of going out of business * * * (emphasis added)," 394 U.S. at 137. The Supreme Court affirmed this finding of the District Court. In affirming, the Supreme Court observed:

> Moreover, we know from the broad experience of the business community since 1930, the year when the International Shoe case was decided, that companies reorganized through receivership, or through Chapter X or Chapter XI of the Bankruptcy Act often emerged as strong competitive companies. The prospects of reogranization of Citizen in 1940 would have had to be dim or nonexistent to make the failing company doctrine applicable to this case. (Emphasis added) 394 U.S. at 138.

We find that our mandate is not ambiguous when construed—as we have instructed the parties to do—in the light of Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131 (1969). Moreover, any ambiguity which might exist as to the scope of admissibility of evidence with regard to the phrase "prospects of reorganization" may be gleaned from the United States Supreme Court's decision in Federal Trade Commission v. Proctor and Gamble, 386 U.S. 568 (1967) which provides a framework for determining a "prediction of [a] merger's [future] impact on competition." 386 U.S. at 577.

Having found that our prior mandate is not ambiguous, and it further being clear from the record that no final or reviewable agency order is before this Court, it is ORDERED that the instant motion for clarification of our mandate be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

In so holding we do so without prejudice to the United States Steel Corporation's right to duly challenge—pursuant to Rule 15, Rules of Appellate Procedure—the propriety of any Federal Trade Commission ruling or procedure.

UNITED STATES v. VAN RAALTE COMPANY, ET AL.

No. 69 Civ. 306—F.T.C. Docket 6690

(United States District Court, S.D., New York, June 29, 1971)

1. Complaint Need Not State Precise Theory on Which Claim for Relief Is Based

Precise theory on which claim for relief is based need not appear in the complaint; complaint is sufficient if any claim for relief is stated.

2. Complaint Should Not Be Dismissed Unless It Appears Plaintiff Can Prove No Set of Facts Supporting His Claim

A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

3. Denuding Assets of Acquired Corporation Which Is Defendant in F.T.C. Suits Does Not Give Acquirer Immunity From Liability as a Transferee

Acquirer's act of denuding assets of acquired corporation which is a defendant in a suit by the United States for violation of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order does not give the acquirer immunity from liability, at least as a transferee.

4. Enforcement of F.T.C. Order Against Transferee May Be Applied in Fuller Measure on Public Interest Than if Only Private Interests Involved

Enforcement of Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order against transferee of a business subject to the order may be applied in fuller measure in furtherance of public interest than if only private interests were involved.

5. Both Acquiring and Acquired Corporations Are Subject to F.T.C. Order Against Importing and Selling Highly Flammable Articles of Wearing Apparel

Complaint was sufficient to state claim upon which relief could be granted in action against acquiring corporation and one of its officers to recover civil penalties for alleged violations by both acquiring and acquired corporations to Federal Trade Commission order which directed acquired corporation to cease and desist from importing and selling highly flammable articles of wearing apparel.

6. Acquiring Corporation in De Facto Merger Liable for Civil Penalties of Acquired Corporation for Violation of Flammable Fabrics Act

Defendant corporation which assumed all liabilities and obligations of corporation which it acquired in equivalent of de facto merger would be liable for civil penalties for any violations by acquired corporation of Federal Trade Commission order to cease and desist importing and selling highly flammable articles of wearing apparel.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 328 F. Supp. 827)

On motion to dismiss supplemental complaint that acquired corporation sold highly flammable articles of wearing apparel court held that complaint was sufficient to state claim in which relief would be granted. Motion denied.

Whitney North Seymour, Jr., U.S. Atty. for the Southern District of New York, for plaintiff; by Peter A. Herbert, Asst. U.S. Atty., New York City.

Sullivan & Cromwell, New York City, for defendants; by William E. Willis, William R. Norfolk, Mack M. Braly, New York City, of counsel.

GURFEIN, District Judge.

This is a motion by the defendant Van Raalte Co. Inc. to dismiss the supplemental complaint of the United States pursuant to Rule 12(b) (6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The supplemental complaint alleges that in 1956 the Federal Trade Commission charged Glensder Textile Company (Glensder) and its President Arthur Klein (Klein) with having violated the Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 1191, et seq., under the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 45(a), on the ground that Glensder, under the direction of Klein, imported into the United States and sold articles of wearing apparel which were so highly flammable as to be dangerous when worn. In April 1957 an order to cease and desist was entered by the FTC Hearing Examiner ordering Glensder, its officers and other respondents including Klein, individually and as officers of said corporation and respondents, representatives, agents and employees directly or through any corporate or other device to cease and desist from importing into the United States or selling the articles aforementioned (emphasis supplied). In July 1957 this order became final and is still in effect. In July 1966 Glensder, a Delaware corporation, became a wholly owned subsidiary of defendant Van Raalte. Klein served as President of Glensder before and after Van Raalte's acquisition of Glensder.

The Government alleges that on or about August 26, 1969 Glensder was dissolved as a corporation and "merged" with its parent company Van Raalte, thereupon becoming Van Raalte's "Glentex Division." Following the 1969 "merger" Klein was retained as Vice President in charge of the Glentex Division. It is alleged that prior to the "merger" with Van Raalte of August 26, 1969 Glensder made 29 illegal sales of the flammable scarves. It is further alleged that subsequent to the "merger" the Glentex Division of Van Raalte made 2 sales in violation of the terms of the order of the Federal Trade Commission previously referred to. The Government further alleges in conclusory fashion that as a result of the "merger" of Glensder with its then parent company defendant Van Raalte, Van Raalte became subject to the mandates of the order aforementioned and liable for any and all violations thereof including any and all violations previously committed by Glensder. For each sale constituting a violation of the order the United States prays that the defendants, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. Section 45(l), shall forfeit and pay to the United States $5,000 in civil penalties for a total of $175,000 and that the defendants be enjoined from further violating the order. The total amount claimed with respect to Glensder's violations prior to the commencement of the original action by the Government amounted to $145,000. The total claim in the supplemental complaint of $175,000 is based on six additional violations of the 1957 cease and desist order, four of which were allegedly committed by Glensder subsequent to the commencement of this action and two by Van Raalte's Glentex Division following the August 26, 1969 "merger."

The defendant Van Raalte claims that the supplemental complaint should be dismissed upon the ground that Van Raalte was not a party to the original proceedings in the Federal Trade Commission against Glensder; that Van Raalte had no notice of the 1957 order; and that the mere acquisition of all the assets of Glensder and its dissolution was insufficient to subject Van Raalte to liability.

[1] The motion is misconceived as a short summary of the chronology will indicate. The basis of Van Raalte's motion is, in substance, that it has no primary liability for violations of the 1957 cease and desist order entered against a company with which it had no connection until 10 years later. Van Raalte claims that the Government is not seeking recovery against Van Raalte as one secondarily liable for the penalties incurred by its subsidiary prior to the time Van Raalte acquired its assets, but, rather, as a party primarily liable under the 1957 order. Van Raalte in its reply memorandum concedes, moreover, that the motion to dismiss is addressed to the issue of primary liability "alone." The concession defeats the motion. For the movant is conceding that the Government does, indeed, claim that Van Raalte is liable for penalties incurred by Glensder in the same manner as any company may be liable for the debts and obligations of a company which it acquires in the circumstances at bar. But Van Raalte argues that the theory of the supplemental complaint is one of the primary liabilities of Van Raalte rather than of its secondary liability. The movant goes on to concede that "if it were (a complaint based on a theory of secondary liability), this motion very well might not be before this Court." It is clear, however, that under the modern Federal practice of notice pleading the precise theory upon which the claim for relief was based need not appear in the complaint. It is sufficient if any claim for relief is stated.

[2] I am required to follow the mandate of the Supreme Court in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45, 78 S.Ct 99, 102, 2 L.Ed. 2d 80 (1957) when it stated:

> In appraising the sufficiency of the complaint, we follow, of course, the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.[1]

[3–5] Between April 1, 1968 and April 9, 1969 Glensder made 33 sales of wearing apparel allegedly in violation of the order. When Van Raalte acquired the assets of this wholly-owned subsidiary and dissolved it as a corporation on August 26, 1969 the original complaint in this action had already been filed by the Government (on January 27, 1969). It can hardly be supposed that a denuding of the assets of a corporation which is a defendant in a suit by the Government for violation of a cease and desist order can give the acquirer immunity from liability, at least as a transferee. Walling v. James V. Reuter, Inc., 321 U.S. 671, 674–675, 64 S.Ct. 826, 88 L.Ed. 1001 (1944). Moreover, the order of April 1957 itself initially enjoined Glensder from violating the order "directly or through any corporate device." Before the 1969 transfer of assets Van Raalte had already (since 1966) owned 100% of the Glensder stock. It was in every sense in control of that corporation when the alleged violations occurred in 1968 and early 1969. And enforcement against the transferee of a business may be applied in fuller measure in furtherance of the public interest than if only private interests were involved. See Virginian Ry Co. v. System Federation No. 40, 300 U.S. 515, 552, 57 S.Ct. 592, 81 L.Ed. 789, and cases cited therein. Walling v. James V. Reuter, Inc., supra, 321 U.S. at pp. 674–675, 64 S.Ct. 826.

[6] In the plan of complete liquidation of Glensder in connection with the distribution of all its assets to its sole stockholder, Van Raalte, the latter assumed "all the liabilities and obligations of the company." The obligation of Glensder at that point was very much in being and actual notice had been given to it by virtue of the Government's original complaint of January 27, 1969. Even if Van Raalte had no notice of the actual consent decree of 1957 when it purchased the stock of Glensder that entity passed its existing obligations to Van Raalte at the time Van Raalte assumed its liabilities in 1969. Whether the acquisition of assets and the simultaneous liquidation of a corporation constitute a de facto merger is something on which the parties differ. The Court does not believe that in view of the analysis heretofore made the theory upon which the Government proceeds is the crucial point. For surely there was the equivalent of a de facto merger by the acquisition of all the assets in exchange for the stock held by the acquirer and its assumption of all liabilities and obligations. Hoche Productions v. Jayark Films Corp., 256 F. Supp. 291 (S.D.N.Y. 1966). See 15 Fletcher, Cyc. Corps. Section 7122 (1961 Ed.). If the Government can prove its case, Van Raalte standing in the shoes of Glensder would be liable for penalties. Counsel for Van Raalte seemed to have recognized this earlier when they moved to have Van Raalte substituted as the corporate party defendant in the place of Glensder and the Government consented.

---

[1] If the claim of secondary liability was introduced in a post-trial brief for the first time, the result might well be different. See Jaffee & Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 446 F.2d 387 (2d Cir. June 18, 1971).

The question remains as to whether Van Raalte is suable on its own for importations or sales made subsequent to its acquisition of Glensder's business. Van Raalte stoutly maintains that since it was not a party to the original cease and desist order it cannot be bound by it. It cites the recent case of United States v. Armour & Co. and Greyhound Corp., in 402 U.S. 673, 91 S. Ct. 1752, 29 L.Ed.2d 256. In that case the Supreme Court did hold that the failure of a decree to provide that it shall run not only against the named persons but also "against their successors and assigns" is fatal to the claim that the decree affected the acquiring corporation in that case. Although in the instant case the Federal Trade Commission order does not provide that it be binding upon successors and assigns, the situation may nevertheless be different because of the business activities of Glensder as a wholly-owned subsidiary and then as a division of Van Raalte with defendant Klein serving as the head of operations on behalf of Van Raalte throughout. The Armour case did not involve the combination of related corporations but was strictly an arms-length transaction between unrelated parties for the acquisition of stock—conduct which was not specifically prohibited by the 1920 consent decree. Unlike Armour, in the instant case the Government seeks to recover penalties for the exact conduct proscribed by the FTC order. Moreover, in Armour there was no suggestion that a major purpose of that acquisition of stock might be to defeat the efficacy of the prior consent decree. In the instant case, the defendants cannot be free of that possibility at this stage of the litigation. More exploration of the facts by discovery would be required to set the matter at issue for judicial determination.[2]

---

[2] While Regal Knitwear Co. v. N.L.R.B., 324 U.S. 9, 65 S.Ct. 478, 89 L.Ed. 661 (1945) may be taken as holding that an order against "persons who act independently and whose rights have not been adjudged according to law" would be too broad, the Court did "not undertake to decide whether or under what circumstances any kind of successor or assign will be liable for violation of a Labor Board order" (324 U.S. at 15, 65 S.Ct. at 481).

The question of whether the Government's prayer for an injunction against Van Raalte will lie had better be left to the conclusion of a trial in view of the corporate transactions mentioned. See P. F. Collier & Son Corp. v. F.T.C., 427 F.2d 261 (6th Cir. 1970). It is difficult to predict at this stage what matters may be developed that will have a bearing on the question of relief. The Government may, in the meantime, be well advised to amend its supplemental complaint to state more precisely its alternative claims for relief against Van Raalte.

The motion is in all respects denied.

UNITED STATES v. BEATRICE FOODS CO.[*]

No. 4-70 Civ. 459—F.T.C. Docket 6653

(United States District Court, District of Minnesota, Fourth Division July 21, 1971)

Memoranda and documents of F.T.C. lawyers containing many opinions, recommendations and conclusions as to how the Commission ought to act or ought not to agree to as to a food chain's offers of divestiture, or the type of consent order that ought to be presented to the Court of Appeals, were privileged. The Attorney client privilege obtains with government lawyers as well as to corporate house counsel. Many of the document's editorial comments that cannot be separated from what the food chain designated as "a mere recital of facts." The government, however, could not obtain an order prohibiting the food chain from destroying or concealing documents. Without a better showing than an inference, in some sort of evidentiary hearing, that the food chain destroyed or concealed documents, no order of prohibition would be proper.

Robert G. Renner, U.S. Atty., Neal J. Shapiro, Asst. U.S. Atty., H. Robert Field and James E. Corky, F.T.C., Washington, D.C. for plaintiff.

Edward J. Callahan, of Cant, Haverstock, Gray, Plant and Mooty, Minneapolis, Minn., and Edward L. Foote and Ronald Butler, of Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson, Chicago, Ill. for defendant.

NEVILLE, District Judge:

MEMORANDUM

At the hearing, counsel for the government handed to the court in camera the documents listed below which it admitted were within the description contained in the subpoena served on Charles Tobin, the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, but which it claims to be privileged.

---

[*] Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. (1971 Trade Case) ¶ 73,606 at p. 90,904. For Commission case see 68 F.T.C. 1003.

Date	From	To	Subject Matter
7/16/65	Peter K. Bleakley, Attorney	File	Consent Negotiations held on 7/14/65
8/10/65	F. P. Favarella, Peter K. Bleakley, Attorneys	Joseph E. Sheehy Director, Bureau of Restraint of Trade	Counter Proposal for Settlement
8/13/65	Acting Chief, Division of Mergers	Commission	Summary of Settlement Talks
2/9/66	Peter K. Bleakley, Attorney	Joseph E. Sheehy Director, Bureau of Restraint of Trade	Beatrice Foods Co., Docket No. 6653
2/3/67	Mark Haase	Mr. Boyd	Summary of Proposal for settlement
2/14/67	Director, Bureau of Restraint of Trade	Commission	Respondent's New Proposal for Settlement
2/24/67	General Counsel	Commissioner Elman	Proposed Settlement of Beatrice Foods Co. v. FTC 9th Cir. No. 20,727
3/21/67	Mark Haase, Attorney	Mr. Sheehy	Settlement Proposal
3/23/67	Director, Bureau of Restraint of Trade	Commission	Respondent's new proposal for settlement
3/23/67	Bureau of Economics	Commission	An alternative proposal for settlement
4/13/67	Joseph E. Sheehy	Commission	James McI. Henderson, General Counsel Beatrice Foods Co. v. FTC 9th Cir. No. 20,727
4/21/67	Joseph E. Sheehy	Commission	Beatrice Foods Co. v. FTC, 9th Cir. No. 20,727

The court has read all of these documents and frankly cannot see why the government, except as a matter of precedent, objects to their disclosure; nor does the court perceive from its present limited knowledge of the case, that the documents would be of any substantial help or assistance to the theory of the case that defendant apparently is attempting to develop. Be that as it may, the question before the court is one of privilege. It is clear that for the most part the memoranda and documents are authored by lawyers. They contain many opinions, recommendations, and conclusions as to how the Commission ought to act and what it ought or ought not to agree to as to defendant's offers of divestiture, the type of consent order that ought to be presented to the Court of Appeals, and numerous other subjects. There is no question in the court's mind but that these are Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495 (1947), (and its progeny) privileged documents, or cloaked with the attorney-client or the so-called executive privilege. A few of the documents were authored by "Director, Bureau of Restraint of Trade" or "Bureau of Economics" but even these in all but one instance bear a signature of approval by an attorney for the Commission. The attorney-client privilege obtains with government attorneys as well as the typical corporate house counsel and the court is clear that the plaintiff is within its rights in refusing to produce these documents.

Defendant's counsel recognizes that at least an attorney-client privilege obtains, but asserts that insofar as memoranda or communications from a Federal Trade Commission attorney to his superior or to the Commission is concerned, it is not privileged insofar as it merely recites and restates factually what occurred at a conference with defendant and its attorneys. Whether or not this is or should be the rule need not be determined in this instance, for many if not most of the memoranda contain comments and some editorializing and characterization. For instance, in the various communications, the attorneys state: "No particular excuse was given for not * * *" "This is comparable * * *" "No 'business reasons' or 'public considerations' were urged * * *" "No attempt is being made at this time to discuss * * *" "We believe it would be helpful to outline what we consider the basic elements * * *" "This proposal differed materially from any prior * * *" "I thought you would prefer to see this first rough draft * * *" "An attempt was made to reach a satisfactory settlement * * *" "It is recommended that the proposed settlement * * *" "I urge that it be considered in preparation for this morning's Commission meeting * * *." These are but sample excerpts from the various memoranda. In the court's opinion these and many more similar expressions cannot be separated from what counsel would designate as a mere recital of facts; nor is it feasible to attempt to excise parts of the documents.

What has been said above makes it follow as an a fortiori that on oral depositions of various employees or former employees of the Federal Trade Commission, inquiry cannot be made concerning said documents or the witnesses' recollection as to the contents thereof. Further, though such witnesses may be asked as to what transpired and what was said at any conferences or meetings they attended, they should not be interrogated as to what they reported to their superiors or conclusions they communicated to the Commission.

Plaintiff's request for an order requiring production of documents is denied. Plaintiff claims that it received a production of documents from defendant but that certain cancelled checks and letters—information concerning which it obtained from third parties—were not included in the production. From this it draws the inference that such were either deliberately destroyed or altered or concealed; that this indicates a propensity on the part of defendant and therefore an order should be entered directing it to stop such practices. Plaintiff knows of no particular documents or writings other than those mentioned that have not been produced, so the court is not asked to direct that a certain specific document or documents be produced; rather the court is asked to make sort of a blanket order prohibiting in the words of the rule any similar future conduct on the part of defendant or its counsel. Plaintiff contends that if it obtained such an order, it would be in a better position if it believed that some untoward activity occurred in the future to seek sanctions under Rule 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. If in fact defendant has, or can obtain by search, the particular cancelled checks and letters of which plaintiff complains as set forth in its memorandum, then defendant is ordered to produce the same for plaintiff's inspection and copying. The court is unwilling, however, to enter an order, without a better showing in some sort of an evidentiary hearing that defendant willfully destroyed, altered or concealed documents and so declines to enter an order—which in reality would do no more than restate the rule in any event since the plaintiff has no specific document or documents in mind. The only reason for such an order is plaintiff's feeling that because of past incidents, such will occur again. The mere entry of such an order presumes prior guilt. Of course the court does not wish for a moment to be understood as approving any such conduct on defendant's part, if in fact it has occurred and if such is shown to occur in the future, the court will expect to deal harshly with defendant and its counsel.

GENUINE PARTS COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION[*]

No. 30884—F.T.C. File No. 671 0673

(Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, July 21, 1971)

1. In Administrative Law Principles of Escobedo v. Illinois Do Not Apply

   Principles of Escobedo v. Illinois do not apply in field of administrative law.

---

[*] Reported in 445 F.2d 1382.

2. Investigative Proceedings and Adjudicative Proceedings Though Both Administrative Are Separate and Distinct

   Although it is possible to view investigative proceedings and adjudicative proceedings as merely constituent parts of administrative enforcement process, they are separate and distinct proceedings serving different functions and entitling parties to different rights under due process clause.

3. Party Investigated May Not Contest Discovery and Production of Evidence as He May in Adjudication

   Party under investigation by agency may not contest discovery and production of evidence in same manner he may contest use of evidence in adjudication by proper objection, by introduction of other evidence, and other safeguards traditional in adversary proceedings.

4. Procedural Safeguards of Due Process Unavailable Until FTC Issues and Serves Complaint

   There is no shift from investigative to adjudicative stage of FTC proceeding until complaint is issued and served by FTC on party charged, and until that point is reached procedural safeguards required by due process in adjudicative proceeding are unavailable.

5. When No Complaint Issued Auto Parts Distributor Not Entitled To Employ Discovery Procedures To Determine Nature of Inquiry

   Automobile parts distributor ordered to file special report was not entitled to employ discovery procedures to determine if FTC contemplated adjudication rather than mere investigation with respect to activities of distributor, where no complaint had been issued or served by FTC.

6. Administrative Agency Must Meet Test of Reasonableness

   Investigation by administrative agency must meet test of reasonableness.

7. FTC Investigation May Be Objected to on Grounds of Oppressiveness or as Burdened Compliance

   Investigation by FTC to determine if there is reason to believe there has been violation of antitrust laws may be objected to on grounds of oppressiveness and as requiring unreasonably burdened compliance.

8. Compliance With Order To Show Its Relations With Jobbers and Suppliers Not Unduly Burdensome on Auto Parts Distributor

   Automobile parts distributor under investigation by FTC could be required to provide information as to its relationship with jobbers and suppliers, and compliance with order was not shown to be unduly burdensome.

9. Person Ordered To File Special Report May Seek Review in Action for Declaratory Judgment After FTC Serves With Notice of Default

   Person under FTC order to file special report has right to seek review by way of action for declaratory judgment after FTC serves it with notice of default but before statutory penalty for failure to comply begins to accrue and without necessity of awaiting action by FTC seeking judicial enforcement of order by way of injunction.

10. Failure To Exhaust Administrative Remedies Did Not Preclude Action on Submission of Special Report

    Failure of corporation under FTC investigation to exhaust administrative remedies did not, in view of uncertainty as to administrative remedy, preclude commencement of action to contest FTC order requiring submission of special report.

11. Stay of Statutory Penalty Not an Abuse of Discretion Where District Court Limited Order Requiring Special Report

Where district court found it necessary to limit FTC order requiring special report by automobile parts distributor in order to avoid any unreasonable burdensomeness, stay of statutory penalty was not abuse of discretion.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 445 F.2d 1382)

On appeal court held auto parts distributor not entitled to employ discovery procedures where no complaint had been issued, it could be required to give information regarding its jobbers and suppliers, and compliance with order not unduly burdensome. Affirmed.

Alex P. Gaines, John K. Train, III, Atlanta, Ga., John H. Brebbia, Washington, D.C., for appellant; Alston, Miller & Gaines, Atlanta, Ga., of counsel.

John W. Stokes, Jr., U.S. Atty., Atlanta, Ga., Charles C. Moore, Jr., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., Alan S. Rosenthal, Raymond D. Battocchi, Attys., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., L. Patrick Gray, III, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellees; Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, of counsel.

Before Gewin, Bell and Morgan, Circuit Judges.

Lewis R. Morgan, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from an order of the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia directing the appellant Genuine Parts Company to comply with an Order to File a Special Report issued by the Federal Trade Commission (hereafter, the Commission or the F.T.C.) pursuant to a resolution of the Commission, dated December 18, 1967, authorizing a non-public investigation of Genuine Parts under Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 46 (1963) (hereafter, the Act),[1] to determine whether there was reason to believe Genuine Parts had violated the antitrust laws in making certain acquisitions and corporate mergers. The district court's opinion is reported at 313 F. Supp. 855. The district court later amended its order and stayed the accrual of the penalties imposed for failure to respond to a special report order within thirty days after notice of default, under Section 10 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 50 (1963),[2] "pending final outcome of any appeal which may be taken from this order" and staying the judgment pending appeal insofar as it represents a judgment for enforcement of the Commission's order. The Commission cross-appeals from this portion of the order.

---

[1] Section 6 provides in relevant part:

The commission shall also have power—

(b) To require, by general or special orders, corporations engaged in commerce, * * * to file with the commission in such form as the commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective corporations filing such reports or answers in writing. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the commission within such reasonable period as the commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the commission.

Genuine Parts is the largest warehouse distributor of automotive parts in the country, with annual sales in 1967 in excess of $204,000,000. It operates 35 warehouse distributor outlets in 22 states. A warehouse distributor such as Genuine Parts purchases automotive parts from manufacturers and then resells them to jobbers. Jobbers in turn stock a smaller inventory of parts and resell them to repair garages and service stations for use in maintenance or repair work for the ultimate consumer. Genuine Parts also operated 185 jobber stores or outlets scattered among the states in which its warehouses were located and rebuilt a limited number of types of automotive parts at three other locations.

The order to file a special report here in question was issued by the F.T.C. on December 28, 1967, in conjunction with an investigation of the automotive parts industry and was served on Genuine Parts on January 2, 1968. Genuine Parts was required to file its answer with the Commission within 90 days after the date of issuance. The order contains about sixty questions divided into eight specifications, numbered I to VIII.[3] These specifications are further broken down into lettered questions. On March 27, 1968, Genuine Parts filed a report with the F.T.C. in which it responded to nineteen of the sixty questions, offered to respond to two other questions if they would be received in camera and treated as confidential. Genuine Parts offered no response [4] to the remaining thirty-nine questions, notwithstanding the preface of the F.T.C. order, which provided:

> * * * If any question cannot be answered fully, give such information as is available to you, and explain why your answer is incomplete and the source from which a more complete answer may be obtained. If books and records which

---

[2] Section 10, 15 U.S.C. § 50, provides:

* * * If any corporation required by sections 41–46 and 47–58 of this title to file any annual or special report shall fail so to do within the time fixed by the commission for filing the same, and such failure shall continue for thirty days after notice of such default, the corporation shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure * * *.

[3] The titles of the eight specifications are: I, Corporate Background; II, Overall Operations; III, Warehouse Distributorships; IV, Wholly Owned Jobber Stores; V, Dependent Jobbers; VI, Rebuilding Operations; VII, Procurement; and VIII, Relations with NAPA (an association of parts jobbers).

[4] As to each of these questions, the reply merely stated: "[No response]".

provide accurate answers are unavailable, enter your best estimates, indicating the sources or bases of your estimates. * * *

Instead of giving any explanation for its failure to respond to these questions, it stated in its report:

> Genuine Parts Company respectfully refuses to respond to certain items of the Order on grounds, among others, that response to these items would be unduly burdensome; that the information sought by such items is irrelevant; and that the Order, insofar as it contains said items to which no response is made, is beyond the Commission's authority.

There were no specific objections in the report to any of the thirty-nine unanswered questions. At a conference with Commission representative on April 2, 1968, counsel for Genuine Parts informed the officials present that Genuine Parts would provide responses to the unanswered questions of the order only when ordered to do so by court order.

On July 26, 1968, about four months after the partial response to the special report order had been filed with the F.T.C. and Genuine Parts still not having replied to any of the unanswered questions, the Commission served upon it a notice of default, informing Genuine Parts that it was in default in failing to provide much of the information required by the December 28, 1967, order, and that if its failure continued it would become subject to a penalty of $100 for each day after the thirtieth day of the notice of default.[5] The notice specified each of the unanswered questions and then noted that Genuine Parts' answers to some of the other questions might be deficient in specified respects.

On August 14, 1968, Genuine Parts brought this action for declaratory and injunctive relief. By its complaint, Genuine Parts alleged that the Commission's order to file a special report constituted a denial of due process by requiring responses that were oppressive, unreasonably burdensome, irrelevant and beyond the scope and purpose of the investigation the Commission had undertaken, and sought a declaration that it need not comply with provisions of the Order and that any action the Commission might take to impose the statutory penalty of Section 10 would be illegal. Genuine Parts also sought what it termed a preliminary injunction to prevent the accrual of the penalty pending the resolution of the matter.

On August 21, 1968, a hearing was held before the district court on the preliminary injunction, and, although neither the court nor the F.T.C. had been apprised of Genuine Parts' specific objections to the unanswered questions, the court entered an order "that no statutory penalties shall accrue under the provisions of Section 10 of the * * * Act pending further order of this Court." Specific objections to the unanswered questions were first filed with the F.T.C. and the court on September 18, 1968. Upon suggestion of the district court, negotiations were entered into between the F.T.C. and counsel for Genuine Parts. These negotiations, however, proved fruitless and the F.T.C. filed a counterclaim seeking enforcement of its order of November 13, 1968.

---

[5] See n. 2, supra.

The matter was set for hearing before the district court on January 6, 1969. At the hearing, however, Genuine Parts stated its intention to amend its complaint and file a motion for discovery. Genuine Parts was given until March 3rd to file its motion for discovery. The stated reason for the motion for discovery was to determine whether the F.T.C.'s actions toward Genuine Parts had shifted from the "investigative to the adjudicative stage". Genuine Parts based its belief that the mode of the proceeding before the Commission had shifted on an article in the October, 1968 issue of Motor Age, a trade magazine, which reported an interview with Mr. Paul Teetor, the F.T.C. counsel in charge of the Genuine Parts investigation, and stated that "cases * * * have been prepared" against four firms, including Genuine Parts, and that these firms were "caught in the Commission's web". In response to this motion, the F.T.C. filed three affidavits, one from Mr. Teetor and the two others from members of the F.T.C. staff involved in the Genuine Parts investigation, stating that the F.T.C. had not made a decision to issue a complaint against Genuine Parts and that no complaint had been prepared or drafted by any member of the F.T.C. staff.

On May 8, 1968, the district court denied the motion of Genuine Parts for discovery, stating that it saw "no way in which the depositions requested by [Genuine Parts] could be relevant to the constitutionality of the 'Order to File Special Report' which is the subject matter of the complaint", and that the time for such discovery would be after the Commission filed a complaint in an adjudicative proceeding. Genuine Parts filed a motion to amend this order or for the allowance of an interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). The F.T.C. opposed the motion to amend and filed a motion for summary judgment. The motion to amend was denied on August 7, 1969, and on November 4, 1969, a hearing was held on the merits of the order to file a special report.

On May 21, 1970, the district court entered a final order on the issues raised by the complaint. In summary, the final order held that Genuine Parts did not have to comply with the order to the extent that the underlying records necessary to respond to some of the questions were no longer in existence; defined certain disputed words and phrases used in the order; and ordered the remaining unanswered questions to be answered, either precisely as they had been presented by the F.T.C. or on the terms stated in the order.

On June 1, 1970, Genuine Parts filed a motion to alter or amend the May 21st order so as to delay the answers to certain questions until the F.T.C. had received other responses and demonstrated a need for the additional responses to the satisfaction of the district court; to enjoin the accrual of statutory penalties pending the exhaustion of appellate relief; and, insofar as the order constituted a judgment on the F.T.C. counterclaim for enforcement, that such judgment be stayed pending resolution of all appellate proceedings and subsequent district court proceedings.

On August 3, 1970, the district court denied the motion to alter or amend, but ordered that no penalties would accrue pending final outcome on appeal and stayed its judgment insofar as the order represents a judgment for enforcement of the Commission's order pending appeal. Genuine Parts subsequently filed notice of appeal and a cross-appeal was filed by the Commission.

The appellant Genuine Parts makes two main contentions: First, it contends that the district court erred in denying its motion to discover from the Commission whether the proceedings against it had shifted from the investigative to the adjudicative stage, so as to entitle it to the procedural safeguards provided for by the Commission's rules in adjudicative proceedings, notwithstanding the fact that no complaint had been filed against it by the F.T.C. Secondly, it contends that the district court erred in ordering it to respond to the question set out in Specifications V and VII, Sections (F), (G), (H), and (I), of the Commission's order on the ground that the questions are unreasonably burdensome, not reasonably relevant to the investigation and outside of the scope of the Commission's authority. The Commission, in its cross-appeal, contends that the district court erred in enjoining the accrual of penalties under Section 10 of the Act.

I. Discovery.

Genuine Parts takes the position in this appeal that when an F.T.C. investigation is no longer a general inquiry, but has begun to focus, and the Commission is in the process of gathering evidence to be used in an agency process for the formulation of an order in an adjudicative proceeding, prior to the formal initiation of that proceeding through the issuance and service of a complaint, the adjudicative process substantively commences and from that point forward the requirements of due process demand that further investigation be conducted pursuant to the procedural rules established by the Commission for adjudicative hearings. Cf. Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 84 S.Ct. 1758, 12 L.Ed.2d 977 (1964). On this basis, Genuine

Parts seeks the right to discover from the Commission facts which would enable the district court to find that the adjudicative process had, in substance, begun, and order the Commission to conduct any subsequent investigation according to the discovery rules applicable to adjudicative proceedings.[6]

[1] We find this novel attempt to engraft the principle of Escobedo into the field of administrative law without merit.

[2] Although it is quite possible to view investigative proceedings and adjudicative proceedings as merely constituent parts of the administrative enforcement process, they have long been recognized as separate and distinct proceedings serving different functions and entitling parties to different rights under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. In Hannah v. Larche, 363 U.S. 420, 80 S.Ct. 1502, 4 L.Ed.2d 1307 (1960), the Supreme Court held that the procedures used by the Civil Rights Commission, a purely investigative body, did not violate due process. In so doing the Court observed:

> A typical agency is the Federal Trade Commission. Its rules draw a clear distinction between adjudicative proceedings and investigative proceedings. 16 C.F.R., 1958 Supp., § 1.34. Although the latter are frequently initiated by complaints from undisclosed informants, id., §§ 1.11, 1.15, and although the Commission may use the information obtained during investigations to initiate adjudicative proceedings, id., § 1.42, nevertheless, persons summoned to appear before investigative proceedings are entitled only to a general notice of "the purpose and scope of such investigation," id., § 1.33, and while they may have the advice of counsel, "counsel may not, as a matter of right, otherwise participate in the investigation." Id., § 1.40. The reason for these rules is obvious. The Federal Trade Commission could not conduct an efficient investigation if persons being investigated were permitted to convert the investigation into a trial. We have found no authorities suggesting that the rules governing Federal Trade Commission investigations violate the Constitution, and this is understandable since any person investigated by the Federal Trade Commission will be accorded all the traditional judicial safeguards at a subsequent adjudicative proceeding, * * * Id., 446, 80 S.Ct., 1517.

See also, F.T.C. v. Cinderella Career and Finishing Schools, Inc., 1968, 131 U.S.App.D.C. 331, 404 F.2d 1308. A further indication of the distinction recognized between investigative and adjudicative proceedings is the fact that "both industrywide investigations and adjudicative proceedings, involving the same general subject matter may be instituted and conducted simultaneously" and "that the exercise of such dual functions by an administrative agency does not constitute a deprivation of due process". Lehigh Portland Cement Company v. F.T.C., E.D.Va., 1968, 291 F. Supp. 628, aff'd. per curiam 4 Cir., 1969, 416 F.2d 971(1).

---

[6] See Federal Trade Commission Rules of Practice and Procedure, 16 C.F.R. §§ 3.31–3.37, 15 U.S.C.A. (App.Supp.1971).

[3] The purpose of an investigative proceeding conducted by an administrative agency "is to discover and produce evidence not to prove a pending charge or complaint, but upon which to make one if, in the [agency's] judgment, the facts thus discovered should justify doing so". Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 201, 66 S.Ct. 494, 501, 90 L.Ed. 614 (1946). Thus, granting that to be effective an administrative investigation must focus on specific parties and particularized matters "to get information from those who best can give it and who are most interested in not doing so," United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950); such an investigation serves a function which is directly related to, but at the same time distinct from, the function of an adjudication. An investigation discovers and produces evidence; an adjudication tests such evidence upon a record in an adversary proceeding before an independent hearing examiner to determine whether it sustains whatever charges are based upon it. A party under investigation may not contest the discovery and production of evidence in the same manner he may contest the use of that evidence in an adjudication by proper objection, by the introduction of other evidence, and the other safeguards traditional to an adversary proceeding under our system. An investigation does not determine guilt or innocence; that is done at the adjudication, and thus it is there the whole plethora of due process rights designed to insure the fairness of such a determination come to bear.

Aside from this, there are grave policy considerations that militate against allowing the process of administrative investigation to become adversary in nature, even after it becomes specific and particularized. These considerations were succinctly stated by the Supreme Court in Hannah v. Larche, supra, 363 U.S. at 443–444, 80 S.Ct. at 1515, where it stated:

> * * * [The investigative process could be completely disrupted if investigative hearings were transformed into trial-like proceedings * * *. Fact-finding agencies * * * would be plagued by the injection of collateral issues that would make the investigation interminable. * * * This type of proceedings would make a shambles of the investigation and stifle the agency in its gathering of facts.

[4, 5] We therefore hold that there is no shift from the investigative to the adjudicative stage until a complaint is issued and served by the Commission on the party charged, 16 C.F.R. § 3.11(a) (1971), and until that point is reached the procedural safeguards required by due process in an adjudicative proceeding are unavailable.

II. Objections to Order to File Special Report.

Genuine Parts contends that two Specifications of the Special Report Order were not sufficiently limited by the district court in its order of May 21, 1970. Of these, Specification V seeks information concerning the relationship between Genuine Parts and what the Order terms dependent jobbers; and Specification VII, of which Genuine Parts objects only to §§ (F) through (I), deals with Genuine Parts' relationship with its suppliers.[7] The district court clarified several of the questions contained in these specifications and limited the response required by others.[8]

Genuine Parts argues that Specification V is too broad in scope and that any attempt to respond would be unreasonably burdensome because it would be required to report all of the detailed information called for on each jobber customer falling within any of the categories stated in the Specification's definitions of "dependent jobber". Genuine Parts makes similar objection to the controverted sections of Specifications VII on the grounds that it would be required to report each instance of financial or other assistance given to it or its jobber customers by suppliers named in response to the specification. It also objects to the descriptions used in Specification VII, such as "sales promotional or other kinds of services", and "advertising allowances".

---

[7] The challenged specifications provide as follows:

V. Dependent Jobbers—By supplying warehouse (identifying same), report the following information for each and every jobber customer of such warehouse (1) whose business on December 31, 1967 was partially owned, directly or indirectly by Genuine Parts, or (2) who on December 31, 1967 was indebted for any reason either to Genuine Parts or to a third party whose debt was guaranteed in any way by Genuine Parts (except indebtedness for rent due less than 30 days or merchandise bought on open account within the previous 60 days) or (3) who on December 31, 1967 had possession or custody of any merchandise consigned, leased or bailed to him by Genuine Parts; or (4) who on December 31, 1967 was renting his store and/or fixtures and/or equipment from Genuine Parts or from a third party whose rent was guaranteed by Genuine Parts; or (5) whose store was purchased by him from Genuine Parts and/or was subject to any kind of purchase or repurchase options in favor of Genuine Parts.

A. Name and address of jobber's business.

B. Genuine Parts total 1967 sales to this jobber (in dollars) and its approximate share (%) of his total purchases.

C. Genuine Parts 1967 sales of automotive parts, accessories and equipment to this jobber (in dollars) and its approximate share (%) of his total purchases of such products.

D. The percentage of equity in this jobber's business (whether in common or preferred stock, capital account or other) owned by Genuine Parts on December 31, 1967.

E. The total indebtedness owing from this jobber to Genuine Parts or guaranteed by it on December 31, 1967.

F. The portions (in dollars) of total indebtedness owing from this jobber to Genuine Parts or guaranteed by it on December 31, 1967 which arose out of the following causes:

(1) Open account for merchandise purchased more than 60 days but less than 120 days previously.
(2) Open account for merchandise purchased more than 120 days previously.
(3) Rent for any period ending more than 30 days but less than 90 days previously.
(4) Rent for any period ending more than 90 days previously.
(5) Loan from Genuine Parts.
(6) Loan guaranteed by Genuine Parts.
(7) Purchase price of jobber store and/or land;
(8) Purchase price of store fixtures and/or equipment.
(9) Other (specify).

G. The average interest rate charged this jobber during 1967 Genuine Parts or by the creditor guaranteed payment by Genuine Parts as interest on each class of indebtedness (1 thru 9) listed in answer to Question F above.

H. The dollar value of all merchandise belonging to Genuine Parts but by consignment, lease or bailment in the possession or custody of this jobber on December 31, 1967.

I. The dollar value of all merchandise belonging to the manufacturer or other supplier thereof but by reconsignment, sublease or double bailment through Genuine Parts in the possession or custody of this jobber on December 31, 1967.

---

[7] (Continued)

J. The average monthly rental paid by this jobber during 1967 to Genuine Parts or to a lessor whose rent was guaranteed by Genuine Parts and (where such rental payments existed) the undepreciated book value of the rental property.

K. The price paid by this jobber for this store, including land, if purchased from Genuine Parts, and (where such purchase existed) the undepreciated value of the property purchased (on Genuine Parts' books just prior to purchase by this jobber).

* * * * * * *

VII. Procurement.—List all Genuine Parts' suppliers of automotive parts, accessories, and equipment including those affiliated with it, from whom its total net purchases were $100,000 or more during 1967 and for each such supplier report the following information on a separate page:

* * * * * * *

F. The amount of all sales promotional or other kinds of services, including, but not exclusively, the providing of premiums, prizes, free goods, bargain goods, cabinets, or other sales equipment and catalogues, any of which were provided to or for Genuine Parts or its jobber customers by or in behalf of this supplier during 1967, broken down by kinds of services rendered.

G. The amounts of all advertising allowances or payments of money by or in behalf of this supplier to or for Genuine Parts or its jobber customers during 1967 which are not included in your answer to the next paragraph (H) broken down by kinds of payments made.

H. Genuine Parts total dollar receipts (net) from this supplier for all sales by Genuine Parts of (1) all rebuilt automotive parts, and (2) all other goods and services sold to this supplier in 1967 broken down by kinds of products sold and services performed.

I. The nature and dollar value of any and all other dealings between Genuine Parts and this supplier during 1967 not covered in your answers to paragraphs F. G, and H above.

* * * * * * *

[8] With regard to Specification V, the district court took the following action:

(1) Genuine Parts need not attempt to identify jobbers who were in possession of any consigned merchandise if it "affirmatively represents in its response that the only consignment arrangement involving it and its jobbers was the battery program, and that such program was generally available to jobber customers, then Genuine Parts need not attempt to identify those jobbers who had batteries in their possession pursuant to the consignment program."

(2) "Clause 5 of the introductory paragraph of Specification V will be enforced in the conjunctive sense but not in the disjunctive * * *."

(3) "Specification V, §§ B, C, must be complied with insofar as sales figures are concerned but will be enforced as to percentage figures only to the extent that such figures are known to Genuine Parts; if the figures are not known the answer should so state."

(4) "Specification V, § F need not be answered at the present time; if after Genuine Parts has answered V, § E the Commission still wishes to have an answer to V, § F, Genuine Parts must either provide the answer or, at Genuine Parts' option, permit the Commission to obtain the information from Genuine Parts, files."

(5) "Specification V, § G can be answered giving the average interested rate and any abberations therefrom, as to the various classes of indebtedness but need not specify the interest charged each customer listed in the answer to V, § A."

(6) "Specifications V, § H and V, § I should be answered if Genuine Parts has the information in its files. It need not, however, survey all jobbers in order to obtain the information."

(7) "Specifications V, § J and V, § K contain the word 'value' which can be given either in terms of cost or market value provided it is clear which is being used."

Genuine Parts responded to Specification VII after the institution of this action, but the Commission was dissatisfied with the adequacy of the response. The matter was briefed by both sides, and with respect to the sections here in issue, §§ F through I, the district court ordered:

"* * * that in answering §§ F and G Genuine Parts answer insofar as it has knowledge of such preferential services and allowances even though it has no control over them; and that Genuine Parts answer § I of the specification which it heretofore has completely ignored. * * * if the information is not available or already has been supplied in full Genuine Parts should so state."

Genuine Parts Company v. F.T.C., supra, 313 F.Supp. 858–859.

[6] The chief limitation on an investigation by an administrative agency is that it must meet the test of reasonableness. Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, supra, 327 U.S. at 208, 66 S.Ct. 494 [9] In United States v. Morton Salt Company, supra, the Supreme Court set out the standard by which Section 6 investigations conducted by the F.T.C. are to be judged:

> * * * [I]t is sufficient if the inquiry is within the authority of the agency, the demand is not too indefinite and the information sought is reasonably revelant * * *. Id. at 652, 70 S.Ct. at 369.

At the same time the Court recognized the extreme breadth that must be accorded the Commission in conducting such an investigation.

> * * * Even if one were to regard the request for information in this case as caused by nothing more than official curiosity, nevertheless law-enforcing agencies have a legitimate right to satisfy themselves that corporate behavior is consistent with the law and the public interest. Id. at 652, 70 S.Ct. at 369.

[7, 8] While an investigation under Section 6 may be objected to on the ground of oppressiveness and as requiring an unreasonably burdensome compliance, United States v. Associated Merchandising Corporation, S.D.N.Y., 1966, 261 F.Supp. 553, see F.T.C. v. Hunt Foods and Industries, Inc., S.D. Calif., 1959, 178 F.Supp. 448, aff'd. 9 Cir., 1961, 286 F.2d 803, cert. den. 365 U.S. 877, 81 S.Ct. 1027, 6 L.Ed.2d 190, we do not think such an objection can be sustained in this case. It is clear that the demand contained in the F.T.C. Order here in question is within the authority of the Commission, is not too indefinite, and is reasonably relevant to the purpose of the investigation. Indeed, the portions of the Order here objected to go to the very heart of the inquiry—the relationship between Genuine Parts and its jobbers on the one hand and its suppliers on the other. When the degree of burdensomeness necessarily inherent in the preparation of a full response to the Order [10] is considered in light of the pertinent responses the objected portions of the Order will produce, we are unable to hold that the burden of compliance is unreasonable. We therefore hold that Genuine Parts must comply with the controverted portions of the

---

[9] There the Supreme Court stated:

Without attempt to summarize or accurately distinguish all of the cases, the fair distillation, insofar as they apply merely to the production of corporate records and papers in response to a subpoena or order authorized by law and safeguarded by judicial sanction, seems to be that the Fifth Amendment affords no protection by virtue of the self incrimination provision, whether for the corporation or for its officers; and the Fourth, if applicable, at the most guards against abuse only by way of too much indefiniteness or breadth in the things required to be "particularly described", if also the inquiry is one the demanding agency is authorized by law to make and the materials specified are relevant. The gist of the protection is in the requirement, expressed in terms, that the disclosure sought shall not be unreasonable. 327 U.S. at 208, 66 S.Ct. at 505.

[10] The president of Genuine Parts testified that it would require 1500 man hours to respond to the unanswered questions. This is less than half the time already expended in preparing the incomplete report.

Order, as limited by the district court, as well as those portions remaining unanswered which were not objected to in this appeal.

III. Stay of Statutory Penalty.

In contending that the district court erred in granting Genuine Parts a stay of the accrual of the penalty imposed by Section 10 of the Act upon failure to comply with an order to file a special report thirty days after issuance of a notice of default, the Commission advances two arguments: first, that the stay is void because Genuine Parts failed to exhaust its administrative remedies, relying on St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208, 82 S.Ct. 289, 7 L.Ed.2d 240, reh. den. 368 U.S. 972, 82 S.Ct. 437, 7 L.Ed.2d 401 (1961), and United States v. Morton Salt Company, supra; and, second, that Genuine Parts failed to make any of the showings required to obtain an injunction of an administrative sanction, relying on Virginia Petroleum Job. Ass'n. v. Federal Power Com'n., 1958, 104 U.S.App.D.C. 106, 259 F. 2d 921, 925. Genuine Parts counters by contending that under St. Regis Paper persons served with an order to file a special report by the F.T.C. have the right to challenge that order in federal court after the notice of default has been served but before penalties begin to accrue under Section 10, and that such persons are entitled to a stay of the accrual of penalties during the pendency of such challenge.

[9] It is clear from both United States v. Morton Salt Company, supra, and St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, supra, that the Supreme Court has sanctioned, at least in dicta, the manner being used here to review an order to file a special report, and that a person under such an order has the right to seek review by way of an action for a declaratory judgment after the Commission serves it with a notice of default, but before the statutory penalty for failure to comply begins to accrue and without the necessity of awaiting action by the Commission seeking judicial enforcement of the order by way of injunction.[11] See Continental Baking Company v. Dixon, D.Del., 1968, 283 F.Supp. 285. But see Federal Trade Commission v. Claire Furnace Co., 274 U.S. 160, 47 S.Ct. 553, 71 L.Ed. 978 (1927), and Anheuser-Busch, Incorporated v. F.T.C., E.D. Mo., 1965, 242 F. Supp. 122, which hold that a person under an order to file a special report cannot seek judicial review prior to the issuance of a notice of default, triggering the forfeiture provisions of Section 10.

---

[11] In Morton Salt the Court said:

It is argued that if we sustain this use of § 6, the power will be unconfined and its arbitrary exercise subject to no judicial review or control, unless and until the Government brings suit, as here, for penalties. The Government, it is said, may delay such action while ruinous penalties accumulate and defendant runs the risk that his defenses will not be sustained. However, we are not prepared to say that courts would be powerless if after an effort to clarify or modify such an order it still is considered to be so arbitrary as to be

These cases, however, leave in doubt the two issues we face here: whether the person seeking to contest the Commission's order must exhaust his administrative remedies, if indeed any are or were available, and whether, and under what circumstances, such a person is entitled to a stay of the penalty pending review of the contested order.

A. Exhaustion of Remedies.

[10] It is not contested that at the time this suit was filed the Commission's Rules of Practice and Procedure did not provide for any administrative procedure to contest the issuance or the terms of a special report order. Subsequently, and apparently in response to this litigation, the Commission amended its rules to provide that a person served with a special report order may file a motion with the Commission to limit or quash the order within 10 days after the special report order was served. 16 C.F.R. § 2.12(b), 15 U.S.CA. (App. Supp. 1971). Notwithstanding the absence of such a rule when this lawsuit was commenced, the Commission asserts that there was unlawful and the Government pursues a policy of accumulating penalties while avoiding a judicial test by refusing to bring action to recover them. Since we do not think this record presents the question, we do not undertake to determine whether the Declaratory Judgments Act, [28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2201, 2202], the Administrative Procedure Act, or general equitable powers of the courts would afford a remedy if there were shown to be a wrong, or what the consequences would be if no chance is given for a test of reasonable objections to such an order. Cf. Oklahoma Operating Co. v. Love, 252 U.S. 331, 40 S.Ct. 338, 64 L.Ed. 596. It is enough to say that, in upholding this order upon this record, we are not to be understood as holding such orders exempt from judicial examination or as extending a license to exact as reports what would not reasonably be comprehended within that term as used by Congress in the context of this Act. 338 U.S. at 654, 70 S.Ct. at 370.

---

[1] (Continued)

Similarly, in St. Regis Paper, the Court quoted from Morton Salt, stating:

> Upon the commencement of the action by the Government, petitioner might have then sought a stay, as it did when the decision went against it in the Court of Appeals.[13] Moreover, after the entry of the notices of default by the Commission, petitioner might have itself sought relief before the § 10 forfeitures began to accrue instead of waiting for the Attorney General to sue for their collection. As was said in United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 654, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401, 417 (1950), "we are not prepared to say that courts would be powerless" to act where such orders appear suspect and ruinous penalties would be sustained pending a good faith test of their validity. There the record did not present and the Court did not determine "whether the Declaratory Judgments Act, the Administrative Procedure Act, or general equitable powers of the courts would afford a remedy if there were shown to be a wrong, or what the consequences would be if no chance is given for a test of reasonable objections to such an order." Similarly, as this matter comes here now, the petitioner has pursued none of these remedies, and we could not therefore say that it had "no chance" to prevent the running of the forfeiture pending a test of the validity of the orders. Cf. United States v. L. A. Tucker Truck Lines, Inc., 344 U.S. 33, 37, 73 S.Ct. 67, 97 L.Ed. 54, 58 (1952); Natural Gas Pipeline Co. v. Slattery 302 U.S. 300, 310, 58 S.Ct. 199, 82 L.Ed. 276,281 (1937). We note, however, that the Declaratory Judgments Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, provides that "In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction * * * any court * * * may delcare the rights * * * of any interested party seeking such declaration. * * *" This appears sufficient to meet petitioner's needs.

368 U.S. at 226-227, 82 S.Ct. at 299.

> [13] Petitioner unsuccessfully moved in the Court of Appeals for a postponement of the effective date of the Commission's orders. Coming when it did, however, we cannot say that such denial was an abuse of discretion. Cf. Virginian R. Co. v. United States, 272 U.S. 658, 47 S.Ct. 222, 71 L.Ed. 463 (1926). Furthermore, a short while thereafter we stayed the accumulation of further penalties when the petition for writ of certiorari was granted. If petitioner had unsuccessfully sought a stay in the District Court, a different question might have been presented. That action, after final judgment, could have been reviewed both in the Court of Appeals and here.

an informal procedure of which Genuine Parts ought to have been aware, which would have accorded it the same right of review now accorded by § 2.12(b) any time before the issuance of the notice of default, and that the failure to exhaust this remedy barred it from seeking judicial review of the order, much less a stay of the statutory penalty.

In Morton Salt, supra, the Court refused to consider objections to the terms of a special report order, saying:

> If respondents had objected to the terms of the order, they would have presented or at least offered to present evidence concerning any records required and the cost of their books, matters which now rest on mere assertions in their briefs. The Commission would have had opportunity to disclaim any inadvertent excesses or to justify their demands in the record. We think these respondents could have obtained any reasonable modifications necessary, but, if not, at least could have made a record that would convince us of the measure of their grievance rather than ask us to assume it. 338 U.S. at 653–654, 70 S. Ct. at 369.

While this suggests the possibility of a procedure by which to make objections to the terms of an order before the Commission, it must be noted that the whole thrust of the controversy in Morton Salt was whether the Commission had authority to issue the order in the first place. No objection had been raised to the terms of the order until the case was before the Supreme Court. In this light the above-quoted passage from the opinion is at best ambiguous and could refer to the lack of a district court record on the issue, as well as the lack of any prior administrative proceeding. Likewise, in St. Regis Paper, supra, the existence of such a procedure is suggested by the fact that the party under investigation filed a motion to vacate several special report orders prior to seeking judicial review and the Commission temporarily suspended the order while the motion was under consideration.[12] However, there is nothing in the opinion to indicate that such a motion was a necessary precondition to judicial review or that such motions to vacate were part of a well-established informal procedure before the Commission, rather than merely a good faith effort to avoid litigation by informal means.

Section 3(a) of the Administrative Procedure Act, now codified at 5 U.S.C. § 552(a) (1967), provides that "* * * [e]ach agency shall separately state and currently publish in the Federal Register for the guidance of the public—* * * (C) rules of procedure * * *" and that "[e]xcept to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms thereof, a person may not in any manner be required to resort to, or be adversely affected by, a matter required to be published in the Federal Register and not so published." See United States v. Morton Salt Company, supra, 338 U.S. at 644, 70 S.Ct. 357. Even though the record before us indicates that Genuine Parts made every effort to avoid a timely presentation of its specific objections to the Commission, and in doing so in all probability unduly lengthened and complicated the present litigation, this Court is hesitant, on the authority here before us, to hold that Genuine Parts was barred from seeking judicial review as a result of its failure to exhaust an uncertain informal remedy, at the time unreported in the Federal Register. It must be noted, however, that in light of the Commission's new Rule § 2.12(b) this decision cannot offer solace to others of like mind who wish to "by-pass" the Commission in the future.

---

[12] In St. Regis Paper, the Court simply noted:

* * * On motion of petitioner, the Commission temporarily suspended these orders while it considered petitioner's motion that they be vacated. On May 6, 1959, the motion to vacate was denied, and petitioner was directed to comply by May 28, 1959. * * *

368 U.S. at 214, 82 S.Ct. at 293.

B. Availability of a Stay

In St. Regis Paper, supra, the Supreme Court indicated that a stay could have been sought at the commencement of the action in the district court (brought by the Commission to enforce its special report order and for the forfeiture of accrued penalties) and, although it refused to hold that the court of appeals abused its discretion in denying a stay upon appeal, the Court itself stayed the accumulation of further penalties when it granted the petition for writ of certiorari. See n. 11, supra. Thus, it is clear that a stay of the accrual of Section 10 penalties is at least available in the type of review proceedings contemplated by St. Regis Paper. What is not clear is under what circumstances a person challenging a special report order is entitled to a stay. In discussing the availability of a stay in St. Regis Paper, the Court said: "we are not prepared to say that courts would be powerless 'to act where such orders appear suspect and ruinous penalties would be sustained pending a good faith test of their validity' " * * * "for a test of reasonable objections to such an order." (Emphasis supplied.) 368 U.S. at 226–227, 82 S.Ct. at 300. The implication is that a stay of the accrual of Section 10 penalties would be appropriate whenever the challenged order "appears suspect" and the review seeks a "good faith test" of "reasonable objections" to the order. Such a stay was issued in Continental Baking Company v. Dixon, supra, 283 F.Supp. at 288, although the district court did not discuss the grounds upon which it granted the stay, except to cite St. Regis Paper.

[11] It is thus left to determine whether the district court abused its discretion in granting the stay under the standard set out above. See St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, supra, 368 U.S. at 226, n. 13, 82 S.Ct. 289. The Commission strongly argues that this action was brought in bad faith for the purpose of delaying any potential adjudication that might come about as a result of the information elicited by the special report order. Upon the record before us, such a contention is not without support. No real effort was made by Genuine Parts to obtain relief directly from the Commission to limit the questions contained in the order by informal discussion and some of the objections, particularly those concerning the definition of terms,[13] seem nothing less than picayune. However, the district court found it necessary to limit the order in certain respects in order to avoid any unreasonable burdensomeness, and for that reason alone, we are unable to say that it abused its discretion in granting the stay under what we understand to be the logic of St. Regis Paper. Now that the issues presented by Genuine Parts have finally, after inordinate delay, been decided, however, the stay must be dissolved upon the issuance of the mandate of this court.

The judgment of the district court is hereby in all things affirmed. Affirmed.

S.O.U.P., INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 24476—F.T.C. Docket C–1741

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, July 27, 1971)

1. CORPORATION NOT ALLOWED TO PROCEED IN FORMA PAUPERIS IN SPITE OF PUBLIC INTEREST WHERE COSTS NOT LIKELY TO EXCEED $100

   Where costs of review proceeding were not likely to exceed $100 and members of corporation were able to pay same, corporation would not be allowed to proceed in forma pauperis notwithstanding good faith of members and their public interest motivation.

2. CONVENIENCE OF CORPORATE FORM DOES NOT JUSTIFY USING IT AS A MEANS OF AVOIDING COSTS AS IF CORPORATION WERE A PAUPER

   Corporate form is convenient, organizational vehicle, but its convenience does not justify turning it into vehicle also for avoiding costs involved in lawsuit as if it were pauper.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 449 F.2d 1142)

On appeal Court held where costs of appeal not likely to exceed $100 and members of firm were able to pay a motion to proceed in forma pauperis was denied.

---

*Reported in 449 F. 2d 1142 (1971). For case before Commission, see 77 F.T.C. 664. See also F.T.C. order of Nov. 3, 1972, Docket 8818, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 81 F.T.C. 1032, where the Commission ordered payment to S.O.U.P., Inc., as intervenor, those costs it properly substantiates in its Bill of Costs.

[13] For example, Genuine Parts strongly maintained the phrase "automotive parts, accessories and equipment" and the word "franchise" were too indefinite to enable it to even attempt to answer the questions in which they appeared.

Before BAZELON, Chief Judge, FAHY, Senior Circuit Judge, and WILKEY, Circuit Judge.

ORDER

PER CURIAM.

[1] Petitioner S.O.U.P., Inc., a corporation, has filed a motion to proceed in forma pauperis in the above entitled case. At the request of members of the Court, a financial statement of each of the small number of members of the corporation was filed. In light of the statute governing forma pauperis appeals; 28 U.S.C. Section 1915(a), which we are bound to construe reasonably, assuming arguendo that a corporation may proceed in forma pauperis, we think it would be inconsistent with the congressional intent to hold that this corporation should be allowed to proceed in that manner in view of the financial data submitted since it is likely that the costs of proceeding would not exceed $100.00. We think we would not comply with the statute, properly construed in the situation presented, if we granted the application, although in so deciding we appreciate the good faith of applicants and their public interest motivation. Accordingly, it is Ordered by the Court that petitioner's aforesaid motion for leave to proceed in forma pauperis is denied.

Statement of Senior Circuit Judge FAHY in support of the order of the court, in which Circuit Judge WILKEY concurs.

[2] SOUP is not prevented by our order from proceeding with the litigation. It can easily arrange for the small item of costs by assessment or voluntary contribution of its members. The corporate form is a convenient, organizational vehicle, but its convenience does not justify turning it into a vehicle also for avoiding the costs involved in a lawsuit as if it were a pauper. The public interest motivating SOUP's members which I join in applauding, does not help make the corporation "a person * * * unable to pay such costs or give security therefor." 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a).

The text of the statute reflects the congressional intent and purpose to enable "person[s]" to obtain exemption, not corporations formed by persons who themselves do not come within the exemption. The statute has the salutary purpose of opening the doors of the courts to poor persons on a basis of equality with the more well-to-do, not to open the doors to "poor" corporations formed by nonpoor members as a convenient form by which to organize and litigate. If the statute is to be enlarged as SOUP contends, I think it should be done by legislation rather than by a strained construction which does not reflect the statute's purposes.

The "time-consuming" responsibility the court has had to assume in this matter, and the "remarkably poor economics" of the court's involvement, referred to by our dissenting colleague, are not the answer to the problem, for the court does not pass over problems which are presented because to decide them consumes judicial resources.

Bazelon, Chief Judge (dissenting).

This case presents an important question concerning the right of a corporation to sue without prepayment of costs under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a) (1970).[1] A majority of this panel has concluded that even if the statute applies to corporations, this petitioner has not made a showing sufficient to warrant in forma pauperis treatment. Because I believe that the statute does apply to corporations and that the petitioner has satisfied all reasonable standards which might be applied to test such applications, I would grant leave to proceed without payment of costs.

Students Opposing Unfair Practices, Inc. (SOUP) is a private, non-profit corporation designed primarily to assist the Federal Trade Commission in "more vigorously protecting the consumers' rights to fair and honest advertising."[2] Pursuant to this goal, SOUP attempted to intervene in an FTC proceeding against the Campbell Soup Company. The case is now before this Court on SOUP's petition for review of an FTC order accepting a consent decree against Campbell. Petitioner challenges both the adequacy of the decree as a remedy for alleged violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the agency's refusal to grant SOUP full rights to intervene in the proceeding before it.

I.

Section 1915(a) provides that a federal court may authorize litigation without prepayment of costs "by a person who makes affidavit that he is unable to pay such costs or give security therefor." [Emphasis added.] The statute's reference to "person" does not indicate, however, that the section has no application to corporations. On the contrary, the statutory guidelines for the interpretation of Congressional acts, 1 U.S.C. § 1 (1970), make clear that the term "person" should ordinarily be taken to "include corporations * * * as well as individuals." Moreover, there is no indication in the legislative history of § 1915 that Congress intended to depart from this well-established canon of statutory construction.[3] But my conclusion that § 1915(a) applies to corporations rests on more than this admittedly formal approach to the statute's interpretation. The purpose of the in forma pauperis statute is to insure that indigent parties will not be precluded from litigating significant questions merely because they are unable to pay a relatively small fee. Like an individual, a corporation may lack the means to meet this threshold expense, and thus it too may be barred from the courtroom without regard to the merits of its claim. I can find no reason to believe that Congress's concern for the obstacles facing an indigent litigant extended only to natural persons, and I would therefore hold the statute applicable to corporations.

---

[1] The statute provides:

(a) Any court of the United States may authorize the commencement, prosecution or defense of any suit, action or proceeding, civil or criminal, or appeal therein, without prepayment of fees and costs or security therefor, by a person who makes affidavit that he is unable to pay such costs or give security therefor. Such affidavit shall state the nature of the action, defense or appeal and affiant's belief that he is entitled to redress.

An appeal may not be taken in forma pauperis if the trial court certifies in writing that it is not taken in good faith.

[2] Petitioner's Memorandum in Support of Motion for Leave to Proceed on Appeal in Forma Pauperis, at 1.

II.

We are not required at this time to delineate comprehensive principles to govern the application of § 1915(a) to corporations. I am persuaded that SOUP's motion should succeed under any set of guidelines that we might eventually prescribe.

First, SOUP's appeal to this Court is neither frivolous nor malicious, as indicated by the vigorous dissenting opinions of two of the FTC's five Commissioners.[4] Second, since the members of the corporation have no personal financial stake in the outcome of the litigation, it seems unlikely that they have adopted the corporate form as a subterfuge to avoid the payment of court costs.[5] To be sure, there is potential for abuse in the in forma pauperis scheme as applied to corporations no less than as applied to individuals. But an excessive concern with this potential at this stage is, to say the least, premature. Neither this Court nor a corporation's adversary in litigation lacks the means to expose abuse and to take corrective action when it does appear.[6] Moreover, the fact that SOUP is apparently the first corporation to apply to this Court for in forma pauperis treatment since the enactment of the statute would seem to belie any fears that we are soon to be deluged with such applications.

---

[3] The predecessor of § 1915(a) provided that a "citizen of the United States" could be granted leave to proceed as a pauper. Act of July 20, 1892, ch. 209, § 1, 27 Stat. 252. Because the Supreme Court had held that corporations are not "citizens," Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, 9 U.S. (5 Cranch.) 61, 3 L.Ed. 38 (1809), two Circuits held that the former statute did not apply to corporations. See Atlantic S.S. Corp. v. Kelley, 79 F.2d 339 (5th Cir. 1935); Quittner v. Motion Picture Producers, 70 F.2d 331 (2d Cir. 1934). In 1959 Congress substituted "person" for "citizen" in defining the reach of the statute, but that change was apparently designed to extend the statute's benefits to aliens. H.R. Rep. No. 650, 26th Cong., 1st Sess. (1959).

[4] Commissioner Elman stated in dissent that hearings on the consent decree were necessary because "basic issues relating to the adequacy of the remedy have not been fully canvassed on evidentiary record and remain unresolved." Also dissenting, Commissioner Jones maintained that "the instant petition for intervention by SOUP raises important issues going to the effectiveness of Commission action. These issues affect the basic viability of the Commission and its potential for effective action."

[5] Compare Honolulu Lumber Co. v. American Factors, Ltd., 265 F.Supp. 578 (D. Hawaii 1966), aff'd on other grounds, 403 F.2d 49 (9th Cir. 1968), holding that a corporation cannot qualify under § 1915 (a). The court noted that the small group which formed the corporation would benefit directly from any recovery award in this treble-damage antitrust suit.

[6] Cf. Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371, 381-382, 91 S.Ct. 780, 28 L.Ed.2d 113 (1971); Askins v. E. I. Dupont De Nemours & Co., 335 U.S. 331, 338, 69 S.Ct. 85, 93 L.Ed. 43 (1948).

The real difficulty with SOUP's motion, it seems, concerns the assertion of indigency. SOUP is conceded to lack the corporate resources to pay the costs of proceeding in this Court.[7] Indeed, the FTC not only accepts the corporation's claim of indigency, but itself permitted SOUP to proceed in forma pauperis before the agency. Nevertheless, this Court has apparently concluded that a corporation cannot be indigent for purposes of § 1915(a) so long as its members have the personal means to pay the costs of the proceeding. This approach, which disregards the petitioner's corporate form and treats it as a collection of individual litigants, imposes unnecessary administrative burdens on this Court and may effectively discourage litigation by certain corporations.

Moreover, by looking behind the corporation to the individuals it represents, today's order may have the unfortunate effect of deterring the use of corporations as vehicles for raising issues of great public importance. By measuring the corporation's indigency in terms of the assets of its wealthiest member, we may discourage non-indigent individuals from joining corporations that intend to bring law suits on behalf of the public. If these persons are forced to commit their personal resources to the cause, they may prefer to sue as individuals. Yet it seems clear that in this type of law suit a corporation or association is often a more valuable party than an individual.[8] Furthermore, if these persons refuse to assume personal liability for the costs of litigation, issues of great importance may fail to reach a judicial hearing. For these reasons I cannot accept the Court's approach to the determination of indigency of corporations under § 1915(a) in these circumstances. Nothing in this record indicates that SOUP's effort to proceed in forma pauperis is in any way offensive to the public interest. Nor does anyone assert that its application is a sham or an abuse of this Court. Since a decision in favor of SOUP would in no sense deprive us of the ability to forestall any possibility of abuse in subsequent cases, I would grant petitioner's application.

---

[7] In support of its application for leave to proceed in forma pauperis the president of SOUP submitted an affidavit stating that the corporation has no money in its treasury, no established sources of income, and no property which it could offer as security. We indicated recently that an individual is indigent for purposes of § 1915(a) if he cannot because of his poverty 'pay or give security for the costs * * * and still be able to provide' himself and dependents 'with the necessities of life.' Harris v. Harris, 137 U.S.App.D.C. 318, 322, 424 F.2d 806, 810 (1970), quoting Adkins v. E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 335 U.S. 331, 339, 69 S.Ct. 85, 93 L.Ed. 43 (1948). With no source of income and its limited resources committed to its meager operating expenses, or "necessities of life," SOUP would seem to meet that standard. But at the request of this Court petitioner submitted further affidavits from each of its five current members describing their personal financial positions and revealing that as individuals they could not satisfy our standards of indigency. On the basis of this information the Court has concluded that the application to proceed in forma pauperis must be denied.

[8] L. Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 542–543 (1965).

Instead of resolving the question of indigency on the basis of a single affidavit from a corporate officer, it is now apparently necessary for us to evaluate affidavits from each of the "members" of the corporation. In this case the corporation comprises only five persons. But if "members" refers to shareholders, the problem of evaluating these affidavits could in some cases be staggering. For us to undertake this time-consuming responsibility as a means of collecting about $100 in court costs strikes me as remarkably poor economics. It is also inconsistent with Congress's evident intention of simplifying the inquiry into indigency.

WARNER-LAMBERT COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. Ac. 1385–71—F.T.C. Docket 8850

(United States District Court for the District of Columbia, Aug. 10, 1971)

The Commission here notified the plaintiff that it intended to institute a formal proceeding charging that the plaintiff's acquisition of Parke, Davis & Company was a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. After some negotiation the plaintiff submitted a proposal for a consent agreement which the Bureau of Competition of the Commission rejected. A second proposal for a consent order was also rejected. The Commission thereupon issued a formal complaint against plaintiff charging violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Here the court found that the Commission waived the thirty-day limitation on negotiating a consent settlement when the regulations did not provide for any waiver. The court further denied the Commission's motion for a preliminary injunction and ordered the complaint dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

BRYANT, District Judge

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

This cause having come before the court on plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction, and on defendant's opposition thereto; defendant also having suggested pursuant to Rule 12(h)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that the Court now dismiss the action for lack of jurisdiction; upon consideration of the foregoing and of the entire record in the case, including the testimony and exhibits adduced at the hearing on July 19, 1971, the court makes the following Findings of Fact and Conclusion of Law:

---

*Not otherwise reported.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Defendant Federal Trade Commission (Commission) has promulgated rules providing for a consent order procedure prior to the institution of formal proceedings against a party where time, the nature of the proceeding and the public interest permit (Federal Trade Commission's Nonadjudicative Procedures, Sections 2.31–2.34, 16 CFR 2.31–2.34).

2. Section 2.31 of the said Nonadjudicative Procedures provides for notification to a proposed respondent of the Commission's intention to institute a formal proceeding, which notice is to be accompanied by a form of complaint the Commission intends to issue together with a proposed form of order. Under Section 2.32 the proposed respondent is afforded 10 days after service of the notice to advise the Commission whether he is interested in having the proceeding disposed of by entry of a consent order. If the party so desires, h will be afforded an opportunity to execute an appropriate agreement for consideration by the Commission. Section 2.33 contains various provisions relative to the form of and consideration by the Commission of a consent agreement.

3. Section 2.34(a) affords 30 days after the filing by a proposed respondent of his reply under Section 2.32 stating that he is interested in having the matter disposed of by entry of a consent order within which an executed agreement conforming with the requirements of Section 2.33 may be submitted to the Commission through the operating Bureau in which the matter is pending.

4. Section 2.34(c) provides that "if at any time it appears to the operating Bureau in which the matter is then pending that the execution of a satisfactory agreement is unlikely, such Bureau, after notification to the proposed respondents of its intention to do so, shall submit the matter to the Commission, together with any written offers of settlement which the proposed respondents desire to have the Commission consider. The Commission will thereupon take such action as may be appropriate."

5. On April 21, 1971, acting pursuant to Section 2.31, the Commission notified plaintiff of its intention to institute a formal proceeding against it, charging plaintiff Warner-Lambert Company's acquisition of Parke, Davis & Company to be a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18). On April 21, 1971, plaintiff Warner-Lambert Company (Warner-Lambert), in compliance with Section 2.32, advised the Commission of its interest in having the proceeding disposed of by the entry of a consent order.

4. On April 28, 1971, attorneys for Warner-Lambert met with members of the Staff of the Bureau of Competition of the FTC, at the offices of the Bureau, to discuss settlement of the matters by consent agreement. No specific settlement proposal was advanced by Warner-Lambert at this meeting. The Bureau advised Warner-Lambert that the burden of submitting a settlement offer was upon the company and that any settlement proposal should be submitted in formal form for forwarding to the Commission.

5. On May 17, 1971, plaintiff submitted to the Bureau of Competition a proposed consent agreement.

6. On May 20, 1971, representatives of plaintiff met with Mr. Alan S. Ward, the Director of that Bureau, and members of his staff to discuss plaintiff's submittal of May 17. At this meeting Mr. Ward advised plaintiff's representatives that the Bureau would submit the matter to the Commission during the week of May 24, 1971, and that, although the Bureau ordinarily did not tell an involved company what the Bureau's recommendation to the Commission would be, he thought it would be best in this case to state frankly that the proposal was unacceptable to the Bureau and that, because the offer did not afford a basis for further negotiations, the Bureau intended to recommend to the Commission that a complaint issue. After much discussion, attorneys for Warner-Lambert stated that they would like to submit another settlement proposal for consideration. In answer to the company's inquiries about an extension of the thirty day time limit for negotiations of a consent agreement, Mr. Ward stated that an extension would have to be sought by the company from the Commission itself, that the Bureau was without power to grant such an extension, but that in fact the Commission would not consider the Bureau's report for a couple of weeks because the Chairman of the Commission was out of the country.

7. On May 28, 1971, the Bureau submitted to the Commission plaintiff's settlement proposal together with the Bureau's report and adverse recommendation.

8. On June 10, 1971, Warner-Lambert submitted a new proposal to the Bureau. This proposal was viewed by attorneys for Warner-Lambert as being substantially different from the May 17 proposal.

9. On June 15, 1971, attorneys for Warner-Lambert met with Messrs. Ward, Garfield and Teetor of the Bureau to discuss the new proposal. In the course of discussions, the attorneys for Warner-Lambert proposed that additional studies, including studies by investment bankers, be made and submitted to the Commission in support of the revised proposal. The Bureau agreed that such additional studies would be helpful in clarifying the new proposal to the Commission. Mr. Ward was absent from this meeting briefly and in his absence, Mr. Teetor stated that he was not "buying" the new proposal. Mr. Alexander, attorney for Warner-Lambert, complained to Mr. Ward, upon the latter's return to the meeting, about Mr. Teetor's "hard-nosed" attitude. Mr. Ward replied that Mr. Teetor would make a report to Mr. Garfield, who would make a report to Mr. Ward, who would in turn make a report to the Commission. Mr. Ward stated that he would make his report to the Commission as soon as possible and that the Commission probably would act soon on whether to extend the consent order time or to issue a complaint. Mr. Ward reiterated that Warner-Lambert should direct any request for an extension of time to the Commission itself promptly. Upon request from Mr. Alexander that the Bureau join in the company's request for an extension, Mr. Ward refused to make such a commitment. Mr. Ward did not state what action the Bureau would recommend on the second proposal, as he had done at the May 20 meeting with respect to the first proposal.

10. On June 18, 1971, the Bureau forwarded plaintiff's second proposal to the Commission with the recommendation that it be rejected. In telephone communications with Warner-Lambert's attorneys shortly after June 18, Bureau representatives did not advise them that an adverse recommendation had in fact been forwarded.

11. By letter of June 21, 1971, Warner-Lambert requested that the Commission grant an extension of time to July 15, 1971, for Warner-Lambert to submit under the Consent Order Procedure a memorandum expanding its written proposal of June 10, 1971, for divestiture, together with financial and marketing data and related material in support of the proposal.

12. On June 29, 1971, the Commission voted to issue a formal complaint against plaintiff, charging a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The complaint was executed by the Commission Secretary on June 30 and was served upon plaintiff by mail on July 14, 1971.

13. Plaintiff filed its complaint and its motion for a preliminary injunction in this cause on July 12, 1971, alleging that the Commission's Bureau of Competition had failed, as required by Section 2.34(c) of the Nonadjudicative Procedures, to notify Warner-Lambert of its intention to submit the matter to the Commission together with the written offers of settlement which Warner-Lambert desired to have the Commission consider; and plaintiff requested the court to enter an injunction requiring the Commission to comply with its Rules, particularly Section 2.34(c), and to order withdrawn the Commission's decision of June 29, 1971, directing the issuance of a formal complaint against Warner-Lambert.

CONCLUSION OF LAW

The Commission and its staff complied with the Commission's Nonadjudicative Procedures, and in particular with Section 2.34(c) thereof. Therefore the court concludes that plaintiff has shown no likelihood of success on the merits of its complaint and the preliminary injunction must, accordingly, be denied.

It is undisputed that the thirty days provided by the rules for the submission of a proposed consent order agreement expired on May 24, 1971, that the Bureau not only notified plaintiff of its intention to submit the matter to the Commission but also advised plaintiff what its recommendation would be, and that in fact the matter was submitted on May 28, 1971. Plaintiff's position in a nutshell is that the Bureau of Competition "waived" the thirty day limitation when it continued to meet with plaintiff beyond the expiration of the thirty days, such a theory is impossible for the court to accept in view of the regulations themselves, which provide for no such waiver, in view of the testimony and affidavits to the effect that the Bureau staff repeatedly warned plaintiff that any extension of the thirty days would have to be sought from the Commission itself and that the Bureau was powerless to grant such an extension, and especially in the light of the testimony of Mr. Alexander, counsel for plaintiff before the Bureau, that he was worried all through the month of June about the fact that the time period for negotiations had in fact expired.

Furthermore, even apart from the court's conclusion that the Commission's rules governing consent order procedures have in fact been complied with, the court concludes that the complaint in this case fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. On the one hand, the procedural infirmity in the administrative proceedings alleged by plaintiff does not appear to be of the fundamental "due process" nature that warranted district court intervention in Amos Treat & Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 306 F.2d 260, 113 U.S. App. D.C. 100 (1962). On the other hand, the procedural infirmity alleged is one "which can always be judicially reviewed when the story is fully told and recorded," Wolf Corporation v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 317 F.2d 139, 115 U.S. App. D.C. 75 (1963).

ORDER

Upon consideration of plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction and defendants' opposition thereto and the entire record in the case, oral hearing having been held on July 19, 1971, it is by the court this 10th day of August, 1971,

Ordered, That the motion for a preliminary injunction is denied, and it is further Ordered, That the complaint is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

UNITED STATES v. GEORGE R. HOFFMANN AND ROYCE GEORGE HOFFMANN*

No. T-CR-1592—F.T.C. Docket 8136

(United States District Court, District of Kansas. Sept. 1, 1971)

In a contempt proceeding instituted by the United States two officers of an aircraft mechanics trade school were found guilty of contempt of court by violating an injunction of the court. The injunction violated prohibited practices barred by an FTC order by falsely representing that (1) they offer employment, (2) they sell their courses only to those with special qualifications, (3) on the job training is provided students, (4) their graduating students are in demand, (5) employment with airline companies is guaranteed, (6) graduates have been placed with aircraft or airline companies. The officers contended that the court's injunction was entered to enjoin acts prohibited by the terms of a consent decree and no findings of fact was ever made and no evidence produced to sustain order or injunction. However, such a decree has sanction of the court when entered and is given the same effect as any other judgment.

For petitioner: Robert J. Roth, U.S. Atty., and Edward H. Funston, Asst. U.S. Atty., Topeka, Kan.

For defendant: Stephen B. Millin, Kansas City, Mo., for Royce George Hoffmann, Douglas Lancaster, Overland Park, Kan., for George R. Hoffmann.

TEMPLAR, District Judge:

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

STATEMENT

This contempt proceeding was instituted by the plaintiff, United States of America, when it filed a petition in this Court for an order to show cause why respondents George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann, President and Vice President, respectively, of Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for violating the provisions of an injunction entered by a judgment of this Court on March 17, 1967, sustaining an application of the United States of America at the request of the Federal Trade Commission because of alleged violations by respondents of a cease and desist order entered by that agency on May 12, 1961.

---

*Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. (1971 Trade Cases) 73,721 at p. 90,996. For Commission case see 58 F.T.C 730.

[Injunction]

The pertinent provisions of this Court's judgment are as follows:

That defendants, their representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, or distribution of home study and correspondence courses, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, are enjoined from;

1. Representing, directly or by implication, that:

(a) Defendants offer employment when in fact, employment is not offered.

(b) Defendants will sell their course only to those who have special qualifications.

(c) Defendants are an aircraft manufacturing or airline company.

(d) Defendants give purchasers of their courses on the job training in an aircraft or airline plant.

(e) Persons who satisfactorily complete defendants' courses are in demand in the aerodynamics and aeronautics fields, unless such is a fact.

(f) Defendants guarantee employment with aircraft and airline companies to those that satisfactorily complete their courses.

(g) Defendants have placed persons who have satisfactorily completed their courses in positions with aircraft or airline companies.

(h) Defendants give actual training by visits of their instructors or teachers to the homes of persons purchasing the courses.

(i) Defendants will employ persons who have satisfactorily completed the courses in their plant.

(j) Defendants refund the purchase price of their courses to persons who take and fail to pass the same, unless such refunds are actually made.

2. Using pictures of plants or other facilities, in connection with the solicitation of the sale of their courses, which they do not own or misrepresenting in any manner the plant or other facilities which they may own.

3. Using the words "Aircraft Company" as a part of any trade or corporate name under which they do business.

[Jury Trial Demand]

Respondents demanded a jury trial but the Court determined that no penalty for such a violation is prescribed by law and that the penalty assessed, if respondents were found guilty, would not exceed a fine of $500.00 or imprisonment for not more than six months, and would therefore be classified as a petty offense. Under such circumstances, the Court ruled that respondents were not entitled to a jury trial and denied respondents' request for one. Frank v. United States, 395 U.S. 147.

The defendant, George R. Hoffmann, requested that counsel be appointed to represent him because he demonstrated that he was financially unable to employ an attorney or provide an adequate defense to the charges alleged against him. Counsel was appointed for him.

An evidentiary hearing was held on the charges, though the Court may adopt such mode of trial as, in its discretion, it sees fit, in order to determine the fact of contempt, provided due regard is had on the essential rules that obtain in the matter of contempts. Gompers v. Buck, 221 U.S. 418, 432. In such proceedings a respondent is entitled to the presumption of innocence and must be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Yates v. U.S., 315 F.2d 718 (10 Cir.). Such presumption was afforded respondents and proof of violation of the Court injunction, beyond a reasonable doubt, was required.

The injunction which was allegedly violated by respondents was designed to prevent fraud upon the public by false, deceptive and fraudulent representations and practices. The record in this case is saturated with proof of fraud, scarcely denied, and convinces, beyond doubt, that respondents countenanced and permitted their agents and employees and indeed did themselves mislead and deceive members of the public who were ensnared by their deceptive practices in violation of the Court's injunction. Respondents failed to produce any of their salesmen or representatives to refute the evidence of fraud practiced by them. Respondents made no efforts to do so. The government made vigorous efforts to locate and produce some of them but none could be located by officers of the United States.

[Prior Consent Decree]

Respondents argue vigorously that the Court's injunction was entered to enjoin acts prohibited by the terms of a consent decree and that no determination of facts were ever made and no evidence was ever produced to sustain the order or the injunction. Such a decree has sanction of the Court when entered and is given the same force and effect as any other judgment. U.S. v. Swift, 286 U.S. 106, 115. Nor is the claim of respondents that they acted on advice of counsel a defense, U.S. v. Goldfarb, 167 F.2d 735, though this may be considered in mitigation of punishment.

The conduct and attitude of the respondents in carrying on their teaching and training courses compel a conclusion that respondents never intended in good faith to comply with the Court's injunction issued after they had failed to desist their fraudulent practices when ordered to do so by the Federal Trade Commission.

Respondent Royce George Hoffmann has offered a portion of the transcript of proceedings held in the Johnson County, Kansas Court in Case No. 46263, State of Kansas, ex rel. v. Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Inc., attached to his letter of June 4, 1971, and marked Royce George Hoffmann's Exhibit "G", purporting to be a portion of testimony of Royce George Hoffmann at the trial of that case. The evidence is cumulative but the objections to it are overruled and it will be received and is considered in evidence.

Likewise, defendant George R. Hoffmann makes an offer of proof, (Doc. 58), in which a portion of the transcript in the same case is offered by him. The objections to this evidence are overruled and it will be received and will be considered in evidence.

Also, there appears in the record, submitted by plaintiff, an authenticated copy of extracts from files of the Federal Trade Commission (See Exhibit "A" to Doc. 67) relating to the original proceedings, files and records in the original proceedings out of which the case arose. In a contempt proceeding this Court may take judicial notice of these items. See cases cited in O'Malley v. U.S., 128 F.2d 676 at 687.

After considering all the evidence, the arguments and briefs submitted by the parties and upon being fully advised in the premises, the Court makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Respondents George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann are charged with criminal contempt of this Court, by reason of their alleged violations of numerous provisions of an injunction entered by this Court on March 17, 1967, in United States v. George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann, Civil Action No. KC-2224. The March 17, 1967 Judgment recites in the opening explanatory paragraph that the Judgment was consented to by the attorneys for the United States and the attorneys for defendants without a trial and without the adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and without any admission by the United States or the defendants with respect to any issue.

2. United States v. George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann, Civil Action No. KC–2224, was an action to assess civil penalties against respondents for numerous and persistent violations of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order, entered on May 12, 1961, Docket No. 8163 before the Federal Trade Commission. The cease and desist order directed respondents to cease and desist from engaging in certain unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1).

3. The purpose of the injunction entered by this Court on March 17, 1967, in Civil Action No. KC–2224, was to stop finally and decisively the fraudulent and deceptive practices of respondents delineated in the Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order.

4. At all times material to the present action, respondents George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann.

a. were President and Vice President respectively of the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute;

b. were each members of the three man board of directors of the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, the third member being George's wife, Emma;

c. have directed and controlled the acts and business practices of the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute;

d. trading and doing business as the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Inc. have operated a trade school offering, inter alia, courses in the fields of jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems;

e. trading and doing business as the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Inc., have employed, trained and supervised the activities of a number of sales representatives or agents who sold defendants' courses of instruction in various states of the United States. Among the sales representatives or agents so employed, at all times that such employment was relevant to the present action, were Lee L. Sanders, James R. Easley, W. M. Jamison and James Presley.

5. In reports submitted to the Secretary of State of the State of Kansas, the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Inc. was stated by representatives to be a wholly owned subsidiary of the Hoffmann Aircraft Company, Inc.

6. The referenced injunction entered by this Court on March 17, 1967, enjoins respondents from making certain representations or committing certain acts or practices in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of home study or correspondence courses.

7. Prior to March 17, 1967, the date that this Court's injunction was entered, respondents' course of instruction in jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems was offered primarily through the medium of home study or correspondence lessons; however, sometime prior to March 17, 1967, respondents had begun to offer resident training.

8. Subsequent to March 17, 1967, respondents at least partially in an attempt to effect colorable evasion of the technical letter of the injunction of this Court, altered the form of materials used in connection with their course of instruction in jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems to emphasize the residence training aspects thereof.

9. At no time did respondents petition this Court for a modification, clarification or construction of the referenced injunction.

10. Although the jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course offered by respondents subsequent to the entry of this Court's injunction purported to include a residence training requirement, the "course of study" offered by the defendants still possessed many indicia of a home study or correspondence course, and indeed, home study or correspondence lessons have remained an integral part of the respondents' operation.

11. Respondents caused to be prepared and printed fifty correspondence lesson booklets, which were made available to all students enrolled in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems courses. Each booklet contained a test, covering the material presented in the booklet, and all test pages were perforated to facilitate their removal from the lesson booklets.

12. Respondents, by their representations and statements to students and by their correspondence with students who signed respondents' enrollment contracts, strongly encouraged the students, prior to reporting for residence training, to study the lesson booklets, complete the test in the rear of each lesson booklet and return the same to respondents for grading, in addressed envelopes provided by the respondents for such purpose.

13. It was respondents' modus operandi to mail the first two or three lesson booklets to every student accepted for enrollment in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, at or shortly after the time that the student was accepted. If and when the completed tests from these booklets were submitted to the school, they were graded and subsequently returned to the student along with several succeeding lesson booklets and another addressed envelope. This process was repeated until the student completed the fifty-lesson course, reported for resident training or lost interest and stopped submitting completed lessons.

14. Almost all students enrolled in defendants' jet propulsion and airplane power systems course received and completed respondents' first two or three lesson booklets; and, some of respondents' students received and completed upwards of 35 lesson booklets.

15. Respondents had a specific employee or employees who mailed respondents' lesson booklets to students, received completed tests from students, graded the tests and returned the graded tests with new lesson booklets to the students.

16. Respondents maintained a record card for each of their jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems students, on which respondents' course was described as consisting of "320 hours [sometimes 1000 hours] 50 lessons." On this card, respondents kept a record of the numbers of lesson booklets mailed to the student, the numbers of completed tests submitted by the student, the grade received by the student on each test and the dates on which lesson booklets were mailed and completed tests received by the school.

17. Respondents' form contract states that respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course consist of "320 hours of shop training including Fifty Lesson course."

18. Respondents, as stated in Government Exhibit 79, encouraged their students to work on correspondence lessons and make monthly payments before reporting to Overland Park, Kansas, for resident training. Moreover, respondents expressly instructed their students, in a form acceptance letter, not to report for resident training until they had received a confirmed class date.

19. In a prior proceeding, State of Kansas v. Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Inc., George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann, tried in the District Court of Johnson County, Kansas, Division No. IV, Case No. 46263, decided March 18, 1971, George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann each testified that their jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course was a correspondence course.

20. Respondents supplied their sales representatives or agents, including Lee Sanders, James I. Easley, W. M. Jamison and J. Presley, with visual sales aids (see Government Exhibits 52 and 129), contracts and other forms.

21. Respondents' sales representatives or agents, in soliciting students for respondents' courses, were expressly authorized to place advertisements in local newspapers.

22. By providing the above-named sales representatives or agents with forms of contract, advertising brochures, and other materials, by continuing their employment and by ratifying and/or adopting their acts, the respondents clothed the said sales representatives or agents with full color of authority as the respondents' authorized agents or representatives.

23. On several occasions, subsequent to March 17, 1967, Lee L. Sanders, soliciting students for respondents' courses, placed advertisements in the "help wanted" columns of various local newspapers, which advertisements represented directly, or by implication, half truth, and nondisclosure of material information that:

a. respondents offered employment, when in fact employment was not offered;

b. respondents provided purchasers of their courses on-the-job training in an aircraft or airline plant.

24. On numerous occasions, subsequent to March 17, 1967, respondents or their duly authorized agents or representatives tendered to prospective students in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, a multicolored circular, Government Exhibit 52, representing that respondents have placed graduates of their school in positions with named aircraft or airline companies.

25. Graduates of respondents, jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course were not placed with many of the companies named in respondents' multicolored circular, Government Exhibit 52.

26. Respondents' form acceptance letter, sent to almost every student who signed respondents' enrollment contract subsequent to March 17, 1967, represents by implication that respondents sell their courses only to persons who have special qualifications. In fact, there is no evidence of any instance where respondents refused to accept students who would sign respondents' enrollment contract and could make respondents' standard down payment of $187.50.

27. Respondents' form contract contains the following language in emphatic boldfaced type: "GUARANTEED EMPLOYMENT" and "FREE LIFETIME PLACEMENT SERVICE."

28. Respondents' correspondence lesson booklets, numbers 3, 4, 5, 6, 24, 25, 27, 28, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, and 50, the covers of which bear the trade name "Hoffmann Aircraft Company," were distributed to numerous students of respondents' school, subsequent to March 17, 1967.

29. Subsequent to March 17, 1967, many prospective students in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course were required or requested to complete respondents' confidential qualification chart, representing by implication that respondents sold their courses only to persons who had special qualifications.

30. In a letter addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Boies, dated October 31, 1969, Government Exhibit 77, George R. Hoffmann represented:

a. contrary to fact, that graduates of respondents' school were in demand in the aerodynamics and aeronautics fields;

b. that respondents had been successfully placing all of the graduates of their school in positions with airline or aircraft companies.

31. On or about March 25, 1970, in Danville, Virginia, Lee L. Sanders orally represented to Beverly Ray Marshall, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that respondents sold their courses only to persons who had special qualifications.

32. On or about March 25, 1970, in Danville, Virginia, Lee L. Sanders orally represented to James L. Hall, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that respondents:

a. offered employment when in fact employment was not offered;

b. would guarantee him employment with an aircraft or airline company upon completion of their course.

33. On or about January 10, 1970, in Huntsville, Alabama, James R. Easley orally represented to Billy Ray Hendrix, a prospective student in respondents jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that after completion of respondents' course, the respondents would get him a job with an airline and place him with an airline.

34. On or about August 5, 1969, in Asheville, North Carolina, James R. Easley orally represented to William C. Suttles, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that respondents would guarantee him employment with an aircraft or airline company upon completion of their course.

35. On or about February 3, 1969, in Huntsville, Alabama, Lee L. Sanders orally represented to Terry J. Hyatt, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that respondents guaranteed him a job with an airline company upon completion of their course.

36. On or about November 3, 1968, in Rayville, Louisiana, W. M. Jamison orally represented to Ralph Boies, a prospective student in respondent's jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, and his parents, that respondents picked special students to take their course.

37. On or about October 20, 1968, in Overland Park, Kansas, George R. Hoffmann orally represented to Len E. Noah, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that respondents guaranteed lifetime employment in the airline industry to graduates of the respondents' school.

38. On or about September 16, 1968, in Overland Park, Kansas, George R. Hoffmann orally represented to James L. Jones, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course, that the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute had placed many of its graduates with Trans World Airlines.

39. On or about June 27, 1968, in Greenville, Tennessee, James Presley orally represented to James A. Gouge, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course,

a. contrary to fact, that there was a large demand for graduates of the respondents' school;

b. that he was guaranteed a job with the airlines after he completed the respondents' course of study;

c. that while attending respondents' school, he would be given on-the-job training at an airport with one of the major airlines;

d. that respondents' graduates had been placed with the Aeronautics and Space Administration, and with every major airline in the country.

40. On or about June 17, 1968, in Bristol, Virginia, Lee L. Sanders orally represented to Ervin H. Eads, a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course,

a. contrary to fact, that there was a great demand for graduates of the respondents' school;

b. that the respondents would place him in any area of the country that he chose to work as a jet mechanic.

41. On or about March 15, 1968, in Middlesboro, Kentucky, Lee L. Sanders orally represented to Carl Givins, Jr., a prospective student in respondents' jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course,

a. contrary to fact, that there was a great demand for graduates of the respondents' school;

b. that graduates of the respondents' school had been placed with all the major airlines in the United States;

c. contrary to fact, that the respondents had the most advanced jet training school in the United States, which included all the modern engines and equipment and a campus consisting of several hundred acres.

42. On or about August 5, 1967, in Columbia, Tennessee, Lee L. Sanders orally represented to Terry Locke, a prospective student in respondent's jet propulsion and airplane power plant systems course,

a. that respondents sold their courses only to those who had special qualifications;

b. contrary to fact, that as a result of the extreme demand for aircraft mechanics, he would be able to go to work for any airline of his choice after taking the training offered at the respondents' school;

c. that he would be given on-the-job training while attending the respondents' school;

d. contrary to fact, that the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute was a large school with dormitories and various buildings, and a large college-type campus.

43. Respondents authorized sales representatives or agents, in making the representations or committing the acts and practices set forth hereinbefore, were acting within the scope of their authority or employment.

44. The acts complained of in the petitioner's petition are qualitatively the very same acts for which the respondents were first given remonstrance by the Federal Trade Commission on the 12th day of May, 1961, and on the basis of which civil penalties were later assessed against the respondents.

45. George R. Hoffmann, and Royce Hoffmann have engaged in the business of operating a trade school in the State of Kansas and have offered courses in the field of jet propulsion, airplane power plant systems, electronics, airline training for clerks and stewardesses, and other curriculum related to the aircraft, airline and electronic training.

46. The Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Inc. was an FAA-approved school at all times relevant herein and that the respondents were licensed by the State of Kansas to solicit prospective students to attend their school

From the foregoing facts, the Court makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Whether particular acts are proscribed by an injunction depends largely on the specific provisions of the decree or order, construed in light of its purpose and the mischief it was designed to remedy. Colorable observance of the technical letter of an injunction will not suffice if by some connivance, evasive scheme or subterfuge its purpose is being undermined.

2. The Court in a criminal contempt proceeding will take judicial notice of all orders in the civil proceeding out of which it grows.

3. In a criminal contempt proceeding before the Court without a jury, the Court sits as trier of the facts as well as the law, and in passing upon the alleged contempt, may draw such inferences from circumstances as a jury might legitimately have drawn.

4. The matter of proving criminal intent in a criminal contempt case is not materially different from any other type of criminal case. Since there is seldom direct evidence of criminal intent, it must be inferred from all the circumstances.

5. A corporation or other business entity can function only by and through its principal officers, agents and employees.

6. Although George R. Hoffmann was the prime mover behind the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute, Royce George Hoffmann acted as a knowledgeable, willing, and, therefore, culpable agent of both the Hoffmann Aircraft Institute and his co-respondent, George R. Hoffmann.

7. The Court finds from the evidence, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that each of the respondents had the necessary criminal intent to and did willfully and contemptuously violate the injunction of this Court entered in the case of the United States v. George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann, Civil Action No. KC–2224, in the particulars set forth in the following paragraph.

8. On the specific occasions noted in the preceding findings of fact, respondents George R. Hoffmann and Royce George Hoffmann, their representatives, agents or employees, have directly or through corporate or other devices in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of home study and correspondence courses, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act,

a. Represented directly or by implication that:

(1) Respondents offer employment when, in fact, employment is not offered, in violation of paragraph II–1(a) of the injunction of this Court;

(2) Respondents sell their course only to those who have special qualifications, in violation of paragraph II–1(b) of the injunction of this Court;

(3) Respondents give purchasers of their courses on-the-job training in an aircraft or airline plant, in violation of paragraph II–1(d) of the injunction of this Court;

(4) Persons who satisfactorily complete respondents' courses are in demand in the aerodynamics and aeronautics fields, when such is not the fact, in violation of paragraph II–1(e) of the injunction of this Court;

(5) Respondents guarantee employment with aircraft and airline companies to those that satisfactorily complete their courses, in violation of paragraph II–1(f) of the injunction of this Court;

(6) Respondents have placed persons who have satisfactorily completed their courses in positions with aircraft or airline companies, in violation of paragraph II–1(g) of the injunction of this Court.

b. Used pictures of plants or other facilities in connection with the solicitation of the sale of their courses, which they did not own or misrepresented the plant or other facilities which they did own, in violation of paragraph II–2 of the injunction of this Court.

c. Used the words "Aircraft Company" as a part of a trade or corporate name under which they did business, in violation of paragraph II–3 of the injunction of this Court.

9. The respondents George R. Hoffmannn and Royce George Hoffman are guilty as charged in the Petition to Show Cause, beyond a reasonable doubt.

10. In a criminal contempt proceeding brought under 18 U.S.C. 401(3), which is being treated as a petty offense, the maximum penalty that may be imposed on any individual respondent is six months' imprisonment or a fine of $500.00.

STERLING DRUG, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 24878—F.T.C. Docket 8797

(Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit. Sept. 22, 1971)

1. COMMISSION NEED NOT DISCLOSE DOCUMENTS TO ONE DRUG COMPANY REGARDING ANOTHER DRUG COMPANY'S ACQUISITION

Although Federal Trade Commission should have stated its reasons for denying diversified drug company's request for disclosure of documents in Commission's possession concerning Commission approval of another drug company's acquisition of a company, case would not be remanded to Commission for statement of the reason for its denial where the reasons for denial were fairly obvious and the drug company had suffered no hardship by virtue of the failure to state.

2. FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT REQUIRES AGENCIES TO DISCLOSE IDENTIFIABLE RECORDS NOT SPECIFICALLY EXEMPT

Purpose of Freedom of Information Act is to increase citizen's access to government records and to require federal agencies upon proper request to make available to any person identifiable records not specifically exempt.

3. TRIAL COURT'S STATEMENT ABOUT INTERNAL WORKING PAPERS OF FTC WAS SUFFICIENT TO SHOW THEY WERE WITHIN THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT EXEMPTION

Trial court's statement that documents in questions were "internal work papers in which opinions are expressed and policies formulated and recommended" was sufficient statement of reason for concluding that the Federal Trade Commission documents for which discovery was sought were within Freedom of Information Act exemption for "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency."

4. REMAND TO TRIAL COURT TO CONSIDER DELETING PORTIONS OF DOCUMENTS TO MAKE THEM AVAILABLE UNDER FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

Action by diversified drug company against Federal Trade Commission to enjoin the Commission from withholding as confidential certain records of the Commission with respect to another case which drug company contended was similar to its own would be remanded to trial court to consider possibility of deleting portions of the documents and thus remove them from "inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda" exemption from Freedom of Information Act and for determination of whether there were appendices or statements of fact which were clearly subject to disclosure.

5. TEST OF DISCLOSURE IS WHETHER "A PRIVATE PARTY—NOT NECESSARILY THE APPLICANT" WOULD ROUTINELY BE ENTITLED TO THE MEMORANDA

Disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act does not depend on needs of particular litigants as the correct test for determining which documents are not exempt as "intra-agency or inter-agency memoranda;" the test is whether "a private party—not necessarily the applicant" would routinely be entitled to the memoranda through discovery process in litigation with the agency.

---

*Reported in 450 F.2d 698. For case before the Commission see 80 F.T.C. 477. Case dismissed as moot on April 18, 1972.

6. MEMORANDA OF FTC REGARDING CORPORATE ACQUISITION WERE WITHIN THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT EXEMPTION FROM DISCOVERY

Memoranda of Federal Trade Commission with respect to approval of corporate acquisition of merger were within Freedom of Information Act exemption from discovery for inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency.

7. INSURANCE THAT AGENCY ENJOY FREE FLOW OF IDEAS IS PRIMARY PURPOSE FOR EXEMPTION FROM FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

Primary purpose for exemption from Freedom of Information Act of administrative agency memoranda is to insure that federal agencies enjoy free flow of ideas essential to making of reasoned decision.

8. MEMORANDA OF COMMISSION'S STAFF CONCERNING DECISION-MAKING FUNCTION IN ONE CASE NOT SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE TO LITIGANTS IN ANOTHER CASE

Memoranda prepared by staff of Federal Trade Commission with respect to Commission's decision-making function in one case were not subject to disclosure to litigants in another case pending before the Commission.

9. ANY COMMISSION MEMORANDA INDICATING REASONS FOR DECISION IN PRIOR CORPORATE ACQUISITION CASE IS SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE TO LITIGANTS IN PENDING CASE

Any memoranda prepared by Federal Trade Commission staff or by an individual Commissioner which specifically indicated that reasons for its decisions in prior corporate acquisition case were spelled out in one or more of other inter-agency memoranda would be subject to disclosure to litigants in pending corporate acquisition case in order to prevent development of secret law within the Commission.

10. COMMISSIONERS' MEMORANDA IN PRIOR ACQUISITION CASE NOT SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE TO LITIGANTS IN PENDING CASE

Memoranda prepared by individual Commissioners of the Federal Trade Commission prior to issuance of Commission order in prior corporate acquisition case were not subject to disclosure to litigants in corporate acquisition case pending before the Commission.

11. MEMORANDA FROM COMMISSION AS WHOLE INTERPRETING LAW IN PRIOR CASE ARE SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE TO PENDING CASE LITIGANTS

Memoranda issued by the Federal Trade Commission as documents emanating from the Commission as a whole, which set forth the interpretations and law which it actually applied in prior corporate acquisition case were subject to disclosure to litigants in corporate acquisition case pending before the Commission.

12. BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL RECORDS SUBMITTED TO FTC DURING CORPORATE ACQUISITION APPROVAL NOT SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE IN ANOTHER ACQUISITION

Business and financial information submitted by corporations to Federal Trade Commission during course of corporate acquisition approval matter before the Commission were within Freedom of Information Act exemption for trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential and were not subject to disclosure to litigants in another corporate acquisition matter pending before Commission.

13. EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES IS TO FACILITATE JUDICIAL REVIEW AND ALERT AGENCY TO CORRECT EARLIER MISTAKES

Purpose of doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies is to avoid premature interruption of the administrative process and to facilitate judicial review and to give agency opportunity discover and correct its earlier mistakes.

14. ONLY WHERE AGENCY HAS CLEARLY VIOLATED CONSTITUTIONAL OR STATUTORY RIGHT MAY PARTY BYPASS ESTABLISHED AVENUES FOR REVIEW

A party may bypass established avenues for review within administrative agency only when the issue in question cannot be raised from later order of the agency or where the agency has very clearly violated important constitutional or statutory right.

15. WHERE ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES WERE NOT EXHAUSTED LITIGANT IS NOT ENTITLED TO RAISE CONTENTION BEFORE DISTRICT COURT

Where litigant in corporate acquisition approval proceeding before Federal Trade Commission had not exhausted its administrative remedies, litigant was not entitled to raise contention before district court that it would be denied fair hearing on the approval because of the Commission's refusal to disclose certain documents relating to another corporate acquisition which the Commission had previously approved.

(The syllabus, with substituted caption, is taken from 450 F.2d 698)

On appeal from Commission's decision against disclosing documents in a prior case Court remanded case to trial court to consider possibility of deleting portions of documents and thus remove them from "inter-agency and intra-agency memoranda" exemption from Freedom of Information Act. Remanded with directions.

Mr. Lionel Kestenbaum, Washington, D.C., with whom Messrs. Herbert A. Bergson and Murray J. Belman, Washington, D.C., were on the brief, for appellant.

Mr. Robert V. Zener, Atty., Department of Justice, with whom Mr. Thomas A. Flannery, U.S. Atty., was on the brief, for appellees. Messrs. Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Alvin L. Berman, and Robert E. Duncan, Attys., Federal Trade Commission, also entered appearances for appellees.

Messrs. Jerrold G. Van Cise, New York City, and Donald J. Mulvihill, Washington, D.C., field a brief on behalf of Miles Laboratories, Inc., as amicus curiae urging affirmance.

Before BAZELON, Chief Judge, and TAMM and WILKEY, Circuit Judges.

TAMM, Circuit Judge:

In a case now in progress before the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter "the Commission"), Sterling Drug, Inc. (hereinafter "Sterling") has been charged with a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1964), in connection with its acquisition of Lehn & Fink Products Corporation (hereinafter "Lehn & Fink"). In the course of the proceeding the Commission denied Sterling's request for certain documents which it felt were essential to the presentation of its case. On this appeal Sterling seeks reversal of a District Court decision upholding that order. It claims that the documents are subject to disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (Supp. IV 1969), and, in the alternative, that it will be denied the full and fair hearing required by the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq. (1964) if it is not granted access to the documents.

I. History of the Case

Sterling manufactures, distributes and sells drug products, household consumer products, and cosmetics throughout the United States. (J.A. 41). In 1966 Sterling acquired Lehn & Fink, whose primary products are "Lysol" brand disinfectants and deodorizers. Lehn & Fink also produces health and beauty aids, acne aids, and external antiseptics, among other products.

On April 12, 1968, the Commission served upon Sterling a complaint alleging that its acquisition of Lehn & Fink violated section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1964). The complaint charged that the acquisition would have an adverse competitive effect in the markets for household liquids and aerosol disinfectants and deodorizers. There were no allegations of anticompetitive consequences in other fields.

Shortly after the complaint against Sterling was issued, another case involving a diversified drug company came before the Commission. This was the proposed acquisition of S.O.S. Company (hereinafter "S.O.S.") by Miles Laboratories, Inc. (hereinafter "Miles"), a direct competitor of Sterling. General Foods Corporation (hereinafter "General Foods") had originally acquired S.O.S., but it had been ordered to divest itself of the company in an earlier proceeding[1] and on July 8, 1968, filed with the Commission an application for approval of Miles as the purchaser. Three days later the Commission approved the divestiture plan, stating that it had "entirely relied upon the information submitted by General Foods and its approval

---

[1] General Foods Corp., 68 F.T.C. 581 (Dkt., 8600, 1966), aff'd sub nom. General Foods Corp. v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936 (3d Cir. 1967), cert. den., 391 U.S. 919, 88 S.Ct. 1805. 20 L.Ed.2d 657 (1968).

[was] conditioned upon this information being accurate and complete." (J.A. 8.) On September 27, 1968, the Commission received notice that the merger had been consummated.

In the course of these proceedings Miles twice wrote the Commission requesting that certain documents which it and General Foods had submitted in support of the Miles-S.O.S. merger be considered confidential. Then, on October 25, 1968, General Foods, acting for itself and Miles, formally requested confidential treatment of these documents. The documents were resubmitted as part of the General Foods Final Compliance Report, and on November 29, 1968, the Commission notified General Foods that they would be classified confidential.

Believing that the Miles-S.O.S. merger was very similar to its merger with Lehn & Fink and that the Commission's approval of the former merger was therefore dispositive of the case against it, Sterling petitioned the Commission to close the file on the proposed complaint issued to it and requested a hearing on this petition. On December 2, 1968, the Commission notified Sterling that both its petition to close the file and its request for a hearing were denied.

The Commission eventually issued a formal complaint against Sterling on August 7, 1969. This complaint charged that the Sterling-Lehn & Fink merger would have anti-competitive effects in three product lines in addition to the one specified in the proposed complaint—household deodorizers. The three additional product lines were health and beauty aids, proprietary drugs and personal care products, and acne aids and external antiseptics.

In its answer to this complaint Sterling asserted two affirmative defenses. It first reiterated its contention that the Commission's approval of the Miles-S.O.S. merger demonstrated that its acquisition of Lehn & Fink did not violate the Clayton Act. Second, it charged that the Commission's issuance of the formal complaint was:

> arbitrary and capricious and a denial of due process of law because the drastic revisions and change in theory from the proposed complaint constituted a deliberate attempt to avoid the consequences of the Miles-S.O.S. determination, and to accord diametrically opposing treatment to substantially identical transactions.

(Brief for appellant at 9.)

To obtain information regarding these defenses, Sterling moved for production and disclosure of the following documents in the Commission's files:

1. All documents submitted to the Commission by General Foods and others concerning the sale of S.O.S. to Miles which were not in the public record.

2. All documents prepared by the Commission or its employees giving findings or reasons for its approval of the Miles-S.O.S. merger or otherwise commenting on this merger.
3. All documents prepared by the Commission or its employees comparing the two mergers.
4. All documents prepared by the Commission or its employees "reflecting the Commission's reasons for (a) limiting its original proposed complaint to the grounds asserted therein or (b) changing the grounds for challenging the subject acquisition from those asserted in its original proposed complaint to those contained in the present complaint."

Sterling's request for these documents was based on the Commission's rules and the Freedom of Information Act.

The Hearing Examiner struck Sterling's affirmative defenses and denied its request for production of documents on the ground that the defenses to which these documents related were no longer in the case. Although he noted that a claim had been made under the Freedom of Information Act, he did not rule upon this claim.

[1] Sterling applied to the Commission for leave to appeal these actions on the part of the Examiner, but this application was denied. In its opinion the Commission said:

> The hearing examiner is responsible for framing the issues to be tried and permitting discovery based upon those issues. At present, the examiner is in the process of defining and delineating the issues prior to discovery. By striking respondent's "affirmative defenses" as separate issues, the examiner has not eliminated the substance of those alleged defenses from the hearing. Nothing in the examiner's ruling has foreclosed respondent from arguing any point he wishes to raise concerning the Commission's action in approving Miles Laboratories' acquisition of S.O.S.

(Brief for Appellees at 6.) Like the Hearing Examiner, the Commission did not pass on Sterling's claim under the Freedom of Information Act.[2]

Sterling then requested that the Hearing Examiner include in the contested issues of law and fact a number of issues exploring the similarities between the Miles-S.O.S. and Sterling-Lehn & Fink mergers and also requested admissions from the Commission relating to these issues. The Examiner denied both requests, and the Commission once again denied Sterling permission to appeal his decision. Its rationale was as follows:

---

[2] Sterling charges that this failure was a violation of section 5(e) of the Administrative Procedure Act; 5 U.S.C. § 555 (e) (1964), which provides: Prompt notice shall be given of the denial in whole or in part of a written application, petition, or other request of an interested person made in connection with any agency proceeding. Except in affirming a prior denial or when the denial is self-explanatory, the notice shall be accompanied by a brief statement of the grounds for denial. Although we feel the Commission should have stated its reasons for denying Sterling's request, it does appear that the reasons for denial were fairly obvious and that Sterling has suffered no hardship by virtue of the Commission's failure in this regard. It would therefore serve no useful purpose to remand the case to the Commission for a statement of the reasons for its denial.

> The issue in this proceeding is whether [Sterling] has violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, not the degree, if any, to which the facts here resemble the facts in the Miles-S.O.S. acquisition. [Sterling], therefore, is not entitled to discovery pertaining to the Commission's records or actions in that matter. (J.A. 39.)

On July 7, 1970, Sterling filed a complaint in the District Court in which it sought to enjoin the Commission from withholding the documents described above. In its complaint Sterling contended that the Commission's apparent conclusion that the Miles-S.O.S. decision was not particularly relevant to its case and its consequent refusal to disclose documents related to that earlier decision would necessarily deny Sterling a fair hearing. It also charged that production of the documents was required under the Freedom of Information Act. The Commission filed a motion to dismiss the complaint, or, in the alternative, for summary judgment, and Miles moved to intervene as a defendant.

The District Court judge did not pass on Miles' motion to intervene. On the merits of the case he first concluded, on the basis of his in camera inspection of the documents in question, that they were exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. Next, he held that the issue of denial of a fair hearing was not properly before the court because Sterling had failed to exhaust its administrative remedies with regard to this issue. As a result of these rulings, he granted the Commission's motion for summary judgment. This appeal followed.

II. Sterling's Claim Under the Freedom of Information Act

[2] The Freedom of Information Act was intended "to increase the citizen's access to government records." Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 22, 25, 424 F.2d 935, 938, cert den., 400 U.S. 824, 91 S.Ct. 46, 27 L.Ed.2d 52 (1970). Under the Act federal agencies are required upon proper request to make available to "any person" identifiable records not specifically exempt, 5 U.S.C. §552(a) (3) (Supp. IV 1969). To insure that the disclosure requirements are liberally construed, Congress provided for de novo review in the District Court whenever an agency fails to produce documents, with the agency having the burden of proving that the documents are exempt.

The Commission contends that two exemptions to the disclosure requirements of § 552(a) (3) are applicable in this case. The first of these is the exemption for "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (5)

(Supp. IV 1969). According to the Commission, its memoranda containing analyses and recommendations with regard to the Miles-S.O.S. and Sterling-Lehn & Fink cases fall within this exemption. The District Court agreed with the Commission, concluding as follows:

> [These documents] are not "purely factual reports and scientific studies" (Bristol-Myers Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 22, 26, 424 F.2d 935, 939 (1970)), but are in fact "those internal working papers in which opinions are expressed and policies formulated and recommended." Bristol-Myers, supra, citing Ackerly v. Ley, 137 U.S.App.D.C. 133, 138, 420 F.2d 1336, 1341 (1969).
> (J.A. 77.)

[3, 4] Sterling attacks the decision below on several grounds. To begin with, it alleges that the District Court judge did not follow the proper procedures for passing on a claim under the Freedom of Information Act. Citing our decisions in Bristol-Myers, supra, and Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Renegotiation Bd., 138 U.S. App.D.C.147, 425 F. 2d 578 (1970), Sterling contends that the District Court judge failed to take the required steps of stating his reasons for concluding that an exemption applied to the documents in question and of considering whether disclosure of the documents would be proper if certain deletions were made. With regard to the first contention, we feel that the judge's statement that the documents in question were "internal working papers in which opinions are expressed and policies formulated and recommended" clearly indicates the basis for his decision. We must agree, however, that there is no indication in the opinion below that the judge considered the possibility of deleting portions of the documents. It may well be that making deletions would not change the character of these documents, since they appear to consist primarily of the thoughts and recommendations of the Commission and its staff. However, there may be appendices or statements of facts which are clearly subject to disclosure. See Soucie v. David, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 144 at 155, 448 F.2d 1067 at 1078 (1971). We must therefore remand the case so that the District Court judge can consider this possibility and state in his opinion that he has done so.

[5, 6] Sterling's next contention relates to that portion of § 552(b) (5) which states that the exemption is applicable only to those internal memoranda "not * * * available by law to a party other than an agency." Sterling interprets this language as meaning that it is entitled to inspect the Commission memoranda under the Act if it has the right to discover these documents in its present suit against the Commission, but we believe this interpretation to be incorrect.[3] The

---

[3] The documents might well be exempt even under Sterling's interpretation of the statute, for there is considerable doubt that Sterling is entitled to discovery of the documents in its current case against the Commission. We will discuss this issue in the third portion of our opinion.

language in question is admittedly somewhat difficult to interpret because many documents cannot in the abstract be said to be either available "by law" or unavailable "by law"; their discoverability is dependent upon the showing of need made by the litigant. Davis, The Information Act; A Preliminary Analysis, 34 U.Chi.L.Rev. 761, 795 (1967). However, Congress' description of those entitled to disclosure under the Act[4] and earlier cases decided by this court[5] clearly indicate that disclosure under the Act is not to depend upon the needs of a particular litigant. The correct test for determining which documents are not exempt under § 552(b) (5) is given in the House Committee's report on the section, which states that "any internal memorandums which would routinely be disclosed to a private party through the discovery process in litigation with the agency would be available to the general public." H.R.Rep. No. 1497, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 10 (1966), U.S.Code Congressional & Admin.News, p. 2428. The question for decision is thus whether " 'a private party'—not necessarily the applicant—would routinely be entitled to [the Commission memoranda] through discovery." Davis, supra, 796. The clear answer is that he would not be so entitled. While some cases suggest that government memoranda containing legal analyses and recommendations may in some circumstances be subject to discovery,[6] it is beyond question that granting dicovery of such documents is a very extraordinary step, not a routine one. Accordingly, we conclude that the Commission memoranda in question here are the type which should be exempt under § 552(b) (5).

This conclusion would seem to resolve the matter, but Sterling makes a further argument for the proposition that many if not all of the Commission memoranda it seeks must be disclosed even though they would normally be exempt under §552(b)(5). As we noted earlier, the [4] But when a memorandum or letter would be subject to discovery by a party whose need for it is strong but not by a party whose need for it is weak, should the agency disclose it, refuse disclosure, or apply discovery law to the facts about the particular applicant? The last course seems desirable, but the Act seems to forbid that course, for it requires disclosure to "any person" and it replaces the statutory words "persons properly, and directly concerned."[90] The applicant's need cannot be the test. The agency cannot say that one person is "any person" but that another person is not.

---

But since the purpose of the exemptions is to cut down the requirement of disclosure to "any person," the purpose of the fifth exemption could be to whittle down the "any person" requirement so that, in effect, only a person with a strong enough interest is entitled to disclosure of a memorandum or letter. This idea makes practical sense, but it is contrary to the words of the fifth exemption. The key words are "a private party." The words are not "the applicant" or "the party requesting disclosure." The focus is not on the applicant but on an abstract person, "a private party."

Davis, supra, at 795–796.

[90] The Senate committee said the bill "eliminates the test of who shall have the right to different information." Sen. Rep. 5. The House committee emphasized the same thought. House Rep. 8.

[5] Soucie v. David, supra: Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Renegotiation Bd., supra.

[6] See Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Carl Zeiss Jena, 40 F.R.D. 318 (D.D.C.1966); Lykes Corp. and Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., 185 Ct.Cl. 792 (1968); Weiss v. United States, 180 Ct.Cl. 863 (1967).

Commission did not issue an opinion giving the reasons for the Miles-S.O.S. decision, and Sterling believes that these reasons must of necessity be contained in the documents it seeks and that these documents must be disclosed "in order to provide access to the basis for the agency decision and its rationale." (Brief for Appellant at 23.) In support of this line of reasoning, Sterling cites our opinion in American Mail Line, Ltd. v. Gulick, 133 U.S.App.D.C. 382, 411 F.2d 696 (1968).

In Gulick the only document involved was a memorandum which the Maritime Subsidy Board of the Department of Commerce had clearly incorporated into one of its decisions, stating that its decision was based on the memorandum and setting forth the last five pages of the memorandum as its own findings and conclusions. We held that in those circumstances the memorandum was not an intra-agency memorandum exempt under §552(b)(5) but a portion of an agency order specifically subject to disclosure under §552(a)(2)(A), which requires federal agencies to disclose to any person upon request all "final opinions, * * as well as orders, made in the adjudication of cases." Our reasoning was as follows:

> If the Maritime Subsidy Board did not want to expose its staff's memorandum to public scrutiny it should not have stated publicly in its April 11 ruling that its action was based upon that memorandum, giving no other reasons or basis for its action. When it chose this course of action "as a matter of convenience" (Brief for appellee at 9) the memorandum lost its intra-agency status and became a public record, one which must be disclosed to appellants. Thus, we conclude that the Board's April 11 ruling clearly falls within the confines of 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(2)(A) and consequenlty it must be produced for public inspection.

(133 U.S.App.D.C. at 389, 411 F.2d at 703.)

In discussing the applicability of Gulick to the case at hand, we feel it is necessary to divide the Commission memoranda into three categories—those prepared by the Commission staff, those prepared by individual members of the Commission, and those prepared, or at least issued, by the Commission itself.[7] With regard to the first category, we do not believe Gulick supports appellant's position. Here the Commission has not indicated publicly that staff memoranda contained the rationale for this decision,[8] and we do not agree with Sterling's assertion that this must of necessity be the case. To begin with, most of these memoranda were written after the Commission's decision in Miles-S.O.S. and were directed toward the litigation in the Sterling-Lehn & Fink case. While these later memoranda contain analyses of the earlier decision, many of these analyses might well be based only on the staff's speculations as to the reasons underlying the decision and not on the reasons which actually motivated the Commission. Even if the Commission furnished its staff with a statement of its reasons for the Miles-S.O.S. decision, the staff memoranda might still be misleading and incomplete, for in them the staff was not attempting to state these reasons in the abstract, but was applying them to Sterling's acquisition of Lehn & Fink. Instead of granting the public access to documents of such questionable validity, it would seem more logical to allow inspection of the memorandum from the Commission disclosing the grounds for its decision, assuming for the moment that such a memorandum exists. We will, of course discuss this subject further below.

---

[7] Although the dissenting opinion herein characterizes our classification of the material involved as an "artificial division" of this material, it simultaneously accepts our third division as "consistent with the act." We cannot accept the dissent as to the first two categories as logical, reasoned or correct. The rationale of this division, which refutes the idea of artificiality, is that categories one and two are not policy unless adopted by the Commission. If the memoranda classified as categories one and two are adopted by the Commission, then they might be required to be produced, because the adoption does make them policy and they then fall within the productive category. This was precisely the rationale of Gulick, on which we of the majority rely. As we read the dissenting opinion's footnote 8 it is consistent with our opinion since we are doing precisely what the last two sentences of dissenting footnote 8 say is the correct rationale.

[8] In note 11, infra, we deal with the possibility that the Commission made such an indication in the interagency memoranda which it issued.

The staff memoranda submitted to the Commission prior to the Miles-S.O.S. decision undoubtedly contain ideas which affected that decision to some extent. However, our experience with the decision-making process leads us to believe that the material in these memoranda was probably filtered and refined by the Commission, with the result that its ultimate decision was something more than, or at least different from, the sum of its "parts." Consequently, we doubt that examination of the "parts" would give a very accurate picture of the decision.

[7–9] On the negative side, disclosure of documents such as the staff memoranda at issue here might well have a detrimental effect on an agency's decision-making process. Congress' primary purpose in drafting § 552(b) (5) was to insure that federal agencies continued to enjoy the free flow of ideas essential to the making of reasoned decisions. Thus, the House Committee Report on the section states:

> [A] full and frank exchange of opinions would be impossible if all internal communications were made public. [Agency witnesses] contended, and with merit, that advice from staff assistants and the exchange of ideas among agency personnel would not be completely frank if they were forced "to operate in fishbowl."

H.R. Rep. No. 1497, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 10 (1966) U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News, p. 2427. Authorizing disclosure of the staff memoranda would appear to run counter to this Congressional expression of policy. Sterling contends this is not the case, however. Its theory is that disclosure is only warranted in this case because the Commission did not issue an opinion giving the reason for its Miles-S.O.S. decision and that requiring disclosure in this case and others like it will have the salutary effect of requiring agencies to issue an opinion with every order. Although persuasive in the abstract, this reasoning is unrealistic when applied to the everyday world of overburdened administrative agencies.[9] Agencies are required to issue opinions with many of their orders,[10] but it is completely unreasonable to suppose that every agency order can be accompanied by an opinion. The probable effect of a decision requiring disclosure of the staff memoranda would thus be to inhibit "a full and frank exchange of opinions" at least in that class of cases where opinions are not, and as practical matter cannot be, issued. We decline to make such a decision. Accordingly, we hold that the staff memoranda are not subject to disclosure under Gulick.[11]

[10] We also feel that Gulick does not compel disclosure of the two memoranda written by individual Commissioners. Although the Commissioners were obviously parties to the Miles-S.O.S. decision and probably discussed the grounds for that decision to some extent in their memoranda, these memoranda do not necessarily contain a full and accurate account of the grounds for the decision. The Commissioners may have intended to give only a brief summary of Miles-S.O.S. in their memoranda. Moreover, since different Commissioners may have approved the merger for different reasons, the two memoranda at issue may provide only the individual Commissioner's reasons for approving the decision, not the reasons of the Commission as a whole. Finally, both memoranda contain comparisons of the Miles-S.O.S. and Sterling-Lehn & Fink cases, and it may well be that in making their comparisons the Commissioners emphasized certain principles underlying the earlier decision while neglecting others. In sum, then, we believe it is questionable whether the memoranda prepared by the individual Commissioners accurately reflect the grounds for the Commission's decision in Miles-S.O.S.

---

[9] The Social Security Administration issues more than four million orders a year, the Bureau of Customs three million orders, the Department of Agriculture two million feed grain and wheat diversion orders, and the FCC more than one million licenses (each an order). Davis, supra, at 782.

[10] Section 5(e) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 555(e) (1964), provides that agencies must give a brief statement of their reasons when they deny "a written application, petition, or other request of an interested person made in connection with any agency proceeding." (See note 2, supra.) Agency rules require the issuance of opinions with certain other orders. In fact, since its approval of the Miles-S.O.S. merger the Commission has enacted a rule requiring that decisions approving such mergers be accompanied by a "statement of supporting reasons." 16 C.F.R. 3.61(e) (1971). Finally, procedural due process may require agencies to issue opinions in some cases not covered by statute or rule.

[11] This holding and our subsequent holding that Gulick also does not require disclosure of the individual Commissioner's memoranda are, however, subject to the proviso that the memoranda issued by the Commission do not specifically indicate that reasons for its decisions in Miles-S.O.S. are spelled out in one or more of the other inter-agency memoranda. If it develops on remand that the Commission has referred to memoranda in this manner, then any memoranda referred to, or the relevant portions thereof, must be disclosed. Gulick does not by its express terms require this result, since in that case we relied to some extent on the fact that the agency document containing the reference to staff memoranda was made public. The result is nonetheless necessary to prevent the development of secret law within the Commission. See pages 709, 710, infra.

The possible inaccuracies and omissions in these memoranda are not, however, the most important consideration affecting our conclusion that they need not be disclosed. We are primarily motivated by our belief that there is a great need to preserve the free flow of ideas between Commissioners. As we have noted, Congress expressly indicated that intra-agency communications of thoughts and opinions are to be protected, and nowhere is that protection more needed than between the ultimate decision-makers within an agency. In most agencies the exchange of views between Commissioners or Board members is considered perhaps the most essential element in the decisional process. Thus, continual expression of ideas and strong advocacy of positions are to be encouraged to the fullest at this level. In our opinion any attempt to separate a Commissioner's statements as to the basis for a past decision from his views regarding the disposition of a current case and to disclose the former might well infringe upon these essential communications. We therefore conclude that Gulick should not be extended to require that such attempts be made.

[11] With regard to the memoranda issued by the Commission, however, we think the philosophy underlying Gulick requires a different result. These memoranda were prepared by the individuals directly responsible for the Miles-S.O.S. decision and, as documents emanating from the Commission as a whole, they are presumably neither argumentative in nature nor slanted to reflect a particular Commissioner's view. Hence, the danger that any explanation they may give of Miles-S.O.S. is not the correct one is greatly reduced. We also feel the policy of promoting the free flow of ideas within the agency does not apply here, for private transmittals of binding agency opinions and interpretations should not be encouraged. These are not the ideas and theories which go into the making of the law, they are the law itself, and as such should be made available to the public. Thus, to prevent the development of secret law within the Commission, we must require it to disclose orders and interpretations which it actually applies in cases before it. See generally Davis, supra at 797. On remand, then, the District Court judge should re-examine the memoranda issued by the Commission to determine whether they do in fact contain such material. If they do, this material must be made available to Sterling. Moreover, as we have already noted, if the Commission memoranda specifically indicate that reasons for its Miles-S.O.S. decision are contained in one or more of the memoranda prepared by individual members of the Commission or its staff, these memoranda, or the relevant portions thereof, must also be disclosed.

[12] The Commission contends that the remaining documents at issue in this case fall within the exemption for "trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential." 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (4) (Supp. IV 1969). These are the documents contained in the General Foods Final Compliance Report. They were described by the District Court judge as follows:

> 1. Numbered paragraphs 3(b) and 4 of Exhibit VII of a document dated July 5, 1968 entitled "Memorandums on Divestiture of S.O.S. Business by General Foods Corporation." Paragraph 3(b) indicates the markets shares of certain Miles Laboratory products, i.e. ALKA-SELTZER, ONE-A-DAY, and CHOCKS. Paragraph 4 reflects the dollar amounts of sales of certain products between Miles Laboratories and General Foods.
>
> 2. Report dated May 27, 1968, entitled "The S.O.S. Business." This item contains a breakdown of sales and profit data for each S.O.S. product over the ten year period, 1959–1968.
>
> 3. Report dated June 3, 1968, entitled "The S.O.S. Business—Index to Exhibits", contains breakdown of sales, cost and profit data by product and customer classification.
>
> 4. S.O.S. Offers at July 8, 1968. This item lists the bids submitted to General Foods on a closed basis. The amounts of the various bids—not the names of the bidders—were labelled confidential.

(J. A. 72.)

We feel the District Court judge was correct in his conclusion that these documents are covered by § 552(b) (4). The Senate Reports on the Freedom of Information Act describe the purpose of this section as follows:

> This exception is necessary to protect the confidentiality of information which is obtained by the Government through questionnaires or other inquiries, but which would customarily not be released to the public by the person from whom it was obtained. This would include business sales statistics, inventories, customer lists, and manufacturing processes. * * *

S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 9 (1964). The House Reports add:

> It would also include information which is given to an agency in confidence, since a citizen must be able to confide in his Government. Moreover, where the Government has obligated itself in good faith not to disclose documents or information which it receives, it should be able to honor such obligations.

H.R. Rep. No. 1497, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 10 (1964). The documents involved here contain information concerning business sales. Moreover, both Miles and General Foods have sought to prevent public disclosure of these documents, and the Commission has agreed to treat them as confidential. Sterling contends that the Commission's decision regarding the confidentiality of the documents was made in connection with the transfer of S.O.S. to Miles and that even if that initial decision was correct, the reasons for it "no longer obtain so long after the transfer has been made, and so long after the trade information was current." (Brief for Appellant at 25.) However, judging from the District Court judge's descriptions of these documents and from Miles' continuing efforts to prevent disclosure of them, we conclude that the information contained therein remains the type "which would customarily not be released to the public by the person from whom it was obtained."

The judge's descriptions also lead us to believe that making deletions will not render the documents subject to discolsure under the Act. Sterling apparently agrees, for it does not raise this point.

Sterling does, however, argue once again that these documents, though otherwise exempt, are subject to disclosure under Gulick. In doing so it relies very heavily on the Commission's statement that in approving the sale of S.O.S. to Miles it "entirely relied upon the information submitted by General Foods and its approval is conditioned upon this information being accurate and complete." (J.A. 8.) Sterling equates this statement with one made by the Maritime Subsidy Board which we commented upon as follows in our Gulick opinion:

> If the Maritime Subsidy Board did not want to expose its staff's memorandum to public scrutiny it should not have stated publicly in its April 11 ruling that its action was based on that memorandum, giving no other reasons or basis for its action.

(133 U.S.App.D.C. at 389, 411 F.2d at 703.) We do not believe the two statements are comparable, however. The clear intent of the Maritime Subsidy Board was to indicate that the reasons underlying its decision were embodied in the earlier memorandum. The purpose of the Commission's statement concerning its Miles-S.O.S. decision was, on the other hand, merely to indicate that it would later reopen this decision if it discovered that the facts presented by General Foods were not accurate. It is ludicrous to imply from this statement that every particle of information submitted by General Foods was essential to the Commission's decision. Moreover, even if such an implication were feasible, we would be unwilling to lay down a rule whereby an agency would be required to disclose confidential commercial or financial information which it received and relied on in making a decision, yet would not be required to disclose similar information which it did not rely upon; we see no rational reason for drawing such a distinction. For that reason the relevant documents in the General Foods Final Compliance Report are exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act and unaffected by our decision in Gulick.

III. Sterling's Claim of Denial of a Fair Hearing

Before reaching the question whether the Commission's refusal to consider the Miles-S.O.S. decision a highly relevant precedent and whether to disclose the documents Sterling seeks will deny it a fair hearing, we must first ascertain whether the District Court Judge had jurisdiction to consider this question at this interlocutory stage of the Commission proceedings. He concluded that he did not have jurisdiction because Sterling had not exhausted its administrative remedies, and we agree with this conclusion.

[13] The reasons for requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies were set forth recently by the Supreme Court in McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194 (1969). The primary purpose served by the doctrine appears to be "the avoidance of premature interruption of the administrative process." Id. at 193, 89 S.Ct. at 1662. As the Court said:

> The agency, like a trial court, is created for the purpose of applying a statute in the first instance. Accordingly, it is normally desirable to let the agency develop the necessary factual background upon which decisions should be based. And since agency decisions are frequently of a discretionary nature or frequently require expertise, the agency should be given the first chance to exercise that discretion or to apply that expertise. And of course it is generally more efficient for the administrative process to go forward without interruption than it is to permit the parties to seek aid from the courts at various intermediate stages.

Id. at 193–194, 89 S.Ct. at 1662. Exhaustion is also required to facilitate judicial review, which "may [otherwise] be hindered by the failure of the litigant to allow the agency to make a factual record, or to exercise its discretion or apply its expertise." Id. at 194, 89 S.Ct. at 1663. Interests of judicial economy are also served. If the agency discovers and corrects its earlier mistakes or the complaining party prevails in the later administrative proceedings, judicial review may well be unnecessary.

[14] In applying these principles in cases involving interlocutory appeals from agency action, the courts appear to have formulated the general rule that a party may bypass established avenues for review within the agency only where the issue in question cannot be raised from a later order of the agency, Jewel Companies, Inc. v. FTC, 432 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970); Elmo Division of Drive-X Co. v. Dixon, 121 U.S.App.D.C. 113, 348 F.2d 342 (1965), or where the agency has very clearly violated an important constitutional or statutory right. Amos Treat & Co. v. SEC, 113 U.S.App.D.C. 100, 306 F.2d 260 (1962). See also Oestereich v. Selective Service System Local Bd., 393 U.S. 233, 89 S.Ct. 414, 21 L.Ed.2d 402 (1960); Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958). Some cases, including McKart, suggest that judicial intervention may also be proper even though the agency action is not clearly illegal if the question involved is a strictly legal one not involving the agency's expertise or requiring for their decision the development of other factual or legal issues. The rationale for this extension of the general rule is that "judicial review [of these questions] would not be significantly aided by an additional administrative decision" McKart v. United States, supra, 395 U.S. at 199, 89 S.Ct. at 1665; hence, the additional decision is not required.

[15] In view of the judicial principles and practices discussed above, the requirement that administrative remedies be exhausted appears applicable here. The Commission may reverse its position with regard to the issue before us or may eventually uphold the Sterling-Lehn & Fink merger. If either event comes to pass, there will be no need for Sterling to seek judicial review. If neither occurs, Sterling will be able to raise the due process issue on appeal from the Commission's final order in the case. At that time we will have before us the entire record of the proceedings and the Commission's rulings and will thus be qualified to determine whether Sterling received a fair hearing. This is not such a strictly legal question that it can be properly decided on the incomplete facts and argument now before us. Accordingly, we feel its resolution should be deferred until the Commission proceedings have run their course.

Sterling disputes this reasoning on at least two grounds. To begin with, Sterling contends that requiring exhaustion of remedies so that a full record may be developed is not a sound policy here because it is so handicapped by its inability to know the basis of the Miles-S.O.S. decision that it cannot present a proper case. As a result, we will, according to Sterling, be unable "accurately to appraise the relevance of the undisclosed Miles-S.O.S. information or the prejudice to Sterling resulting from its exclusion." (Brief for Appellant at 31.) We do not agree with this appraisal. If on a later appeal Sterling raises the issue of the fairness of the hearing it received before the Commission, we will not simply determine the extent to which the Miles-S.O.S. case should be regarded as a precedent, as Sterling seems to think, but whether Sterling had sufficient evidence to argue the precedential value of that case. Moreover, we are fully aware that the Commission did not set forth its reasons for approving the Miles-S.O.S. merger and we will closely scrutinize whatever efforts it may make to distinguish that case if called upon to do so. It is thus our opinion that there are benefits to be gained from requiring exhaustion of remedies and that Sterling will not be unduly prejudiced by being required to proceed through the established administrative channels.

Sterling's second point is that raising the due process issue on appeal from the Commission's final order in this case will not provide it an adequate remedy because we may well be required to apply a narrow standard of review at that later date. According to Sterling, our review may be limited because of the general rule that, absent a patent abuse of discretion, the Commission has discretion to proceed against one party without acting against others similarly situated. E.g., FTC v. Universal-Rundle Corp., 387 U.S. 244, 250, 87 S.Ct. 1622, 18 L.Ed.2d 249 (1967). It fears that the Commission's approval of the sale of S.O.S. to Miles may be equated with the Commission's not attacking a merger so that the "patent abuse" test applies.[12] Even if it were clear that Sterling's fears would be realized, which it is not, we do not feel the exhaustion of remedies question would be affected. The fact that an agency is not required to treat similarly situated parties the same certainly does not bolster one party's argument that he should be granted access to information which allegedly explains how another party was treated. Moreover, if Sterling continues to feel that it "is being denied access to evidence which might demonstrate the patent abuse required by Universal-Rundle" (Brief for Appellant at 32), it can raise this issue on appeal from the Commission's final order when a full record has been made.[13]

We thus conclude that the District Court judge correctly ruled that he did not have jurisdiction to decide whether the Commission's refusal to grant Sterling access to the documents in question would deny Sterling a fair hearing. However, since it is necessary for the judge to make further findings regarding Sterling's right to some of these documents under the Freedom of Information Act, we must require a remand.

Remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

BAZELON, Chief Judge (concurring in part and dissenting in part):

Sterling Drug, Inc. contends that the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (1970), requires the Federal Trade Commission to disclose two types of documents:[1] first, Commission-prepared papers which allegedly described the rationale for the Commission's approval of a merger between Miles Laboratories and S.O.S.; and second, statements submitted to the Commission in connection with the Miles-S.O.S. merger and which were apparently relevant to the [12] There is some indication that the Commission feels that these two situations are comparable. Its brief contains the following passage:

---

> Then again, the Commission may hold that Sterling has violated Section 7 and may agree that the Miles-S.O.S. situation is similar, but may go on to explain that the sale of S.O.S. to Miles was approved not because of a finding that it did not violate Section 7, but rather because Miles was the least objectionable feasible purchaser of the S.O.S. business; and it was deemed preferable to have Miles purchase the business rather than having the divestiture order against General Foods fail because of lack of purchasers. This, indeed, would be consistent with the Commission's statement in its latest interlocutory order that the possible resemblance of the facts of Miles-S.O.S. to the fact of Sterling-Lehn & Fink is not pertinent. * * *

(Brief for Appellee at 26.) Of course, if the Commission does ultimately conclude that the "patent abuse" test applies in this situation, this conclusion will be subject to judicial review.

[13] There are also some indications that Sterling feels the limited standard of review generally applicable to final agency orders will prevent it from obtaining full review of its claim of denial of a fair hearing on a later appeal. However, the rule that agency decisions must be affirmed if supported by adequate findings of fact and substantial evidence in the record obviously does not apply where a proper hearing has not been held.

[1] Sterling contends alternatively that absent disclosure it will be denied the full and fair hearing required by the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq. (1970). I agree with the Court that consideration of this alternative claim is barred by the failure to exhaust administrative remedies.

Commission's review of that merger.[2] The Commission refused disclosure on the grounds that the documents fall within the Act's exemptions for intra-agency memoranda,[3] or confidential financial information.[4] Thus, the interpretation of these exemptions lies at the heart of this controversy, and I respectfully disagree with the interpretation put forward by the Court.

I.

The Freedom of Information Act requires disclosure of each agency's

> (A) final opinions, including concurring and dissenting opinions, as well as orders, made in the adjudication of cases;
>
> (B) those statements of policy and interpretation which have been adopted by the agency and are not published in the Federal Register.

§ 552(a) (2) (A–B). It then exempts from disclosure "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." § 552(b) (5).[5]

In Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 138 U.S. App.D.C. 22, 424 F.2d 935 (1970) we pointed out that the inter-agency memorandum exemption was designed to encourage "the free exchange of ideas among government policy makers." [6] But it should be clear that Congress hoped to encourage discourse during the policy formulation stage; the exemption was not designed to facilitate the easy exchange of substantive declarations of policy. Indeed, if it were, the exemption would have engulfed the rule. For at the same time that Congress sought to enhance the process of policy formulation, it indicated unequivocally that the purpose of the Act was to forbid secret law.[7] And substantive declarations of policy are clearly "law" within the meaning of that prohibition. It necessarily follows that opinions and statements of policy must be disclosed while memoranda drafted as part of the agency's process of formulating such policy need not.[8]

---

[2] Shortly after issuing a complaint charging that the acquisition by Sterling Drug of Lehn & Fink violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1964), the FTC approved without opinion a divestiture plan in another case calling for the sale of the S.O.S. Company to Miles. In the proceedings before the Commission, Sterling has taken the position that the approval of the Miles-S.O.S. merger demonstrates that its acquisition of Lehn & Fink did not violate the Clayton Act. Sterling seeks disclosure in order to show that both mergers involve factors which require application of the same policy and result.

[3] 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (5) (Supp. IV 1969).

[4] 5 U.S.C. § 522(b) (4) (Supp. IV 1969);

[5] Contrary to my view, the Court concludes that most of the documents are "memorandums" within the terms of the exemption. It then goes on to consider the explicit limitation on the exemption. By its terms the exemption protects only those "memorandums" which "would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with an agency." The Court construes this awkward phrase to mean that only those memoranda which would be routinely available through discovery in litigation—without regard to special need—fall outside the exemption. I agree. Whether or not the purpose of the Act would have been better served by allowing courts to apply discovery law to the facts of the particular applicant, that course is prohibited by the language of the Act and its legislative history.

[6] 138 U.S.App.D.C. at 26, 424 F.2d at 939. See S. Rep.No.813, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 9 (1965); H. Rep. No. 1497, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 10 (1965).

[7] "The governing principle, which I think is without exception, is that secret law is forbidden." K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, § 3A.21 at 159 (1970 Supp.). Such an accommodation comports with this Court's earlier holding that "[t]he legislative plan creates a liberal disclosure requirement, limited only by specific exemptions which are to be narrowly construed." Bristol-Myers v. FTC, supra, 138 U.S.App.D.C. at 25, 424 F.2d at 938. See Soucie v. David, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 144, at 157, 448 F.2d 1067, at 1080 (1971).

Instead of asking whether any of the documents at issue were in substance policy declarations which should be disclosed, the Court makes an artificial division of the material into three categories: first, memoranda prepared by the Commission staff; second, memoranda prepared by individual members of the Commission; and third, memoranda issued by the Commission itself. The Court's treatment of documents in the third category—remanding them to the District Court to determine whether they contain binding opinions or statements of policy and interpretation—is consistent with the purposes of the Act. But I disagree strongly with the Court's conclusion that memoranda falling within the first or second categories need never be disclosed.

The Court denies access to memoranda of staff and individual Commissioners primarily on the ground that the memoranda may not accurately reflect the decision of the Commission. I agree that the scheme of the Act exempts memoranda which are wholly preliminary or tentative in character, but I insist that the Act does require disclosure where the memoranda reveal opinions or policy statements which provided the basis for the administrative action in question. The Court seems to concede the point since it follows Gulick by allowing disclosure of memoranda within the forbidden categories if they are specifically referred to in memoranda within the nonforbidden category.[9] But Gulick was, after all, a fairly easy application of the statutory principle, and I can see no reason to read the facts of that particular case as marking the outer limits of the statute's reach. If these memoranda were in fact treated as having been adopted by the agency—as indicated by an affidavit of the Commission or testimony at the remand hearing—then the statute would clearly require disclosure even though the documents had never been referred to in other [8] Davis, supra note 7, at 159. The application of this principle is not limited to the precise facts in American Mail Line, Ltd. v. Gulick, 133 U.S.App.D.C. 382, 411 F.2d 696 (1968). In Gulick the Maritime Subsidy Board specifically stated that its decision was based upon the memorandum sought disclosed, and quoted the last five pages of the memorandum as its own findings and determination. In this situation it was clear that the memorandum was substantive law adopted by the agency rather than a recommendation or step in the process of formulating policy. Accordingly, the Court ordered disclosure. It is crucial, however, to understand the limited significance of both the Board's reference to the memoranda as the basis of its decision and its extensive quotation from it. By doing so, the Board made it obvious that the memoranda had been adopted as policy. It is the adoption of a memorandum as policy, however, and not the particular manner in which the adoption is indicated which is the touchstone of disclosure.

---

[9] See note 11 of the opinion of the Court.

Commission memoranda.[10] Indeed, the Court recognizes that a particular document must be disclosed if it was adopted by the Commission, regardless of how that adoption is indicated.[11]

It follows that the case should be remanded with an instruction to determine whether any of the documents, regardless of artificial categories or labels, are "opinions" or "statements of policy and interpretation." [12] In making this determination, the burden of proof is upon the Commission, § 552(a) (3). If it seeks to withhold all of the memoranda, the Commission must show that an accurate statement of either the reasons for or the policies adopted by its approval of the Miles-S.O.S. merger does not exist.[13] Although proof may be made by affidavit, a bare statement that the documents are within the exemption is insufficient. See Affidavit of Joseph Shea, Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, Joint Appendix at 52.

II.

The Commission also refused Sterling's request for various documents submitted to the Commission by General Foods and others in connection with Miles' Purchase of S.O.S. and contained in the General Foods Final Compliance Report.[14] I agree with the Court that at this stage of the controversy these documents fall within the confidential financial information exemption. § 552(b) (4). But if on remand the District Court finds that one or more of the Commission prepared documents are "opinions" or "statements of policy and interpretation," it may well also find that they contain sales, cost, or profit data derived from documents in the Compliance Report. The statute provides:

---

[10] See note 8 supra. The Ninth Circuit seems to have reached the result I suggest in General Services Administration v. Benson, 415 F.2d 878 (9th Cir. 1969). With reference to documents that had apparently never been made public or referred to by the agency, the court stated:

> For example, exhibits A and B, described in Benson v. General Services Administration, D.C. 289 F.Supp. 590, 591, are not merely advisory opinions submitted for policy making purposes. Rather once exhibit A (the disposal plan) was approved, "it was to be followed by the regional office in making the disposal;" and the memorandum described as exhibit B "was used as a guide for higher authority and as a record of the reasons for the action taken." Thus, documents A and B took on the character of "statements of policy and interpretation which have been adopted by the agency and are not published in the Federal Register"—a category of materials specifically available to the public under 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(2)(B).

Id. at 881.

[11] See note 7 of the opinion of the Court.

[12] The Court would deny access to the statements issued by the individual Commissioners on the possibility that "[s]ince different Commissioners may have approved the merger for different reasons, the two memoranda at issue may provide only the individual Commissioner's reasons for approving the decision, not the reasons of the Commission as a whole." Opinion of the Court at 707. I submit, however, that if the memoranda in fact provide the reasons for the vote of the individual Commissioners to approve or disapprove the merger, they fall directly within the terms of the statute since subsection (a) (2) (A) provides for disclosure of "final opinions, including concurring and dissenting opinions." (Emphasis added).

[13] If the Commission had issued either an opinion or statement of reasons with its order approving the Miles-S.O.S. merger, there would have been no necessity to disclose the underlying memoranda. The Court says that it is unrealistic to require an opinion or statement to protect agency documents since some agencies, such as the Social Security Administration, issue millions of orders each year. Opinion of the Court at 14, 14n.9. Unlike the Social Security Administration, the Federal Trade Commission does not issue millions of orders of the type involved here. Indeed, as of 1965, the F.T.C. brought only 23 Section 7 cases which culminated in finding a violation or the entry of a consent decree. And only some fewer number resulted in the eventual approval of a divestiture purchaser. Elzinga, The Antimerger Law: Pyrrhic Victories?, 12 J. of Law & Econ. 43 (1969). In those agencies where millions of orders are issued the likelihood is that extensive memoranda are not written or required because decisions are made simply on the basis of staff manuals, already required to be disclosed, § 552(a)(2)(C).

[14] These documents are described at page 708 of the Court's opinion.

> To the extent required to prevent a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, an agency may delete identifying details when it makes available or publishes an opinion, statement of policy, interpretation, or staff manual.

§ 552(a) (2). See Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Renegotiation Board, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 147, 425 F.2d 578 (1970).

In this case, however, deletion is unlikely to provide a viable course. Deletion of names [15] would at this stage be fruitless, and deletion of the data, given the nature of Section 7 litigation, would likely render the opinion or interpretation meaningless. In such a situation the language of the statute, unlike that found in the confidential financial information exemption,[16] directs the court to balance the interests affected by disclosure.[17] The Senate Report indicates the nature of that balance as one of "the public's right to know with the private citizen's right to be secure in his personal affairs which have no bearing or effect on the general public."[18] The maintenance of secret law would weigh heavily against the public interest.[19]

III.

In the proceedings below, the District Court reviewed the documents in camera. While we have recommended this procedure in Freedom of Information Act cases, Soucie v. David, 145 U.S.App.D.C. 144, 448 F.2d 1067 (1971), I am troubled by the fact that this short circuits the adversary process. The party seeking disclosure lacks the knowledge of the actual contents of the documents necessary to question the affidavits of the agency. Still, we are unable to discern any solutions which would not require disclosure of all agency documents. Perhaps the parties in this and future cases may be able to propose some acceptable solutions of the problem. Until then litigants will have to rely on the trial court's careful examination and appellate review.[20]

---

[15] See S.Rep. supra note 6, at 7; H.Rep., supra note 6, at 8; Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. v. Renegotiation Board, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 147, 425 F.2d 578 (1970).

[16] See generally, Davis, supra note 7, at § 3A.19.

[17] See S.Rep., supra note 6, at 7; H.Rep., supra note 6, at 8.

[18] S.Rep., supra note 6, at 7.

[19] In construing the identical phrase in exemption 6, this Court recently held that "[t]he statutory language 'clearly unwarranted' instructs the court to tilt the balance in favor of disclosure." Getman v. NLRB, 146 U.S.App.D.C. 209, at 213, 450 F.2d 670, at 674 (1971).

[20] When the decision of the trial court is based on written or uncontraverted oral evidence alone, there is no particular reason to be bound by the trial court's findings of fact and the clearly erroneous rule does not apply. See generally 5 J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 52.04 (1969) and cases there cited.

THE BENDIX CORPORATION v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 20687—F.T.C. Docket 8739

(Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit. Oct. 18, 1971)

When the Toehold Theory Was Never Presented During the Administrative Hearing the Commission's Holding Based on That Theory Violates the Administrative Procedure Act

Where complaint counsel in antitrust case stated that case was being tried on theory that merger eliminated potential competition by virtue of fact that acquiring company was potential entrant into market by internal expansion and toehold theory was never presented during administrative hearing or discussed by complaint counsel in appeal to Commission, Commission's determination, based on toehold theory, that acquisition violated anti-trust laws violated Administrative Procedure Act and would be vacated and case remanded.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 450 F.2d 534)

On petition for review, Court held that where antitrust case was tried on theory that merger eliminated potential competition, appeal based on toehold theory, violated Administrative Procedure Act. Vacated and remanded.

Abe Krash, Washington, D.C., for petitioner; Daniel A. Rezneck, Peter K. Bleakley, Jack L. Lipson, Jerome I. Chapman, Washington, D.C. on brief: Charles F. Donnelly, B. G. Andrews, Southfield, Mich., Arnold & Porter, Washington, D.C., of counsel.

Frederick H. Mayer, F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for respondent; Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Thomas F. Howder, Montgomery K. Hyun, Attys., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., on brief.

Before Phillips, Chief Judge, and Weick and Edwards, Circuit Judges.

Phillips, Chief Judge:

The Federal Trade Commission held that the acquisition of Fram Corporation by the Bendix Corporation violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18.[1] Reversing the decision of its Hearing

---

*Reported in 450 F.2d 534. For case before the Commission see 77 F.T.C. 731.

[1] Section 7 of the Clayton Act provides in part:

"* * * no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

Examiner, the Commission directed divestiture of Fram. The case is before this court on the petition to review filed by Bendix.

The complaint was filed June 29, 1967, charging that Bendix had violated not only § 7 of the Clayton Act but also § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (1). The § 5 charge is not before this court in the present proceeding and will not be discussed further in this opinion.

The complaint alleged violations of § 7 with respect to three lines of commerce: (1) automotive filters,[2] (2) aerospace filters,[3] and (3) liquid separators.[4]

The results of the § 7 violations were averred to be:

> (a) actual and potential competition between Bendix and Fram in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters, aerospace filters and liquid separators will be eliminated;
>
> (b) actual and potential competition in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters, aerospace filters, and liquid separators, generally, may be substantially lessened;
>
> (c) Bendix will eliminate Fram as an independent competitive factor in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters, aerospace filters, and liquid separators;
>
> (d) concentration in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters will be maintained;
>
> (e) concentration in the manufacture and sale of aerospace filters and liquid separators will be increased substantially;
>
> (f) Bendix will obtain a decisive competitive advantage in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters, aerospace filters and liquid separators, to the detriment of actual and potential competition;
>
> (g) additional mergers and acquisitions may be fostered with a resultant lessening of competition in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters, aerospace filters and liquid separators; and
>
> (h) the entry of new firms and the growth of smaller filter manufacturing companies will be retarded, discouraged or prevented. (1968–70 Transfer Binder) Trade Reg.Rep. ¶ 17,997 at 20,394–95. (FTC 1967).

As the case proceeded Complaint Counsel dropped several of these theories and eventually reformulated the case. Before the Hearing Examiner he proceeded on three separate theories:

---

[2] Automotive filters are of three types—oil, air, and fuel filters. They are used on a variety of vehicles and engines, including: passenger cars and light trucks, heavy-duty trucks, farm and earthmoving equipment, power lawn mowers, and stationary, outboard, and marine engines.

[3] Aerospace filters are those (including their assemblies, housing and elements) which are intended for use on aircraft (including spacecraft), missiles, and ground support equipment for aircraft and missiles.

[4] Liquid separators are mechanical devices which remove entrained and emulsified water and solid contaminants from a liquid product in one pass, at full flow, through water coalescing elements. Virtually the only use for filter water separators is the removal of water and dirt from low viscosity fluids, mainly aircraft fuels (i.e., jet fuels, gasoline and kerosene). Less than 1% of filter water separators are used for purposes other than removing water and contaminants from aviation jet fuels. Filter water separators are not used on the aircraft itself, but at various transfer points for aircraft fuel, such as refineries, pipeline terminals and airports, with the latter being the biggest user.

(i) that the acquisition lessened actual competition between Bendix and Fram in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters;

(ii) that Bendix would confer "a decisive competitive advantage" upon Fram in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters; and

(iii) that Bendix was a potential entrant by internal expansion into the business of making and selling passenger car filters in the replacement parts market (known as the "aftermarket"), and that the acquisition of Fram eliminated Bendix's "potential competition" in this submarket.

The Examiner rejected each of these theories, concluding that Complaint Counsel had failed to sustain his burden of proof. The first theory, lessening of existing competition between Bendix and Fram, was abandoned by Complaint Counsel on the appeal to the Commission.

On appeal before the Commission most of the Examiner's findings of fact and conclusions of law were accepted without change, and his treatment of the three theories was not disturbed. The Commission held:

> To the hearing examiner it was dispositive of this case that the evidence showed that Bendix would not enter the passenger car filter aftermarket by internal expansion but only through merger with another firm already in that market. The examiner assumed that, from the standpoint of Section 7, it made no difference whether Bendix merged with Fram, an established market leader, or with a smaller firm which, by combining with Bendix's vast resources and managerial skills, would become a new and substantial competitive force in the market confronting Fram and the other established leading firms.
>
> The examiner's analysis of the potential competition problem—focusing exclusively on the probability of Bendix's entry by internal expansion and neglecting the likelihood of entry by merger other than with Fram—was unduly narrow and must be rejected, because it rests upon a misconception of the basic purpose and policy of Section 7. Various forms of merger entry other than through acquisition of a leading company—for example, a "toehold" acquisition of a small company capable of expansion into a substantial competitive force—may be as economically desirable and beneficial to competition as internal expansion into a relevant market, and must be considered in assessing the potential competition of the acquiring firm which has been eliminated as a result of the challenged merger.
>
> Although previous cases have only involved potential entry in one form, i.e., by internal expansion, it is clear that the form of entry was not controlling in these decisions. What was determinative in each of these cases was (1) the actual elmination of the additional decision-making, the added capacity, and the other market stimuli which would have resulted had entry taken a procompetitive form, such as internal expansion; and (2) the anticompetitive > consequences of the removal of the discipling effect of a potential competitor from the market's edge. We believe that these adverse effects on competition may result from the elimination of a potential entrant who might have entered by internal expansion or who might have entered by a toehold acquisition. 3 Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 19,288 at 21,439, 21,445 (1970).

On the basis of the toehold theory of illegality, the Commission found that there was a substantial likelihood of a lessening of competition in the automotive filter aftermarket as a result of the acquisition and that the acquisition therefore violated § 7.

In this court Bendix does not seriously question whether the toehold theory is a valid theory of illegality under § 7. It contends that to establish a violation of § 7 based on the toehold theory, Complaint Counsel must prove that the effect of the acquisition "may be substantially to lessen competition" in some line of commerce in some section of the country.

Bendix asserts that Complaint Counsel failed to prove the essential points necessary to establish a toehold violation. In addition to contesting the efficacy of the proof, Bendix raises two probing questions: (1) Is the toehold theory of illegality as applied in the instant case inconsistent with the Commission's approval of the Examiner's finding that Bendix was not a likely potential entrant by internal expansion? and (2) Did the Commission violate the Administrative Procedure Act and the Fifth Amendment due process clause in deciding the case on a theory that was never considered by the Examiner or raised by Complaint Counsel and without affording Bendix an opportunity to present proof to rebut this theory?

To dispose of the present review we find it necessary to consider only the issue under the Administrative Procedure Act. For the reasons set forth later in this opinion, we conclude from the record before this Court that the Commission violated § 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 554, when it decided the case on a theory of illegality which was never charged, raised, nor tried during the administrative hearing; never presented for consideration by the Hearing Examiner; and not raised as an issue or discussed by Complaint Counsel in the appeal to the Commission from the order of the Hearing Examiner dismissing the complaint. Bendix had no notice that it was charged under the toehold theory of illegality and was accorded no opportunity to present evidence in defense against this theory. The order of the Commission therefore must be vacated and the case remanded.

Although we do not pass upon the merits of the § 7 charge, we recite in some detail certain merit-related factors as disclosed by the record which are relevant to the determinative issue under the Administrative Procedure Act.

RELEVANT MARKET

Filters sold in the relevant market are used for replacement of spent filters.

The relevant market is clearly distinguished in sales techniques, distribution channels, product outlets, and customers from the related market of filters for original equipment manufacturers (OEM's). The OEM market involves sales of the same types of filters to companies such as Chrysler and American Motors for use as parts on their new passenger automobiles. General Motors and Ford have divisions which supply all their needs in the OEM market.

The only proofs offered on the relevant geographic market were directed at the entire United States. For purposes of this review we do not consider any geographic submarket less than the entire United States.

THE INDUSTRY

The predominate force in the relevant market is General Motors. Through its automobile parts division General Motors sells under the trade name "AC" approximately one-third of the filters distributed in the relevant market. Purolator is the second largest company in the relevant market, having approximately 21 per cent of the automotive filter aftermarket business. Fram ranks third in the sale of filters in the aftermarket with approximately 17 per cent of the business.[5]

Other significant market members include Wix Corporation, ranking fourth with 9.5 per cent of the business, Walker Manufacturing Company ranking fifth with 3.9 per cent of the business and Hastings Manufacturing Company, ranking sixth with 3.2 per cent of the business.[6]

In addition to the companies previously mentioned, several companies sell filters in the aftermarket on a reduced scale. There are approximately 20 companies with less than one per cent of the business. These companies do not have a volume of business comparable to that of General Motors, Purolator and Fram. That fact does not mean, however, that these smaller companies are not significant market factors. Most of them are making profits, and many have well trained marketing staffs that vigorously promote their company's products in the market.

---

[5] Reference to market shares are for the 1966 fiscal year unless indicated otherwise.

[6] The structure of the industry for the sale of all automotive filters is basically the same as that for the aftermarket, although the percentages differ somewhat. The only noteworthy exceptions are Donaldson Corporation, which, based on 6.3 per cent of the business, stands ahead of Hastings in sixth place in the total sales market; and the fact that Bendix does some business in the broader market encompassing a total sales—about .4 per cent of the total sales of automotive filters which ranks it approximately 17th in that market.

Sales in the aftermarket are made through four principal channels of distribution. First, there is the traditional aftermarket channel in which filter manufacturers sell to warehouse distributors, who in turn sell to jobbers. The latter in turn sell to automotive establishments such as gasoline stations and repair garages which service the cars of their customers. Second, filter manufacturers sell replacement filters to passenger-car manufacturers who in turn sell these filters to their franchised automobile dealers and also to independent warehouse distributors. Third, oil and tire companies constitute another channel of distribution; they purchase filters from the manufacturers and sell them primarily to franchised service stations but also to independent distributors. And fourth, there is still another main group of large-volume purchasers, i.e., the mass-merchandisers (such as Sears Roebuck & Co., automotive chain stores and discount houses); they sell directly to consumers through their own retail outlets.

Mass-marketing and intense promotion as well as very substantial advertising are the hallmarks of successful distribution in the filter aftermarket. The distributional and promotional techniques including purchase bonus stamps, contest and prizes are aimed at the trade rather than the ultimate consumer, since the latter in most instances is not brand-conscious. These techniques are designated to differentiate the promoted and advertised brand from competing brands and so gain and retain widespread brand acceptance by the trade. These efforts are implemented by large sales staffs and great numbers of promotional men, so-called "missionary men," who are organized on a territorial, regional and national basis. The three leading filter makers, viz., the A.C. Spark Plug Division of General Motors, Purolator and Fram, each employed over 100 missionary men.

Large sales staffs are not limited to the top companies in the industry. Several of the companies having a smaller share of the market employ as many as 100 of the so-called "missionary men."

These "missionary men" are essential in the aftermarket where entry is not precluded by any substantial technological barriers. There are no basis patents essential to any of the products or processes used in manufacturing operations. Since the set-up cost and cost of production are not prohibitively high, the primary factor for success in the business is promotion. The firms that promote their products and achieve acceptance in the distribution channels are the firms that succeed.

THE PARTIES

A. Bendix. Bendix is one of the largest industrial corporations in the United States. In 1966 its consolidated net sales were $1.05 billion. The company was founded shortly before World War I as a maker of starter drives for automobiles. It became diversified over the years with its manufacturing operations extending to components and assemblies for aerospace, automotive, automation, scientific, oceanic and other uses. In recent years more than one-half of Bendix's sales have been concentrated in sophisticated equipment for aircraft, missiles and spacecraft. Thus the company was heavily dependent on government sales and particularly government defense contracts. In 1967 the highly sophisticated technical products accounted for 53 per cent of all of Bendix's sales.

In 1966 Bendix sold $229 million worth of automotive products. That figure includes sales abroad by foreign subsidaries and affiliates, export sales and sales to the military, nearly all of which were shipped overseas. Automotive parts sold by Bendix in the United States totaled $165 million.

Bendix's automotive business consists principally of the manufacture of technologically complex parts such as starter drives, ignition components, brakes, power steering units, carburetors and car radios. About 75 per cent of all its automotive business is in the OEM market. The sale of all Bendix automotive products in the aftermarket was about $40 million in 1966. About one-half, or $20 million, was under the Bendix name. Thus, Bendix brand sales in the aftermarket amounted to less than one per cent of the total automotive parts sold in the aftermarket and less than two per cent of the company's total sales. Although these percentages are small, the dollar volumes cannot be called "insubstantial." Bendix is certainly no novice in the automotive parts aftermarket. Its principal aftermarket sales division, the Automotive Service Division (ASD), employs about 80 salesmen for all products sold by the ASD. However, it does not sell automotive filters in the aftermarket. At the time of the acquisition of Fram it did not make or sell any filters designed for use on passenger cars, and the ASD had never emphasized promotion and merchandising techniques, nor was it particularly adapted to selling and promoting low technology, consumer-type products, such as automotive filters. The 80 employees of the ASD call primarily on garages and repair shops and they do not customarily call on service stations, the main outlet for automobile filters in the aftermarket.

In regard to automotive filters, Bendix, through its Filter Division, focused upon the production and sale of heavy duty oil and fuel filters for the OEM market for use in large trucks, tractors and off-highway equipment. The Bendix Filter Division was one of the company's smaller divisions and in 1966 its sales of automotive filters were about $1 million, and of this total about $283,000 represented sales of filters manufactured for Bendix by a competitior, i.e., Wix Corporation. Most of the filter sales were made in the OEM market, with the lucrative aftermarket accounting for a small amount. The only automotive filter manufactured by Bendix specifically for passenger cars was an air filter element made in the late 1950's primarily for Ford Motor Co. After losing money on the venture, Bendix in 1960 began subcontracting these filters until 1963, when its agreement with Ford was terminated.

B. Fram. Organized in 1934, Fram is a leading producer of various kinds of filters, including automotive filters, aerospace filters and filter water separators. In 1966, its net sales totaled $66.7 million, its assets amounted to $39.1 million, and net earnings were $4.4 million. Sales, earnings and assets in 1966 were the highest in its history. Fram's net profit on sales before taxes increased from 10.6 per cent in 1963 to 13.0 per cent in 1966, and return on stockholders' equity rose from 14.7 per cent to 19.8 per cent during the same period. It was thus a flourishing and growing company.

Prior to its acquisition by Bendix, Fram had six operating divisions, of which the Automotive Division was by far the largest. The latter was engaged in the manufacture and sale of automotive filters, primarily for passenger cars, but also for trucks, and other equipment utilizing internal combustion engines. Net profits on sales by the Automotive Division rose from 14.7 per cent in 1965 to 17.1 per cent in 1966. In that year, automotive filters accounted for 55 per cent of Fram's total sales.

Although Fram's Automotive Division sold filters in all distribution channels, about 90 per cent of its filter sales were made in the aftermarket for passenger cars. In that market Fram ranked third, accounting in 1966 for 17.2 per cent of total sales.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS

The dispositive issue on this appeal is whether the Commission denied Bendix and Fram the opportunity to defend the charges with which they were ultimately faced; and, if so, did that denial violate § 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. § 554.

Prior to the time the complaint in this case was filed, a number of decisions had been rendered under § 7 of the Clayton Act condemning the elimination of potential competition. See, e.g., United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 84 S.Ct. 1710, 12 L.Ed.2d 775; United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 84 S.Ct. 1044, 12 L.Ed.2d 12. Foremost among these decisions is the Clorox case, FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303, wherein the Court said:

> [T]he merger would seriously diminish potential competition by eliminating Procter as a potential entrant into the industry. Prior to the merger, the Commission found, Procter was the most likely prospective entrant, and absent the merger would have remained on the periphery, restraining Clorox from exercising its market power. If Procter had actually entered, Clorox's dominant position would have been eroded and the concentration of the industry reduced. 386 U.S. at 575, 87 S.Ct. at 1229.

The evils attending elimination of potential competition also have received exhaustive treatment in the periodicals. See, e.g., Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv.L. Rev. 1313 (1965). Of the many consequences of conglomerate mergers, Professor Turner listed only one involving potential competition that he considered to be of possible antitrust significance:

> The acquisition may lessen "potential" competition either (a) because the acquiring firm would have entered the industry in any event by internal expansion of its own facilities, so that acquisition reduces the number of competitors by one; or (b) because the acquiring firm, although it might not have entered, was a sufficient threat to existing firms to exert a competitive influence on their price and other decisions. Id. at 1323.

No mention was made by Professor Turner of the effect of the availability of a toehold firm on the acquisition actually consummated. So far as our research has disclosed, the earlier considerations of the effects of § 7 on the elimination of potential competition were concerned with acquisitions where the acquiring firm was a potential entrant by internal expansion into the market of the acquired firm.

The toehold theory was not unheard of, however, at the time of the filing of the complaint. A clear formulation of the toehold concept is found in the Commission opinion in Beatrice Foods Co. (1965–67 Transfer Binder) Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 17,244 at 22,332 (FTC 1965). The pertinent portion of the opinion reads as follows:

> The competitive effects are more difficult to predict when a very small factor in the market is acquired by a substantial potential competitor. The merger may increase competition in the market by injecting a substantial firm, one capable of challenging the dominant firms in the market, in place of a firm too small to be a significant competitive factor.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The competitive effects are likely to be most serious where the merger is between one of the dominant firms in a concentrated market and a substantial potential competitor. In such a case there is no improvement in the competitive structure of the market—for one dominant firm has simply been replaced by another—and substantial potential competition is eliminated. The dominant firms in the market no longer have to concern themselves with the consequences of > entry by the potential competitor; he is already in. Nor need they cope with any additional competition as a result of his entry; he has not increased the number of substantial competitors in the market but simply taken the place of one of those competitors. The potential competitor enters the market in circumstances where there is no change in the competitive structure of the market, except that he is eliminated as a prospective entrant. Such a merger is even more injurious to competition if the acquired firm is a potential competitor in one or more of the acquiring firm's markets. For then potential competition is hurt twice: the merger eliminates the acquiring company as a potential entrant in the acquired firm's markets, and the acquired firm is eliminated as a potential entrant in the acquiring firm's markets.

Complaint Counsel's brief before the Commission did not mention the toehold theory in discussing the alleged violation. The only section that is pertinent to potential competition was headed "The Hearing Examiner in Concluding that Bendix Was Not a 'Potential Entrant into the Automotive Filter Replacement Market by Internal Development'." (Emphasis added.)

This is not a case where the initial complaint was couched in broad generalities but subsequently was tried on the specific theory that ultimately justified a finding that § 7 had been violated. In Kroger v. FTC, 438 F.2d 1372 (6th Cir.), petition for cert. filed 39 U.S.L.W. 3528 (No. 70–202) (May 24, 1971), Mr. Justice Tom C. Clark, speaking for this court on the argument that the case was tried on a different theory before the Commissioner than that pursued before the Hearing Examiner, said:

> Kroger's own counsel repeatedly objected before the Hearing Examiner to the relevance of certain evidence as to Kroger but not to Beatrice on the ground that "independent acts of Party A had nothing to do with the responsibility of Party B." That is exactly the theory on which the Commission acted in finding Kroger responsible. Id. at 1378.

In the present case counsel for Bendix specifically asked both the Hearing Examiner and Complaint Counsel for the theory upon which the case would be tried. In response to this questioning Complaint Counsel limited the case to the theory that the merger eliminated potential competition by virtue of the fact that Bendix was a potential entrant into the filter aftermarket by internal expansion. Throughout the hearing before the Examiner, the case was tried on the issue whether Bendix would have entered the passenger car filter aftermarket by internal expansion if it had not acquired Fram. Repeated statements by counsel, witnesses, and the Examiner showed that every one believed this to be the only issue with respect to potential competition. Complaint Counsel never suggested that Bendix could have and would have entered the automotive filter replacement business by acquiring a toehold firm if Fram had been unavailable. At the conclusion of the hearing, Complaint Counsel submitted elaborate proposed findings and conclusions, reiterating their position that Bendix was a potential entrant through internal expansion. There was no mention of potential entry by a toehold acquisition.

If there would have been any difference in defending the action based on the internal expansion theory as compared to the toehold theory, Bendix was entitled to an opportunity to defend against the theory upon which the Commission acted. It is readily apparent that different defenses and proofs would be used in defending against these two theories. As an example of the difference in proofs, Bendix states in its brief that:

> [An officer of Bendix] was specifically asked whether Bendix would have entered the passenger car filter aftermarket by internal expansion if the Fram acquisition had been unavailable. He said no (A. 1421) He and every other Bendix official who testified would have been asked if Bendix would have made a "toehold" acquisition of a small firm and expanded it, had it been known the Commission would decide the case on that issue.
>
> Numerous other examples can be given of how the case would have been tried differently, e.g., by further proof that a "toehold" acquisition was not feasible for Bendix; by a more comprehensive analysis of alleged "toehold" candidates to demonstrate in detail why they did not meet the acquisition criteria established by the Bendix management; by the presentation of further proof that entry into the passenger car filter aftermarket through a "toehold" acquisition, followed by its expansion, would have entailed the same investments, risks, and activities as entry by internal growth; and by evidence of the economic problems of attempting to expand a "toehold" into a significant competitive factor in the context of this particular industry.

Section 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 554, provides in relevant part: "(b) Persons entitled to notice of an agency hearing shall be timely informed of * * * (3) the matters of fact and law asserted."

This court repeatedly has held that an administrative agency must give a clear statement of the theory on which a case will be tried. See, e.g., NLRB v. Tennsco Corp., 339 F.2d 396 (6th Cir.); NLRB v. Johnson, 322 F.2d 216 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 951, 84 S.Ct. 968, 11 L.Ed.2d 971. See also S. S. Kresge Co. v. NLRB, 416 F.2d 1225, 1234–1235 (6th Cir.).

In the leading case on this issue involving the FTC, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside an FTC order because the Commission sustained a charge on a ground neither alleged in the complaint nor tried before the Hearing Examiner. The Court held:

> [I]t is well settled that an agency may not change theories in midstream without giving respondents reasonable notice of the change. * * * By substituting an issue * * * for the one framed by the pleading, * * * the Commission has deprived petitioners of both notice and hearing on the substituted issue. The evil at which the statute [Section 5 of the APA] strikes is not remedied by observing that the outcome would perhaps or even likely have been the same. It is the opportunity to present argument under the new theory of violation, which must be supplied. Rodale Press, Inc. v. FTC, 132 U.S.App.D.C. 317, 407 F.2d 1252, 1256–1257. (Emphasis in original.)

Bendix's case was prepared and presented in response to certain enumerated theories. The witnesses were questioned and cross-examined in terms of these issues. The documentary proof was keyed to these theories. Bendix was not accorded the opportunity to present proof and argument under the toehold theory of violation.

We hold that the Commission violated § 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act and that the case must be remanded to permit the parties to offer additional evidence. On remand, both Complaint Counsel and Bendix shall be permitted to offer evidence pertinent to the toehold theory of illegality and any related defenses. Both Commission Counsel and Bendix shall be accorded the right to require the presence of any previously sworn witness for additional testimony either on direct or cross examination. Upon rehearing the Commission may consider any evidence previously taken and now on file and such additional evidence as may be admissible and relevant to the issues involved.

Vacated and remanded.

COLONIAL STORES INCORPORATED v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 30198—F.T.C. Docket 8768

(Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit. Oct. 22, 1971)

1. WHERE AGENCY HAS PLENARY AUTHORITY OVER COMMERCIAL ACTIVITY APPELLATE COURT REVIEW IS CONFINED BY THE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE RULE

When Congress has vested in federal agency plenary authority to investigate and regulate particular forms of commercial or economic activity, entrusting it with primary responsibility for resolution of complex and usually sharply disputed factual issues, appellate court review of exercise of that authority is confined by narrow perimeter of the substantial evidence rule.

2. FINDINGS OF FACT WILL NOT BE SET ASIDE EVEN THOUGH SUGGESTED ALTERNATIVE CONCLUSIONS ARE EQUALLY PERSUASIVE

Findings of fact of federal agency in which plenary authority to investigate and regulate particular forms of commercial or economic activity has been entrusted will not be set aside if evidence in record reasonably supports administrative conclusion, even though suggested alternative conclusions may be equally or even more reasonable and persuasive; the findings must stand unless they are wrong and they cannot be reversibly wrong if substantial evidence supports them.

---

*Reported in 450 F.2d 733. For case before the Commission see 77 F.T.C. 554.

3. On Appeal Findings of Commission as to Facts if Supported by Evidence Shall Be Conclusive

Trade regulation section of Federal Trade Commission Act providing that on appeal the findings of Commission as to facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive means such evidence as is adequate to reasonably support the conclusion reached.

4. Credibility of Evidence and Inferences There From Are Wholly Within Competence of FTC

Assessments of credibility of evidence and inferences to be drawn from it are wholly within competence of Federal Trade Commission.

5. Application of Law to Facts Must Come From Judge

Where statutory standard is open to widely varying individual interpretations, final imprimatur on application of law to facts must come from judges rather than administrative agency.

6. When Findings of Commission Are Framed in Terms of Legal Conclusions Their Presumptive Validity Is Considerable

Even when finding of Federal Trade Commission are framed in terms of legal conclusions, their presumptive validity is considerable.

7. That Retail Grocery Chain Had Induced Promotional Allowances From Its Suppliers Was Supported by Evidence

Evidence supported findings of Federal Trade Commission that retail grocery chain had induced promotional payments from its suppliers and that it knew or should have known that such payments were not being offered to chain's competitors on proportionally equal terms, in proceeding on charges of price discrimination in violation of Robinson-Patman Act.

8. Supplier May Not Make Excessive Promotional Payments Solely on Theory It Obtained Superior Advertising Benefits

Under Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, supplier may not make promotional payments greatly exceeding fixed percentage of purchases standard imposed on other, perhaps smaller, competitors and then justify the excess as nondiscriminatory solely on theory that it obtained superior advertising benefits.

9. The Supermarket Chain Store Could Make Larger Payments Than Smaller Competitors Does Not Justify Such Payments

Fact that multimillion dollar supermarket chain was capable of providing promotion services of considerably greater utility and sophistication than those of smaller competitors and that such services would be worth more to supplier did not, under Robison-Patman Price Discrimination Act, justify suppliers making payments to the chain that were comparatively larger than those made for competitors' promotional efforts of less commercial value.

10. REQUIREMENTS OF PROPORTIONALITY OF PROMOTIONAL SERVICES ARE NOT SATISFIED MERELY BECAUSE SUPPLIER GIVES COMPETITORS CHANCE TO CONDUCT COMPARABLE PROMOTIONS

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act requirements of proportionality of promotional services provided by supplier to retailers are not satisfied merely because supplier gives competitors of one retailer a choice between initiating a promotion comparable in scale to that of the retailer or foregoing any corresponding promotional consideration whatever and some minimal effort to proportionalize in good faith must be made.

11. BENEFITS TO SUPPLIER FROM PROPORTIONAL SERVICES BY ONE CUSTOMER CANNOT OBLITERATE FACT THAT RELATIONSHIP IS ONE OF PROPORTIONALITY

While benefits received by supplier from promotional services provided by one customer may enter into calculation of sum supplier may furnish such customer, they cannot obliterate entirely the fact that fundamental relationship is one of proportionality among offers by supplier to its customers.

12. WHEN COMMISSION HAS SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE OF PRICE DISCRIMINATION IT IS NOT REQUIRED TO NEGATE OTHER CONCEIVABLE INFERENCE

If substantial evidence reasonably supports conclusion reached by Federal Trade Commission with respect to alleged price discrimination, fact that alternative conclusions may have remained unexplored is totally irrelevant and Commission is not required to affirmatively negate every conceivable adverse inference which can be drawn from the evidence.

13. COURT OF APPEALS JUDGES ONLY SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF, NOT PROPRIETY OF COMMISSION'S INVESTIGATIVE METHODS

On review of determination of Federal Trade Commission in price discrimination proceeding under Robinson-Patman Act, Court of Appeals judges only sufficiency of proof, not propriety of Commission's investigative methods.

14. ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT PERMITS INFERENCE THAT PERSONS CHARGED SHOULD KNOW OF DISPROPORTIONALITY OF PAYMENT

Although knowledge of customer that it has received consideration for handling commodities of supplier when such consideration is not available on proportionally equal terms to other competitors of customer must be proved to establish violation of Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, it need not be by direct evidence and circumstantial evidence, premitting inference that persons charged knew, or in exercise of normal care would have known, of disproportionality of payment is sufficient.

15. FORMS STATING THAT ALLOWANCES WERE BEING OFFERED TO COMPETITORS WERE NOT SIGNED UNTIL A MONTH AFTER CHAIN'S PROMOTION BEGAN

Forms signed by suppliers stating that advertising allowances were being offered to competitors of chain grocery store on proportionally equal basis was not entitled to evidentiary weight in determining whether chain had been under duty to inquire about legality of payments to it, where forms were not signed until about a month after chain's promotion began and there was already good reason for suspecting that payments were discriminatory.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 450 F.2d 733)

On appeal Court held that chain grocery store had induced promotional allowances from its suppliers and that it knew competitors were not being offered payments on proportionally equal terms. Affirmed and enforced.

Ernest P. Rogers, George B. Haley, Jr., G. Kimbrough Taylor, Jr., Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein, Atlanta, Ga., for petitioner.

Joseph Martin, Jr., Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, J. B. Truly, Miles J. Brown, Attys., FTC, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Before JOHN R. BROWN, Chief Judge, COLEMAN and CLARK, Circuit Judges.

JOHN R. BROWN, Chief Judge:

Vividly illustrating the increasingly complex character of the retail grocery trade, this appeal also incorporates such diverse elements as a Walt Disney movie, frozen shrimp, canned beef stew and, most significantly, allegations of price discrimination under § 2(d) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 13(d).[1] The impetus for our consideration of this amalgam of entertainment, cuisine and trade regulation law is provided by the Federal Trade Commission's determination that petitioner Colonial Stores, Inc. (Colonial) had practiced an unfair method of competition in commerce[2] by inducing from its suppliers discriminatory advertising allowances that Colonial knew or should have known had not been offered to its competitors on proportionally equal terms. We affirm and enforce in its entirety the order of the Commission.

BACKGROUND: COLONIAL FALLS ON ITS "SWORD"

Colonial is a large, well-established retail grocery chain operating approximately 430 stores in nine States[3] with annual sales in the half-billion dollar range. Its activities are divided on a geographical basis into six operating divisions, each of which is supervised by a vice president and a general manager, and most of the buying and merchandising decisions originate at the division level. Within its own trade area the division is more or less autonomous, maintaining a warehouse and keeping separate records regarding purchases, sales, advertising and promotional activities.

---

[1] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities."

[2] Section 5(a) (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(a) (1), provides that "unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared "unlawful." Indisputably a § 2(d) violation is per se a violation of § 5(a) (1). F.T.C. v. Weingarten, Inc., 5 Cir., 1964, 336 F.2d 687, 693, n. 16, cert. denied, 1965, 380 U.S. 908, 85 S.Ct. 890, 13 L.Ed.2d 796.

[3] Colonial's trade area includes Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky and Ohio.

Traditionally Colonial has promoted sales of its products in a number of different ways, including direct mail, radio and television advertising and in-store display of particular items. It has also utilized periodically so-called "special event promotions," in which a variety of advertising and merchandising techniques are devoted to a particular theme derived either from the season (for example, Thanksgiving or Christmas) or from elaborately planned contests involving games or prizes. In addition to soliciting suppliers to participate in these promotions, selecting the themes, and establishing the time period for which they are to run, Colonial also dictates the terms for the events and determines the rate to be paid by suppliers in return for promotional assistance.

Early in 1964 Colonial initiated a promotion based on the Walt Disney motion picture "Sword in the Stone," a feature-length cartoon then being shown throughout the United States. The film's release was accompanied by a nationwide saturation advertising campaign initiated by its producers, and Colonial sought to capitalize on this extensive publicity by purchasing from a professional supermarket game promoter a packaged promotional campaign[4] built around a "Sword in the Stone" theme and employing, among other things,[5] color brochure advertising of its suppliers' products. Although each division utilized a slightly different format, in general each brochure contained approximately fourteen pages of 8 x 5-inch four-color advertising space, and altogether several million of them were mailed to customers in Colonial's nine-State trade area. Not all suppliers purchased space in this mailer but instead participated in other promotional arrangements involving either in-store displays or cooperative mass media advertising.[6]

---

[4] The "Sword in the Stone" game, purchased by Colonial from Famous Character Promotions, Inc., was developed with the assistance of Walt Disney Productions and involved a printed paper card representing a "Stone" attached to another card symobolizing a "Sword," which when withdrawn by the customer revealed one of the four words in the title of the movie. If the customer collected cards spelling the title she presented them to Colonial in return for a cash award of $100. Some of the cards were imprinted with the names of particular products, which were then awarded to the customer as free prizes. Colonial acquired rights to the game on an exclusive basis and co-sponsored it with the manufacturer of "Melmac" plastic dinnerware as part of a joint promotional effort.

[5] In addition to each advertising brochure and game card, Colonial's mailer included offers of other premiums, including coupons and free childrens' rings.

Colonial sold to its suppliers—that is, persuaded them to purchase—brochure advertising space for a variety of well-known products, including Coca-Cola, Alcoa aluminum foil and Gordon's potato chips. Only two participants in the promotion are relevant for present purposes: Tradewinds Company, a supplier of seafood products which were ordinarily sold through Colonial retail stores, and Poss' Famous Foods, Inc., producers of a line of canned meat items.[7] During the first three months of 1964 Tradewinds paid a total of $7700 for brochure advertising of its breaded frozen shrimp in four Colonial division mailers, while Poss paid $1700 for the advertising of its Brunswick stew in the Columbia division mailer and for the display of its products in Colonial's stores during the first two weeks of 1965. The Hearing Examiner found, and the Commission agreed, that the promotional consideration paid by each of these suppliers was discriminatory because proportionally equal offers had not been made to Colonial's competitors.

THE COMMISSION'S FINDINGS

With respect to Tradewinds, the evidence establishes that during 1964 it maintained with Colonial a regular cooperative advertising program under which Colonial received a 1% advertising allowance on all purchases of Tradewinds products. Tradewinds also gave to Colonial periodic off-invoice discounts on particular items in return for promotional consideration. There is no dispute that both of these arrangements were offered to all of Colonial's competitors and were not discriminatory.

However, the FTC found that the payments received by Colonial's Atlanta Division in connection with the Sword in the Stone promotion were in addition to, rather than part of, the regular advertising allowances and that they were therefore unlawful because at least three of Colonial's competitors had not been offered similar payments.[8] [6] There is no evidence of any sort in the record even remotely suggesting that Colonial attempted to coerce any of its suppliers into participation in the "Sword" promotion, and we assume that all suppliers who took part did so on a strictly voluntary basis.

---

[7] Although the original complaint named eight suppliers as having discriminated in favor of Colonial, the Hearing Examiner concluded that the evidence established discrimination only with respect to the payments by Tradewinds and Poss. The Commission's final cease and desist order therefore must stand or fall on the basis of the findings respecting these two producers.

[8] Each of these competitors purchased Tradewinds products through Associated Grocers Co-operative, Inc. and would ordinarily have received offers of promotional payments from Associated, who in return would have received them from Tradewinds. However, none of the retail grocers received any direct offers, and Associated received only the 1% advertising allowance and the periodic off-invoice discounts usually offered.

This finding was grounded mainly on the fact that, in order for the $2400 payment to fall within the 1% allowance, Colonial would have had to purchase more than a quarter of a million dollars' worth of Tradewinds products during the first quarter of 1964, although the sales invoices reflected purchases during that period totaling only $33,553.80. Concluding that the "Sword" payments were in addition to the regular advertising allowance, and that equivalent payments had neither been offered nor made to at least some of Colonial's competitors, the Commission held that the promotional consideration paid was discriminatory and that Colonial knew or should have known of that fact.

With respect to Poss, the record reveals that its general manager testified that the company's standing policy was to offer all customers free goods in return for promotional consideration, in addition to an alternative advertising plan operated on a bill-back basis. However, Poss' records also showed that during 1964 the value of free goods and allowances offered to the trade generally under its usual programs was grossly disproportionate to the value of the payments made to Colonial for the Sword in the Stone promotion.[9] As a result the Commission found that (i) Poss' payments to Colonial were discriminatory because they so greatly exceeded the payments made to competitors under the usual arrangements, and (ii) Colonial should have known the payments were discriminatory because they so far exceeded the amounts allowed on its own purchases from Poss that there could be no realistic possibility for Poss to offer equivalent payments to competitors.

In addition, several representatives of Colonial's competitors testified that they had received no offers of proportionally equal promotional consideration equivalent to that paid by Poss for participation in the Sword in the Stone arrangement. At most this evidence establishes that Associated Grocers received $39 during the same quarter for an advertisement in its weekly order books, along with some free goods, but that no cash payments on the scale made by Poss to Colonial had ever been offered or accepted.

COLONIAL'S COUNTERATTACK

Colonial advances three distinct arguments to justify its contention that the FTC's cease and desist order cannot stand. The first is a

---

[9] The $1700 Colonial received for Poss' brochure advertisement amounted to 45% of Colonial's total purchases of the product advertised (Poss' 24-ounce Brunswick stew) during the first quarter of 1964. The Commission found that Colonial's competitors received promotional consideration amounting to no more than 9% of their purchasers.

Charge of the Light Brigade [10] head-on-assault, mounted on the assertion that the findings of discriminatory payments are not supported by substantial evidence. The second is a flanking movement which proceeds on the theory that, even if the payments were not offered to Colonial's competitors on proportionally equal terms, Colonial may not be held responsible because it had neither actual knowledge nor reason to know of their illegality. The last is a stragetic retreat necessitated by a concession for the sake of argument: assuming that the payments were discriminatory, and that Colonial was aware of facts placing their legality into question, Colonial asserts that it satisfied its duty to make reasonable inquiry by eliciting from each participating supplier a signed statement to the effect that payments made in connection with the Sword in the Stone promotion were being offered to all Colonial competitors on a proportionally equal basis.[11]

FTC, NOT COURT, FINDS FACTS

[1–6] At this point a preliminary remark is necessary. As is frequently the case in appeals from orders of Federal regulatory commissions, Colonial finds itself in the unenviable position of challenging fact-findings made by an administrative agency whose primary function, by explicit Congressional mandate,[12] is the finding of fact. We have consistently reiterated—and we emphasize the point again now—that when Congress has vested in a Federal agency plenary authority to investigate and regulate particular forms of commercial or economic activity, entrusting it with primary responsibility for the resolution of complex and usually sharply disputed factual issues, appellate court review of the exercise of that authority is confined by the narrow perimeter of the substantial evidence rule.[13] Findings of fact cannot and will not be set aside if the evidence in the record reasonably supports the administrative conclusion, even though suggested alternative conclusions may be equally or even more reasonable and persuasive. The findings must stand unless they were wrong, and they cannot be wrong—that is, reversibly wrong—if substantial evidence supports them.[14]

---

[10] "Was there a man dismay'd?
Not tho' the soldier knew
Some one had blunder'd.
Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why.
Theirs but to do and die."
Alfred Lord Tennyson

[11] Each Colonial division utilized a printed standard form "vendor advertising and promotional arrangement" contract containing the provision, "It is understood that this same agreement is made available by the Vendor [Supplier] on a proportionally equal basis to all dealers in the competitive area who purchase products as herein specified."

[12] Section 5(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act provides, in pertinent part: "Whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that [a] person, partnership, or corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition or unfair or deceptive act or practice in commerce, and if it shall appear to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public, it shall issue and serve upon such person, partnership, or corporation a complaint stating its charges in that respect and containing a notice of a hearing upon a day and at a place therein fixed at least thirty days after the service of said complaint. The person, partnership, or corporation so combined of shall have the right to appear at the place and time so fixed and show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission requiring such person, partnership, or corporation to cease and desist from the violation of the law so charged in said complaint. Any person, partnership, or corporation may make application, and upon good cause shown may be allowed by the Commission to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person. The testimony in any such proceeding shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission. If upon such hearing the Commission shall be of the opinion that the method of competition or the act or practice in question is prohibited by sections 41–46 and 47–58 of this title, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and cause to be served on such person, partnership, or corporation an order requiring such person, partnership, or corporation to cease and desist from using such method of competition or such act or practice." 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(b).

The wisdom of this rule is unassailable. If the corner grocery store—locally owned and competitively supreme within the ambit of the immediate neighborhood—has not yet died out entirely, it is nevertheless well on the way toward extinction. Its successor is the supermarket chain, operating hundreds of stores on a grandiose interstate scale, with thousands of employees, annual sales totaling hundreds of millions of dollars, and the initiative to devise merchandising and marketing techniques of a progressively intricate character.[15] Effective Federal regulation of such commercial giants, in order to preserve competition and thereby promote the public interest as formulated by Congress would be impossible if the FTC's factual determinations are periodically undermined in the courts. Judges are not equipped to explore the esoteric mysteries of the retail grocery business. The necessary expertise, acquired by long experience in the handling of complex problems involving a given activity, is administrative rather than judicial.

---

[13] Section 5(c) of the Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(c), provides that on appeal "the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive." Correctly construed, of course, this means such evidence as is adequate to reasonably support the conclusion reached. Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1965, 348 F.2d 674, 676, cert. denied, 382 U.S. 959, 86 S.Ct. 435, 15 L.Ed.2d 362; 15 U.S.C.A. § 21(c). Assessments of the credibility of the evidence and the inferences to be drawn from it are wholly within the competence of the Commission. FTC v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 1945, 324 U.S. 746, 760, 65 S.Ct. 971, 89 L.Ed. 1338, 1347; F.T.C. v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., 1927, 273 U.S. 52, 63, 47 S.Ct. 255, 71 L.Ed. 534, 538; Rushing v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1963, 320 F.2d 280, 283, cert. denied, 1964, 375 U.S. 986, 84 S. Ct. 519, 11 L.Ed.2d 473; Keele Hair & Scalp Specialists, Inc. v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1960, 275 F.2d 18, 21.

[14] Obviously the line of demarcation between factual and legal conclusions in a case such as this will be wavering and uncertain, since the statutory standard ("proportional equality") is open to widely varying individual interpretations. Under such circumstances, the final imprimatur on the application of the law to the facts must come from Judges rather than Commissioners. F.T.C. v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 1965, 380 U.S. 374, 385, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 904, 914. Nevertheless, even when the Commission's findings are framed in terms of legal conclusions, their presumptive validity is considerable. F.T.C. v. Mary Carter Point Co., 1965, 382 U.S. 46, 48–49, 86 S.Ct. 219, 15 L.Ed.2d 128, 130, reversing 5 Cir., 1964, 333 F.2d 654. We have recently seen fresh proof of this. Gainesville Utilities Dept. v. Florida Power Corp., 1971 402 U.S. 515, 91 S.Ct. 1592, 29 L.Ed.2d 74, reversing Florida Power Corp. v. F.P.C., 5 Cir., 1970, 425 F.2d 1196.

[15] Colonial's Sword in the Stone promotion is itself an extravagant example of high-powered supermarket salesmanship, as the Commission's exhibits illustrate. In addition to a variety of cash prizes and merchandise premiums, the game also offered the opportunity to win all-expense-paid trips to Disneyland (CX 10), and Colonial supplied each of its stores with an assortment of game-promoting equipment, including window streamers, posters, cartoon character cut-outs, banners and pennants, game instruction cards, "stick-out" cards for shelf displays, employee lapel ribbons, bumper stickers, and cards to be used for posting winners' pictures near the front door (CX 21).

[7] To state those premises, under present circumstances, is almost to state the conclusion. The FTC, following extensive hearings in which both sides presented voluminous testimonial and documentary evidence,[16] determined that Colonial had induced from its suppliers illegal promotional payments which it knew or should have known were not being offered to its competitors on proportionally equal terms. Both direct and circumstantial evidence in the record supports this conclusion. The Commission's findings and order must therefore stand.

EVIDENCE OF DISCRIMINATORY PAYMENTS

Colonial argues first that the finding of discriminatory payments is not supported by substantial evidence because (i) no evidence excludes the possibility that the Tradewinds payments were not made pursuant to the standing 1% of purchases advertising agreement, (ii) no evidence excludes the possibility that Tradewinds made offers of free goods to Colonial's competitors in lieu of cash payments, (iii) the fact that Poss' payments to Colonial on a percentage of purchases basis were much greater than those received by competitors is not evidence that Poss did not offer similar arrangements to those competitors, and (iv) even if such offers were not made, the larger payments were not necessarily discriminatory because the standard is a comparative one, depending upon the type of promotional benefits received.

None of these assertions can withstand serious scrutiny. In the first place, although there was no direct evidence adduced to prove that the Atlanta Division's $2400 payment was not part of the regular 1% allowance—and under the circumstances it is difficult to see what form such proof would have taken—the circumstantial evidence introduced on the issue has a probative value equivalent to Thoreau's trout in the milk. The division's sales invoices reflect total first quarter purchases from Tradewinds of $33,553.80,[17] no single division purchase amounting to more than $8,000 in any one week. For the same period Colonial's billing under the 1% allowance amounted to $181.25.[18] Thus the total first quarter payments to Colonial's Atlanta Division totaled $2581.25 against a 1% allowance on purchases amounting at most to $335.54. We think this fact alone constitutes substantial evidence supporting the FTC's conclusion that the $2400 Sword payment was in addition to, rather than pursuant to, the 1% advertising allowance.[19] "Figures speak and when they do, Courts listen."[20] [16] In addition to nearly 2000 pages of testimony, the Hearing Examiner considered more than 130 documentary exhibits submitted by both parties.

---

Nor is there any substance to Colonial's further speculation—also wholly devoid of any evidentiary support—that the $2400 payment might have been offset by a Tradewinds offer of free goods to Colonial's competitors. Such a supposition is beyond credulity when—in a record of several hundred pages following proceedings which spanned nearly a year—the only facts bearing on the point reveal that the total value of such offers amounted to no more than $35 (CX 521c). Even if Colonial had advanced a viable hypothesis, however, the FTC was nevertheless not compelled to accept it, particularly in the absence of evidence establishing it and in the face of evidence refuting it. See note 13, supra.

---

[17] Colonial argues that there is no evidence that the sales invoices show the total first quarter purchases made by the Atlanta Division. This contention borders on the frivolous, since the invoices were introduced by agreement of counsel following the Commission's request for invoices showing all first quarter purchases from Tradewinds. Since we assume that Colonial did not intend to deliberately misrepresent its total purchases by withholding some of the requested invoices, and since Colonial has never suggested that its records are incomplete, the conclusion must be that the Commission's figures are accurate. If they are not, Colonial could have and should have produced evidence of that fact, rather than indulging in untimely hypotheses regarding what might have been. "The production of weak evidence when strong is available can lead only to the conclusion that the strong would have been adverse. * * * Silence then becomes evidence of the most convincing character." Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 1939, 306 U.S. 208, 226, 59 S.Ct. 467, 474, 83 L.Ed. 610, 620.

[18] Since this amount was approximately $150 less than its maximum entitlement under the 1% of purchases allowances, Colonial suggests that the billing covered that portion of the allowance remaining after deduction of the $2400 Sword payment, and that the 1% allowance might have been computed on the basis of an aggregation of purchases from other periods or by other Colonial divisions. This suggestion is positively refuted by Colonial's own officials, who testified that, while diversion of regular advertising allowances to special promotions was sometimes permitted, the consistent practice was to make a notation of that fact on the contract itself so that the accounting department would know how to bill the supplier (App. 27, 69, 72, 173). Not only is such a notation omitted in the Tradewinds Sword contracts (CX 513, 514), but the agreements themselves affirmatively establish a separate and distinct transaction unrelated to the usual allowances. Moreover, Mr. Bazemore, the advertising manager for the Raleigh Division, testified that he was unaware of any practice that permitted Colonial to aggregate purchases from other divisions to increase the allowances in any one division (App. 75–76). And if somehow Colonial did aggregate purchases from other divisions or from other calendar quarters in order to increase the maximum allowance available in the Atlanta Division for the Sword in the Stone promotion, it had the burden either to produce evidence of that fact or to suffer the consequences of an adverse inference drawn from otherwise uncontested evidence. See notes 13 and 17, supra.

[19] Colonial apparently misapprehends the Commission's reasoning when it argues that only a "conjectural speculation" supports the conclusion. Documentary evidence establishes total first quarter purchases, the maximum allowance payable, the actual allowance paid and the amount paid for the Sword promotion. The only "speculation" involved is that which destroys Colonial's theory by supposing that the $2400 payment was made pursuant to the 1% allowance and then determining the total purchases that would have been required to justify a $2581.25 promotional payment computed on a 1%-of-purchases basis. That amount—$258,125—simply does not square with the undisputed evidence establishing actual first quarter purchases of only $33,553.80. In the absence of any evidence disputing these figures, the FTC was entitled to conclude that additional purchases simply did not take place.

[20] Brooks v. Beto, 5 Cir., 1966, 366 F. 2d 1, 9, cert. denied, 1967, 386 U.S. 975, 87 S. Ct. 1169, 19 L.Ed. 2d 135.

For similar reasons the finding that Poss' $1700 payment was discriminatory must stand, since Colonial does not really dispute the evidence upon which this finding is based but instead merely asserts that other evidence is more persuasive and thus dictates a different result.

Although Poss' general manager, Mr. Mangleburg, testified that the company's salesmen were under direct orders to proportionalize promotional payments by making equivalent offers to the trade generally, he did not testify that such offers had in fact been made in connection with the Sword in the Stone promotion.[21] On the other hand Mr. Ponder of Associated Grocers testified unequivocally that Poss made no offers of cash promotional consideration during the period in question, that it was ordinarily the policy of Associated to accept such offers when they were made, that if an otherwise acceptable offer had been made it would have been accepted, and that Associated had actually received from Poss no more than a few cases of free goods and three dollars a week for an ad in its order book (App. 162). In addition Mr. Veach of Bi-Lo, Inc., another Colonial competitor, stated that he did not recall any offers of promotional consideration from Poss that would have approximated Poss' payment to Colonial.[22] At this stage, then, the evidence reasonably supports the finding that, regardless of what its "established policy" might have been, Poss failed to follow up its Sword payment with offers of proportionally equal payments to all Colonial competitors.

---

[21] "Q. Now you said a while ago, I believe on direct, that your salesman always offers to trade in any particular trade area when he makes a special promotion with somebody—promotional agreement with somebody, he makes an offer to the trade generally in that area. Do you know for a fact that this was done on or about the time of the Colonial "Sword in the Stone" promotion as a result of your agreement to participate in it?

A. I feel sure that it was because our salesmen have had that driven home to them and I think a competitor, either at that time or a little later in the year, was running a promotion comparable to it." (App. 118).
Besides failing to establish that proportional offers were actually made, the answer entitled the FTC to conclude that they were not since the reference to a competitor's comparable promotion indicates that the witness may have mistakenly assumed that such offers were required only when a competitor initiated a similar campaign.

[22] Colonial suggests that none of this testimony is credible because offers of promotional consideration in the grocery trade are customarily made orally rather than in writing, thereby precluding the possibility of all offers being accurately recalled. Apart from the fact that we do not review assessments of credibility, see note 13, supra, this argument logically implies that grocery store promotional arrangements between suppliers and retailers are, as a practical matter, immune from § 2(d) regulation because (i) the FTC cannot establish a violation unless it proves that offers were not made to competitors and (ii) it cannot prove that no offers were made because none of the participants can remember the circumstances clearly enough to provide reliable testimony. Needless to say, the reasoning is specious, the premises faulty, and the conclusion absurd.

Moreover, the Commission then nailed the lid on the coffin of the discrimination issue with evidence establishing that Colonial either knew or had reason to know that Poss' payments were illegal because they so greatly exceeded the normal proportion of allowances to purchases. Although not conclusive in itself, that evidence strongly reinforces the other testimony regarding the absence of equivalent offers.

PROPORTIONALITY: THE "PAYMENTS MADE—BENEFITS RECEIVED" THEORY

Finally, Colonial advances the contention that even though Poss may not have followed its payment to Colonial by offering to competitors payments proportionalized on a strict percentage of purchases basis, there can still be no finding of discrimination because Poss realized more valuable promotional benefits from Colonial than it would have received from any of its competitors. In other words, the argument is that the more effective promotional techniques employed in the Sword in the Stone contest justified payments that were comparatively larger than those made for promotional efforts of less commercial value. Or, to put it still another way, only Colonial had a Sword in the Stone project, so the suppliers could not have offered similar allowances to competitors who were not undertaking a similar promotional scheme.

[8–11] Unfortunately the cases cited by Colonial[23] do not justify such an expansive interpretation of § 2(d)'s requirement of "proportional equality." Obviously a multi-million dollar supermarket chain will be capable of providing promotional services of considerably greater utility and sophistication than those of a smaller competitor, and such services will be worth more to the supplier. But the requirements of proportionality are not satisfied merely because the supplier gives the competitors a choice between initiating a promotion comparable in scale to the Sword in the Stone game and foregoing any corresponding promotional consideration whatever.[24] Some minimal effort to proportionalize in good faith must be made, and while promotional benefits received may enter into the calculation, they cannot obliterate entirely the fact that the fundamental relationship is one of proportionality among offers.[25] To hold otherwise would result in widely varying promotional payments in amounts almost directly related to the size and mercantile prowess of the individual payee, a consequence which § 2(d) was enacted to preclude.

---

[23] F.T.C. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc., 1959, 360 U.S. 55, 79 S.Ct. 1005, 3 L.Ed.2d 1079; Lever Bros. Co., 1953, 50 F.T.C. 494. In construing the identical proportionality requirement of § 2(e), the Supreme Court in Simplicity Pattern suggested "the possibility that this tailoring of services and facilities to meet the different needs of two classes of customers" might in fact constitute proportionality. 360 U.S. at 61, n. 4, 79 S.Ct. at 1010, 3 L.Ed.2d at 1084. This was merely a reaffirmance of the principle expressed in Lever Bros. that § 2(d) does not "require a seller to pay at the same rate * * * for types of services which are of unequal cost or value. * * * Payments must be made in good faith for services or facilities actually rendered and there should be a fair and reasonable relation between the amount of the payment and the type of service rendered." 50 F.T.C. a 512. But neither case supports Colonial's broad assertion that a supplier may make promotional payments greatly exceeding the fixed percentage of purchases standard imposed upon other, perhaps smaller, competitors and then justify the excess as non-discriminatory solely on the theory that it obtained superior advertising benefits.

The conclusion is thus inevitable that Poss did not simply offer more for promotional activities that provided more, but rather failed altogether to offer Colonial's competitors anything approximating a proportionally equal arrangement. It made some offers of free goods, but these were trifling when compared to the $1700 lump payment made to Colonial. Several competitors testified that no equivalent offer had ever been made. Under these circumstances there is ample evidentiary support for the Commission's conclusion that the Poss payment was discriminatory.

[12, 13] The problem with Colonial's whole line of attack on these factual issues is that it mistakenly assumes that the Commission must affirmatively negate every conceivable adverse inference which can be drawn from the evidence. That is not the law. If substantial evidence reasonably supports the conclusion reached, the fact that alternative

---

[24] Poss did not, as Lever Brothers did, 50 F.T.C. at 507, offer other competitors a choice of alternative advertising plans under which equivalent promotional benefits might have been secured. Indeed, the finding is that it did not make any equivalent offers at all (App. 242), but instead negotiated with Colonial for what was clearly a one-of-a-kind promotion that could not have been duplicated and probably not even imitated. Such individual bargains do not represent any meaningful attempt to comply with § 2(d)'s proportionality requirement. See Liggett & Meyers Tobacco Co., 1959, 56 F.T.C. 221, 243; Vanity Fair Paper Mills, Inc. v. F.T.C., 2 Cir., 1962, 311 F.2d 480, 486–487.

[25] As the leading commentator on the Robinson-Patman Act has pointed out, the principle announced by the Supreme Court in Simplicity Pattern

> "would allow suppliers, as long as all customers were given some benefits of proportional value, to channel their promotional funds into the most fruitful directions—to obtain greater returns from cooperative advertising campaigns while at the same time insuring fair treatment for all competing customers."

Likewise, the FTC's Lever Bros. decision merely permits

> "the supplier to formulate a promotional campaign maximizing the potency of the media of his choice—so long as some 'fair and reasonable' equivalent is provided for those competing rivals who could not otherwise participate. Nevertheless, the supplier's program need not ignore the relative desirability of particular promotional media and may scale reimbursement accordingly, thereby ensuring 'proportionality' not only with respect to 'customers' purchases' but also 'their ability and equipment to render or furnish the services to be paid for.' "

Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act 404, 409 (1962). Of course these considerations are largely irrelevant when, as here, no equivalent offers of any kind were ever made to Colonial's competitors.

conclusions may have remained unexplored is totally irrelevant. We judge only the sufficiency of the proof, not the propriety of the FTC's investigative methods. See Niresk Industries, Inc. v. F.T.C., 7 Cir., 1960, 278 F.2d 337, 343 (concurring opinion), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 883, 81 S.Ct. 173, 5 L.Ed.2d 104.

DID COLONIAL HAVE REASON TO KNOW THAT THE PAYMENTS WERE DISCRIMINATORY?

Given the fact of discrimination, the question now becomes whether substantial evidence supports the Commission's findings that Colonial knew or should have known of it. J. Weingarten, Inc., 1963, 62 F.T.C. 1521, 1525. Clearly it does.

[14] Instances in which the FTC will be able to prove actual knowledge of a § 2(d) violation are likely rare, since the only direct evidence of a state of mind must come from the testimony of the individuals who have broken the law. As a consequence, "although knowledge must be proved, it need not be by direct evidence; circumstantial evidence, permitting the inference that petitioners knew, or in the exercise of normal care would have known, of the disproportionality of the payments is sufficient." American News Co. v. F.T.C., 2 Cir., 1962, 300 F. 2d 104, 110, cert. denied, 371 U.S. 824, 83 S. Ct. 44, 9 L. Ed. 2d 64; Grand Union Co. v. F.T.C., 2 Cir., 1962, 300 F. 2d 92, 100; Giant Food Inc. v. F.T.C., 1962, 113 U.S. App. D.C. 227, 3007 F. 2d 184, 187, cert. denied, 1963, 372 U.S. 910, 83 S.Ct. 723, 9 L.Ed.2d 718; cf. Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. FTC., 1953, 346 U.S. 61, 73 S. Ct. 1017, 97 L.Ed. 1454.

The Commission's findings with respect to both the Tradewinds and the Poss payments are based on the theory that, by virtue of its own experience with the cooperative advertising agreements and off-invoice and free goods allowances of both suppliers, Colonial must have known that the $2400 and $1700 payments were so grossly disproportionate to the ordinary allowances computed on a percentage of purchases basis that neither supplier was making offers of proportionally equal payments to all competitors. Thus, Tradewinds' Sword in the Stone payment amounted to approximately 7% of Colonial's total first quarter purchases, in addition to whatever it received under the usual off-invoice allowances. Yet it knew that competitors were receiving payments under the cooperative agreement amounting to no more than 1% of purchases, and it must have known that Tradewinds simply could not have afforded to make offers proportional in value to all other dealers, a fact confirmed by the testimony of Mr. Mueller, Colonial's expert on grocery advertising and promotional programs.[26]

The $1700 payment received from Poss should have been even more suspect from Colonial's standpoint, since that amount represented 46% of the first quarter purchases of the product advertised,[27] while Poss' usual promotional allowance of one case of free goods for each ten cases purchased amounted to only 10%, with a few other payments of lesser percentages. From its own experience Colonial had reason to know that its competitors were being short-changed by Poss, and it cannot now reasonably contend that it was unaware of facts that gave more than fair warning.

THE "CLEAN BILL OF HEALTH" PROVISION

Colonial's final argument is that, conceding it was aware of facts placing it under a duty to inquire about the legality of the payments, it nevertheless satisfied that duty by requiring both Tradewinds and Poss to sign written representations (see note 11, supra) that similar payments were being offered to competitors on a proportionally equal basis. We think the FTC justifiably concluded that the inducement of this self-serving declaration was entitled to no evidentiary weight whatever under the circumstances.

[15] In the first place the forms were not signed by Tradewinds until nearly a month after, nor by Poss until more than a month after, the Sword in the Stone promotion began (CX 25, 61). Consequently their ex post facto character limits if not precludes the possibility of their being considered as evidence of precautions taken by Colonial before the promotional agreement was reached.

Even more significant, however, the requirement that a supplier sign such a representation is simply not sufficient, by itself, to offset actual knowledge of facts strongly suggesting, if not establishing, that despite disclaimers to the contrary the supplier is not offering proportionally equal payments to competitiors. A written agreement, which by its nature is to be treated as a substitute for inquiry, cannot take the place of an independent investigation if, as found by the Commission, there are ample grounds for believing that the other party may not be complying with the requirements of the law.[28] And while the exigencies of the trade may make such painstaking verification difficult, the obvious answer—in this case, at least—is that any sort of inquiry would have confirmed what there was already good reason for suspecting. It would surely have confirmed what the facts were, leaving perhaps some uncertainty as to their legal consequences. But on that score no amount of written statements, disclaimers, protestations of clean health, noble purpose or purity of heart made by another could exculpate the recipient from bearing what the law imposes. When the warning signs are so clear, the recipient must either devise some practicable method for allaying its doubts—and thereby satisfying its duty of inquiry—or it must forego entirely the opportunity to solicit a lucrative but highly suspect promotional arrangement. An alternative, of course, is to risk a disastrous engagement with the FTC and, as here, to lose.

---

[26] Mr. Mueller testified that a supplier "obviously" could not make proportionally equal offers to all competitors if the total payment to any one retailer amounted to 7% of sales during the period in which the promotion was to run (App. 205). Yet that is precisely what happened here.

[27] In its brief Colonial strenuously contends that there is no rational justification for computing the percentage of purchases solely upon the basis of one size of one Poss product purchased during one three-month period. But Poss' brochure advertising related only to that product (the 24-ounce size Brunswick stew), and the ad ran only for the first quarter of 1964. Even taking into account purchases of all Poss products during the relevant period, the Sword in the Stone payment still amounted to almost 19% of their value, and even then it is relatively clear that no supplier would have given an advertising allowance on unadvertised products.

The order of the Commission is affirmed and enforced in its entirety.

Affirmed and enforced.

ORLAN A. SAUCKE v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. 15091—F.T.C. File No. 99-114

(United States District Court, N.D. Georgia. Oct. 22, 1971)

1. PLAINTIFF'S EVICTION FROM HIS RESIDENCE AND OTHER DIFFICULTIES DO NOT STATE A CLAIM UPON WHICH A FEDERAL COURT CAN GRANT RELIEF

Mandamus petitions growing out of plaintiff's personal financial affairs and relating to plaintiff's eviction from his former residence and subsequent inability to find suitable housing through federal agency did not invoke jurisdiction of federal court and did not state claim upon which federal court could grant relief.

2. ENFORCEMENT POWERS OF COMMISSION ARE DISCRETIONARY AND APPLICABLE ONLY IN CASES OF PUBLIC INTEREST

Exercise of enforcement powers by FTC is discretionary and is applicable only in cases of public interest.

3. FTC INVESTIGATIVE POWERS DO NOT INCLUDE MANDAMUS TO COMPEL SEIZURE OF PLAINTIFF'S FINANCIAL RECORDS

Mandamus was not available to compel exercise of FTC investigative powers, particularly where plaintiff sought to have FTC seize certain records relevant to plaintiff's financial status.

---

[28] Naturally a written representation may be treated by the FTC as having some utility under other circumstances, such as when the factual question of whether the recipient had reason to know of actual discrimination is a very close one. All depends upon the unique state of the evidence in each case. Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. F.T.C., supra, 346 U.S. at 80, n. 24, 73 S.Ct. at 1017, 97 L.Ed. at 1467; Utah Pie Co. v. Continental Baking Co. 1967, 386 U.S. 685, 695, n. 10, 87 S.Ct. 1326, 18 L.Ed.2d 406, 415. But when on credited findings that reason to know is undeniably present, reliance upon the supplier's declarations will not suffice.

*Reported in 333 F. Supp. 1197 (1971).

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 333 F. Supp. 1197)

In a mandamus action requiring Commission to seize certain records relating to plaintiff's financial affairs court held it did not have jurisdiction and dismissed action.

Orlan A. Saucke, pro se.

John W. Stokes, Jr., U.S. Atty., Julian M. Longley, Jr., Asst. U.S. Atty., Atlanta, Ga., Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Robert E. Duncan, Atty., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for F.T.C.

ORDER

EDENFIELD, District Judge.

[1] This is the first of four pro se mandamus petitions which have been filed by plaintiff. Two of the petitions relate to problems growing out of plaintiff's personal financial affairs.[1] The other petitions relate to plaintiff's eviction from his former residence [2] and his subsequent inability to find suitable housing through a federal agency.[3] While plaintiff may in fact have some serious legal problem, the complaints presented to this court simply do not invoke the jurisdiction of a federal court, nor do they state any claim upon which a federal court could grant relief.

In this action plaintiff requests mandamus relief requiring the Federal Trade Commission to seize certain records relevant to plaintiff's financial status. These records are in the possession of various credit bureaus in Georgia, Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, and allegedly contain erroneous credit information which is damaging to plaintiff. The FTC has moved to dismiss the petition.[4]

[2, 3] It is well settled that an action in the nature of mandamus requires the existence of a specific duty owed to plaintiff. E.g., In re

---

[1] This action and Civil Action No. 15669.

[2] Civil Action No. 15591.

[3] Civil Action No. 15670.

[4] Subsequent to the filing of defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff informally contacted the court regarding his cases and was advised that his petitions did not appear to set forth a federal cause of action. The court informed plaintiff that prior to any ruling on the sufficiency of his petitions, he would be given an opportunity to obtain counsel and file any additional documents which he wished the court to consider. Plaintiff has responded by requesting appointment of counsel and filing an amendment. The request for appointment of counsel is denied and the amendment fails to cure plaintiff's fatally defective petition. The amendment contains a vague allegation that plaintiff is under the jurisdiction of a federal agency. While the purpose of this allegation is unclear, it clearly does not establish federal jurisdiction. Furthermore, even assuming that the amendment states a claim under subchapter III of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), such an action may not be maintained against the FTC, which is the only named defendant.

Wingreen Co., 412 F. 2d 1048 (5th Cir. 1969). No such duty is alleged in this action and it clearly appears that no such duty exists. The exercise of enforcement powers by the FTC is not only discretionary but is applicable only in cases of public interest. 15 U.S.C. §§ 45, 46, and 1681s. Such being the case, mandamus is not available to compel the exercise of FTC investigative powers particularly where plaintiff seeks to have the FTC assist him in his personal financial affairs. FTC v. Klesner, 280 U.S. 19, 50 S. Ct. 1, 74 L. Ed. 138 (1929); Stancato v. Department of Justice and FTC, Civil Action No. 69–1378 (D. C. Cal., Aug. 14, 1969).

Therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss is granted and the Clerk is directed to dismiss plaintiff's petition for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

It is so ordered.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. EMANUEL GLADSTONE*

No. 71–1672—F.T.C. Docket 8882

(Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit. Nov. 4, 1971)

1. FINDING IN CRIMINAL CONTEMPT PROCEEDING THAT DEFENDANT'S EXPLANATION FOR DESTRUCTION OF HIS FILES WAS UNBELIEVABLE HELD NOT ERRONEOUS

   Finding in proceeding to hold defendant in criminal contempt of Federal Trade Commission subpoena duces tecum, that defendant's explanation for his destruction of papers in subpoenaed files was unbelievable, was not erroneous.

2. EVEN IF SPECIFICATION WAS OVERBROAD DEFENDANT REMOVING FILES SUBJECT TO FTC SUBPOENA WAS GUILTY OF CONTEMPT

   Defendant who removed from files, which were subject of Federal Trade Commission subpoena requiring production of all files and all documents in those files, all documents except those of certain types, was guilty of contempt.

3. DEFENDANT NOT CONFUSED BY OMISSION OF WORD "CRIMINAL" WHERE HE WAS ACCORDED ALL PROCEDURAL RIGHTS IN CRIMINAL CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS

   Omission of word "criminal" in notice of criminal contempt proceeding was not fatal where notice fully described conduct charged, there was no indication that defendant was confused as to nature of proceeding, and defendant was accorded all procedural rights due defendants in criminal contempt proceedings.

---

*Reported in 450 F. 2d 913 (1971). For case before the Commission, see 83 F.T.C. 1126. See also p. 6 herein.

4. FEDERAL IMMUNITY STATUTES DO NOT RELATE BACK TO CONVICTIONS OBTAINED PRIOR TO GRANTING OF IMMUNITY

   Immunity granted under federal immunity statutes does not relate back to convictions obtained prior to granting of immunity.

5. IMMUNITY PROVISION OF FTC ACT AT DATE OF HEARING RATHER THAN PROVISION REPEALED GOVERNED SCOPE OF IMMUNITY

   Federal Trade Commission Act immunity provision in effect at date of hearing governed scope of immunity, rather than provision repealed before hearing but after date of order requiring witness to appear.

6. WITNESS NOT ENTITLED TO IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION OR TO CLAIM THAT IT RELATED BACK TO PRIOR CONVICTION

   Witness at Federal Trade Commission hearing was not entitled to immunity from prosecution, or to claim that immunity related back to prior conviction, where he never refused to testify.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 450 F.2d 913)

In criminal contempt proceeding court held that defendant who removed certain documents from files subpoenaed by FTC was guilty of contempt even though specification was overbroad. Affirmed.

Martin M. Pollock, James B. Gurley, Atlanta, Ga., for respondent-appellant.

Harland F. Leathers, Chief, General Litigation Sect., Civil Div., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., John W. Stokes, Jr., U.S. Atty., Atlanta, Ga., Jos. Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold C. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Charles C. Moore, Jr., Atty., FTC, Washington, D.C., for petitioner-appellee.

Before THORNBERRY, MORGAN and CLARK, Circuit Judges.

LEWIS R. MORGAN, Circuit Judge:

Emanuel Gladstone, President of the Southern Cross Discount Company, Inc., appeals from a judgment of the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia holding him in willful criminal contempt of court and sentencing him to imprisonment for ten days. We affirm the judgment of the district court.

I.

This criminal contempt conviction grows out of an investigation of activities of Southern Cross by the Federal Trade Commission. In the course of that investigation, the Federal Trade Commission issued a subpoena duces tecum to Gladstone requiring that he appear at the Commission's Atlanta office on November 19, 1969, to testify and that he produce documents described in the fifteen specifications attached to the subpoena. Gladstone failed to appear and to produce the requested documents on the specified date, whereupon the Commission petitioned the district court for an order enforcing the subpoena.

The district court held two hearings on the enforcement petition. At these hearings Gladstone objected to enforcement principally on the ground that compliance would be expensive to his company and requested reimbursement from the government for the costs of compliance. After the close of the hearing, the district court issued an order requiring that Gladstone produce the material described in the specifications. Gladstone neither appealed this order nor sought a stay pending appeal.

During the next three days, Gladstone, assisted by Southern Cross employees and by temporary employees from Manpower, Inc., removed numerous documents from the subpoenaed files and destroyed them. Upon learning of this removal and destruction of documents, the Commission filed a "Motion for Show Cause Hearing for Contempt Citation". After the hearing, the court concluded that Gladstone had wilfully violated the court's order by destroying subpoenaed documents and sentenced him to 10 days imprisonment for criminal contempt.

II.

Appellant's initial argument on appeal is that the district court erred by placing an unreasonable interpretation upon the meaning of specifications 8 and 9 of the subpoena duces tecum. Gladstone contends that under a proper interpretation of the subpoena, he complied with its terms and should not have been held in contempt.

Specifications 8 and 9 of the subpoena required the production of:

> 8. All files showing all contracts, credit applications, promissory notes, mortgages and other documents on customers who purchased the aluminum siding, swimming pool and carpeting at the advertised prices of Southern Cross Discount Company, Inc. during that period of time from January 1, 1968, to the date upon which return is made to this subpoena.
>
> 9. The originals or, in lieu thereof, copies of all contracts, credit applications, promissory notes and mortgages relating to every job done by or for Southern Cross Discount Company, Inc., during the period of April 1, 1968 to September 30, 1968.

The district court interpreted specification 8 as requiring the production of all documents in the customer files. Relying on the language of the specification requiring the production of "all files showing all contracts, credit applications, promissory notes, mortgages and other documents on customers," the court ruled that the removal of any item from the files in question amounted to a violation of its order.

It is uncontroverted that Gladstone ordered the removal of numerous documents from these files. At the contempt hearing, Gladstone testified that he hired men from Manpower, Inc., and instructed them to go through the files removing all of their contents except three items—credit applications, worksheets, and contracts. A Manpower, Inc., employee testified that Gladstone taped examples of these three items on the wall where the men were working to guide them.

The principal documents which appear to have been removed from the files were so-called "Contract Adjustment Memos". These were documents which recorded modifications of customer contracts with respect to price. The Federal Trade Commission also alleges that customer promissory notes were removed from the files. By Gladstone's own admission, there is no way of knowing precisely which documents were in fact removed. We know only that substantial quantities of documents were removed and that Gladstone's employees were instructed to leave three particular types of documents in the files.

Gladstone does not dispute these facts. However, he does contend that the removal of these documents was in no way inconsistent with a good faith effort on his part to comply with the subpoena. Gladstone asserts that his purpose in removing the Contract Adjustment Memos was to rid the files of intra-office memoranda which he did not believe to be subpoenaed and which duplicated information already contained on the file jacket.[1] With respect to the promissory notes, Gladstone concedes that, even though specifically subpoenaed, they were not one of the forms which he taped on the wall with instructions that they be left in the files. His explanation for this omission is that the promissory notes would not ordinarily have been in these files anyway since in the normal course of his business, the notes would be sent to the finance company which discounted them. However, evidence was presented by the Federal Trade Commission which indicates that at least a few promissory notes were torn from the files. Such removal would constitute a violation of the court's order even if, as appellant asserts, most files did not contain promissory notes. Certainly the fact that most promissory notes were not kept in the files would not justify the destruction of those promissory notes which were in fact contained in the files.

[1,2] The district court rejected Gladstone's explanations for the removal of large quantities of documents from the files. The court, in its findings of fact, determined that Gladstone's explanation that he merely sought to remove unsubpoenaed documents and avoid duplication was "unbelievable". Viewing the record in its entirety we cannot conclude that this finding was erroneous. The plain, unambiguous language of specification 8 required the production of all files and all documents in those files. Arguably the specification was overbroad since it requested all documents within the files including ones with no conceivable relevance to the Federal Trade Commission's investigation. If this were the case, however, the appropriate remedy was a petition to the district court for clarification of its order or an appeal from the order of this court. Instead, Gladstone chose to take matters into his own hands. Moreover, it should be noted that Gladstone did not merely remove from the files those documents which he believed to be irrelevant to the Federal Trade Commission's investigation. He chose instead to destroy the documents, thus placing the information irretrievably beyond the Federal Trade Commission's reach. In our view, this destruction of the documents was itself inconsistent with any claimed good faith compliance with the court's order.

---

[1] The FTC disputes the classification of the Contract Adjustment Memos as intra-office memoranda. These documents reflected agreements to modify customer contracts and bore the legend, "Attach to original contract". The FTC argues that these Memos were part of the customer contracts and as such were subpoenaed under the language of specification 8 requiring the production of "all contracts". The dispute is inconsequential, however, since in any event the memos were subpoenaed under the "other documents" language of the specification.

III.

We turn now to Gladstone's second contention on appeal which is that the conviction is invalid because of a failure by the court to comply with the notice requirements of Rule 42(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. That rule requires that criminal contempts be prosecuted only on notice and that the notice "state the essential facts constituting the criminal contempt charged and describe it as such * * *".

Gladstone attacks the sufficiency of the notice given him for its failure to clearly designate that he was to be prosecuted for "criminal" contempt. The contempt prosecution was initiated by a motion from the Federal Trade Commission requesting a show cause hearing. The motion alleged that Gladstone had caused "a large portion of the books and records ordered to be produced" to be "destroyed * * * in direct and contumacious disobedience" to the court's order. Upon receipt of the motion, the district court issued an order requiring that Gladstone appear and show cause "why he should not be adjudged in contempt of court". The court's order did not, however, use the word "criminal". Gladstone contends that this omission made the notice defective under Rule 42(b).

[3] Prior cases construing the requirements of Rule 42(b) make it clear that this argument must be rejected. The same issue was raised in the leading case of United States v. United Mine Workers of America, 330 U.S. 258, 67 S. Ct. 677, 91 L. Ed. 884 (1947), in which the Supreme Court held that Rule 42(b) does not impose a rigorous requirement that the word "criminal" always be included in the notice given the contemnor. In that case, as in the one at bar, the motion and the order to show cause fully described the events which formed the basis of the contempt charge, but failed to use the word "criminal". The court concluded that notice was sufficient under Rule 42(b). Similarly, in Stewart v. Dunn, 5 Cir., 1966, 363 F. 2d 591, this court rejected the argument that reversal is required solely because the notice given the contemnor omits the word "criminal". See also Yates v. United States, 10 Cir., 1963, 316 F. 2d 718; but see 3 C. Wright, Federal Practice & Procedures, § 710, at 174 (1969).

The Mine Workers case teaches that reversal is required only where there is a showing that there was prejudice to the contemnor as a result of the failure to clearly designate the nature of the contempt proceeding. In the case at bar, we entertain no serious belief that Gladstone was prejudiced. The notice given Gladstone fully described the conduct which formed the basis of the contempt charge. There is no indication in the record that Gladstone was confused as to the nature of the contempt proceeding. Certainly it must have been plain to Gladstone and his lawyers that the contempt hearing was not a civil proceeding for the purpose of coercing production of the records. The records had already been destroyed. The only conceivable purpose for the hearing was to determine whether Gladstone should be punished for destroying the documents. At the hearing, Gladstone raised no objection to the notice given him. During the hearing, Gladstone was accorded all the procedural rights due the defendant in a criminal contempt hearing.[2] In light of all these factors, we conclude that no prejudice resulted.

IV.

On February 26, 1971, shortly after Gladstone's contempt conviction in the court below, he received a notice from the Federal Trade Commission requiring that he once again appear before the Commission to testify. This notice was issued pursuant to an order of the district court dated August 25, 1970. Gladstone appeared before the Federal Trade Commission on March 16, 1971. When called to testify, he stated, through his counsel, that he was appearing under compulsory process and insisted upon all immunities from prosecution granted to him under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[3] Gladstone was then questioned and testified. A portion of his testimony concerned the transaction from which Gladstone's contempt conviction arose.

---

[2] We have considered and rejected Gladstone's contention that the district court improperly placed the burden upon Gladstone to prove his innocence of the charges against him. A reading of the record in its entirety reveals that no such burden was placed upon Gladstone.

[3] 38 Stat. 722 (repealed by P.L. 91–452, 84 Stat. 922).

Subsequent to this hearing, Gladstone made a motion to this court that his conviction be set aside on the ground that his testimony at the March 16th hearing entitles him to immunity from prosecution under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and that this immunity relates back to his earlier conviction. Gladstone relies on the case of Frank v. United States, 120 U.S. App. D.C. 392, 1965, 347 F. 2d 486, cert. dis. 382 U.S. 923, 86 S. Ct. 317, 15 L.Ed. 2d 338, vacated and remanded on other grounds, 384 U.S. 882, 86 S. Ct. 1912, 16 L. Ed. 2d 994 which held that where testimony, concerning a particular transaction is compelled under a grant of immunity, that immunity is retrospective as well as prospective and requires that even convictions obtained prior to the granting of immunity be vacated.

[4–6] Gladstone's motion must be denied for two reasons. First, it is clear that Frank is no longer good law. In Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 348, 349, n. 3, 88 S. Ct. 507, 19 L. Ed. 2d 576 (1967), the Supreme Court considered and rejected the argument that immunity granted under federal immunity statutes similar to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act relates back to convictions obtained prior to the granting of immunity. Secondly, the statute under which Gladstone claims to have been granted immunity was repealed prior to the March 16, 1971, hearing.[4] That immunity provision was replaced by a new federal immunity statute which authorizes the Government to convey to a prospective witness a grant of immunity only after the witness has first refused to testify and invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination.[5] Gladstone concededly never refused to testify about the events giving rise to his contempt conviction and thus is in no position to assert that he is immune from prosecution with respect to that transaction, much less to assert that the immunity relates back to the prior conviction from which he appeals.

---

[4] Despite its repeal, Gladstone argues that his testimony is governed by the immunity provision of section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act because that provision had not been repealed as of August 25, 1970, the date of the district court's order requiring that Gladstone appear and testify before the FTC at a time and place designated by the Commission. This argument is erroneous. Section 260 of P.L. 91–452 provides:

> The provision [repealing various federal immunity statutes including section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act] shall take effect on the sixtieth day following the date of enactment of this Act [December 14, 1970]. No amendment to or repeal of any provision of law under title II of this Act shall affect any immunity to which any individual is entitled under such provision by reason of any testimony or other information given before such day. (Emphasis added.)

Thus, congressional intent is clear. The date of the giving of the testimony, not the date of the issuance of court orders or other compulsory process is determinative. Testimony actually given subsequent to the effective date of the statute is governed by the new immunity provisions regardless of the date of the court's order.

In this case, the court's order was dated August 25, 1970, but Gladstone did not testify until March 16, 1971, long after the February 14, 1971, effective date of the statute.

[5] Section 211 of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, 84 Stat. 929, 18 U.S.C. §§ 6001 et seq. provides as follows:

> § 6002. Immunity generally
>
> Whenever a witness refuses, on the basis of his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or provide other information in a proceeding before or ancillary to—
>
> (1) a court or grand jury of the United States,
>
> (2) an agency of the United States, or
>
> (3) either House of Congress, a joint committee of the two Houses, or a committee or a subcommittee of either House.

In summary, Gladstone's motion to set aside his conviction is denied and his conviction is in all respects affirmed.

Affirmed.

MARCO SALES COMPANY, ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 188, Docket 71-1451—F.T.C. Docket 8870

(Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Dec. 16, 1971)

1. COMMISSION'S ABSOLUTE PROHIBITION OF GAMES AND PUNCH BOARDS IN RETAILING FOOD AND GASOLINE WHERE NO DECEPTION PROVEN WAS IMPROPER

In light of Federal Trade Commission's regulation of games, including punch boards, employed to lure customers in food retailing and gasoline industries by eliminating aspects deemed to be receptive, Commission's absolute prohibition of their use for purpose of selling merchandise offered as prizes where there was no deception or fraud practiced at all and where Commission made no findings and articulated no reasons for its disparate treatment of petitioners was improper.

2. FTC HAS NO POWER TO DESTROY ONE OF MANY VIOLATORS

Federal Trade Commission does not have unbridled power to institute proceedings which will arbitrarily destroy one of many law violators in an industry.

3. FTC TOTALLY FAILED TO EXPLAIN ITS RIGID STANCE TOWARD PETITIONERS HERE AND ITS FLEXIBLE TOLERANCE TOWARD OTHER MEMBERS OF INDUSTRY

Federal Trade Commission acted arbitrarily in totally failing to even advert to, much less explain, its reason for rigid ad hoc adjudicatory stance adopted toward petitioners and flexible tolerance its industry regulation displayed to those utilizing same or similar devices.

4. WHEN DECISION IS APPARENTLY INCONSISTENT WITH DECLARED RULE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT REQUIRES AGENCY TO INCLUDE ITS FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

Requirement under Administrative Procedure Act that agency included in its decision its findings and conclusions as well as reasons or basis therefor takes on added importance when decision is apparently inconsistent with a virtually contemporaneously declared rule.

5. PETITIONERS MUST BE PROVIDED WITH AN EXPLANATION OF DIFFERENCES IN TREATMENT BY AN ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY

An administrative agency is obligated to provide petitioners with an explanation for difference in their treatment.

---

*Reported in 453 F. 2d 1. For case before the Commission see 78 F.T.C. 454.

6. GROCERY AND GASOLINE GAMES OF CHANCE USED SOLELY FOR SELLING MERCHANDISE OFFERED AS PRIZES HELD NOT TO BE DECEPTIVE

   Claim that grocery and gasoline station games of chance were sales promotions to attract traffic while petitioners' plan, though not deceptive, was used solely for purpose of selling merchandise offered as prizes was not such an obvious distinction as to remove need for any consideration as to petitioners of Federal Trade Commission's regulation of games, including punch boards, employed to lure customers in food retailing and gasoline industries by eliminating aspects deemed to be deceptive.

7. ABSENCE OF CONSIDERATION IN SELLING PETITIONER'S MERCHANDISE DID NOT REMOVE NEED FOR CONSIDERATION IN FTC'S CASE AGAINST RESPONDENT

   Claim that retail store games of chance did not involve element of consideration as did petitioners' plan used for purpose of selling merchandise offered as prizes did not remove need for consideration as to petitioners of Federal Trade Commission's regulation of games, including punch boards, employed to lure customers in food retailing and gasoline industries by eliminating aspects deemed to be deceptive.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 453 F.2d 1)

Held by the court, that where method of using games, including punch boards, to sell food and gasoline had no aspects deemed to be deceptive, the Commission's finding practice deceptive was improper. Reversed and remanded.

Willis Hagen and Charles Rowan, Milwaukee, Wis., for petitioners.
Nicholas S. Reynolds, Atty. Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Before MOORE, HAYS and MULLIGAN, Circuit Judges.

MULLIGAN, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition to review a cease and desist order issued by the Federal Trade Commission at the completion of an administrative proceeding initiated by a complaint charging petitioners with engaging in unfair acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[1] In April, 1967 the Commission held an investigational hearing and on November 27, 1968, issued its complaint against the petitioners, Marco Sales Company (Marco), an Illinois corporation and Marvin O. Baer, individually, as an officer controlling the acts and practices of the corporation. After a two-day evidentiary hearing in Chicago, Illinois, on April 15 and 16, 1969, the examiner issued his initial decision and order on June 30, 1969. Cross appeals were taken to the Commission, which heard oral argument on October 16, 1969 with four members sitting. No decision was rendered, and the Chairman of the Commission requested petitioners' permission to participate in the decision. The case was reargued before the full Commission on February 3, 1971 which issued a final order to cease and desist on February 25, 1971 in the form initially recommended by the examiner. The petition for review is granted. We reverse the order and remand to the Federal Trade Commission for further consideration consistent with this opinion.

---

[1] The pertinent provisions of the Act are as follows:
Sec. 5 (a) (1) Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful. (15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (1)).
Sec. 5 (a) (6) The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. (15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (6)).

Marco's method of conducting business is not in dispute. Marco sells articles by means of a lottery or game of chance in interstate commerce in various states including Connecticut, New York and Vermont. Marco sends literature through the mail to the public, describing merchandise which is sold through the device of push or punch cards. Typical merchandise includes such items as electric toasters, skillets, percolators, cameras, clocks, flower desk sets, Happy Twin dolls, Jack & Jill dolls, stuffed dogs and thermal blankets. A typical push card bears some 23 masculine and feminine names with columns on the back of the card for writing the name of the purchaser of the push corresponding to the masculine or feminine name selected. Each such card has 23 partially perforated disks which bear one of the names corresponding to those on the list. Concealed within each disk is a number which is disclosed only when the customer pushes the disk from the card. The card depicts a doll or stuffed dog or whatever the prize is, describes it and indicates the cost of each number punched out. The cost ranges from free to a maximum of 39 cents.

The push card also has a master seal under which is one of the names—this seal is not to be removed until the entire card is sold. The operator of the push cards sells the chances or pushes to his friends, family or fellow workers, and when all have been purchased, he remits the total amount to Marco which sends back two prizes—one for the lucky winner and the other for the operator. The amount received by Marco is equivalent to the selling price of the two articles. There is no claim at all that Marco is engaged in any skulduggery in its operation. The goods are delivered as represented. Marco culls its prospective customers from sales lists which it purchases. It concedes that infants may be on the list, but the Commission concedes that Marco is not deliberately cultivating the youth market. At the hearing the Commission was able to produce a 20 year old male who admitted taking one chance and winning a doll (sex not disclosed). He also confessed to selling a chance to his 13 year old sister-in-law. His wife also testified that she sold some of his chances to minors. There was other evidence to indicate that a few 13 to 15 year olds had been enticed to take pushes or punches.

In its defense, Marco produced two professors from the University of Wisconsin who testified generally that the punch board operation provided a psychological outlet or release from tension which accounted for the widespread popularity of games of chance as marketing devices employed by a great number of giant national corporations. Marco's answer urged that its practices were consistent with the standards of fair dealing of the contemporary economic environment of the United States and therefore not in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, that the Commission's action constituted an unreasonably discriminatory application of the Act, depriving them of their liberty and property without due process in violation of the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and further that it constituted an invalid exercise of police power by the Commission in violation of the fifth, ninth and tenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. Essentially, the same points are raised in this petition for review of the order of the Commission, which directed petitioner to cease and desist from:

> Supplying to or placing in the hands of others, push cards or any other device designed or intended to be used in the sale or distribution of merchandise to the public by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, lottery scheme, chance, or gaming device.
>
> Selling or otherwise disposing of any merchandise by means of a game of chance, gift enterprise, lottery scheme, chance, or gaming device.

If this were a question of first impression we would be extremely reluctant to find that the distribution of punch boards as a method of selling dolls, skillets and blankets to teenagers, constitutes an unfair trade practice and is prejudicial to the public interest. In fact, one's faith in American youth is renewed when we find that some small segment at least is still titillated at the prospect of pushing or even punching a board where the maximum damage per punch is 39 cents and the prize is a percolator or even an electric blanket. With so many other profane, vulgar and addictive diversions made readily available to our youth, one finds it difficult to be dismayed at the survival of the bucolic pastime of punching cards. However, this is largely the business of the Federal Trade Commission, and it has pursued with relentless vigor this type of lottery over the years with the complete support of the federal bench. The basic case is FTC v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., Inc., 291 U.S. 304, 54 S. Ct. 423, 78 L. Ed. 2d 814 (1934) where the Supreme Court found that a "break and take" candy operation was a lottery or gambling device and constituted an unfair practice. It should be noted that in this initial case the lottery was specifically directed to children, that some forty other candy manufacturers employed similar devices and the effects of the practice were felt throughout the "straight" penny candy industry. FTC v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., supra, 291 U.S. at 307–309, 54 S. Ct. 423, 78 L. Ed. 814. In any event, the basic proposition that selling merchandise by lottery constitutes an unfair practice has been supported by courts of appeals in every circuit[2] except the First where the issue has apparently not been raised.[3] Cease and desist orders by the Federal Trade Commission, enjoining push card lotteries substantially similar to that in issue here, have been upheld by this court.[4] It has also been held that the Commission need not establish any loss of business by competitors of the seller or public injury. Where an unfair practice is established the diversion of trade from competitors, who do not employ such practices, is inferred. Deer v. FTC, 152 F. 2d 65, 66 (2d Cir. 1945).

The argument that public morals have changed, that public attitudes toward gambling particularly have radically altered with various state legislatures granting absolution for such public cathartic exercises as betting on dog and horse races, jai alai, bingo and lotto, has also failed to impress courts of appeals which have adhered rigidly to the Keppel proscription. Bear Sales Co. v. FTC, 362 F. 2d 96 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 933, 87 S. Ct. 293, 17 L. Ed. 2d 214 (1966); Dandy Products, Inc. v. FTC, 332 F. 2d 985, 986 (7th Cir. 1964).

---

[2] See Bear Sales Co. v. FTC, 362 F. 2d 96 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 933, 87 S. Ct. 293, 17 L. Ed. 2d 214 (1966); Dandy Products, Inc. v. FTC, 332 F. 2d 985 (7th Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 961, 85 S. Ct. 648, 13 L. Ed. 2d 555 (1965); Gerson v. FTC, 325 F. 2d 93 (7th Cir. 1963); Wren Sales Co. v. FTC, 296 F. 2d 456 (7th Cir. 1961); Peerless Products, Inc. v. FTC, 284 F. 2d 825 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 365 U.S. 844, 81 S. Ct. 804, 5 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1961); Goldberg v. FTC, 283 F. 2d 299 (7th Cir. 1960); Surf Sales Co. v. FTC, 259 F. 2d 744 (7th Cir. 1958); James v. FTC, 253 F. 2d 78 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 821, 79 S. Ct. 34, 3 L. Ed. 2d 62 (1958); Drath v. FTC, 99 U.S. App. D.C. 289, 239 F. 2d 452 (1956), cert. denied, 353 U.S. 917, 77 S. Ct. 666, 1 L. Ed. 2d 664 (1957); Seymour Sales Co. v. FTC, 94 U.S. App. D.C. 403, 216 F. 2d 633 (1954), cert. denied, 348 U.S. 928, 75 S. Ct. 340, 99 L. Ed. 727 (1955); United States Printing & Novelty Co., Inc. v. FTC, 92 U.S. App. D.C. 298, 204 F. 2d 737, cert. denied, 346 U.S. 830, 74 S. Ct. 52, 98 L. Ed. 354 (1953); Gay Games, Inc. v. FTC, 204 F. 2d 197 (10th Cir. 1953); Zitserman v. FTC, 200 F. 2d 519 (8th Cir. 1952); Consolidated Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 199 F. 2d 417 (4th Cir. 1952); Lichtenstein v. FTC, 194 F. 2d 607 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 819, 73 S. Ct. 15, 97 L. Ed. 638 (1952); Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 90 U.S. App. D.C. 169, 194 F. 2d 346 (1952); Globe Cardboard Novelty Co., Inc. v. FTC, 192 F. 2d 444 (3d Cir. 1951); Chas. A. Brewer & Sons v. FTC, 158 F. 2d 74 (6th Cir. 1946); Modernistic Candies, Inc. v. FTC, 145 F. 2d 454 (7th Cir. 1944); Jaffe v. FTC, 139 F. 2d 112 (7th Cir. 1943); cert. denied, 321 U.S. 791. 64 S. Ct. 790, 88 L. Ed. 1081 (1944); Wolf v. FTC, 135 F. 2d 564 (7th Cir. 1943); Hill v. FTC, 124 F. 2d 104 (5th Cir. 1941); Helen Ardelle, Inc. v. FTC, 101 F. 2d 718 (9th Cir. 1939); FTC v. F. A. Martoccio Co., 87 F. 2d 561 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 301 U.S. 691, 57 S. Ct. 794, 81 L. Ed. 1347 (1937); Hofeller v. FTC, 82 F. 2d 647 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 299 U.S. 557, 57 S. Ct. 19, 81 L. Ed. 410 (1936).

[3] Had it been raised, there doesn't seem to be much doubt of its resolution. For a classic illustration of the traditional New England attitude toward gambling see Amory v. Gilman, 2 Mass. 1, 10–11 (1806), citing, 1 Marshall, A. Treatise on the Law of Insurance, 95 (1st Amer. ed. 1805): "The practice of gaming, by nourishing a constant hope of gain, excites in the mind an interest which engrosses the attention, and withdraws the exertions of men from useful pursuits. * * * it produces a contempt for the moderate, but certain, profits of sober industry. It perverts the activity of the mind, taints the heart, and depraves the affections. By frequent and great reverses of fortune, it becomes not only the source of great private misery, but suggests constant temptations to fraud, and the perpetration of atrocious crimes."

[4] See Rosten v. FTC, 263 F. 2d 620 (2d Cir. 1959); Colon v. FTC, 193 F. 2d 179 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 823, 73 S. Ct. 22. 97 L. Ed. 641 (1952); Cinader v. FTC, 141 F. 2d 1022 (2d Cir. 1944).

[1] All of this would undoubtedly have ended the saga adversely to petitioners had not the Federal Trade Commission in October, 1966 embarked upon an investigation of games of chance in the food retail and gasoline industries which resulted in the publication of an Economic Report[5] which, in turn, resulted in a Trade Regulation Rule Proceeding[6] culminating in the promulgation of a Trade Regulation Rule (16 C.F.R. § 419.1 (1971)); it was adopted on July 29, 1969, and bore an effective date of October 17, 1969.[7]

The FTC Economic Report developed inter alia that in 1966 some 52 different types of games were used in 55 major grocery markets to attract customers; more than half the games were derivatives of some type of gambling, including "punch cards." In 1966 there were some 39 game promoters in action with combined billings of $37.2 million. (Marco had a gross business of $150,000 in 1968.) The principal users of games were food retailers ($28.5 million) and petroleum companies ($8.5 million). The investigation revealed numerous deceptive practices including misrepresentation of the odds of winning. Retail prices were increased in some cases at least, and in some others the use of games prevented declines. In some cases the games were rigged. Many retailers claimed that they were economically coerced to utilize the games in order to effectively compete. In the course of the rule making proceedings testimony was taken, and some of the most vigorous opponents of the games, who sought their abolition rather than regulation, urged that they were "lotteries or illegal gambling devices." (See Statement of Basis, supra note 7, 34 Fed. Reg. at 13,308.) On the basis of its study the Commission concluded: "The proper function of a regulatory agency is to correct, by regulation if possible, unlawful activity rather than to prohibit the device altogether." Id. at 13,310. One of the devices thus regulated but not abolished was the punch board. The regulation generally prohibits misrepresentation of the odds of winning, ensures random distribution to retail outlets thus reducing the chances of rigging and requires posting of the names of the winners, the total number of game pieces distributed and the total number of prizes awarded.

---

[5] FTC Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission: Economic Report on the Use of Games of Chance in Food and Gasoline Retailing in Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Activities of Regulatory Agencies of the House Select Comm. on Small Business, 90th Cong., 2nd Sess. at 395 (1968).

[6] Notice of this proceeding, including two proposed rules, was published in the Federal Register on January 7, 1969. See 34 Fed. Reg. 218 (1969).

[7] See FTC, Promulgation of Trade Regulation Rule and Statement of Basis and Purpose, 34 Fed. Reg. 13,302 (1969).

The investigation of the Commission commenced two years before the complaint issued in this case. The initial decision of the Hearing Examiner on June 30, 1969 was adopted in all respects, without any further opinion, in the final order of the Commission dated February 25, 1971, some eighteen months after the adoption of the new rule.

It is at least anomalous, in our view, to regulate the games including punch boards employed to lure customers in the food retailing and gasoline industries by eliminating aspects deemed to be deceptive and to absolutely prohibit their use in the instant case where concededly there is no deception or fraud practiced at all. Marco's prizes were fully described and actually awarded; the odds are obvious, and certainly no operator was coerced into participation. It is particularly distressing that the Federal Trade Commission, in its final order, wrote no decision but merely adopted the initial decision of the Hearing Examiner which of course made no reference at all to the regulation. (The rule was not then in effect, having been adopted a month after the initial decision but some eighteen months before the final order herein.)

In argument before this court, the Commission relies substantially upon the Supreme Court's Keppel decision and its multi-circuit progeny, all of which were spawned long before the regulation was promulgated. The only arguments addressed to the claim of discrimination voiced by Marco are twofold: 1) the Federal Trade Commission has the sole discretion to determine how best to enforce its organic statute and 2) in any event, the "obvious" distinctions between Marco's practices and those employed by the food and gasoline retailers and the Commission's consistent policy toward and prosecution of the former practices, renders their comparison inapposite. We cannot agree at all with their position.

In support of its first contention the Commission relies on two cases, Moog Indus., Inc. v. FTC, 355 U.S. 411, 78 S. Ct. 377, 2 L. Ed. 2d 370 (1958) and FTC v. Universal-Rundle Corp., 387 U.S. 244, 87 S. Ct. 1622, 18 L. Ed. 2d 749 (1967). Both of these cases involve adjudicatory proceedings and stand for the proposition that even if all of a petitioner's competitors were engaged in the same practice, it is no defense to the petitioner that the cease and desist order is directed to him alone. Obviously, the Commission cannot be expected to bring simultaneous proceedings against all of those engaged in identical practices. These cases would be in point if Marco were urging that others, engaged in identical practices competing with him, were not similarly pursued by the Commission. Petitioners here do not so argue. They argue rather that those engaged in the same activity are regulated while Marco is annihilated. In short, it is not that the Commission has failed to act against others but that it has adopted a positive regulatory approach to them totally inconsistent with its approach toward petitioners.

[2] There is ample authority to support the petitioners' position. As the Supreme Court pointed out in FTC v. Universal-Rundle, supra, 387 U.S. at 251, 87 S. Ct. at 1627, "[o]n the other hand, as the Moog Industries case also indicates, the Federal Trade Commission does not have unbridled power to institute proceedings which will arbitrarily destroy one of many law violators in an industry."

[3] The arbitrary character of the Commission's action here consists of its total failure to even advert to, much less explain, its reason for the rigid ad hoc adjudicatory stance it adopted toward the petitioner and the flexible tolerance its industry regulation displayed to those utilizing the same or similar devices. As Circuit Judge John R. Brown pointed out in his concurring opinion in Mary Carter Paint Co. v. FTC, 333 F. 2d 654, 660 (5th Cir. 1964), rev'd on other grounds, 382 U.S. 46, 86 S. Ct. 219, 15 L. Ed. 2d 128 (1965): "Our complex society now demands administrative agencies. The variety of problems dealt with make absolute consistency, perfect symmetry, impossible. And the law reflects its good sense by not exacting it. But law does not permit an agency to grant to one person the right to do that which it denies to another similarly situated. There may not be a rule for Monday, another for Tuesday, a rule for general application, but denied outright in a specific case."[8] To the same effect, see Marriott In-Flite Services Division of Marriott Corp. v. NLRB, 417 F. 2d 563, 565–566, (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied Local 300 United Ind. etc. v. Marriott In-Flite etc., 397 U.S. 920, 90 S. Ct. 929, 25 L. Ed. 2d 101 (1970); Rayonier, Inc. v. NLRB, 380 F. 2d 187, 189–190 (5th Cir. 1967); HC & D Moving & Storage Co. v. United States, 298 F. Supp. 746, 751 (D. Hawaii 1969).

[4, 5] Section 8(b) of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. § 557(c)) requires an agency in any case to include in its decision its findings and conclusions as well as the reasons or basis therefor. This requirement takes on added importance when the decision is apparently inconsistent with a virtually contemporaneously declared rule. See Rayonier, Inc. v. NLRB, supra, 380 F. 2d at 189. That an administrative agency is obligated to provide petitioner with an explanation for the difference in their treatment, is well established.

---

[8] Although the Supreme Court reversed this decision, it did not attack the principle ennunciated but rather its application to the facts.

Secretary of Agriculture v. United States, 347 U.S. 645, 652–655, 74 S. Ct. 826, 98 L. Ed. 1015 (1954); FTC v. Crowther, 139 U.S. App. D.C. 137, 430 F. 2d 510, 514–515 (1970); ABC Freight Co. v. CAB, 391 F. 2d 295, 300–303 (2d Cir. 1968); Burinskas v. NLRB, 123 U.S. App. D.C. 143, 357 F. 2d 822, 827 (1966); Melody Music, Inc. v. FCC, 120 U.S. App. D.C. 241, 345 F. 2d 730 (1965); City of Lawrence, Mass. v. CAB, 343 F. 2d 583, 588 (1st Cir. 1965). See also Friendly, Chenery Revisited: Reflections on Reversal and Remand of Administrative Orders, 1969 Duke L. J. 199, 206–209.

As we have already indicated, the Commission has made no findings and has articulated no reasons for its disparate treatment of petitioner in light of its comprehensive rule making procedure involving investigation and hearings relating to lotteries which culminated in a determination certainly contrary to its previously consistent approach illustrated by Keppel and its descendants.

[6] In its brief in this court and in oral colloquy in the initial hearing, but not in its opinion, the Commission suggests two distinctions between petitioner's game and those used by the food and gasoline industries, which are allegedly so obvious as to remove the need for any consideration of its new rule in this case. We find the distinctions unconvincing. The first is that the grocery and gasoline station games of chance are sales promotions to attract traffic, while petitioner's plan, though not deceptive, is used solely for the purpose of selling the merchandise offered as prizes. While this is in fact accurate, there is no effort at all made in the entire proceeding to explain how this difference has any trade regulatory significance. The ratio decidendi of Keppel was that the lottery was an illegal gambling device particularly obnoxious since aimed at children (this factor was also relied on by the Commission in the instant case) and also utilized to attract customers from the "straight" penny candy vendors. Since the gambling aspect is apparently no longer objectionable even where children are concerned, since children obviously shop in supermarkets and, unfortunately perhaps, are permitted to purchase gasoline, the two practices seem identical except that Marco is running a clean game. The Commission's investigation amply demonstrates that the reason for the adoption of sales gimmicks by retailers of food and gasoline was obviously not to satisfy the psychological wants of the clientele but to sell more cornflakes and gasoline than their competitors, who did not employ such methods. Marco is doing the very same thing—attempting to sell more kewpie dolls than those who use more conventional merchandising techniques. From a trade regulatory viewpoint, the economic effect on horizontal competition among competing retailers seems to be the same. In any event, the question deserves study and elucidation.

[7] The second distinction suggested orally on appeal and on argument before the Commission is that the petitioner's game is a lottery since it combines the three elements (1) distribution of prizes, (2) by chance, (3) for a consideration. The retail stores schemes, however, do not involve the element of consideration, the argument runs, since the chances are free, while petitioner's game requires payment for each chance except those few which are free. Again, we are unable to appreciate the trade regulatory significance of the distinction. Obviously the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction is not limited to strict lotteries since it has seen fit to regulate these non-lottery operations. We read nothing in Keppel which indicates that its decision depended upon the presence or absence of "consideration". On the contrary, the Court did say, "Neither the language nor the history of the act suggests that Congress intended to confine the forbidden methods to fixed and unyielding categories." FTC v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., supra, 291 U.S. at 310, 54 S. Ct. at 425. If the evil is gambling, which purportedly leads to indolence or worse by holding out the expectation of largess, the prospect of winning an electric toaster for a maximum consideration of 39 cents per chance would seem far less seductive than the expectation of winning a thousand dollars for nothing. The modest exactions of cash required by petitioner can hardly be the basis for any claim of economic gouging.

It may well be that consideration could be found in the food and gasoline retail cases in any event. While the customer pays no separate consideration for the chances, the customer does go to the store presumably to get the opportunity to win the big prize. He does change his position and incurs a detriment at the invitation of the retailer. Moreover, the retailer at least in some cases passes on the cost of the game by increasing the cost of the merchandise sold. Hence we are not persuaded on the basis of the record before us that the regulated games are in fact at all differentiated by the claim of lack of consideration. See Comment, Examination of Games of Chance and Referral Selling as Sales Promotional Devices, 17 Kan. L. Rev. 668, 669–71 (1969); 31 Ohio St. L. J. 610, 616 (1970). See also Ollendorff Watch Co. v. Pink, 279 N.Y. 32, 17 N. E. 2d 676 (1938).

The Commission has promulgated a rule which it announced it would restudy in eighteen months. We believe it is appropriate to reverse the order and remand this matter for reconsideration in light of the new regulation, to study and explain the differences, if any, between petitioners' practices and those presently regulated in so far as they have relevance under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Reversed and remanded.

HAYS, Circuit Judge (concurring in the result):

I concur on the ground that the Commission has failed to explain the difference, for the purposes of trade regulation, between the scheme condemned in the present case and the schemes approved in the Commission's Trade Regulation Rule 19 C.F.R. 419.1 (1971).

IN CASES INSTITUTED AGAINST OR BY THE COMMISSION

UNITED STATES v. WILLIAM N. BOSTIC*

Civ. A. No. 70–1135—F.T.C. Docket 8634

(United States District Court, D. South Carolina, Jan. 6, 1972)

1. ORDER NAMING CORPORATION AND INDIVIDUAL OFFICER WHO SOLD ALUMINUM PRODUCTS ALSO COVERED SALE OF SWIMMING POOLS BY RESPONDENT

   Federal Trade Commission's order that named corporation and named defendant, individually and as officer of corporation, in connection with offering for sale aluminum carports, aluminum patio covers, or any other products in commerce, cease using any advertising, sales plan, scheme or device wherein false, or deceptive statements or representations were made to obtain leads or prospects for sale covered all products sold by defendant at time of execution of order or in the future, and covered sale of swimming pools by defendant.

2. DEFENDANT DELIBERATELY FLOUTED COMMISSION ORDER AGAINST SALE OF ANY PRODUCT BY "BAIT AND SWITCH" SALES APPROACH

   Government established that defendant had deliberately flouted Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order directed against sale of any product by defendant or his representative by use of "bait and switch" sales approach.

3. EFFORTS TO DISREGARD FTC ORDER BY SETTING UP A "FRONT" CORPORATION WITH HIS SISTER WARRANTED AN INJUNCTION AGAINST DEFENDANT

   Defendant's callous disregard of cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission and his effort to disguise his interstate activities by setting up corporation with his sister as a "front" warranted an injunction against defendant.

4. JENCKS ACT LIMITED EFFECT OF SUPREME COURT DECISION INVOLVING RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO OBTAIN DOCUMENT WHICH FORMED BASIS OF GOVERNMENT WITNESS' TESTIMONY

   Jencks Act was legislated to limit the effect of Supreme Court decision in Jencks v. United States involving right of an accused to receive, for purposes of impeachment, a document which formed basis of government witness' testimony.

5. ADMINISTRATIVE HEARINGS ARE SUBJECT TO PRINCIPLE OF JENCKS CASE

   Principle of Jencks case applies to administrative hearings.

---

*Reported in 336 F. Supp. 1312 (1972), 4th Cir., 473 F. 2d 1388 (1972), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 966 (1973). For case before the Commission, see 67 F.T.C. 1.

6. JENCKS ACT ENABLES DEFENSE COUNSEL TO OBTAIN AND USE PRIOR STATEMENTS OF A GOVERNMENT WITNESS FOR IMPEACHMENT PURPOSES

   Object of Jencks Act provision that, after witness called by United States has testified on direct examination, court shall, on motion of defendant, order United States to produce any statement of witness in possession of the United States which relates to subject matter as to which witness has testified, is to enable defense counsel to use prior statements of a witness for impeachment purposes.

7. WHERE DEFENDANT HAD 60 DAYS AFTER RECEIVING COPIES OF WITNESSES' STATEMENTS AND MADE NO EFFORT TO IMPEACH WITNESSES THERE WAS NO DEPRIVATION OF DUE PROCESS UNDER JENCKS ACT

   Where there was no conflict as to central issue before court in action for violations of Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order, no conflict in testimony of various government witnesses, government produced copies of witnesses' statements two months before trial, defendant had 60 days after receiving copies to reexamine the witnesses but did not and defense made no effort to contradict or impeach witnesses, defendant was not deprived of due process under Jencks Act.

8. COMMISSION ORDER PROHIBITING "BAIT AND SWITCH" TACTICS WAS NOT TOO BROAD OR GENERAL

   Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order which prohibited defendant from using "bait and switch" [1313] methods in offering for sale, selling or distributing products in commerce and which covered any products which defendant might in the future offer for sale, sell or distribute in commerce was not too broad or general.

9. DEFENDANT'S BLATANT NATURE IN DISREGARDING COMMISSION'S "BAIT AND SWITCH" ORDER WARRANTED IMPOSITION OF $4,000 FINES FOR EACH OF 20 VIOLATIONS

   Blatant nature of defendant's disregard for Federal Trade Commission's cease and desist order prohibiting him from using "bait and switch" methods in offering for sale products in commerce warranted imposition of penalty and fine of $4,000 for each of the 20 violations.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 336 F. Supp. 1312.)

Court held that respondent had violated order against "bait and switch" and imposed penalty of $4,000 for each of 20 violations.

John K. Grisso, U.S. Atty., Columbia, S.C., Kathryn Casey, F.T.C., Robert E. Duncan, office of Gen. Counsel, F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

W. Ray Berry, Columbia, S.C., Joseph J. Lyman, Washington, D.C., for defendant.

ORDER

CHAPLAIN, District Judge.

On January 7, 1965, the Federal Trade Commission issued its Cease and Desist Order in Docket No. 8634, which Order was based on a consent agreement by the defendant, William N. Bostic, and directed that he and certain corporations controlled by him cease engaging in certain unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of Section 5(a) (1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. Section 45(a) (1). The Order became final by operation of law on March 8, 1965, and was in effect at all times mentioned in the complaint and referred to by witnesses in this proceeding.

The January 7, 1965, Order provided as follows:

> It is ordered that the respondents Aluminum Industries, Inc., a corporation, and its officers, and William N. Bostic, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and doing business as Southern Patio Company, Southern Aluminum Sales, and under any other trade name, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of aluminum carports, aluminum patio covers, aluminum siding, or any other products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:
>
> 1. Using, in any manner, any advertising, sales plan, scheme or device wherein false, misleading or deceptive statements or representations are made in order to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of products or services.
> 2. Discouraging the purchase of, or disparaging, any products or services which are advertised or offered for sale.
> 3. Representing directly or by implication, that any products or services are offered for sale when such offer is not a bona fide offer to sell such products or services.

The complaint contained twenty separate counts of alleged violations of the Order. Defendant's answer contained a general denial and also alleged that the complaint did not state facts sufficient upon which relief could be granted. At various times during the proceedings the defendant contended that the Order was too vague, general and all inclusive to be enforceable and that it was in violation of the constitutional guarantee of due process because of this overbreadth and vagueness. Defendant also contended that the Federal Trade Commission had not complied with its own rules and regualtions in certifying the facts to the Attorney General and in failing to advise the defendant that he was not in compliance with the Order and discussed such non-compliance with him and given [1314] defendant an opportunity to submit his views respecting the alleged violations.

The Court finds that these allegations of defendant are without merit. The letter of Caspar W. Weinberger, Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, addressed to the Attorney General of the United States under date of June 15, 1970, certifies the facts of the violations by the defendant and requests the institution of appropriate proceedings for recovery of civil penalties and for a permanent injunction. The testimony of George Zervas and Joel Thwaites, together with the correspondence between the Federal Trade Commission and the defendant and his attorney certainly indicate that the defendant was advised that he was not in compliance with the order and was given ample opportunity to determine the specifics of the allegations of non-compliance and to bring himself within the provisions of the Order, if he had really desired to do so.

[1] At one point the defendant contended that the sale of swimming pools was not covered by the terms of the Order. However, it is obvious from the wording of the Order that it is intended to cover all products sold by the defendant at the time of the execution of such Order, and in the future, and covers any product in commerce. The actual thrust of the Order is directed against a deceitful and unlawful sales technique and therefore covers any product the defendant or his representative might sell using the "bait and switch" sales approach.

[2, 3] The Government carried its burden of proof overwhelmingly on each count and is entitled to recover penalties thereon. The defendant has deliberately flouted the provisions of the Cease and Desist Order. His callous disregard of the Order, which approaches contempt, and his efforts to disguise his interstate activities, by setting up a corporation in North Carolina with his sister as a "front," all lead this Court to the conclusion that an injunction should also be issued against the defendant.

The defendant relies upon the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500 to support his motion to strike the depositions of Donald Lee Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Garland Duncan, Roy L. Good, Edward P. Greene and Gwyn Allen Miller. When these depositions were taken in the State of North Carolina in early July 1971, defense counsel requested copies of statements of these individuals, and the request was denied by counsel for the plaintiff on the grounds of privilege and work product of attorneys for the plaintiff. On September 7 depositions were taken of Mrs. Lois Reno Guy and Sergeant and Mrs. Musselwhite and defense counsel demanded copies of statements given by these witnesses. On July 31, 1971, defendant filed a motion under Rule 37(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for an Order compelling the plaintiff to answer certain interrogatories, which demanded copies of all signed and unsigned statements in the possession of the plaintiff. This motion was granted by the Court after a hearing on September 14, 1971. The statements were thereafter furnished to defense counsel on September 22, 1971. The defendant first raised the question of denial of due process under the Jencks Act after the trial had begun on November 22, 1971.

[4, 5] The Jencks Act was legislated to limit the effect of the case of Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103, which involved the right of an accused to have for purposes of impeachment a document prepared by a Government witness which formed the basis of the witness' testimony. The principle of the Jencks case has been applied to administrative hearings, and justice requires no less. Section (b) of the Statute reads:

> (b) After a witness called by the United States has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any statement (as hereinafter defined) of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as [1315] to which the witness has testified. If the entire contents of such statement relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order it to be delivered directly to the defendant for his examination and use.

[6] The object of this provision is to enable defense counsel to use prior statements of a witness for impeachment purposes. This is inherent in the language and context of the above provision.

[7] In the present action the defense counsel made no effort on cross examination of the witnesses to question them regarding their signed statements and never attempted to attack the veracity of the witness. The defendant relies upon the case of Harvey Aluminum v. National Labor Relations Board, 335 F.2d 749 (9th C.A.1964). The Court feels that the cases are not analogous. In Harvey the N.L.R.B. charged the company with engaging in an unfair labor practice by employing undercover agents (employees of a detective firm) to maintain surveillance of union activities. The company admitted surveillance but insisted that its object was to prevent pilferage. There was a conflict in testimony of employees of the detective agency as to the nature of their duties and the Court was faced with the question of fact as to which witnesses to believe. In the Harvey case the prior statements were sought for the purpose of attacking the credibility of the witnesses. Subpoenas duces tecum, addressed to the Secretary of Labor and the Attorney General were issued but later revoked; and petitioners then sought to have the Board ask the Secretary of Labor and the Attorney General to make the statements available, under 29 U.S.C.A. § 161(6). This request was denied. The present proceeding is unlike Harvey Aluminum, since there is no conflict as to the central issue, there is no conflict in the testimony of the various Government witnesses, and the Government did produce the copies of statements, at the direction of the Court, and two months before the trial of the case. The present defendant was aware as early as July 7, 1971, that the Government objected to furnishing copies of the witnesses' statements, but did not invoke the Jenck Act until the trial. The defendant also had sixty days after receiving copies of the witnesses' statements to re-examine any witness to determine credibility, but he did nothing. Two witnesses were deposed after the statements were delivered to the defendant, but defense counsel were not present at these depositions. Three witnesses, who had been deposed, were present and gave testimony at the trial, but the defense counsel made no effort to contradict or impeach them with the statements.

No effort was made by the defendant to call as a witness any of the salesmen or agents to testify as to what sales pitch was used or to attempt to contradict the testimony of the various consumers. The defendant stipulated that the depositions of persons not present at the trial would be admissible, knowing full well that he had not cross-examined these witnesses as to prior statements, and knowing that he would not take further depositions based on information he had received from the prior statements. He cannot complain that he has been deprived of due process in light of his own refusal to take any protective steps when he had ample opportunity to do so prior to the trial date.

After considering all the evidence the Court makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Defendant William N. Bostic is a resident of the State of South Carolina and is charged with violating the provisions of a Cease and Desist Order (entered into and accepted by the defendant), issued by the Federal Trade Commission on January 7, 1965, which directed him to refrain from certain sales practices, more particularly set forth above.

2. Under the language of this Order defendant was prohibited from engaging [1316] in any of the practices enumerated, in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution of any product in commerce, and the effect of the Order was not limited to products being sold at the time it was issued, but extended to any and all products which defendant might thereafter sell, offer to sell or distribute in commerce.

3. At all times mentioned in the complaint, the defendant was engaged in the offering for sale, sale and distribution of swimming pools in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in Section 4 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. Section 44).

4. The advertisements, identified in Exhibits D through Q to the complaint, each appeared repeatedly, on various dates, in the publications enumerated in Counts 1 through 8 of the complaint and constituted a sales plan, scheme or device of the type contemplated and prohibited by Paragraph 1 of the Federal Trade Commission's Order.

5. This sales plan, commonly referred to as a "bait and switch" operation was used in essentially the following manner:

a. An advertisement was inserted in a newspaper or magazine offering to sell a completely installed swimming pool for a price of under $1,000. In some instances the offer included a "free portable TV," or a ten year warranty, or both; and in some instances the advertisement contained reference to a much higher "regular price." The advertisements contained a post office box number, as well as a telephone number, for prospective purchasers to contact.

b. When the prospect responded (usually by telephone) an appointment was set up and one of defendant's agents and salesmen would go to the prospect's home, stating he was there because of the prospect's response to the advertisement.

c. If the prospect confirmed his interest in the pool, the agent wrote out a contract for the pool described in the advertisement (known as ADV pool), at the price stated in the ad. This contract would be signed by the prospect and the salesman and the prospect would be advised that it was a binding contract from which neither party could withdraw.

d. After obtaining the execution of the contract for the ADV pool and advising the prospect that neither party could withdraw from the contract, the agent, after a brief casual social conversation, would begin to call attention to the various disadvantages of the ADV pool, such as: cost of maintenance on a wooden pool, necessity of periodic painting of the pool, problem with wood rotting on pool, difficulty in emptying all water from the pool. All of this was intended to and did make the prospect quite apprehensive about the desirability of the ADV pool which he had just contracted to buy.

e. The agent would then advise the prospect that the company had a larger pool, which was a new product and not yet in general production or availability for sale. This pool was known as the PRO pool by the defendant and his salesmen, but usually called the Dolphin or some aquatic name in talking with the prospect. The agent would produce a model of the pool from his automobile, which model was complete with walkways, deck patio, landscaping, shrubbery, diving board, ladders and other accessories to improve its appearance. He would call attention to the indestructibility of the pool, the safety features, the superior quality of the lining and the fact that it was "maintenance free" and required no painting.

f. When the prospect raised the question of the price of the PRO pool he was advised that it was normally priced from five to eight thousand [1317] dollars, but because the prospect was the first person in his area to whom the pool had been shown, the price would be lowered. At this point a bargaining process usually began and the price was lowered from time to time and usually culminated in a telephone call from the salesman to his "boss" for permission to sell the pool at a very low price. In the bargaining process the free television, poolside furniture, shrubbery and other extras were removed to reduce the price. The price finally agreed upon varied from a low of two thousand dollars to as high as thirty-five hundred dollars. As an additional inducement the prospect was told that he would receive fifty dollars for each person who saw his pool, and then purchased one from the company, if he would allow his pool to be used as a neighborhood demonstrator and would allow a small sign to be erected near the pool.

g. If the prospect purchased the PRO pool, the contract for the ADV pool was mutually cancelled. If the prospect did not purchase the PRO pool, the ADV pool was never delivered.

6. All the purchasers who appeared as witnesses, in person or by deposition, stated that the initial contact with defendant's agent was the direct result of having read one of the advertisements referred to in Finding No. 4, and which defendant through his attorney admitted having been inserted by him in the publications outlined in Counts 1 through 8 of the complaint.

7. About April 1967, Sergeant and Mrs. Leon W. Ohls saw the advertisement in TV Guide. The Ohls called the telephone number given in the advertisement and were later contacted by the defendant's agent at their home in Augusta, Georgia. The sales technique was basically as described in Finding No. 5. At one time during the bargaining over the price, a telephone call was made to the defendant and Ohls discussed the matter with him by telephone. Thereafter the PRO pool was purchased, rather than the pool as advertised. Sometime later the defendant Bostic actually called by the home of the Ohls family in Augusta, Georgia, to correct some problem in the operation of the pool. The witness Ohls identified the defendant Bostic in the courtroom as having come by his house on that occasion.

8. Sometime in the Spring of 1967 Mr. and Mrs. Donald L. Allen of Kingsport, Tennessee, answered an ad in TV Guide, which showed a swimming pool priced at around $800. They called the telephone number indicated and Raymond W. Fowler, an agent for the defendant, called at their home and went through the sales technique outlined in Finding No. 5, whereby the Allens signed a contract for the ADV pool, but after Fowler made certain observations and disparaging comments about the pool, they purchased the PRO pool for approximately $2,500.

9. In April 1967, Mr. Roy L. Good saw an advertisement by Family Pools, Inc., which showed a swimming pool priced at $895 and called to arrange for one of defendant's agent to come to his home in Hickory, North Carolina. The agent, whose name was Fowler, showed Mr. Good and his wife the ADV pool and after they had signed the contract for the pool he brought out the model for the more expensive PRO pool and generally followed the "bait and switch" approach. The Goods voided the contract on the ADV pool and purchased a PRO pool for approximately $3,300.

10. Sometime prior to April 21, 1967, Sergeant and Mrs. Smitty Musselwhite of Fayetteville, North Carolina, saw an advertisement in TV Guide, which showed a swimming pool advertised at approximately $800. They called the local number and one of defendant's agents, by the name of Hayden, called at their home about April 21, 1967. The "bait and switch" sales approach was used and the Musselwhites signed a contract [1318] for the ADV pool, after they were shown the model of the PRO pool and were persuaded to void the ADV contract and sign the contract for a PRO pool.

11. In May 1967, Mrs. Lois Guy saw an advertisement in either the Fayetteville, North Carolina Observer or TV Guide which showed a swimming pool priced at around $800. She called the telephone number given and one of the defendant's agents called at her home in Fayetteville, North Carolina. The "bait and switch" sales scheme was used and Mrs. Guy signed a contract for the ADV pool after which she was advised of the cost of maintenance, problems with wood rot and other shortcomings of the pool. She was thereafter persuaded to purchase a PRO pool and void the contract for the ADV pool.

12. In May 1967, Mr. and Mrs. Billy Gene Rushing answered an advertisement in the Winston Salem, North Carolina Journal-Sentinal. Thereafter one of defendant's agents called at their home in Winston Salem, North Carolina, at which time Mr. Rushing signed a contract for an ADV pool to be delivered in two weeks and made a deposit of $200. Thereafter the defendant's agent began to disparage the pool and used the "bait and switch" tactic, but Mr. Rushing would not agree to purchase the PRO pool or to cancel the contract on the ADV pool. His ADV pool has never been delivered and his deposit has not been returned.

13. In about June 1967, Mr. James W. Cudworth saw an advertisement in the Greensboro, North Carolina Record showing a swimming pool priced at $639. After answering the advertisement defendant's agent called on Mr. Cudworth at his home and an ADV pool contract was signed for $639.

Thereafter the "bait and switch" scheme was initiated, but Mr. Cudworth insisted on the ADV pool and made a deposit thereon. In spite of repeated attempts to secure delivery of the pool, including a visit to Columbia, South Carolina, Mr. Cudworth never received delivery of his pool and finally cancelled his order. His deposit was returned after he enlisted the aid of the Columbia Better Business Bureau.

14. Sometime in May 1967 Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Greene saw an advertisement in TV Guide showing a swimming pool priced at approximately $800 to $900. An agent called on them in response to their answer to the ad, and on June 7, 1967, they signed a contract for an ADV pool. Thereafter the agent brought a model of the more elaborate and expensive PRO swimming pool into the home, advising them that it was not yet on the market. The agent pointed out the poor qualities of the ADV pool and generally followed the "bait and switch" scheme outlined in Finding No. 5, resulting in a contract for the PRO pool being signed for $2,495.

15. Sometime prior to July 10, 1967, Mr. Gwyn Allen Miller saw an advertisement for a square swimming pool, and responded to the ad by calling a telephone number in Columbia, South Carolina. Thereafter an agent of defendant called on Mr. Miller at his home in Connelly Springs, North Carolina, and a contract for the ADV pool was signed at a price of approximately $900. The agent then brought in a model of the more elaborate and expensive PRO pool and the usual "baith and switch" scheme was used, resulting in cancellation of the contract for the ADV pool and execution of the contract for the PRO pool.

16. Sometime prior to July 28, 1967, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Powers saw an advertisement in the Greensboro, North Carolina Record showing a swimming pool priced at approximately $639. In response to a telephone call one of defendant's agents, Mr.

Floyd Sigmon, called at the Powers home in Greensboro, North Carolina. The "bait and switch" tactic was used and the Powers signed a contract for the PRO pool at a price of $2,995.

17. Approximately four months prior to July 1967, Mr. and Mrs. Garland Duncan answered an advertisement in TV Guide showing a swimming pool priced [1319] at about $895. On or about July 14, defendant's agent, Mr. Charles Rush, called the Duncan home in Elizabethtown, Tennessee, introduced himself as from Family Pools of Columbia, South Carolina. After the Duncans had signed a contract for the ADV pool the model of the more expensive and elaborate PRO pool was brought into the home. The "bait and switch" sales approach was used and the Duncans cancelled the first contract and signed a contract for the PRO pool at a price of $2,500. Said contract was made out on the form headed "Family Pools, Inc., Post Office Box 5412, Columbia, South Carolina".

18. Sometime prior to August 3, 1967, Mrs. Lois Williams and her daughter, Miss Judy Williams, saw an advertisement in either the Anderson Independent or in the Daily Mail, both newspapers published in Anderson, South Carolina. Upon answering this advertisement defendant's agent Mr. Raymond Fowler called at the Williams home in Toccoa, Georgia. The usual "bait and switch" game was used and the Williams signed the contract for the ADV pool, thereafter changing to the PRO pool. The contract form used carried the name of Family Pools, Inc. with an address as Post Office Box 5412, Columbia, South Carolina.

19. Sometime in February 1967, Miss Jenny Waters, Manager of Services Unlimited, Winston Salem, North Carolina, (a telephone answering, mobile communications and patrons service organization) received a telephone call from an individual identifying himself as Mr. E. K. Webster of Columbia, South Carolina. Mr. Webster told Miss Waters he wanted to use the facilities of her answering service to handle telephone calls resulting in advertisements inserted by Family Pools, Inc. in TV Guide. He instructed Miss Waters to mail any leads or names of prospective customers to him at Family Pools, Inc., P. O. Box 435, Columbia, South Carolina. The name "Webster" was proved to be a code name used by the defendant to identify prospective customers answering advertisements.

20. Sometime prior to March 3, 1967, Mr. Jim Hinshaw, who operates a telephone answering service in Greensboro, Burlington, and Winston Salem, North Carolina, was contacted by an individual who identified himself as either Mr. E. K. Webster or Mr.

Bostic, and made arrangements to have telephone calls resulting from advertisements by Family Pools, Inc. handled by Mr. Hinshaw's organization. Leads or prospective customers names were to be forwarded to Post Office Box 435, Columbia, South Carolina. According to Mr. Hinshaw the advertising referred to generated a great many calls and records of these calls were forwarded as instructed. The service was furnished from March 3 to September 15, 1967.

21. Mrs. Mary Swallows Koucky was employed by defendant as office manager in the office of Family Pools, Inc., Columbia, South Carolina, for a period of approximately eight months from the summer of 1967 until March 1968. Part of her duties involved the placing of swimming pool contracts with various finance companies. If the purchaser's credit rating was not sufficient to place the contract with an independent finance company, it was placed with the Carolina Fund, Columbia, South Carolina, which was operated by the defendant.

Mrs. Koucky testified to sales of pools to purchasers in North Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee. All pool contracts were entered on a record book as they were received, showing the date and the name of the purchaser. A ledger card was made out for each purchaser, and an individual file made up for each sale, arranged alphabetically in a file cabinet.

When Mr. Joel S. Thwaites, Federal Trade Commission Attorney from Atlanta, Georgia, came to the office of Family Pools, Inc. in 1967 to interview the defendant as to his failure to file compliance reports required on the Commission's Order in Docket 8634, the defendant directed that the office door be [1320] locked, and while Mr. Thwaites waited outside, defendant directed that the files on all out of state sales be removed from the file cabinets and hidden, and the names of all out of state purchasers of swimming pools be erased from the record book.

Mrs. Koucky testified that defendant explained to her the "bait and switch" sales method used in the sale of the pools. Mrs. Koucky also stated that during her employment by the defendant, he had in his possession a check book for Family Pools, Inc. of Rockingham, North Carolina, filled with blank checks signed by Mrs. Rushing.

22. About February 1967, defendant William N. Bostic asked his sister, Martha Rushing, and her husband, H. Bryce Rushing of Hoffman, North Carolina, to set up Family Pools, Inc. of Rockingham, North Carolina, as a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of North Carolina, for the purpose of selling swimming pools in North Carolina. Defendant designated Mr. Rushing as President and Mrs. Rushing as Secretary-Treasurer. Mrs. Rushing opened a bank account in the Carolina Bank for the North Carolina corporation, with funds supplied by the defendant, and as directed by the defendant forwarded all mail received by the corporation, as well as all bank statements to Family Pools, Inc. to Columbia, South Carolina. Mr. Rushing performed no duties in connection with his position as President. No organizational meeting was held, no by-laws were prepared, and no minutes of directors or stockholders meetings were available, since such meetings were not held. There were no salesmen employed by the Rushings and they maintained no record or copies of contracts. Mr. and Mrs. Rushing did not attempt to sell swimming pools.

The only checks on the bank account of Family Pools, Inc. of Rockingham, North Carolina, which Mrs. Rushing made up were those covering the incorporation fee and her salary. She sent the book of blank checks, signed by her, to the defendant in Columbia, South Carolina, and she identified the handwriting on several checks as that of the defendant's wife, Phyllis Bostic. Mrs. Rushing also disavowed the writing of certain letters, which were prepared by the defendant and brought to her for execution only. When Mr. and Mrs. Rushing had an interview with Mr. Joel Thwaites and realized that swimming pools were being sold in other states, and certain questions arose regarding the activities of the corporation, they cancelled the charter of Family Pools, Inc of Rockingham, North Carolina, and dissolved the corporation on advice of their attorney.

23. The testimony of all the witnesses clearly shows that the defendant continued to follow the same "bait and switch" scheme of selling and pattern of conduct which the Federal Trade Commission had prohibited by its Order of January 7, 1965, and by doing so repeatedly violated said Order.

From the foregoing facts, the Court makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Federal Trade Commission's Order in Docket 8634, issued January 7, 1965, prohibiting the defendant from using "bait and switch" methods in offering for sale, selling or distributing products in commerce, became effective and enforceable on March 8, 1965, and has been in full force and effect at all times since.

[8] 2. The language of said Order is clear and unambiguous, and covers not only those products then being offered for sale, sold or distributed in commerce, but "any other products, which defendant might offer for sale, sell or distribute in commerce, in the future." The Order is not too broad or general. See Niresk Industries, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 278 F.2d 337, 342–343, 7th Cir. 1960, rehearing denied June 8, 1960, in which the Court stated:

> Finally, petitioners contend that the order of the Commission is too broad and should, therefore, be set aside or [1321] modified. The findings of unfair and deceptive practices against the petitioners were confined to their advertising and sale of the cooker-fryer, while the order of the Commission enjoins the use of like advertising by petitioners in conjunction with the sale of the fryer or any other product. Petitioners contend that the order must be restricted to their advertisement and sale of the cooker-fryer alone.
>
> We do not agree with that contention. The Commission has a large discretion in its choice of a remedy which it deems necessary to cope with the unlawful practices found, and courts may interfere with the Commission's choice only if the remedy selected bears no reasonable relationship to such unlawful practices. Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 429, 77 S.Ct. 502, 1 L.Ed.2d 438; Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 473, 72 S.Ct. 800, 96 L.Ed. 1081. Commission orders are not designed to punish for past transgressions, but are designed as a means to prevent illegal practices in the future. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., supra page 473, 72 S.Ct. 800. To the end that the Commission may achieve that purpose, its orders may prohibit not only the further use of the precise practice found to have existed in the past, but also, future use of related and similar practices. Ibid. Petitioners marketed a large number of products in commerce. They stand adjudged guilty of the use of illegal practices in the advertisement and sale of one product. We think it is entirely reasonable for the Commission to frame its order broadly enough to prohibit petitioners' use of identical legal practices for any purpose, or in conjunction with the sale of any and all products.

3. The evidence is clear that defendant deliberately attempted to evade the prohibitions of the Commission's Order by arranging to set up a corporation in North Carolina, which was controlled and directed by him, in spite of his efforts to conceal such ownership and control.

4. On the twenty occasions mentioned in the Findings of Fact, defendant William N. Bostic has flagrantly and repeatedly violated Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of Commission's Order of January 7, 1965.

[9] 5. The blatant nature of defendant's disregard for the Order of the Federal Trade Commission warrants the imposition of a sizable penalty and a fine of Four Thousand and No/100 ($4,000.00) Dollars for each violation is hereby imposed making a total fine against the defendant of Eighty Thousand and no/100 ($80,000.00) Dollars.

6. The course of action pursued by the defendant in intentionally violating the provisions of the Commission's Order, and his evident purpose to continue to engage in the same "bait and switch" sales method, has convinced this Court that future violations of the Order can be prevented only by issuance of an injunction under the equitable powers vested in the United States Courts. See United States v. Vitasafe Corporation, 234 F.Supp. 710 (S.D. N.Y.1964) affirmed per curiam 2 Cir., 352 F.2d 62 and Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 64 S.Ct. 587, 88 L.Ed. 754.

It is, therefore, ordered that the plaintiff, United States of America, have judgment against the defendant, William N. Bostic, in the amount of Eighty Thousand and No/100 ($80,000.00) Dollars.

It is further ordered that defendant, William N. Bostic, his representatives, agents and employees directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of any goods in interstate commerce, is hereby permanently enjoined from:

1. Using, in any manner, any advertising, sales plan, scheme or device wherein false, misleading or deceptive statements or misrepresentations are [1322] made in order to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of products or services.

2. Discouraging the purchase of, or disparaging any product or services which are advertised or offered for sale.

3. Representing, directly or by implication, that any products or services are offered for sale when such offer is not a bona fide offer to sell such products or services.

It is further ordered that the defendant is continually enjoined and required to serve a copy of this Decree on all present and future sales representatives, agents and employees of any corporate or other business enterprise owned, operated or controlled, or which may be in the future owned, operated, controlled or acquired by him and operated by him or at his direction, whether by proxy or by instructions given to members of his immediate family.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER CORPORATION v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION *

No. 19844—F.T.C. Docket 8657

(Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, Jan. 26, 1972)

1. Acquisition to Be Examined as to Adverse Effect on Competition

To find a violation of section of the Clayton Act intended to arrest in their [1084] incipiency restraints in a relevant market, an acquisition is to be examined as to its adverse effect on competition.

---

* Reported in 464 F.2d 1083 (1972). Motion by petitioner for stay of mandate granted until April 25, 1972. Affirmed: U.S. Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, April 26, 1972. For case before Commission, see 75 F.T.C. 813.

2. Evidence Supports Commission's Findings That Entry Into Market Not Achieved by Internal Expansion and if Acquisition Part of Overall Plan, It Falls Within Scope of Clayton Act

Evidence supported Federal Trade Commission's findings that fuel corporation's entry into cement market was not achieved by internal expansion, even though its cement plant went on stream subsequent to its purchase of ready-mixed concrete companies, in that the acquisitions were part of an overall plan, and that the acquisitions therefore fell within the scope of section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisitions by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly.

3. Clayton Act Does Not Exempt Transactions by Small Companies or New Entrants to Market, Although Size of Acquiring Company May Be Element of Competitive Impact

Although size of acquiring company may be an element of competitive impact of an acquisition, section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly does not exempt from its scope transactions by companies which may be considered small, or new entrants in a market or markets.

4. A New Entity in a Market is Only One Factor to Be Weighed in Determining Violation of Clayton Act.

Although fact that a new entity in a market has been created may be relevant in assessing the competitive effect of a corporate acquisition, it is only one factor to be weighted by Federal Trade Commission in detemining whether the acquisition has violated section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly.

5. Acquisition of Cement Companies by Fuel Company Fell Within Scope of Clayton Act Even Though Acquiring Corporation Unranked Financially

Fuel company's acquisition of cement companies fell within scope of section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly, even though the acquiring corporation was unranked financially, where the acquiring corporation was not incapable of marshalling enormous capital with which it could likely obtain a high rank in the cement industry as well as in total financial strength.

6. Acquisition Within Scope of Clayton Act Even if Market Was Oligopolistic Prior to Acquisition

Fuel company's acquisition of cement companies fell within scope of section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly even if the cement market was oligoplistic prior to the acquisition.

7. Anticompetitive Effects of Acquisition in One Market Cannot Be Justified by Procompetitive Effects in Another

Although a corporate acquisition of stock of another corporation is to be measured functionally within the market structure of the particular market, the anticompetitive effects of an acquisition in one market cannot be justified by procompetitive effects in another market.

8. INTENTIONS, PURPOSES AND BENEFITS NOT A DEFENSE TO VIOLATIONS OF LAW

Honest intentions, business purposes and economic benefits are not a defense to violations of an antimerger law.

9. COVERT DE FACTO INTEGRATION OF MARKET NOT VALID DEFENSE TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF CLAYTON ACT

Acquiring corporation's contention that the market it entered was so saturated with covert de facto integration that the acquiring corporation's entry was procompetitive to counteract such integration was not a valid defense to an alleged violation of section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly in light of finding that the acquiring corporation could have entered the market short of complete acquisition.

10. CONTRARY RESULTS OF HEARING EXAMINER'S FINDINGS DOES NOT DEPRIVE COMMISSION OF RIGHT TO MAKE FACT FINDINGS SUPPORTED BY RECORD

Fact that hearing examiner reached result contrary to that of Commission does not deprive the Commission of its right to make fact findings which are [1085] supported by substancial evidence on the record as a whole.

11. EVIDENCE SUPPORTED COMMISSION'S CONCLUSIONS THAT ACQUISITIONS HAD ANTICOMPETITIVE AND OTHER EFFECTS

Evidence, in action against acquiring corporation for alleged violation of antimerger law, supported Federal Trade Commission's conclusions that the acquisitions had an anticompetitive effect, that they foreclosed substantial portion of the market in area of each acquisition, that the purpose of the acquisitions was to ensure that acquiring corporation would have captive market, that the acquisitions had an adverse effect on local business, that they intensified concentration in the market, that there was a trend toward vertical ties in the industry, and that the acquisitions constituted a substantial new barrier to entry into an industry already characterized as having substantial barriers.

12. EVIDENCE TO BE MEASURED ACCORDING TO RELEVANT PRODUCT AND GEOGRAPHIC MARKETS AND STRUCTURE OF INDUSTRY

Substantiality of evidence on which divestiture order is based is to be measured according to the relevant product and geographic markets and to the structure of the industry in the markets involved.

13. RELEVANT MARKET DETERMINED ACCORDING TO AREA IN WHICH SELLER COMPETES

Relevant market in which to measure, for purpose of divestiture order, competitive effect of acquisitions is determined according to area in which the seller competes.

14. FACTORS OF COMPETITIVE EFFECT INCLUDE FORECLOSURE OF COMPETITORS, PURPOSE OF MERGER, LIKELY EFFECTS ON BUSINESS, TREND TOWARD CONCENTRATION AND VERTICAL INTEGRATION, AND BARRIER TO ENTRY

Factors indicative of competitive effect of vertical merger, for the purpose of determining the applicability of a divestiture order, include foreclosure of competitors from a segment of the market, the purpose of the merger, likely adverse effects on local business, trend toward concentration, trend toward vertical integration, and barrier to entry by new firms.

15. PRIMARY VICE OF VERTICAL ACQUISITION IS TYING OF CUSTOMER TO SUPPLIER

Primary vice of vertical acquisition is tying of a customer to a supplier on a permanent basis.

16. EXAMINATION OF NATURE AND PURPOSES OF ACQUISITION RELEVANT IN EXAMINING ALLEGED VIOLATION OF CLAYTON ACT

In examining an alleged violation of section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly, examination of the nature and purposes of the acquisition is relevant.

17. ONE PURPOSE OF CLAYTON ACT IS TO REVERSE TRENDS TOWARD VERTICAL INTEGRATION

One of the purposes of section of Clayton Act prohibiting the acquisition by one corporation of stock of another which tends to create a monopoly is to reverse trends toward vertical integrations.

18. ACQUIRED COMPANY ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND FELL WITHIN F.T.C. JURISDICTION

Acquired Ohio ready-mixed concrete company, which delivered concrete to contractor in Ohio who then transported it to Kentucky, and which regularly purchased portland cement in interstate commerce, was engaged in interstate commerce and Federal Trade Commission had jurisdiction over the acquired company in proceeding against acquiring company for alleged violation of antimerger law.

19. COMMISSION RULING THAT WITNESS COULD NOT CONFER WITH CORPORATION COUNSEL DURING RECESS WAS NOT UNFAIR OR PREJUDICIAL TO RESPONDENT

Federal Trade Commission's ruling that subpoenaed officer of acquiring corporation in proceeding for alleged violation of antimerger law, could not confer during recess with the corporation's counsel was not unfair or prejudicial to the acquiring corporation where neither the witness nor the corporation's counsel advised that counsel for the corporation represented the witness, and the witness was thereafter produced by the corporation which had full opportunity to present additional testimony of the witness.

20. ERROR RELIED UPON ASSERTED IN OPENING BRIEF—NEW ISSUES CANNOT BE RAISED IN REPLY BRIEF

Proper judicial administration requires that error relied upon be asserted [1086] in appellant's opening brief, and new issues cannot ordinarily be raised by reply brief.

21. RESPONDENT'S CONTENTION THAT COMMISSION ALLOWED MORE LIBERAL DISCOVERY IN SUBSEQUENT CASE DID NOT REQUIRE REVERSAL OF DIVESTITURE ORDER

Contention of acquiring corporation, in proceeding for alleged violation of antimerger law, that the Federal Trade Commission, in subsequent case, allowed the respondent a more liberal discovery than it allowed the acquiring corporation did not require reversal of divestiture order where the Commission's order in the subsequent case was vacated and on remand the Commission, in substance, reinstated the same procedure as had been afforded the acquiring corporation.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 454 F.2d 1083.)

On petition to review a divestiture order, the Court held that acquisition had anticompetitive effect, that purpose of acquisition was to insure a captive market, that there was a trend toward vertical ties, and that the acquisitions constituted a substantial new barrier to entry into an already saturated industry. Affirmed.

William R. McDowell, Dallas, Tex., Cleon L. Burt, T. M. Armstrong, St. Louis, Mo., for petitioner.

Frederick H. Mayer, Atty., Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Thomas F. Howder, Atty., F.T.C., for the Federal Trade Commission.

Before VAN OOSTERHOUT, HEANEY and ROSS, Circuit Judges.

VAN OOSTERHOUT, Circuit Judge.

This is a timely petition to review a Divestiture Order by the Federal Trade Commission pursuant to Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. § 18. The jurisdiction of this court is provided by 15 U.S.C.A. § 21(c) and (d).

On January 22, 1965, the Federal Trade Commission (Commission) issued a complaint charging that the acquisition of the stock of Stewart Sand and Material Company (Stewart), the assets of Richter Concrete Corporation and Richter Transfer Company (Richter), and a majority interest in John A. Denie's Sons Company (Denie's) by Mississippi River Fuel Corporation (Mississippi) violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. Mississippi, in 1965, changed its name to Mississippi River Corporation. On January 29, 1968, a Hearing Examiner concluded that Complaint Counsel had not proven a violation and the complaint should be dismissed. On appeal the Commission on May 20, 1969, vacated the order of the Examiner and ordered divestiture. The appeal to this Court followed.

Mississippi bases this appeal on five main contentions:

I. The Commission's order is contra to the purposes of the Clayton Act.

II. Mississippi's entry into the cement industry is procompetitive rather than anticompetitive.

III. The conclusion of the Commission is not based on substantial evidence.

IV. The Commission lacked jurisdiction over Richter.

V. Mississippi's Vice President was denied his right to counsel and due process of law in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Fifth Amendment by a Hearing Examiner's ruling.

We affirm the order of the Federal Trade Commission for the reasons hereinafter set out.

BASIC FACTS

Mississippi. The acquiring company, organized in 1928, is incorporated and exists under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business in St. Louis, Missouri. Mississippi is new to the cement industry. Until Mississippi decided to diversify, the company and its subsidiaries were primarily engaged in the exploration, production, transportation, and sale of natural gas and oil, and in the operation of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. In 1963 (the year the acquisitions were authorized by Mississippi's Board) Mississippi had total assets of $151.9 million, revenues of $72.3 million, and net income of $9.06 million. By 1966 Mississippi's total assets equaled $190.8 million, revenue equaled $107.95 million and net income equaled $10.1 million. The total earnings figures do not include those of the Missouri Pacific Railroad except to the extent of dividends received by Mississippi [1087] on its stock in the Railroad. In 1950 Mississippi bought a tract of land (the Selma tract) consisting of 4,500 acres along the Missouri River located at Festus, Missouri. About 1,000 acres of the tract were utilized for the construction of a nitrate plant which later was sold to a fertilizer company. The remaining 3,500 acres contained valuable deposits of limestone and silica sand. Mississippi later decided to use this tract for the production of portland cement, the main ingredient in the production of ready-mixed cement. The effect of this decision will be dealt with later in this opinion.

Stewart. This acquired company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Missouri principally based at Kansas City, Missouri. At the time of the acquisition Stewart was principally engaged in the production and sale of ready-mixed concrete and mineral aggregates in the States of Missouri and Kansas. For 1962 Stewart had net sales of $6.87 million and net (after tax) profits of $275,540. Prior to the acquisition Stewart was the largest purchaser of portland cement and the largest producer of ready-mixed concrete in the Kansas City area.

Denie's. This acquisition is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Tennessee with its principal office located in Memphis, Tenn. Denie's was engaged in the production and sale of ready-mixed concrete and other allied businesses.

For 1962 Denie's had a total income of $7.24 million, net income (before Federal Income taxes) of $308,756.00 and assets of $4.59 million. Prior to September 1963 Denie's was one of the two largest purchasers of portland cement and manufacturers of ready-mixed concrete in the Memphis area.

Richter. This vertical acquisition also involves a series of horizontal acquisitions. In 1964 Stewart organized a corporation by the name of Richter (Richter '64) under the laws of Ohio with principal offices in Cincinnati, Ohio. Richter '64 then acquired all the assets of Richter Concrete Corporation, an Ohio corporation formed in 1933 (Richter '33), and trucks and vehicles formerly owned by Richter Transfer Company, another Ohio corporation. Richter '33 was principally engaged in the production and sale of ready-mixed concrete and Richter Transfer Company in the hauling business. Richter '33 and Richter Transfer were owned and operated as family owned businesses under a common direction and control with essentially the same personnel. For present purposes it is not necessary to distinguish the three companies and "Richter" will be used to refer to the entire business enterprise. Richter is a wholly owned subsidiary of Stewart. Prior to the 1964 acquisitions, Richter was the largest purchaser of portland cement and the largest producer of ready-mixed concrete in the Cincinnati area.

Background of Acquisitions. In 1959 Mississippi began investigating development of the 3,500 acre tract previously referred to for the production of portland cement. Attempts were made to engage in a joint venture with an already established portland cement company. When those attempts failed, Mississippi embarked upon a program of developing a facility of its own. Mississippi on the basis of surveys in 1961 and 1962 concluded that the best outlets for its product would be the St. Louis and Kansas City, Missouri, Memphis, Tennessee, and Cincinnati, Ohio, markets. It was felt by Mississippi's board that these markets were so rigidly controlled by "covert" methods of tying customers that captive outlets were essential for entry. Further investigations made by Mississippi in early 1963 served to reinforce that conclusion. Simultaneous with the award of the contract for engineering and planning the design of the portland cement plant, Mississippi's board approved the acquisitions of Stewart and Denie's. These acquisitions were made in late 1963. In January 1964 the Richter arrangements were made. When all the acquisitions were completed, the first [1088] contracts for the construction of the cement plant were awarded. The plant began operation in 1965.

I.

The first issue raised by Mississippi takes issue more with the application of Section 7 than with the findings of fact of both the Examiner and the Commission. Mississippi contends that since it is a relatively small company its attempt to add to the economic growth of St. Louis, Missouri, by adding a new entity to the cement industry through internal expansion and acquisitions does not fall within the scope of Section 7. This contention raises the issue of the scope of Section 7.

Section 7, as amended, was intended to "arrest in their incipiency restraints * * * in a relevent market." United States v. E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 589, 77 S.Ct. 872, 875, 1L.Ed.2d 1057. As the Supreme Court said of vertical integrations in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1523, 8 L.Ed.2d 510:

> The arrangement may act as a 'clog on competition,' Standard Oil Co. of California [and Standard Stations] v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 314, [69 S.Ct. 1051, 1062, 93 L.Ed. 1371], which 'deprive[s] * * * rivals of a fair opportunity to compete.' H.R.Rep.No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess.

[1] It is further recognized that not all vertical mergers violate the Act. Section 7 proscribes vertical acquisitions whose effect "may be substantially to lessen competition in any line of commerce in any section of the country." To find a violation of the Act an acquisition is to be examined as to its adverse effect on competition.

[2] Both the Examiner and the Commission found that Mississippi's entry into the cement market was not achieved by internal expansion. We find substantial evidence in the record to support that finding. An internal expansion presupposes a company doing business in one of the markets and then expanding internally either forward or backward into the other market. Mississippi relies greatly on the fact that the cement plant went on stream subsequent to the purchase of the ready-mixed companies. Therefore, Mississippi contends that this situation involves an established ready-mixed chain building its own cement plant. The record clearly supports the finding that the acquisitions were part of an overall plan. Mississippi's President testified that they would not have entered the markets without the assurance of a captive buyer for the product. .The decision to produce portland cement did not arise out of the established ready-mixed business, but was conceived before entering the ready-mixed business. This is a case of an established corporation entering two markets in essentially one series of transactions utilizing the device of vertical acquisition. Each transaction was dependent upon the other to effect entry into the market. If the acquisitions meet the criteria discussed in Part III of this opinion, the transactions are violative of the Act.

[3–5] While Mississippi may be unranked financially, it has proven by these acquisitions that it is not incapable of marshalling enormous capital with which it may likely obtain a high rank in the cement industry as well as in total financial strength. While the size of the acquiring company may be an element of the competitive impact of an acquisition, the Act does not exempt from its scope transactions by companies which may be considered small. Nor does the Act exempt new entrants in a market or markets from its scope. Again, the fact that a new entity has been created may be relevant in assessing the competitive effect of an acquisition, but it is only one factor to be weighed by the Commission.

[6] Missippi makes much under each issue of the contention that the cement market is so oligopolistic that the market could not be entered in any other way. In the context of the scope issue Mississippi argues that finding a violation of the Act in this situation serves to insulate an entrenched oligopoly, which [1089] is counteractive of the intent of Section 7. The structure of the markets would not exempt Mississippi from the scope of Section 7. The Act is intended to abort concentration, not ignore possible increases in concentration because the market may already be oligopolistic.

II.

Mississippi contends that the cement markets in Kansas City, Memphis and Cincinnati were so saturated with covert de facto integration that its entry is procompetitive to counteract that integration. Mississippi offers the contention as a defense to an alleged Section 7 violation.

[7,8] While an acquisition is to be measured functionally within the market, United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 527, 68 S.Ct. 1107, 92 L.Ed. 1533; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 321–322, 82 S.Ct. 1502, the anticompetitive effects of an acquisition in one market cannot be justified by procompetitive effects in another market. Honest intentions, business purposes and economic benefits are not a defense to violations of an antimerger law. United States v. E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., supra, 353 U.S. at 607, 77 S.Ct. 872; United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915.

[9] At this point it is not necessary to comment fully on the factual findings concerning the structure of the markets. The Commission did find, however, that Mississippi could have entered the markets short of complete acquisition. The distinction between the alleged covert tying methods alleged by Mississippi and outright acquisition lies in the permanency of the relationship. The short term effects of loans to ready-mixed companies by portland cement producers are more competitive than the effects of merging.

III.

[10] Mississippi's contention that the Commission's determination and order are not supported by substantial evidence lacks merit. The fact that the Hearing Examiner reached a result contrary to that of the Commission does not deprive the Commission of its right to make fact findings which are supported by substantial evidence on the record as a whole. As pointed out in Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U.S. 474, 71 S.Ct. 456, 95 L.Ed. 456, the duty of the appellate court is to determine the substantiality of the evidence to support the Commission's findings on the basis of the record as a whole. The findings of the Trial Examiner constitute part of such record. Universal Camera thus states the ruling:

> We do not require that the examiner's findings be given more weight than in reason and in the light of judicial experience they deserve. The 'substantial evidence' standard is not modified in any way when the Board and its examiner disagree. We intend only to recognize that evidence supporting a conclusion may be less substantial when an impartial, experienced examiner who has observed the witnesses and lived with the case has drawn conclusions different from the Board's than when he has reached the same conclusion. The findings of the examiner are to be considered along with the consistency and inherent probability of testimony. The significance of his report, of course, depends largely on the importance of credibility in the particular case.

* * * 340 U.S. 474, 496, 71 S.Ct. 456, 469, 95 L.Ed. 456.

[11] The Commission points out in its decision and order that it is in agreement with the Examiner's detailed findings of fact. The Commission in its opinion filed May 20, 1969, determines that its difference with the Examiner arises out of the application of Section 7 standards to the facts of the case. The Commission also points out in detail in its opinion the evidence it relies upon in finding the violations. We are satisfied that the Commission's order is supported [1090] by substantial evidence on the basis of the record as a whole.

[12] The substantiality of the evidence upon which the devistiture order is based is to be measured according to the relevant product and geographic markets and to the structure of the industry in the markets involved. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra; United States v. Columbia Steel Co., supra.

PRODUCT MARKETS: The Commission found that portland cement and ready-mixed concrete are the relevant product markets in this situation. Portland cement is the main ingredient to which water is added to make concrete. There is no practical substitute for portland cement. Ready-mixed concrete is concrete delivered to a consumer in an unhardened state. Companies in the ready-mixed business are the nation's principal users of portland cement. Petitioners do not contest the Commission's findings.

[13] GEOGRAPHIC MARKETS: The Commission found that the metropolitan areas of Kansas City, Cincinnati and Memphis comprise the relevant areas in which to measure the competitive effect of the acquisitions. Those areas are defined according to the "Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas" deivsed by the Bureau of the Budget. Relevant geographic markets are not "susceptible to a precise metes and bounds definition." The relevant market is determined according to the area in which the seller competes. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 331, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580. Within the broad general areas, well defined sub-markets may exist which constitute geographic markets for antitrust purposes. See Brown Shoe, supra, 370 U.S. at 325, 82 S.Ct. 1502. Petitioners do not challenge the Commission's findings for the ready-mixed market, contending mainly that the findings are incorrect as to the portland cement market. However, Mississippi did conduct its own surveys using the designated areas to decide whether or not to enter the cement industry. The use of metropolitan areas in the cement industry was accepted by the Sixth Circuit in United States Steel Corp. v. F.T.C., 426 F.2d 592, 596. We are persuaded to follow the designation adopted by that court.

STRUCTURE OF THE CEMENT INDUSTRY IN THE RELEVANT MARKETS: The Commission found and the parties do not contest the fact that the three delineated markets were the subject of concentration. In 1963 the Kansas City market was served by nine portland cement suppliers. Two firms accounted for 53% of all shipments of cement into the area and the top four firms accounted for 81%. Fifteen ready-mixed companies operated in the area with Stewart's consuming 31.3% of the cement shipped to ready-mixed companies and 23.5% of all cement shipped to the area. Stewart's sales of ready-mixed concrete totaled 30.4% of the concrete sold in the Kansas City market. Stewart's sales more than doubled that of the second largest concrete firm.

Seven cement producers served the Memphis area in 1963. The top two firms accounted for 79% of the sales and the top four firms accounted for 96%. The twelve ready-mixed companies bought over 60% of the portland cement sold in the area. Denie's accounted for 29% of the purchases for ready-mix production and 20% of the total portland cement purchases. Denie's accounted for 27% of the ready-mixed concrete sales. The top four ready-mixed companies accounted for over 78% of the sales.

The Cincinnati area consists of twenty-three ready-mixed companies served by nine cement companies. The top three portland cement purchasers account for 52% of the total sales and the top four account for 66%. Richter bought 37% of the cement sold to ready-mixed companies and 24% of the total cement sold. Richter sold 33.5% of the ready-mixed concrete in the area and the second top seller combined with Richter to total 54%.

[1091] [14] THE ANTICOMPETITIVE EFFECT: The United States Supreme Court has looked to several functional factors as indicia of the competitive effect of vertical mergers. The factors include: (1) foreclosure of the competitors at either level from a segment of the market; (2) the purpose of the merger; (3) likely adverse effects on local business; (4) the trend toward concentration; (5) the trend toward vertical integration; and (6) the barriers to entry by new firms. F.T.C. v. Consolidated Foods, 380 U.S. 592, 85 S.Ct. 1220, 14 L.Ed.2d 95; United States v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 231 F.Supp. 95 (SDNY) aff'd per curiam, 381 U.S. 414, 85 S.Ct. 1575, 14 L.Ed.2d 692; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra; United States Steel Corporation v. F.T.C., supra. The Commission found anticompetitive effects in each of the factors and we are satisfied that the conclusions of the Commission are based upon substantial evidence.

[15] FORECLOSURE. By these acquisitions Mississippi was able to foreclose a substantial portion of the portland cement market in the area of each acquisition. The primary vice of a vertical acquisition is the tying of a customer to a supplier on a permanent basis. United States Steel Corporation v. F.T.C., supra, 426 F.2d at 599. Mississippi was able to insure sales of portland cement to at least 23.5% of the Kansas City market, at least 20% of the Memphis market, and at least 24% of the Cincinnati market. Even though there is some testimony from some portland cement companies serving the area that they were not affected by the arrangement, there is substantial basis in fact for the Commission's findings. Many cement companies showed concern over the acquisitions and the record shows increased attempts of other companies to guarantee a market.

Mississippi contends that the Commission erred in using the standard metropolitan statistical areas established by the Bureau of the Budget as the relevant geographical areas. The Trial Examiner, at findings 71 to 75, conceded that some modified variation from such standards might be justifiable in determining the relevant geographical area but determined:

> The inconsistencies and anomalies disclosed by the record, which result from the fact that the defined areas do not precisely describe the whole areas and the only areas of possible competitive impact, however, are not of such magnitude as materially to impair their validity as appropriate areas for consideration in this proceeding. And the availability of alternative concepts of market area difinitions does nót render improper the concept which was adopted.

We agree. See United States Steel Corporation v. F.T.C., supra, p. 596 of 426 F.2d.

Mississippi contends that if the lines of the geographic markets were properly drawn their market control would be 3.7% for Stewart, 1.3% for Denie's and 1.3% for Richter. The record affords no basis for enlarging the geographical area to such an extent as to reduce the market control to the percentages claimed by Mississippi.

The Court in United States Steel Corporation v. F.T.C., supra, found that the merger there in question foreclosed 1.8%, 2.1% and 1.7% of the northeast United States market for the years 1962–64. Based on Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, where the foreclosure was as low as 1.5%, the Sixth Circuit found the foreclosure to be well within the prohibited zone. We, likewise, find the foreclosure by Mississippi to fall into the prohibited zone even if the wider market lines were to be drawn. Under Section 7, as amended, the Commission has only to find a probability of lessening of competition. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 323, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510; F.T.C. v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 577, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303. That finding is supported by the record.

[1092] [16] PURPOSE. In examining an alleged Section 7 violation, examination of the nature and purposes of the acquisition is relevant. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 329, 82 S.Ct. 1502. There is no question in this situation that the purpose of the acquisition is to insure that Mississippi would have a captive market with no competition for a large share in each market.

Mississippi contends that the purpose of the acquisitions was to enable it to enter an otherwise closed market. There is substantial evidence to show that Mississippi could have entered the markets with measures short of acquisition. There is no evidence that Mississippi attempted to sell competitively or made an attempt to contract for sales before acquiring the ready-mixed companies. Even if we assume that Mississippi could have entered in no other way, the anticompetitive effects of the entry show a violation of Section 7, as amended. The antitrust laws do not excuse further concentration because a market is already concentrated. Mississippi contends throughout that by establishing a new competitive entity they have increased competition. However, the challenged establishment, in reality, removes over 25% of the markets from competition before adding to the competition for the remaining 75% of the market.

EFFECT ON LOCAL BUSINESS. The adverse effect of the acquisitions was immediately felt by other companies. United States Steel was forced to close a Cincinnati terminal in 1967 after three years of operation because of the loss of Richter's business. The record also shows that a series of vertical mergers followed Mississippi's actions. Mississippi was effectively able to control a large portion of each market without fear of competition. Mississippi's action then left approximately 75% of the market open to competition. Eliminating a large portion of the market in this manner has the effect of squeezing the remaining firms.

TREND TOWARD CONCENTRATION. The finding by the Commission that there is a trend toward concentration in the designated markets as well as in the industry as a whole is not contested, and is relied upon by Mississippi in is defense. The percentages of concentration previously referred to in these markets have been held to be unduly high in previous antitrust cases. United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at 363–366, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915; United States v. Aluminum Company of America, 377 U.S. 271, 278–279, 84 S.Ct. 1283, 12 L.Ed.2d 314. Mississippi's acquisitions serve to intensify that concentration making its elimination an even more difficult task.

[17] TREND TOWARD INTEGRATION. The Commission found a trend toward vertical ties in the industry in the relevant markets as well as in the nation as a whole.[1] That finding is based on substantial evidence. See United States Steel Corporation v. F.T.C., supra. One of the purposes of Section 7, as amended, is to reverse trends toward vertical integrations. The United States Supreme Court has stated: "[R]emaining vigor cannot immunize a merger in the trend in that industry is toward oligopoly [or vertical integration]." 370 U.S., at 333, 82 S.Ct., at 1528.

---

[1] See F.T.C. Staff Report, 1966, Economic Report on Mergers & Vertical Integration in the Cement Industry.

BARRIERS TO ENTRY. Barriers to entry in a market strengthen the market power of existing firms allowing the use of oligopolistic power with relative safety from new competition. Any new barriers make a strong market position even stronger. F.T.C. v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra, 386 U.S. at 578–581, 87 S.Ct. 1224; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 173–174, 84 S.Ct. 1710, 12 L.Ed.2d 775. The Commission found that the challenged mergers constitute a substantial new barrier to entry in an industry already characterized as having substantial barriers. Testimony of Mississippi's Vice President characterized the cement industry [1093] as one requiring large amounts of capital to enter. Mississippi further felt that barriers to entry were so high already that merger was the only way to enter. The business of the acquired companies is now foreclosed to new entrants on top of the previously existing barriers. Mississippi contends that its merger activity did not raise the barriers to entry. However, the formidable barriers Mississippi found (none of which were vertical mergers then) are enlarged by Mississippi's action of eliminating a large portion of the market from any possibility of competition from a new entrant.

IV.

[18] Both the Hearing Examiner and the Commission found that the Commission had jurisdiction over Richter on the basis that Richter, as the acquired company, was engaged in interstate commerce.

In 1963 Richter sold and delivered 121 cubic yards of ready-mixed concrete from Ohio into Kentucky. Being notified that it did not have a license to sell concrete in Kentucky, Richter then delivered approximately 4,000 cubic yards of concrete to the contractor who accepted delivery in Ohio and then transported it to Kentucky.

The record shows that Richter regularly purchased materials in interstate commerce. We do not find that changing the character of portland cement by adding water and delivering it in an unhardened state causes the product to lose its interstate character. See Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 348 F.2d 674.

V.

Five U.S.C.A. § 555(b) provides: "a person compelled to appear in person before an agency * * * is entitled to be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel. * * *" Mr. Manley, Vice President of Mississippi River Corporation and President of the cement subsidiaries, was subpoenaed to testify by the complaint counsel. Upon completion of direct examination a short recess was called. Mr. Manley was then told by the Examiner that he could not confer, either during recess or lunch, with counsel for respondent about his testimony. Mississippi contends that the ruling violates the Statute and taints the whole proceeding to such a degree that this Court should remand the entire case. The Commission upheld the Examiner's ruling on the basis that no unfairness had been shown. We agree.

[19] Neither Mr. Manley nor respondents counsel advised the Examiner that counsel for Mississippi represented Mr. Manley. The Statute relied upon appears to be designed for the protection of the witnesses, not for the benefit of the litigants. In any event, Mississippi has failed to demonstrate that it has been prejudiced by the ruling. See 5 U.S.C.A. § 706; see also United States v. Bensinger Co., 8 Cir., 430 F.2d 584, 591–592. Some thirty days after the incident above referred to, Mississippi produced Mr. Manley as a witness and had a full opportunity to present additional testimony of the witness.

Mississippi in its reply brief for the first time raises the issue that the Commission in the subsequent case of Lehigh Portland Cement Company, FTC Docket No. 8680, allowed a respondent a more liberal discovery than is allowed Mississippi. The Commission's order was vacated with remand to the Commission in F.T.C. v. Crowther, 139 U.S.App.D.C. 137, 430 F.2d 510. On remand, the F.T.C. on July 31, 1970, in substance reinstated the Mississippi procedure.

[20, 21] Proper judicial administration requires that error relied upon should be asserted in appellant's opening brief. See Rule 28(a), FRAP. New issues cannot ordinarily be raised by reply brief. See Smith v. American Guild of Variety Artists, 8 Cir., 368 F.2d 511, 514, and cases there cited. In any event, we find the contention to be without merit. Mississippi has not demonstrated that it [1094] was in any way prejudiced by the ruling of which it now complains.

A review of the entire record satisfies us that Mississippi has had a fair hearing before the Trial Examiner and the Commission and that the Commission has applied proper legal standards, and that its order is supported by substantial evidence.

The decision and order of the Commission is affirmed and enforced.

OKC CORP. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION *

No. 705–70—F.T.C. Docket 8802

(Court of Appeals, Tenth Circuit. Feb. 14, 1972)

1. FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS OF EXAMINER ARE NOT SACROSANCT OR NECESSARILY BINDING ON COMMISSION OR COURT BUT ARE PART OF RECORD ON REVIEW

   [1160] In making determination as to sufficiency of evidence to support an order of the Federal Trade Commission the Court of Appeals must consider the record as a whole, including the findings and conclusions of the examiner, but the findings and conclusions of the examiner are not sacrosanct and are not necessarily binding either on the Commission or the Court of Appeals; they represent but a part of the entire record to be considered on review.

2. EXAMINER'S FINDINGS ON REVIEW SHOULD BE GIVEN WEIGHT THEY MERIT BUT SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE STANDARD IS NOT MODIFIED

   Where the Federal Trade Commission and the examiner are in disagreement, the examiner's findings on review should be considered and given such weight as in reason and in light of judicial experience they merit, but the substantial evidence standard is not modified.

3. DIVESTITURE FOUND ESSENTIAL TO RESTORATION OF COMPETITION IN CEMENT AND READY-MIX CONCRETE INDUSTRIES IN NEW ORLEANS AREA

   Substantial evidence supported the final order of Federal Trade Commission finding violation of Clayton Act and directing the acquiring corporation to totally divest itself of stock of acquired corporation on ground that divestiture was essential to restoration of competition in relevant cement and ready-mix concrete industries in the New Orleans metropolitan area.

4. TOTAL DIVESTITURE IS APPROPRIATE EVEN THOUGH ANTITRUST VIOLATION RELATES ONLY TO ONE ASPECT OF ACQUIRED COMPANY

   Total divestiture of stock of acquired corporation by acquiring corporation is not necessarily inappropriate even though the antitrust violation found relates to but one aspect of the company thus acquired, especially where total divestiture is deemed necessary to restore effective competition.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 455 F.2d 1159.)

On petition for review, the Court affirmed the order directing total divestiture of acquired company on grounds that this was essential to restoration of competition in the concrete industries in the New Orleans area.

Robert G. Sugarman, New York City (Sullivan & Cromwell,

---

* Reported in 455 F.2d 1159 (1972). Preliminary injunction dissolved on motion of F.T.C. by U.S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, June 30, 1972; see 8 S.&D. 1220. For case before Commission, see 77 F.T.C. 1342.

John F. Arning, New York City and Charles P. Russ, III, of counsel, on the brief), for petitioner.

Montgomery K. Hyun, Washington, D.C. (Joseph Martin, Jr., Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhyndance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, and Frederick H. Mayer and Thomas F. Howder, Washington, D.C., on the brief), for respondent.

Before LEWIS, PHILLIPS and MCWILLIAMS, Circuit Judges.

MCWILLIAMS, Circuit Judge

The issue here to be determined is whether there is substantial evidence to support a final order of the Federal Trade Commission finding a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and directing the acquiring corporation to totally divest itself of the stock of the acquired corporation, the Commission deeming total divestiture essential to a restoration of competition in the relevant cement and ready-mix concrete industries in the New Orleans metropolitan area. Our study of the record leads us to conclude that there is such supporting evidence and we therefore affirm the Commission's order.

OKC Corp., formerly the Oklahoma Cement Company and hereinafter referred to as OKC, has its headquarters in Dallas, Texas, and prior to the acquisition in question was principally engaged in the manufacture and sale of portland cement, asphalt, automotive gasoline, fuel oil and various other petroleum products. OKC operates two cement manufacturing plants, one in Pryor, Oklahoma, having an annual capacity of two million barrels, and the other in New Orleans, Louisiana, with a 1.7 million barrel annual capacity. Since it completed its New Orleans plant in 1964, OKC has become the third largest supplier of portland cement in the New Orleans area. In 1968 this plant shipped 966,916 barrels valued at $3.77 million within the New Orleans area, which accounted for 23 per cent of the total shipments of portland cement made into the area. OKC's principal customers [1161] for its portland cement are ready-mix firms, oil well servicing companies, public works projects and oil field pipecoating companies, with ready-mix firms being the largest purchasers of portland cement.

Jahncke Service, Incorporated, hereinafter referred to as Jahncke, is a conglomerate based in New Orleans which engages in various and distinct enterprises, including marine hydraulic dredging of rivers and harbors, the dredging and sale of marine shell and the production and sale of ready-mix concrete. Jahncke has been a well-recognized, highly successful, and independent business enterprise in New Orleans for nearly 100 years and has engaged in the ready-mix business for the past 30 years. Prior to its acquisition by OKC, Jahncke operated as an integrated business unit under a single centralized management, with two principal operating departments (hydraulic dredging and building materials) which were more or less organized along functional and product lines. During 1965–68, sales of merchandise by the building material department, including ready-mix sales, accounted for about 60 per cent of Jahncke's total revenues. Revenues from dredging operations, short-line railroad operations, joint venture construction projects and other sources constituted the remaining 40 per cent.

During 1968 and 1969, OKC acquired a majority stock interest in Jahncke and for practical purposes assumed control of that company. It was this stock acquisition which precipitated the filing of a formal complaint with the Commission charging OKC with a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, such acquisition allegedly tending to lessen competition and create a monopoly in the production and sale of portland cement, ready-mixed concrete, shells and construction aggregates in the New Orleans area. Hearings were later held before an examiner who in due time issued an initial decision in which he found, among other things, that OKC's acquisition of the stock of Jahncke violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act in that the acquisition did tend to substantially lessen competition in the sale of cement and concrete in the New Orleans area and the examiner ordered OKC to divest itself of Jahncke's ready-mix concrete business.

On cross-appeals, the Commission adopted the examiners findings with respect to the portland cement and ready-mix concrete product markets and the New Orleans geographic area, as well as his conclusion that OKC's acquisition of the stock of Jahncke violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. But contrary to the examiner's divestiture order, the Commission concluded that the entire Jahncke enterprise, not simply the ready-mix portion, should be divested as a unit in order to insure that the ready-mix business of Jahncke would survive as a viable, independent, local competitive entity and that there be a restoration of competition in the relevant cement and ready-mix industries in the New Orleans metropolitan area. Accordingly, the Commission ordered a divestiture of all Jahncke stock held by OKC within six months after its order becomes final.

OKC has now filed with this court a petition for review wherein it does not challenge the findings of an antitrust violation, but limits its petition to the question of the propriety of the Commission's order that there be a total—as opposed to a partial—divestiture.

In ordering OKC to totally divest itself of its stockholdings in Jahncke, the Commission found that there was an "insufficient basis" for the examiner's conclusion that the ready-mix business of Jahncke, "if severed from the entire enterprise, could survive as a viable, independent competitive entity." As concerns the nature of the remedy, i.e., total divestiture as opposed to partial divestiture, the Commission summarized as follows:

> In sum, we are convinced that competition would suffer from the elimination [1162] of Jahncke as an independent ready-mix producer in the New Orleans market. We know from the long history of this organization that it is capable of maintaining its independence in the ready-mix line if it remains unchanged. On the other hand, we are far from persuaded that this would be true if the ready-mix business would be severed from the remainder of the enterprise. Consequently, we cannot agree with the hearing examiner that the market structure would be adequately restored by divestiture of only the ready-mix unit. The holding that partial divestiture would afford complete relief is at best conjectural. It is therefore rejected.

Both parties agree that the ultimate issue is whether the record contains "substantial evidence" to support the order of the Commission directing total divestiture. Universal Camera Corp. v. NLRB, 340 U.S. 474, 71 S.Ct. 456, 95 L. Ed. 456 (1951). The Commission argues that the record contains such supporting evidence; whereas, OKC's position is that it is the examiner's order, and not that of the Commission, that finds substantial support in the record. Before considering the evidence bearing on the issue of total versus partial divestiture, we would first consider the effect on our decisional process of the fact that the examiner and the Commission differed in their respective conclusions as to the proper remedy for the particular antitrust violation here in question.

[1, 2] In making our determination as to the sufficiency of the evidence, we are to consider the record as a whole, including the findings and conclusions of the examiner. 5 U.S.C. § 706 and Universal Camera, supra. However, the findings and conclusions of the examiner are not sacrosanct and are not necessarily binding either on the Commission or us. They represent but a part of the entire record to be considered by us on review. United States Retail Credit Association, Inc. v. F.T.C., 300 F. 2d 212 (4th Cir. 1962). In American Fed. of Television & Radio Artists v. NLRB 129 U.S. App.D.C. 399, 395 F.2d 622 (1968) substantial evidence was found to support the administrative agency's findings even though the case was close on the facts and even though there was perhaps substantial evidence to suport the examiner's contrary finding on the issue there in question. See also K. Davis, Administrative Law § 10.04 (Supp.1970) for a discussion of the weight to be given an examiner's report by a reviewing court. And so, where the Commission and the examiner be in disagreement, the examiner's findings on review should be considered and given such weight as in reason and in the light of judicial experience they merit. However, even though the Commission and the examiner be in disagreement, the " 'substantial evidence' standard is not modified in any way * * *." Universal Camera, supra.

Universal Camera also held that the "significance of his [the examiner's] report, of course, depends largely on the importance of credibility in the particular case." In our view, the instant case is essentially one where the examiner and the Commission simply drew different conclusions from the same evidence as to the viability of Jahncke's ready-mix business if it were to be cut adrift from the conglomerate. In this regard the examiner concluded that the ready-mix business could stand on its own two feet; whereas, the Commission found, as above indicated, an insufficient basis for concluding that the ready-mix unit of Jahncke, if severed from the entire enterprise, could survive as a viable, independent competitive entity.

[3] This conclusion of the Commission in our view does find substantial support in the record. The evidence on this matter as might be expected was in some degree of conflict. Needless to say, conflicting inferences could with propriety be drawn from that evidence which was not in dispute. The fact of the matter is that the ready-mix operation of Jahncke had been operating at a [1163] loss for some time both before and after OKC acquired Jahncke's stock. Certain witnesses did express an opinion that assuming certain changed circumstances Jahncke's ready-mix business could be turned into a profitable operation. This opinion was controverted by other opinion testimony to the effect that the ready-mix business could not stand alone. Indeed, an officer of OKC testified that Jahncke's ready-mix business had been losing money and, being an uneconomical business, OKC desired to divest itself of the ready-mix operations, though OKC at the same time wanted to keep the other Jahncke enterprises which operated at a profit. There was other testimony that historically the financial resources of the entire Jahncke company had been of aid to the ready-mix operation. Without going into further detail, it is sufficient to say that our study of the record, including the examiner's initial decision, leads us to conclude that there is substantial evidence to support the Commission's order.

[4] Total divestiture is not necessarily inappropriate even though the antitrust violation found relates to but one aspect of the company thus acquired, especially where, as here, total divestiture is deemed necessary to restore effective competition. In a somewhat analogous situation, the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Du Pont & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 81 S.Ct. 1243, 6 L.Ed. 2d 318 (1961), ordered total divestiture, and in so doing observed as follows:

> It cannot be gainsaid that complete divestiture is peculiarly appropriate in cases of stock acquisitions which violate § 7. That statute is specific and 'narrowly directed.' Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 312, [69 S.Ct. 1051, 93 L.Ed. 1371] (1949), and it outlaws a particular form of economic control—stock acquisitions which tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce. The very words of § 7 suggest that an undoing of the acquisition is a natural remedy. Divestiture of dissolution has traditionally been the remedy for Sherman Act violations whose heart is intercorporate combination and control, and it is reasonable to think immediately of the same remedy when § 7 of the Clayton Act, which particularizes the Sherman Act standard of illegality, is involved. Of the very few litigated § 7 cases which have been reported, most decreed divestiture as a matter of course. Divestiture has been called the most important of antitrust remedies. It is simple, relatively easy to administer, and sure. It should always be in the forefront of a court's mind when a violation of § 7 has been found.

Order affirmed.

SYDNEY N. FLOERSHEIM v. CASPAR N. WEINBURGER, ET AL.*

Civ. A. No. 2048—70—F.T.C. Docket 8721

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, Feb. 29, 1972)

1. That Reports of Compliance Be Signed Could Be Read as Directory Rather Than Mandatory
   Requirement of Federal Trade Commission regulation that reports of compliance be signed could be read as directory rather than mandatory.

2. For Purposes of Judicial Review Commission's Rejection of Compliance Report Is Final Federal Trade Commission's rejection of report of compliance is, for purposes of judicial review, final agency action.

---

* Reported in 346 F. Supp. 950 (1972). Appeal by plaintiff filed with U.S. Court of Appeals for The District of Columbia, April 10, 1972. For case before Commission, see 73 F.T.C. 134.

3. WHERE COMMISSION FORMALLY REJECTED PLAINTIFF'S REPORT OF COMPLIANCE AND SOLE ISSUE WAS CONTINUING IMPROPRIETY OF BUSINESS, A PREENFORCEMENT JUDICIAL REVIEW WAS APPROPRIATE

   Where letter from Federal Trade Commission formally rejecting plaintiff's proposed report of compliance was last required decision by highest authority responsible for determination of compliance, and cease and desist order had been preceded by exhausted study of all factual and technical issues and sole issue was alleged continuing impropriety of business which Commission had already examined, preenforcement judicial review was appropriate.

4. PROVISION OF F.T.C. REGULATION ON PENALTY LIABILITY IN CASE OF FAILURE OF FULL COMPLIANCE ACCURATELY REFLECTS INTENT OF STATUTE WITH RESPECT TO FINALITY FOR ASSESSING PENALTIES

   Federal Trade Commission regulation providing that person against whom cease and desist order has become final becomes liable, in case of failure of full compliance, for penalties notwithstanding filing of "Report of Compliance" accurately reflects intent of statute with respect to what constitutes finality for purposes of assessing penalties.

5. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF F.T.C. REJECTION OF COMPLIANCE REPORT TAKEN AT PETITIONER'S RISK; POSSIBLE PENALTIES NOT STAYED PENDING SUCH LITIGATION

   Judicial review of Federal Trade Commission's rejection of report of compliance must be taken at petitioner's own risk; strong public interest in this area requires that possible penalties not be stayed pending such litigation in order to avoid encouraging frivolous suits for purposes of delay.

6. IN ASSESSING PENALTIES COURT MAY CONSIDER PLAINTIFF'S GOOD FAITH AND OTHER BASES FOR HIS FAILURE TO COMPLY

   Court administrative delays and plaintiff's good faith or unreasonableness or frivolousness of his grounds for review are facts which court may consider in assessing penalties for failure to comply with cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission.

7. ADVISORY OPINION OF COMMISSION NOT REVIEWABLE BY COURT WHEN SUBJECT WAS PREVIOUSLY TREATED BY A COMMISSION ORDER

   Court could not properly review advisory opinion of Federal Trade Commission where same or substantially same course of action which was subject of advisory opinion was subject of cease and [951] desist order issued by Commission.

8. COMMISSION CORRECTLY REFUSED TO COMMENT BECAUSE OF INSUFFICIENT INFORMATION

   Where, following Federal Trade Commission's issuance of cease and desist order, plaintiff's modified forms proposed in letter merely described alleged changes and no actual sample was supplied to Commission, and most crucial factor in evaluating proposed forms was their visual impact, Commission correctly refused to comment because of insufficient information.

9. DISTRICT COURT CANNOT INQUIRE INTO MERITS OF AN ORDER WHICH HAD BEEN AFFIRMED AND ENFORCED BY APPROPRIATE COURT OF APPEALS; REVIEW CONFINED TO WHETHER EVIDENCE SUPPORTED RESPONSE

   In action for declaratory judgment that certain forms revised in alleged compliance with order of Federal Trade Commission were not unfair or deceptive in violation of Federal Trade Commission Act, court could not inquire into merits of cease and desist order which had been affirmed and enforced by appropriate Court of Appeals, and review was confined to determination whether substantial evidence on entire record supported Commission's response to report of compliance so that response could not be said to have been arbitrary or clearly wrong.

10. IF ITEM OR PRACTICE IS CAPABLE TO TWO MEANINGS, ONE OF WHICH IS FALSE, IT IS MISLEADING AND PROHIBITIVE; IT IS OVERALL IMPRESSION ON CONSUMER WHICH IS CRUCIAL

If item or practice questioned by Federal Trade Commission is capable of two meanings, one of which is false, it is misleading and prohibitive even though term might have performed different and lawful function; it is overall impression on consumer which is crucial.

11. F.T.C. ACT WAS INTENDED TO PROTECT THE IGNORANT, UNTHINKING AND CREDULOUS AS WELL AS THE SOPHISTICATED

Federal Trade Commission Act was intended to protect not just the sophisticated, but rather the vast multitude which includes the ignorant, unthinking and credulous, who, in making purchases, do not stop to analyze but are governed by appearances and general impressions.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 346 F. Supp. 950.)

Court held that Commission's rejection of compliance report was final agency action, that plaintiff's grounds for review were frivolous, and motion for summary judgment granted.

Marion Edwyn Harrison, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

Harold A. Titus, Jr., U.S. Atty., United States District Court, Washington, D.C., for defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

PARKER, District Judge.

Plaintiff Sydney N. Floersheim, doing business as Floersheim Sales Company and National Research Company, seeks a declaratory judgment that certain forms revised in alleged compliance with an order of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC or Commission) are not unfair or deceptive in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act,[1] 15 U.S.C. § 41, et seq. and, therefore, not subject to suppression by the Commission. These forms are sold by the plaintiff to third parties who in turn use them in the collection of delinquent debts and to obtain information about delinquent debtors. The plaintiff also seeks a similar determination as to certain forms intended to be used in plaintiff's own proposed debt collection business. He further seeks a preliminary stay of the penalty provisions of 15 U.S.C. § 45 (l) during the pendency of this litigation The defendants are the individual commissioners of the FTC and the United States of America (Government).

---

[1] 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1).

Defendants have moved to dismiss the complaint for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, or, in the alternative for summary judgment. Opposition has been filed by the plaintiff to the motion to dismiss together with a cross-motion for summary judgment.

For the reasons set forth the Court concludes that the defendants' motion to [952] dismiss should be denied as to the revised forms and granted as to the proposed forms; that the plaintiff's motion for a stay of penalties pendente lite should be denied; that the defendants' motion for summary judgment should be granted with regard to the revised forms for the plaintiff's existing business; and that the plaintiff's cross-motion for summary judgment should be denied.

Plaintiff's business, conceded to be virtually nationwide, > is that of selling to creditors and to debt collection agencies certain forms—cards and envelopes—for the use of the purchaser in either (1) attempting to trace allegedly delinquent debtors (commonly called "skip-tracer" forms) or (2) attempting to induce allegedly delinquent debtors to pay their debts * * *.[3]

On February 5, 1968, the Commission issued an Opinion and a Cease and Desist Order against Floersheim in Docket No. 8721. Floersheim was found to have used and sold forms demanding the payments of debts as well as forms to secure information concerning the delinquent debtors, that were deceptive and misleading in appearance "creating the impression that they came from the Government or some other official source or third-party, rather than from the creditor." Envelopes used and sent to debtors were found to simulate those used for official purposes by the United States Government. Skip-tracer forms were found to be deceptive because of their general appearance and similarity to Government checks. The features of other forms used by Floersheim, all set out in the opinion, were regarded as concealing their true nature and were misleading and deceptive.

On review the United States Court of Appeals upheld the Commission's findings, concluding that there was substantial evidence to support the findings that the materials were deceptive. Floersheim's contentions that the Cease and Desist Order was unreasonable, arbitrary, and capricious, amounting to a denial of due process and extending beyond what was reasonably necessary to prevent the deceptions, were rejected. The Court held that the sanctions were justified in view of the past and immediate activities of Floersheim. Judgment was entered affirming the action of the Commission and Floersheim was required to obey and comply with the Cease and Desist Order. Floersheim v. Federal Trade Commission, 411 F.2d 874, 876–878 (9th Cir. 1969), cert. denied 396 U.S. 1002, 90 S.Ct. 551, 24 L.Ed.2d 494 (1970).

---

[3] Plaintiff's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, at 3.

[1] Two related series of incidents give rise to the present litigation. The genesis of the first occurred when the plaintiff, pursuant to 16 C.F.R. § 3.61(a), filed a Report of Compliance alleging in detail the manner and form of his compliance with the Commission's Final Order of February 5, 1968. The cards, forms and envelopes described in and enclosed with the Report of Compliance (the revised forms) were intended to be used in plaintiff's existing business.[3] The FTC's Division of Compliance, Bureau of Deceptive Practices responded to the Report of Compliance with critical comments. Following an exchange of correspondence the FTC on April 10, 1970 formally rejected the Report of Compliance, based primarily on the objections noted by its Division of Compliance, and also for failure of the plaintiff to sign the report in accordance with the requirements of the Commission's regulations.[4] A Commission letter of April 16, 1970 expressly warned that

> [953] * * * Any use of the materials rejected by the Commission or any other materials violative of the order may subject Mr. Floersheim to a suit for civil penalties.[5]

The second problem arises from the plaintiff's October 23, 1969 request,[6] pursuant to 16 C.F.R. § 3.61(c), for an advisory opinion concerning whether certain forms (the proposed forms)[7] intended to be used in the plaintiff's own proposed debt collection business would comply with the Order in Docket No. 8721. On March 9,

---

[3] Plaintiff's Exhibits D, D1–D9 attached to the Complaint.

[4] There is no denial that the Report, contrary to the express provisions of 16 C.F.R. § 3.61(a), was not signed by the plaintiff. But in accordance with the long-standing test in the District of Columbia, Kraft v. Board of Education for District of Columbia, 247 F.Supp. 21 (D.D.C.1965), cert. denied 386 U.S. 958, 87 S.Ct. 1026, 18 L.Ed.2d 106 (1967); United States ex rel. Holzendorf v. Hay, 20 App.D.C. 576, 579 (1902), the context and apparent intent of the regulation may be read to be directory, rather than mandatory, in this instance. The plantiff, through his attorney, has submitted the report as part of the court record. Also, the Commission proceeded to consider in detail the merits of the proposed report; the failure to sign was merely a secondary basis for rejection of the report.

[5] Plaintiff's Exhibit K1 attached to the Complaint.

[6] Plaintiff's Exhibit B attached to the Complaint.

[7] Plaintiff's Exhibits B, B1–B3 attached to the Complaint.

1970, following several contacts regarding this request, the Commission, through its Secretary, formally and with particularity advised plaintiff that the proposed forms failed to comply with the order in numerous respects. * * *"

Plaintiff then further modified these proposed forms and requested reconsideration of the FTC advisory comments. But, significantly, the revisions were merely descriptive; true copies of the samples were not supplied to the Commission. The Commission therefore declined to comment indicating it had "insufficient information on which to base any change in its vews on the forms respondent [Floersheim] proposes to use as those views are stated in its letter dated April 10, 1970 * * *." [8]

Because of the FTC's response, plaintiff has not embarked on the proposed business venture.

Plaintiff contends that the response to the Report of Compliance concerning the revised forms and the advisory opinion regarding the proposed forms, although both prior to any actual actions or enforcement proceedings, are final agency actions subject to and ripe for judicial review.

REPORT OF COMPLIANCE (THE REVISED FORMS)

[2] The Court agrees with the plaintiff that the FTC's rejection of a Report of Compliance is, for purposes of judicial review, final agency action.

[3] The issue of pre-enforcement judicial review was recently and extensively discussed by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in National Automatic Laundry and Cleaning Council v. Shultz, 143 U.S.App.D.C. 274, 443 F.2d 689 (1971), Circuit Judge Leventhal writing for a unanimous bench. In that case a national trade association representing several thousand members of the coin-operated laundry and dry cleaning industry sought a judgment declaring invalid a ruling of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor. In response to a querry from the trade association which set forth three typical fact situations prevailing in that industry the Administrator indicated his opinion that the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 made the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq., as amended, applicable to coin-operated laundries.

In reversing the District Court's dismissal of the action for lack of jurisdiction, the Court of Appeals concluded that

---

[8] Letter of May 5, 1970, Plaintiff's Exhibit J attached to the Complaint.

> * * * We find no threshold obstacle that requires dismissal of the action before us merely because it seeks judicial review of the "agency action" of interpretation prior to the institution of an agency action for enforcement. 443 F.2d at 704.
>
> * * * The ultimate question is whether the problems generated by pre-enforcement review are of such a [954] nature that, taken together, they outweigh the hardship and interest of plaintiff's members and establish that judicial review of the interpretative ruling should be deferred. To some extent a balancing is involved. 443 F.2d at 702.

The Court proceeded to examine the pertinent aspects of "ripeness" and "finality" with respect to the actual facts before it. It found that "with the authoritative interpretative ruling by the Administrator heading the Wage and Hour Division the agency's interpretative action has come to an end," 443 F.2d at 701; that "[t]he authoritative interpretation of an executive official has the legal consequences, if it is reasonable and not inconsistent with ascertainable legislative intent, of commanding deference from a court that itself might have reached a different view if it had been free to consider the issue on a blank slate," 443 F.2d at 697; and that "the Administrator's interpretation, * * *, has the characteristic not only of securing 'expected compliance' * * *, but of possibly stimulating double damage suits by employees who need not fear that they would be at odds with the Government officials involved." 443 F.2d at 697.[9] Proceeding from those findings the Court concluded that "the sound course is to accept the ruling of a board or commission, or the head of an agency, as presumptively final," 443 F.2d at 701; and that pre-enforcement judicial review of the Administrator's ruling was appropriate.

Judge Leventhal cautioned that

> The general presumption of judicial reviewability, and the modern rulings implementing that approach, are not to be understood as projecting a doctrine of judicial intervention as to administrative rulings or declarations on problems that are hypothetical rather than actual. 443 F.2d at 699.

But he distinguished the facts before him, observing that

> * * * The plaintiff Association did not present to the Administrator a hypothetical set of facts, rather it set out the actual and present operations of its members. It did not seek to learn whether a proposed course of conduct would violate the law. 433 F.2d at 699.

The facts presented in this case, considered in light of the balancing approach adopted in Shultz, and "pragmatic considerations, particularly those relating to the institutional relationships between the courts and the administrative agencies," Medical Committee for Human Rights v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 139 U.S. App.D.C. 226, 234, 432 F.2d 659, 667 (1970), are sufficiently within the ambit of the Shultz criteria to make pre-enforcement judicial reviews appropriate and necessary.[10] The Commission's April 10, 1970 letter formally rejecting plaintiff's proposed Report of Compliance was the last required decision by the highest authority responsible for determination of compliance.[11] Conformity with the Commission's ruling is expected, and if penalties are sought to be assessed they are considered to have begun accruing once the Cease and Desist Order became statutorily final, 15 U.S.C. § 45 (l), and after the expiration of the period granted by the Commission to remove the offending items from the marketplace Courts should not be "powerless if * * * an order * * * [955] still is considered to be so arbitrary as to be unlawful and the Government pursues a policy of accumulating penalties while avoiding a judicial test by refusing to bring action to recover them." United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 654, 70 S.Ct. 357, 369, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950). See also, St. Regis Paper Co. v. United States, 368 U.S. 208, 226, 227, 82 S.Ct. 289, 7 L.Ed. 2d 240 (1961).

---

[9] The Court also found that the opinion rendered by the Administrator "was rendered on a broad legal question affecting an entire industry group * * *." 443 F.2d at 702. But that factor is not exclusively controlling.

Admittedly, the merits of the issues present a situation that looks to the future. But the situation is not so hypothetical or so speculative as to be inappropriate for judicial review. Helco Products Co., Inc. v. McNutt, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 71, 137 F.2d 681 (1943), relied upon by the defendants and discussed in Shultz, is distinguishable. In Helco, the plaintiff sought an advisory opinion from the Food and Drug Administration of the Federal Security Agency whether its proposed shipments in interstate commerce of white poppy seeds dyed blue would constitute an illegal adulteration within the provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S. C.A. § 301 et seq. The Commissioner of Food and Drugs indicated that such action would be a violation, and judicial review was subsequently denied. But in that case the question had not been submitted to the Commissioner's superior, the Federal Security Administrator; and there had been no hearing at which all the factual and technical as well as legal aspects could be examined.

---

[10] It might also be argued that at the Report of Compliance state of its concern, the FTC is so meaningfully involved in the plaintiff's decision that review is appropriate. Independent Broker-Dealers' Trade Association, et al. v. Securities & Exchange Commission, et al., 142 U.S. App.D.C. 384, 442 F.2d 132 (March 4, 1971) as amended May 18, 1971, cert. denied 404 U.S. 828, 92 S.Ct. 63, 30, L.Ed.2d 57 (October 12, 1971).

[11] There are no allegations of changed conditions of law or fact or considerations of public interest which might form the basis for reopening the proceedings. 16 C.F.R. § 3.72.

On the other hand, in the case before this Court the sole issue is the alleged continuing impropriety of a business which the FTC has already examined. There has been an exhaustive study of all of the factual and technical issues culminating in the Cease and Desist Order. The Commissioners and their subordinates need make no further analysis to determine what qualities are deceptive in order to decide if the petitioner's offer of compliance avoids those elements. There is no possibility of premature judicial interference with administrative analysis or fact finding; the issue is simply the legal adequacy of the FTC's decision. Abbott Laboratories et al v. Gardner et al., 387 U.S. 136, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967); Frozen Food Express v. United States et al., 351 U.S. 40, 76 S.Ct. 569, 100 L.Ed. 910 (1956). The Commission, having completed all of its procedures except the technicality of seeking an enforcement order, has issued what may have the effect of a supplemental Cease and Desist Order without the benefit to the petitioner of judicial review. This is agency action for which there is no adequate remedy. Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 704.[12]

This Court also believes that the public interest is more effectively served if introduction of deceptive devices and practices into the marketplace before their legality can be determined is discouraged. Regina Corporation v. F.T.C., 322 F.2d 765, 768 (3rd Cir. 1963), rehear. denied 1963, as amended 1963. Thus if a petitioner can seek prompt judicial review of a rejected Report of Compliance delays in prosecution for contempt may be avoided; and failure of a petitioner to seek prompt judicial review would be evidence of bad faith in a proceeding for assessment of penalties.

[4–6] Nor are fears of overburdening the courts with requests for review of half-hearted attempts at compliance justified. 16 C.F.R. § 3.61(b) provides, in pertinent part,

> [956] * * * that * * * the filing of a report which does not evidence full compliance with the order, does not in any circumstances suspend or relieve a respondent from his obligation under the law with respect to compliance with such order. An order of the Commission to cease and desist becomes final on the date and under the conditions provided in * * * the Federal Trade Commission Act * * * and * * * the Clayton Act, as amended. * * * Any person, partnership or corporation against which an order to cease and desist had been issued who is not in full compliance with such order on and after the date provided in these statutes for the order to become final is in violation of such order and is subject to an immediate action for civil penalties.

---

[12] Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440, 84 S.Ct. 508, 11 L.Ed.2d 459 (1964) and Anheuser-Busch, Inc. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 359 F.2d 487 (8th Cir. 1966), cited by the defendants, involved failures to comply with subpoenaes pursuant to section 10 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 50. The courts found that there was an adequate remedy and penalties could be stayed pending litigation. Although the action question of pre-enforcement review of the rejection of a proffered FTC Letter of Compliance was not reached because no rejection had yet occurred, the opinion of Chief Judge Caleb M. Wright in Continental Baking Company v. Dixon et al., 283 F.Supp. 285 (D.Del.1968) strongly suggests support of petitioner Floersheim's request for review.

The Court believes that this regulation accurately reflects the intent of §§ 45(g) and (l)[13] of the Act with respect to what constitutes finality for purposes of assessing penalties. Thus judicial review of a rejected Report of Compliance must be taken at the petitioner's own risk. The strong public interest in this area requires that possible penalties not be stayed pending such litigation in order to avoid encouraging frivolous suits for purposes of delay. Of course court administrative delays and the plaintiff's good faith on the one hand, and, as in this case, the unreasonableness or frivolousness of plaintiff's grounds for review on the other hand, are factors which a court may consider in assessing penalties. United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F.Supp. 383 (S.D.N.Y. 1966).

This Court also notes that the administration of justice might be better served if, in the future, review of a rejection of a Report of Compliance were confined, when venue is obtainable, as a matter of judicial discretion to the jurisdiction which originally reviewed the cease and desist order. See dicta in Continental Baking Company v. Dixon, 283 F.Supp. 285, 288 (D.Del.1968). In fact that court of appeals has "exclusive" jurisdiction to "affirm, enforce, modify, or set aside orders of the Commission." 15 U.S.C. § 45(d) (Emphasis added.)

But our Circuit Court, in dicta in Independent Broker-Dealers' Trade Association et al. v. SEC, supra, considered a similar problem with regard to direct review by the court of appeals under the Securities Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C. §78(y) (1964). It was there indicated that review by the district court would be sustainable, inter alia, under the Administrative Procedure Act, providing for review of "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court," 5 U.S.C. §704 or "[i]f the Act should be given narrow reading [with exclusive jurisdiction in the courts of appeals], * * * by reference to the general equity jurisdiction of the District Court." 142 U.S.App.D.C., at 395 n. 18 442 F.2d at 143, n. 18. The Elma Division of Drive-X Company, Inc. v. Dixon et al., 121 U.S.App.D.C. 113, 348 F.2d 342 (1965), rehear. en banc denied 1965. The same situation justifies review of the revised forms.

---

[13] 15 U.S.C. §§45(g) and (e).

ADVISORY OPINION (THE PROPOSED FORMS)

[7, 8] FTC advisory opinions pursuant to 16 C.F.R. § 3.61(c) usually differ significantly from responses to Reports of Compliance since they are based only on requests "submitted in writing" and "other information available to the Commission." Neither hearings nor appeals to the Commission or to the courts of orders stemming from hearings are provided. It would be improper for this Court to review advisory opinions in such a context for it would be compelled to undertake the exhausive efforts reserved for administrative energies and expertise. Nor would an exception be appropriate for a case such as the present "where the same or substantially the same course of action * * * has been the subject of a current * * * order, [957] or decree initiated or obtained by the Commission. * * *"[14] Unlike the situation presented by Reports of Compliance, there are no factors to discourage overburdening Courts with frivolous actions. Indeed, as the facts of this case demonstrate, many ingenious guises can be developed to alter the form of a business without changing its substance, thus circumventing FTC scrutiny.[15] Accordingly, the motion of the defendants to dismiss the complaint should be granted as to the so-called proposed forms.

THE MERITS

[9] This Court's inquiry into the merits must be distinguished from review of the Cease and Desist Order. That Order has been affirmed and enforced by the appropriate court of appeals, Floersheim v. Federal Trade Commission, supra. Review here is confined to a determination whether substantial evidence on the entire record, Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U.S. 474, 71 S.Ct. 456, 95 L.Ed. 456 (1951) ; Giant Food Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 116 U.S.App.D.C. 227, 233, 322 F.2d 977, 985 (1963), petit. for rehear. en banc denied 1963, petit. for rehear. before the Division denied, 1963, dismissed pursuant to Rule 60 of the Supreme Court, 376 U.S. 967, 84 S. Ct. 1121, 12 L.Ed.2d 82 (1964), supports the Commission's response to the

---

[14] 16 C.F.R. § 3.61(c)(2). Additionally, plaintiff "conceded" that "even as to his proposed new business, the matter at issue was * * * within the jurisdiction of the FTC [cease and desist] Order." Plaintiff's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, at 5.

[15] Even if this Court were to approve, as a general rule, review of FTC advisory opinions, such review would be appropriate only as to the Commission's letter of March 9, 1970 commenting unfavorably on the request of October 23, 1969. Plaintiff's modified forms proposed in the letter of March 24, 1970 merely described alleged changes with no actual samples supplied to the Commission. In this case the most crucial factor in evaluating the proposed forms is their visual impact. The Commission correctly refused to comment because of insufficient information.

Report of Compliance so that the response cannot be said to have been arbitrary or clearly wrong. Giant Food Inc., v. F.T.C., supra; Kalwajtys v. F. T. C., 237 F.2d 654, 65 A.L.R.2d 220 (7th Cir. 1956), cert denied, 352 U.S. 1025, 77 S. Ct. 591, 1 L. Ed.2d 597 (1957).

[10, 11] In conducting such a review, several principles, particularly appropriate to this case, must be considered. If the questioned item or practice is capable of two meanings, one of which is false, it is misleading and prohibitive even though the term might have performed a different and lawful function. It is the over-all impression on the consumer that is crucial. Giant Food Inc. v. F. T. C., supra, 116 U.S.App.D.C. at 231, 235, 322 F.2d at 981, 985; Continental Wax Corporation et al. v. F. T. C., 330 F.2d 475, 477 (2d Cir. 1964); Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 208 F.2d 382, 387 (7th Cir. 1953), rehear. denied 1954, rev'd in part, 348 U.S. 940, 75 S.Ct. 361, 99 L.Ed 736 (1955). See also United States v. Ninety-Five Barrels, etc. of Vinegar, 265 U.S. 438, 443, 44 S.Ct. 529, 68 L.Ed. 1094 (1924). And the Federal Trade Commission Act was intended to protect not just the sophisticated, Giant Food Inc. v. F. T. C., supra, 116 U.S.App.D.C. at 238, n. 13, 322 F.2d at 982, n. 13; Helbros Watch Company, Inc. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 114 U.S.App. D.C. 63, 64, n. 4, 310 F.2d 868, 869, n. 4 (1962), cert. denied 372 U.S. 976, 83 S.Ct. 1110, 10 L.Ed.2d 142 (1963), rehear. denied 374 U.S. 857, 83 S.Ct. 1866, 10 L.Ed.2d 1083 (1963); but rather "that vast multitude which includes the ignorant, the unthinking and the credulous, who, in making purchases, do not stop to analyze but are governed by appearances and general impressions." Florence Mfg. Co. v. J. C. Dowd & Co., 178 F. 73, 75 (2d Cir. 1910); Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U.S. 112, 116, 58 S.Ct. 113, 82 L.Ed. 141 [958] (1937); Helbros Watch Company, Inc. v. F. T. C., supra; Giant Food Inc. v. F. T. C., supra.

Furthermore, deference must be shown to the experience and expertise of an administrative agency when reviewing its application of relevant statutes. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co. et al., 380 U.S. 374, 385, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965); Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357, 85 S.Ct. 1498, 14 L.Ed.2d 443 (1965).

The Commission's Final Order in this proceeding set forth in detail the various practices found to be deceptive.[16] Thereafter, petitioner filed his Report of Compliance[17] enclosing samples of revised forms and envelopes. Black and white xeroxed copies of these exhibits appear as Exhibits D1–D9 attached to the Complaint.

The Commission's Bureau of Deceptive Practices, Division of Compliance found only one exhibit acceptable.[18] That essentially negative response and grounds therefor were affirmed in later correspondence to the plaintiff from the Commission.[19]

Review of the sample forms and envelopes compels the conclusion that each of the negative responses of the Commission was more than justified. The immediate and dominant impression to this Court is that of mailings on behalf of or authorized by the Government. The color, shape, format, size and combination of type, and choice and arrangement of words all convey a single deceptive impression—that the Government or its authorized agency demands prompt payment of the debt. This is compounded by a subtle emphasis on the Washington, D. C. return address.

It appears unlikely that little less than the combined elimination of all of the offending characteristics can undo the prohibited effect. The Court has no doubt that a good faith effort could produce numerous reasonable alternatives, but the evidence in this record suggests, on the contrary, a deliberate attempt to circumvent and delay compliance with the orders of the Commission as enforced by the Federal Courts.

Accordingly, the motion of the defendants for summary judgment must be granted with regard to the so-called revised forms.

Counsel for defendants shall submit an appropriate order within five (5) days.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. SPERRY AND HUTCHINSON COMPANY*

No. 70–70.—F.T.C. Docket 8671

(Supreme Court of the United States. March 1, 1972)

1. COMMISSION MAY DEFINE AND PROSCRIBE ANY UNFAIR COMPETITIVE PRACTICE EVEN THOUGH PRACTICE DOES NOT INFRINGE ON ANTITRUST LAWS

[899] Federal Trade Commission, under statute empowering it to prevent persons, partnerships or corporations from using unfair methods of

---

[17] Plaintiff's Exhibit D attached to the Complaint.

[18] Plaintiff's Exhibit E attached to the Complaint.

[19] Plaintiff's Exhibit I attached to the Complaint.

* Reported in 405 U.S. 233 (1971), 92 Sp.Ct. 898 (1972). Decision before Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, reported in 432 F.2d 146 (1970). For case before Commission, see 73 F.T.C. 1099, 82 F.T.C. 388.

competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, may define and proscribe an unfair competitive practice even though the practice does not infringe either the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws.

2. COMMISSION MAY PROSCRIBE PRACTICES AS UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE IN THEIR EFFECT UPON CONSUMERS REGARDLESS OF THEIR EFFECT ON COMPETITION

Federal Trade Commission, under statute empowering it to prevent persons, partnerships or corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, may proscribe practices as unfair or deceptive in their effect upon consumers regardless of their nature or quality as competitive practices or their effect on competition.

3. SUPREME COURT MUST LOOK TO THE OPINION OF THE COMMISSION AND NOT THE ARGUMENTS OF ITS COUNSEL

Supreme Court must look to the opinion of the Federal Trade Commission, not to the arguments of its counsel, for the underpinnings of its order.

4. OBSERVATION OF F.T.C. THAT RESPONDENT LIMITED FREEDOM OF CHOICE ON DISPOSING OF TRADING STAMPS DOES NOT ALONE SUPPORT CONCLUSION THAT STAMP COMPANY WAS GUILTY OF UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES

Observation of Federal Trade Commission in its opinion that conduct of country's largest trading stamp company limited "stamp collecting consumers' * * * freedom of choice in the disposition of trading stamps," would not alone support a conclusion that the Commission had found trading stamp company guilty of unfair practices because of damage to consumers, where there was no other indication in Commission's opinion that it found company's conduct to be unfair in its effect on competitors because of considerations other than those at the root of the antitrust laws.

5. ORDER OF COMMISSION COULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE THE COMMISSION DID NOT CHALLENGE APPELLATE COURT HOLDING THAT COMPANY'S CONDUCT VIOLATED NEITHER LETTER NOR SPIRIT OF ANTITRUST LAWS

Order of Federal Trade Commission requiring largest trading stamp company in the country to cease and desist from unfairly attempting to suppress the operation of trading stamp exchanges and other "free and open" redemption of stamps could not be sustained where the Commission did not challenge holding of Court of Appeals that company's conduct violated neither the letter nor the spirit of the antitrust laws, where opinion of the Commission was barren of any attempt to rest its order on the unfairness of particular competitive practices or on considerations of consumer interests, and where the Commission did not articulate any standards by which such alternative assessments might be made.

6. COURT CANNOT LABEL A PRACTICE "UNFAIR" UNDER THE STATUTE, BUT ONLY AFFIRM OR VACATE AN AGENCY'S JUDGMENT TO THAT EFFECT

A court cannot label a practice "unfair," under statute declaring unlawful unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce; it can only affirm or vacate an agency's judgment to [900] that effect.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 92 Sp. Ct. 898)

Court held that order requiring trading stamp company to cease attempting to suppress exchange of trading stamps and other "free and open" redemption of stamps could not be sustained where the Commission did not challenge the Appellate Court holding and where company's conduct did not violate the letter or spirit of antitrust laws. Judgment modified and case remanded.

Richard W. McLaren, Washington, D.C., for petitioner.

Harold L. Russell, Atlanta, Ga., for respondent.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

In June of 1968 the Federal Trade Commission held that the largest and oldest company in the trading stamp industry,[1] Sperry and Hutchinson (S&H), was violating § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (1), in three respects. The Commission found that S&H improperly regulated the maximum rate at which trading stamps were dispensed by its retail licensees; that it combined with others to regulate the rate of stamp dispensation throughout the industry; and that it attempted (almost invariably successfully) [901] to suppress the operation of trading stamp exchanges and other "free and open" redemption of stamps. The Commission entered cease and desist orders accordingly.

S&H appealed only the third of these orders. Before the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals it conceded that it acted as the Commission found, but argued that its conduct is beyond the reach of § 5 of the Trade Commission Act. That section provides, in pertinent part, that:

> The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (6).

As S&H sees it § 5 empowers the Commission to restrain only such practices as are either in violation of the antitrust laws, deceptive, or repugnant to public morals. In S&H's view, its practice of successfully prosecuting stamp exchanges in state and federal courts cannot be restrained under any of these theories.

The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit agreed and reversed the Commission, Judge Wisdom dissenting. Sperry and Hutchinson Co. v. FTC, 432 F.2d 146 (1970). In the lower court's view:

---

[1] On the nature of the industry, see generally Comment, Trading Stamps, 37 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 1090 (1962). The Trade Commission proceedings in the instant case are discussed in Comment, The Attack on Trading Stamps—An Expanded Use of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 57 Georgetown Law Journal 1082 (1969).

> To be the type of practice that the Commission has the power to declare "unfair" the act complained of must fall within one of the following types of violations: (1) a per se violation of anti-trust policy; (2) a violation of the letter of either the Sherman, Clayton, or Robinson-Patman Acts; or (3) a violation of the spirit of these Acts as recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States. Id., at 150 (footnote omitted).

Holding that the FTC had not demonstrated that S&H's conduct violated either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws, the Court of Appeals vacated the Commission's order.

The FTC petitioned for review in this Court. We granted certiorari to determine the questions presented in the petition. 401 U.S. 992, 91 S.Ct. 1234, 28 L. Ed.2d 530 (1971).

I

THE CHALLENGED CONDUCT

S&H has been issuing trading stamps—small pieces of gummed paper about the size of postage stamps—since 1896. In 1964, the year from which data in this litigation is derived, the company had about 40% of the business in an industry which annually issued 400 billion stamps to more than 200,000 retail establishments for distribution in connection with retail sales of some 40 billion dollars. In 1964, more than 60% of all American consumers saved S&H Green Stamps.

In the normal course, the trading stamp business operates as follows. S&H sells its stamps to retailers, primarily to supermarkets and gas stations, at a cost of about $2.65 per 1200 stamps; retailers give the stamps to consumers (typically at a rate of one for each 10¢ worth of purchases) as a bonus for their patronage; consumers paste the stamps in books of 1,200 and exchange the books for "gifts" at any of 850 S&H Redemption Centers maintained around the country. Each book typically buys between $2.86 and $3.31 worth of merchandise depending on the location of the redemption center and type of goods purchased. Since its development of this cycle 75 years ago, S&H has sold over one trillion stamps and redeemed approximately 86% of them.

A cluster of factors relevant to this litigation tends to disrupt this cycle and, in S&H's view, to threaten its business. An incomplete book has no redemption value. Even a complete book is of limited value because most "gifts" may be obtained only on submission of more than one book. For these reasons a collector of another type of stamps who has acquired a small number of green stamps [902] may benefit by exchanging with a green stamp collector who has opposite holdings and preferences. Similarly, because of the seasonal usefulness or immediate utility [2] of an object sought, a collector may want to buy stamps outright and thus put himself in a position to secure redemption merchandise immediately though it is "priced" beyond his current stamp holdings. Or a collector may seek to sell his stamps in order to use the resulting cash to make more basic purchases (food, shoes, etc.) than redemption centers normally provide.

Periodically over the past 70 years professional exchanges have arisen to service this demand. Motivated by the prospect of profit realizable as a result of serving as middlemen in swaps, the exchanges will sell books of S&H stamps previously acquired from consumers, or, for a fee, will give a consumer another company's stamps for S&H's or vice versa. Further, some regular merchants have offered discounts on their own goods in return for S&H stamps. Retailers do this as a means of competing with merchants in the area who issue stamps. By offering a price-break in return for stamps, the redeeming merchant replaces the incentive to return to the issuing merchant (to secure more stamps so as to be able to obtain a gift at a redemption center) with the attraction of securing immediate benefit from the stamps by exchanging them for a discount at his store.[3]

S&H fears these activites because they are believed to reduce consumer proclivity to return to green stamp issuing stores and thus lower a store's incentive to buy and distribute stamps. The company attempts to pre-empt "trafficking" in its stamps by contractual provisions reflected in a notice on the inside cover of every S&H stamp book. The notice reads:

> Neither the stamps nor the books are sold to merchants, collectors, or any other persons, at all times the title thereto being expressly reserved in the Company. * * * The stamps are issued to you as evidence of cash payment to the merchants issuing the same. The only right which you acquire in said stamps is to paste them in books like this and present them to us for redemption. You must not dispose of them or make any further use of them without our consent in writing. We will in every case where application is made to us give you permission to turn over your stamps to any other bona-fide collector of S&H Green * * * Stamps; but if the stamps on the books are transferred without our consent, we reserve the right to restrain their use by, or take them from other parties. It is to your interest that you fill the book, and personally derive the benefits and advantages of redeeming it. (Reproduced at 2 App. 230.)

S&H makes no effort to enforce this condition when consumers casually exchange stamps with each other, though reportedly some

---

[2] Often merchandise obtained by redemption is used as a gift.

[3] The efforts of some retailers to reissue S & H stamps are not involved in this case. The FTC explicitly left S & H free to seek injunction against reissuance. 1 App. 169.

20% of all the company's stamps change hands in this manner. But S&H vigorously moves against unauthorized commercial exchanges and redeemers. Between 1957 and 1965, by its own account the company filed for 43 injunctions against merchants who redeemed or exchanged its stamps without authorization and it sent letters threatening legal action to 140 stamp exchanges and 175 businesses which redeemed S&H stamps. In almost all instances the threat or the reality of suit forced the businessmen to abandon their unauthorized practices.

II

THE REACH OF SECTION 5

[903] The Commission presented two questions in its petition for certiorari, the first being "whether Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which directs the Commission to prevent 'unfair methods of competition * * * and unfair or deceptive acts or practices,' is limited to conduct which violates the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws." The other issue relates to the significance of state court holdings that the practices challenged here are lawful.[4] Neither question requests review of the Court of Appeals' decision that the business conduct proscribed by the Commission violates neither the letter nor spirit of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, we intimate no opinion on that issue and turn to the question of the reach of § 5.

[1, 2] In reality, the question is a double one: First, does § 5 empower the Commission to define and proscribe an unfair competitive practice, even though the practice does not infringe either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws? Second, does § 5 empower the Commission to proscribe practices as unfair or deceptive in their effect upon consumers regardless of their nature or quality as competitive practices or their effect on competition? We think the statute, its legislative history and prior cases compel an affirmative answer to both questions.

When Congress created the Federal Trade Commission in 1914 and charted its power and responsibility under § 5, it explicitly considered, and rejected, the notion that it reduce the ambiguity of the phrase "unfair methods of competition" by tying the concept of unfairness to a common law or statutory standard or by enumerating the particular practices to which it was intended to apply. Senate Report No. 597, 63d Congress, 2d Session (1914), at p. 13, presents the reasoning which led the Senate Committee to avoid the temptations of precision when framing the Trade Commission Act:

---

[4] Though the Court of Appeals referred to state and federal court decisions which approved S & H's practice, our reading of its opinion leaves no doubt that it did not reverse the FTC order on the erroneous theory that such determinations might foreclose a contrary FTC § 5 decision. We therefore put aside the Government's second question as irrelevant and focus on its first contention.

> The Committee gave careful consideration to the question as to whether it would attempt to define the many and variable unfair practices which prevail in commerce and to forbid their continuance or whether it would, by a general declaration confirming unfair practices, leave it to the commission to determine what practices were unfair. It concluded that the latter course would be better, for the reason, as stated by one of the representatives of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, that there were too many unfair practices to define, and after writing twenty of them into law it would be quite possible to invent others.

The House Conference Report was no less explicit. "It is impossible to frame definitions which embrace all unfair practices. There is no limit to human inventiveness in this field. Even if all known unfair practices were specifically defined and prohibited, it would be at once necessary to begin all over again. If Congress were to adopt the method of definition, it would undertake an endless task." H.R.Rep.No.1142, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 18–19 (1914). See also Rublee, The Original Plan and Early History of the Federal Trade Commission, 11 Acad. Pol.Sci.Proc. 666, 667 (1926); E. Baker and D. Baum, Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act: A Continuing Process of Redefinition, 7 Villanova L. Rev. 517 (1962).

Since the sweep and flexibility of this approach was thus made crystal clear, there have twice been judicial attempts to fence in the grounds upon which the FTC might rest a finding of unfairness. In FTC v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421, 40 S.Ct. 572, 64 L.Ed.993 (1920), the Court over [904] the strong dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis (who had been involved in drafting the Trade Commission Act), wrote that while the "exact meaning" of the phrase "unfair method of competition * * * is in dispute," the only practices which were subject to this characterization were those that were "heretofore regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly." Id., at 427, 40 S.Ct. at 575. This view was reiterated in other opinions over the next decade. See e. g., FTC v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U.S. 568, 43 S.Ct. 210, 67 L.Ed. 408 (1923), and FTC v. Sinclair Refining Co.., 261 U.S. 463, at 475–476, 43 S.Ct. 450, at 453–454, 67 L.Ed. 746 (1923). The opinion of the Court of Appeals' majority, citing Sinclair Oil in support of its narrow view of the FTC's leeway, is in the tradition of these authorities.

In FTC v. Raladam Co., 283 U.S. 643, 51 S.Ct. 587, 75 L.Ed. 1324 (1931), a unanimous Court held that: "the paramount aim of the act is the protection of the public from the evils likely to result from the destruction of competion or the restriction of it in a substantial degree * * * Unfair trade methods are not per se unfair methods of competition." (Italics in original.) "It is obvious," the Court continued > that the word "competition" imports the existence of present or potential competitors, and the unfair methods must be such as injuriously affect or tend thus to affect the business of these competitors—that is to say, the trader whose methods are assailed as unfair must have present or potential rivals in trade whose business will be, or is likely to be, lessened or otherwise injured. It is that condition of affairs which the Commission is given power to correct, and it is against that condition of affairs, and not some other, that the Commission is authorized to protect the public. * * * If broader powers be desirable, they must be conferred by Congress. Id., at 647–649, 51 S.Ct. at 590.

Neither of these limiting interpretations survives to buttress the Court of Appeals' view of the instant case. Even if the first line of cases, Gratz and its progeny, stood unimpaired, their deference to action taken to constrain "deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression" would grant the FTC greater power to set right what it perceives as wrong than the panel of the Court of Appeals acknowledges. But frequent opportunity for reconsideration has consistently and emphatically led this Court to the view that the perspective of Gratz is too confined. As we recently unanimously observed: "Later cases of this Court * * have rejected the Gratz view and it is now recognized in line with the dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Gratz that the Commission has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair." Federal Trade Commission v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 320–321, 86 S.Ct. 1501, 1504, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966).

The leading case which recognized a role for the FTC beyond that mapped out in Gratz, FTC v. R. F. Keppel & Brothers, Inc., 291 U.S. 304, 54 S.Ct. 423, 78 L.Ed. 814 (1934), also brought Raladam into question; on both counts it sets the standard by which the range of FTC jurisdiction is to be measured today. Keppel and Brothers sold penny candies in "break and take" packs, a form of merchandising which induced children to buy lesser amounts of concededly inferior candy in the hope of by luck hitting on bonus packs containing extra candy and prizes.

The FTC issued a cease and desist order under § 5 on the theory that the popular marketing scheme contravened public policy insofar as it tempted children to gamble and compelled those who would successfully compete with Keppel to abandon their scruples by similarly tempting children.

The Court had no difficulty in sustaining the FTC's conclusion that the [905] practice was "unfair," though any competitor could maintain his position simply by adopting the challenged practice. "[H]ere," the Court said, "the competitive method is shown to exploit consumers, children, who are unable to protect themselves * * * . [I]t is clear that the practice is of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy." Id. at 313, 54 S.Ct., at 426.

En route to this result the Court met Keppel's arguments that absent an antitrust violation or at least incipient injury to competitors, Gratz and Raladam so straitjacketed the FTC that the Commission could not issue a cease and desist order proscribing even an immoral practice. It held:

> Neither the language nor the history of the Act suggests that Congress intended to confine the forbidden methods to fixed and unyielding categories. The common law afforded a definition of unfair competition and, before the enactment of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Sherman Act had laid its inhibition upon combinations to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce which the courts had construed to include restraints upon competition in interstate commerce. It would not have been a difficult feat of draftsmanship to have restricted the operation of the Trade Commission Act to those methods of competition in interstate commerce which are forbidden at common law or which are likely to grow into violations of the Sherman Act, if that had been the purpose of the legislation. Id., at 310, 54 S.Ct., at 425.

Henceforth, unfair competitive practices were not limited to those likely to have anticompetitive consequences after the manner of the antitrust laws; nor were unfair practices in commerce to be confined to purely competitive behavior.

The perspective of Keppel, displacing that of Raladam, was legislatively confirmed when Congress adopted the 1938 Wheeler-Lea Amendment, 52 Stat. 111, to § 5. The amendment added the phrase "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" to the section's original ban on "unfair methods of competition" and thus made it clear that Congress, through § 5, charged the FTC with protecting consumers as well as competitors. The House Report on the amendment summarized congressional thinking: "* * * this amendment makes the consumer, who may be injured by an unfair trade practice, of equal concern, before the law, with the merchant or manufacturer injured by the unfair methods of a dishonest competitor." H.R.Rep.No.1613, 75th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3 (1937). See also S.Rep. No.1705, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 2–3 (1936).

Thus, legislative and judicial authorities alike convince us that the Federal Trade Commission does not arrogate excessive power to itself if, in measuring a practice against the elusive, but congressionally mandated standard of fairness, it, like a court of equity, considers public values beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws.[5]

III

[906] The general conclusion just enunciated requires us to hold that the Court of Appeals erred in its construction of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Ordinarily we would simply reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals insofar as it limited the unfair practices proscribed by § 5 to those contrary to the letter and spirit of the antitrust laws and we would remand the case for consideration of whether the challenged practices, though posing no threat to competition within the precepts of the antitrust laws, are nevertheless either (1) unfair methods of competition or (2) unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

What we deem to be proper concerns about the interaction of administrative agencies and the courts, however, counsels another course in this case. In this Court the Commission argues that however correct the Court of Apeals may be in holding the challenged S&H practices beyond the reach of the letter or spirit of the antitrust laws, the Court of Appeals nevertheless erred in asserting that the FTC could measure and ban conduct only according to such narrow criteria. Proceeding from this premise, with which we agree, the Commission's major submission is that its order is sustainable as a proper exercise of its power to proscribe practices unfair to consumers. Its minor position is that it also properly found S&H's practices to be unfair competitive methods apart from their propriety under the antitrust laws.

---

[5] The Commission has described the factors it considers in determining whether a practice which is neither in violation of the antitrust laws nor deceptive is nonetheless unfair:

"(1) whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise—whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common-law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers (or competitors or other businessmen). 'Statement of Basis and Purpose of Trade Regulation Rule 408 [Unfair or Deceptive Advertising and Labeling of Cigarettes in Relation to the Health Hazards of Smoking].' " 29 Fed. Reg. 8324, 8355 (1964).

S & H argues that a later portion of this statement commits the FTC to the view that misconduct in respect of the third of these criteria is not subject to constraint as "unfair" absent a concomitant showing of misconduct according to the first or second of these criteria. But all the FTC said in the statement referred to was that "The wide variety of decisions interpreting the elusive concept of unfairness at least makes clear that a method of selling violates Section 5 if it is exploitative or inequitable and if, in addition to being morally objectionable, it is seriously detrimental to consumers or others." Statement of Basis, supra, at 8355 (1964) (emphasis added).

[3] The difficulty with the Commission's position is that we must look to its opinion, not to the arguments of its counsel, for the underpinnings of its order. "Congress has delegated to the administrative official and not to appellate counsel the responsibility for elaborating and enforcing statutory commands." Investment Co. Inst. v. Camp. 401 U.S. 617, 628, 91 S.Ct. 1091, 1097, 28 L.Ed.2d 367 (1971). We cannot read the FTC opinion on which the challenged order rests as premised on anything other than the classic antitrust rationale of restraint of trade and injury to competition.

The Commission urges reversal of the Court of Appeals and approval of its own order because, in its words, "[t]he act gives the Commission comprehensive power to prevent trade practices which are deceptive or unfair to consumers, regardless of whether they also are anti-competitive." Brief for the FTC, p. 15. It says the Court of Appeals was "wrong in two ways: you can have an anti-competitive impact that is not a violation of the anti-trust laws and violate Section 5. You can also have an impact upon consumers without regard to competition and you can uphold a Section 5 violation on that ground." Transcript of Oral Argument in this Court, p. 18. Though completely accurate, these statements cannot be squared with the Commissions holding that "[i]t is essential in this matter, we believe, and as we have heretofor indicated, to determine whether or not there has been or may be an impairment of competition," Opinion of Commission, at 1 App. 175; its conclusion that "[r]espondent * * * prevents * * * competitive reaction[s] and thereby it has restrained trade. We believe this is an unfair method of competition and an unfair act and practice in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and so hold," 1 App. 178; its observation that:

> Respondent's individual acts and its acts with others taken to suppress trading stamp exchanges and other stamp redemption activity are all part of a clearly defined restrictive policy pursued by the respondent. In the [907] circumstances surrounding this particular practice it is difficult to wholly separate the individual acts from the collective acts for the purpose of making an analysis of the consequences under the antitrust laws." 1 App. 179, and like statements throughout the opinion. See, e.g., 1 App. 176–178, passim.

[4] There is no indication in the Commission's opinion that it found S&H's conduct to be unfair in its effect on competitors because of considerations other than those at the root of the antitrust laws.[6] For its part, the theory that the FTC's decision is derived from its concern for consumers finds support in only one line of the Commission's opinion. The Commission's observation that S&H's conduct limited "stamp collecting consumers' * * * freedom of choice in the disposition of trading stamps," 1 App. 176, will not alone support a conclusion that the FTC has found S&H guilty of unfair practices because of damage to consumers.

[5] Arguably, the Commission's findings, in contrast to its opinion, go beyond concern with competition and address themselves to noncompetitive and consumer injury as well. It may also be that such findings would have evidentiary support in the record. But even if the findings were considered to be adequate foundation for an opinion and order resting on unfair consequences to consumer interests, they still fail to sustain the Commission action; for the Commission has not rendered an opinion which, by the route suggested links its findings and its conclusions. The opinion is barren of any attempt to rest the order on its assessment of particular competition practices or considerations of consumer interests independent of possible or actual effects on competition. Nor were any standards for doing so referred to or developed.

Our view is that "the considerations urged here in support of the Commission's order were not those upon which its action was based." SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 92, 63 S.Ct. 454, 461,

---

[6] The Commission did explicitly decline to assess S&H's conduct in light of one leading antitrust case. In United States v. Arnold Schwinn and Co., 388 U.S. 365, 379, 87 S.Ct. 1856, 1865, 18 L.Ed.2d. 1249 (1967), this Court held that: "Under the Sherman Act, it is unreasonable without more for a manufacturer to seek to restrict and confine areas or persons with whom an article may be traded after the manufacturer has parted with dominion over it. White Motor [White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 83 S.Ct. 696, 9 L.Ed.2d 738 (1963)]; Dr. Miles [Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. U. Parkland Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S.Ct. 376, 55 L.Ed. 502 (1911)] Such restraints are obviously destructive of competition that there mere existence is enough. If the manufacturer parts with dominion over his product or transfers risk of loss to another, he may not reserve control over its destiny or the conditions of its resale."

Arguably S & H's practice is proscribed by this doctrine. When the FTC declined to rely on this precedent, however, it did so not to turn to considerations other than those embedded in the antitrust laws, but instead to look for considerations less "technical" and more deeply rooted in antitrust policy:

"[w]e do not believe it appropriate to decide the broad competitive questions presented in this record on the narrow and technical basis of a restraint on alienation. The circumstances here are much different from that where products are transferred to a dealer for resale. They are complicated by the nature of the trading stamp scheme. It is essential in this matter, we believe, and as we have heretofore indicated, to determine whether or not there has been or may be an impairment of competition. Thus we intend to look at the substance of the allegedly illegal practice rather than to decide the case by application of a technical formula." 1 App. 175–176.

87 L.Ed. 626 (1943). At the least the Commission has failed to "articulate any rational connection between the facts found and the choice made." Burlington Truck Lines, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 156, 168, 83 S.Ct. 239, 246, 9 L.Ed. 2d 207 (1962).

[6] The Commission's action being flawed in this respect, we cannot sustain its order. "[T]he orderly functioning [908] of the process of review requires that the grounds upon which the administrative agency acted be clearly disclosed and adequately sustained." Chenery, supra, 318 U.S. at 94, 63 S.Ct. at 462; Burlington Truck Lines, supra, 371 U.S., at 169, 83 S.Ct. at 246. A court cannot label a practice "unfair" under 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (1). It can only affirm or vacate an agency's judgment to that effect. "If an order is valid only as a determination of policy or judgment which the agency alone is authorized to make and which it has not made, a judicial judgment cannot be made to do service for an administrative judgment." Chenery, supra, 318 U.S. at 88, 63 S.Ct., at 459. And as was repeated on other occasions:

> For the courts to substitute their or counsel's discretion for that of the Commission is incompatible with the orderly functioning of the process of judicial review. This is not to deprecate, but to vindicate (see Phelps Dodge Corp. v. Labor Board, 313 U.S. 177, 197, 61 S.Ct. 845, 853, 854, 85 L. Ed. 1271), the administrative process, for the purpose of the rule is to avoid 'propel[ling] the court into the domain which Congress has set aside exclusively for the administrative agency.' [Securities & Exchange Comm. v. Chenery Corp.] 332 U.S. [194], at 196, 67 S.Ct. [1575], at 1577, 91 L.Ed. 1995. Burlington Truck Lines, supra, 371 U.S., at 169, 83 S.Ct., at 246.

In these circumstances, because the Court of Appeals' judgment that S&H's practices did not violate either the letter or the spirit of the antitrust laws was not attacked and remains undisturbed here, and because the Commission's order could not properly be sustained on other grounds, the judgment of the Court of Appeals setting aside the Commission's order is affirmed. The Court of Appeals erred, however, in its construction of § 5; had it entertained the proper view of the reach of the section, the preferable course would have been to remand the case to the Commission for further proceedings. Chenery, supra, 318 U.S. at 95, 63 S.Ct. at 462; Burlington, supra, 371 U.S. at 174, 83 S.Ct. at 248; FPC v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 393 U.S. 71, 89 S.Ct. 55, 21 L.Ed.2d 55 (1968). Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is modified to this extent and the case is remanded to the Court of Appeals with instructions to remand it to the Commission for such further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion, as may be appropriate.

Modified and remanded.

MR. JUSTICE POWELL and MR. JUSTICE REHNQUIST took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

JEWEL COMPANIES, INC. ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 69 C 1673—F.T.C. Docket 8788

(United States District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, March 17, 1972)

Commissioner's vote in favor of issuance of complaints was proper exercise of his discretion. All parties equally agree that Commissioner exercised his judgment at the time of the original complaints and thereafter. Further inquiry into the Commissioner's state of mind is unnecessary and unjustified. Motion for summary judgment denied.

Theodore A. Groenke, John J. Voortman and Myron M. Cherry, of McDermott, Will & Cherry, Chicago, Ill., for Jewel Companies, Inc.; Earl W. Kintner, Mark R. Joelson, and James P. Mercurio, of Arent, Fox, Kintner, Plotkin & Kahn, Washington, D.C. and Sylvan Rapaport, of Friedman, Meyers and Keys, Detroit, Mich., for Borman's, Inc.; James W. Harbison, Jr., and Melvyn L. Cantor, of Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, New York, N.Y., for Bohack Corp.; Edward J. Duggan and Joseph F. Ryan, of Lyne, Woodworth & Evarts, Boston, Mass., for First National Stores, Inc.; James F. Rill, of Collier, Shannon, Rill & Edwards, Washington, D.C., for Jack Stires, Inc., John C. Stires, II, John P. Storm Corp. and Individually; Warren J. Kaps, and Alex Akerman, Jr., of Stein, Abrams & Rosen, New York, N.Y., for Food Fair Stores, Inc. and World-Wide Produce Co., Inc.; Eli H. Subin of Subin, Shams & Rosenbluth, Orlando, Fla., for Hallee-Boy Sales, Ivin Arost, and Harold Arost; Don Beverly, of Beverly & Frates, West Palm Beach, Fla., for Henderson Distributing Co., Inc. and Vinson Henderson; Ackerman, Shipley, Ackerman & Pickett, Washington, D.C.; Alfred T. Sanderson, Woodbury, N.J., for Ruby Produce Co. and Sam H. Rubenstein, for plaintiff.

Emerson K. Elkins, FTC, Washington, D.C. for defendant.

MCMILLEN, District Judge.

DECISION AND ORDER

This cause comes on to be heard on Motions by each side which

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 74,210, at 92,987 (1972 Trade Cases). 5th Cir., 479 F. 2d 1323 (1973), see p. 598 herein. Case before the Commission dismissed 83 F.T.C. 1213.

seek to terminate this litigation. Plaintiffs have filed a motion for summary judgment, although as yet there is no answer to the Complaint. The defendant subsequently filed a motion to dismiss the Complaint on the grounds of mootness, although no such motion is specifically recognized by F.R.C.P. 12(b). Neither side has complained about any deficiencies in the foregoing procedures, however.

Since both sides seek ultimate relief and since no further pleadings are required to facilitate this, the court will treat these Motions as though brought for judgment on the pleadings under F.R.C.P. 12(b). Practically, this seems the way the matter can best be disposed of, and the exact niche where the procedure may fit within the Federal Rules is not a matter of substance. A statement of the facts and of the issue is the principal ingredient of a final decision which hopefully will lay to rest this phase of the controversy between the parties.

The Complaint was filed on August 11, 1969 by several plaintiffs seeking to enjoin the defendant F.T.C. from proceeding with five complaints which it had issued against the plaintiffs under Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act as amended (15 U.S.C. §13c). The plaintiffs' complaint in this court alleged four separate reasons why the Commission had improperly issued its five complaints, each reason being alleged in a separate count.

The defendant then filed a motion to dismiss the complaint herein for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted and for other grounds under F.R.C.P. 12(b). Judge Perry denied the motion to dismiss but allowed an interlocutory appeal. He restrained the defendants from proceeding with its five complaints pending appeal to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

The Court of Appeals rendered its decision on September 9, 1970 ruling that the complaint should have been dismissed on three of the four alleged grounds but remanding the matter on one ground "for proceeding not inconsistent" with the Court of Appeals decision. Jewel Companies, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970). So far as this Court is advised, neither party pursued the interlocutory appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Count II of the plaintiffs' Complaint is the one which the Court of Appeals remanded for further proceedings. This count alleged that Federal Trade Commissioner MacIntyre had misconstrued his powers to be non-discretionary when he voted for issuance of the five complaints. The F.T.C. had issued these complaints by a 3–2 vote, and Commissioner MacIntyre's vote was essential for a majority. In so voting, he commented in a separate concurring "statement" in which he said, inter alia:

> Congress did not, as the dissent seems to imply, leave it to the Commission to decide, as a matter of policy, whether to enforce Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act when it had reason to believe "that the statute is being violated." The suggestion that this agency is free to frustrate the legislative intent on the basis of individual commissioner's conception of "bad law and economics" is astonishing. I, at any rate, do not believe that it is our function to administratively repeal what Congress has enacted on the basis of our own value judgments.

Although the Court of Appeals did not find fault with the F.T.C. complaints as such, two members (a majority) of the panel felt that Commissioner MacIntyre believed that he had no alternative to issuing the complaints and in voting with the other two members of the majority. The court said at 432 F.2d 1159:

> The plaintiffs' second challenge to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission is that one of the Commissioners did not properly exercise his statutory discretion in voting for the issuance of the complaint. Of the three Commissioners who voted for the issuance of the complaint, Commissioner MacIntyre construed the Commission's obligation of enforcement under Sections 2(c) and 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§13c and 21, as mandatory when it has "reason to believe" that the Robinson-Patman Act is being violated and that the Commission has no discretion to consider the public interest. Without Commissioner MacIntyre's vote, the complaint could not have issued since two Commissioners dissented. It is plaintiff's contention that the district court has jurisdiction to decide if Commissioner MacIntyre miscontrued his statutory obligation by assuming he had no discretion to consider whether the issuance of the complaint is in the public interest. Cf. Schaffer Transportation Co. v. United States, 355 U.S. 83 (1951). The question raised is inherently a legal one and does not involve any factual determination. Cf. N.L.R.B. v. Hearst Publications, 322 U.S. 111 (1944). Since the question is one of statutory construction as to the authority of a Commissioner in voting for the issuance of a complaint for violation of Robinson-Patman and does not involve any substantive determination by the Commission, the Commission's reliance on Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding, 303 U.S. 41, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938) is misplaced. We think the problem here is more analogous to the situation in Skinner & Eddy v. United States, 249 U.S. 557, 39 S.Ct. 375, 63 L.Ed. 772 (1919). If the question of the Commissioner's obligation is postponed until final appeal of a Commission order, the standard of review will be different. At that point the court of appeals would only decide whether the final order is supported by the evidence and would not question the authority of the Commission in issuing the complaint. As in Skinner & Eddy, "the so-called administrative remedy was without relevance to the plaintiff's claim." Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action, 428 (1965). The legal obligation of a Commissioner can be determined by the courts without delay and we think the proper approach is to allow such inherently legal attacks prior to an > agency's final order. For the foregoing reasons we think the district court has jurisdiction to determine whether Commissioner MacIntyre properly interpreted his statutory obligation. (432 F.2d 1160-1161).

Thereupon the case came back to the trial court, and the plaintiffs then filed their pending motion for summary judgment, seeking to declare the Commission's complaint null and void and to permanently enjoin further proceedings thereon. In essence, the plaintiffs' theory is that, as stated in the Court of Appeals' decision, "the question raised is inherently a legal one and does not involve any factual determination." The plaintiffs argue that discretion must be exercised in the issuance of a complaint under Section 2(c) and that Commissioner MacIntyre's statement demonstrated on its face that he had mistakenly assumed that issuance of the five complaints was a ministerial act which did not permit him to exercise discretion. Plaintiffs assume that, without this Commissioner's affirmative vote, the vote would have been 3-2 against issuance of the complaints (although this is not necessarily accurate).

Before the defendant F.T.C. filed a response to the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, it obtained leave of court and held a hearing to reconsider the decision by which it had issued the complaints. The plaintiffs filed briefs and participated in that proceeding before the Commission. Thereafter on April 12, 1971 the Commission issued an unanimous order specifically finding that the issuance of the complaints was in the public interest and reaffirming its decision to issue them. The two commissioners who had previously dissented were no longer heard from, but Commissioner MacIntyre again filed a separate statement saying,

> At the outset, I wish to say that I have never consciously voted for the Federal Trade Commission to institute a proceeding without my conviction that to institute such a proceeding was to the interest of the public. When I voted to institute the proceedings under reconsideration at this time, I likewise was convinced that my action was clothed with public interest and was in the public interest. Likewise, I believe this last action of mine in these matters to be in the public interest. Therefore, I have not only considered that the public interest is involved, I have taken it into account and I am convinced that my actions are in accord therewith.
>
> Now, with respect to statements I have made in the past regarding laws entrusted to the Federal Trade Commission for enforcement, let me say this: I do not think that the Federal Trade Commission "as a matter of policy" has discretion to decide not to enforce any one of those laws. That is not to say that I do not believe the Commission has discretion to decide whether to institute or not institute a particular proceeding under any one of those laws. As the parties argued before the Commission on March 23, 1971, in these matters the Commission has on a number of occasions failed to > institute proceedings for violation of the provision of law involved here. In a number of those actions of the Commission I participated. I consider that in each such participation I exercised my proper discretion in avoiding the "squandering scarce resources" and unnecessary litigation. [emphasis not added].

Following this reaffirmance by the F.T.C. and fuller explanation by Commissioner MacIntyre, the defendant filed its pending motion to dismiss for mootness, on the theory that the question of Commissioner MacIntyre's initial reasoning in voting for issuance of the complaints was no longer important, since upon reconsideration of the matter by the Commission, he specifically purported to exercise discretion, and presumably also, that his vote no longer could change the result. The plaintiffs do not concede this but stand on their motion for summary judgment which was filed before the reaffirmance, contending that there is no need for an evidentiary hearing and that Commissioner MacIntyre's original statement clearly showed that he misapprehended his statutory obligation. The plaintiffs do not attempt to explain why the Court of Appeals failed to make this determination itself, instead of remanding the case for further proceedings in the trial court.

The plaintiffs' argument assumes that Commissioner MacIntyre would not have voted to issue the complaints if he had properly understood his power. This argument is refuted by Commissioner MacIntyre's vote on the reaffirmance where he stated that he had properly understood his power as discretionary and that he had so exercised it in the original vote. Thereupon he exercised it again, with an explanatory opinion. Because of this, the court agrees with the plaintiffs that there is no further factual issue to be decided in this case and that the only proceedings required to comply with the mandate is to determine as a matter of law whether the commission should or should not exercise discretion in issuing Section 2(c) complaints.

We believe this issue has been resolved, but with a result diametrically contrary to plaintiffs' contention. The parties and the court all agree that discretion should be exercised by the Commission in the situation of the case at bar. See Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233, 40 U.S.L.W. 4244–46 (March 1, 1972). Commissioner MacIntyre had made it as clear as he can that, originally and at the time of reaffirmance, he exercised discretion in voting to issue the complaints. For this court to inquire further into a Commissioner's reasoning or state of mind is not only unnecessary but also unjustified. Cf. United States v. Morgan, 313 U.S. 409 (1941).

On the other hand, the matter is not moot. This court should comply with the mandate of the Court of Appeals, and the subsequent proceedings of the F.T.C. should not frustrate the court's jurisdiction to decide a justiciable issue. Cf. Richardson v. Wright, 405 U.S. 208, 40 U.S.L.W. 4232 (Feb. 24, 1972). Judgment should now be entered on Count II of the Complaint for the reason that there is no genuine issue of fact. The court finds and concludes on the basis of the record in this case that Commissioner MacIntyre noted properly by exercising discretion in favor of issuance of the complaints against the plaintiffs, and that he did not abuse this discretion. Moog Industries v. F.T.C., 355 U.S. 411 (1958).

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that judgment be and is entered in favor of the defendant on Count II of the Complaint.

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that Counts I, III and IV are dismissed pursuant to the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. WILLIAM BRAMMAN, JR. (MISSOURI PORTLAND CEMENT COMPANY), and RALPH BOTSFORD (BOTSFORD READY MIX COMPANY)*

Civ. A. Nos. 19,681–4, 682–4—F.T.C. Docket 8785

(United States District Court, Western District of Missouri, Western Division, March 20, 1972)

Discovery of disclosure to third parties by F.T.C., relating entirely to respondents' "6(b)" reports is within respondents' rights. Only reports already introduced into evidence may be involved. Bearing directly on respondents' position is the question of confidentiality (Mississippi River treatment). Court rejected plaintiff's contention that discovery could not be had without exhaustive administrative remedies on grounds it would immunize F.T.C. in almost all judicial proceedings. If necessity of disclosure exceeds public interest in nondisclosure, then discovery of information should be allowed.

Frederick O. Griffin, Jr. and Lee I. Weintraub, Antitrust Div., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D. C., for plaintiff.

Ray W. Bolze, of Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D. C. and Watson, Ess, Marshall & Enggas, Kansas City, Mo., for defendants.

---

* Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶74,045, at 92.337 (1972 Trade Cases). For case before Commission see Ash Grove Cement Co., 85 F.T.C. 1123. See also p. 572 herein.

HUNTER, District Judge:

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER GRANTING RESPONDENTS' MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY AND DIRECTING PETITIONER TO PERMIT CERTAIN ORAL DEPOSITIONS AND TO PRODUCE CERTAIN DOCUMENTS

This matter is presently before the Court upon the motion of respondents pursuant to Rule 37. F.R.Civ.P., for an order of this Court compelling certain post-hearing discovery in this subpoena enforcement proceeding. Petitioner has filed suggestions in opposition to this motion which, among other things, incorporates its contentions set forth in its motion for protective order filed February 24, 1972.

On February 11, 1972, a full evidentiary hearing and trial was held in this cause to consider all issues relating to the enforcement of the petitioner's subpoenas duces tecum. At the close of that hearing, the parties were given a briefing schedule for the complete submission of the cause for adjudication. Before their post-trial materials were due under the schedule of the Court, respondents served notice of depositions upon two members of the Federal Trade Commission: Thomas F. McNerney, trial counsel; and Charles A. Tobin, Secretary of the Commission. Those persons were directed to appear at the offices of counsel for respondents in Washington, D.C. on February 25, 1972 and directed them to bring the following:

> All documents relating to the release of the Section 6(b) reports, or excerpts thereof, filed by Missouri Portland Cement Company and Botsford Ready Mix Company with the Commission in 1964; such public disclosure having been made to Mr. William P. Higgins, Wichita, Kansas on or about November 16, 1971, and including although not limited to the following categories of documents: (a) the application for release of such 6(b) reports or excerpts therefrom; (b) all internal documents relating to such release; (c) the Federal Trade Commission order or minute authorizing such disclosure; and (d) copies of the 6(b) reports or excerpts which were released to Mr. Higgins or any other member of the public.
>
> All documents relating to the public disclosure on or about February 11, 1972, of the above referred to 6 (b) reports, including although not limited to the following: (a) internal documents requesting the public disclosure of such 6(b) reports or referring thereto, and (b) the order or minute of the Commission authorizing such public disclosure.

The stated purpose of this limited discovery relates entirely to the issue of whether the 6(b) reports filed with the Commission are confidential or not. Counsel for respondents claims that an inconsistency has arisen in the normal practices of the Commission concerning these reports and the testimony of representatives of the Commission during the hearing in this cause. As stated by counsel for petitioner in his brief of February 24, 1972, a primary issue in this cause is "whether the documents to be produced are so confidential that they should be covered by a highly restrictive protective order ('Mississippi River treatment')." Thus, the question of confidentiality has a direct bearing upon respondents' position in this cause concerning the treatment of its material by the Commission.

Basically, in opposing respondents' request for the discovery mentioned above, petitioner raises two contentions: (1) that respondents must exhaust their administrative remedies prior to securing the documents requested through the judicial process, and (2) that discovery is not appropriate in this summary proceeding to enforce the subpoenas duces tecum.

With regard to contention numbered (1) above, it initially should be noted that the documents sought by respondents relate entirely to the disclosure of their own "6(b)" reports which may be involved are those which already have been introduced into evidence in this proceeding. And, although petitioner asserts that respondents must first apply to the Commission before they obtain the documents in question through a judicial proceeding, in view of the Commission's present stance in this proceeding such administrative request would obviously be futile. Further, to hold that a party against whom an action has been brought by the Commission must first exhaust its discovery requests through administrative proceedings before making those requests in federal district court, would immunize the Commission from discovery in virtually all judicial proceedings. The Commission cannot, in this manner, create a barrier to federal pretrial discovery in an action brought by it against a private party.

The question of whether a privilege against disclosure attaches to the communications to the Commission and the "internal documents" of the Commission presents a different matter. Generally, there is no absolute executive privilege against disclosure of administrative reports and internal communications. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 38 F.R.D. 57 (N.D.Ohio. 1954); Freeman v. Seligson, 405 F.2d 1326 (D.C.Cir. 1968); Rosee v. Board of Trade of the City of Chicago, 36 F.R.D. 684 (N.D.Ill. 1965). And, in cases wherein such requests for "internal documents" are made, there must be a judicial determination as to the "degree of necessity for disclosure shown by the private litigant" as opposed to "the importance of the maintenance of secrecy as to the particular privileged matter." 4 Moore, Federal Practice and Procedure ¶ 26.61[6.—4], p. 26–317 (1971 ed.); Carr v. Monroe Mfg. Co., 431 F.2d 384 (4th Cir. 1970), cert. den. 400 U.S. 1000; United States v. Gates, 35 F.R.D. 524 (D.Colo. 1964); Continental Distilling Corp. v. Humphrey, 17 F.R.D. 237 (D.C. 1955). If the necessity of disclosure vastly exceeds the asserted public interest in non-disclosure of such information, then the discovery of that information should be allowed.

As previously noted, the discovery sought by respondents through oral deposition and production of documents is very limited. Such discovery relates solely to the disclosure of respondents' own "6(b)" reports to third-party applicants. No information is sought with regard to the "6(b)" reports of other individuals and the documents and testimony sought bear upon the question of confidentiality raised in this proceeding. Thus, in view of the limited nature of the respondents' request and its relationship to the issues raised in this proceeding, it appears that the necessity for production far outweighs the interest of the Commission in non-disclosure.

There remains contention numbered (2) that discovery procedures are not applicable to these summary proceedings. Although summary procedures are contemplated in enforcement proceedings such as these, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are generally applicable to them. Daly v. United States, 393 F.2d 873 (8th Cir. 1968). And, the District Court has broad discretion in determining the extent to which the rules concerning discovery are controlling. United States v. Beneford, 406 F.2d 1194 (7th Cir. 1969); Troupe v. United States, 317 F.Supp. 416 (W.D.Mo. 1970), aff'd 438 F.2d 117 (8th Cir. 1971). It is the opinion of this Court that the discovery sought by respondents should be granted. See: Kennedy v. Rubin, 254 F.Supp. 190 (N.D.Ill. 1966).

Accordingly, for the reasons stated above, Petitioner is hereby ordered to permit the oral depositions and production of documents requested by respondents in the notice of February 18, 1972. For the purpose of this discovery, counsel for respondents is directed to limit his interrogation of the witnesses, in scope and type, to those questions previously asked in the deposition of March 2, 1972. Counsel for both parties are to arrange for a date and time for such deposition which is mutually satisfactory. The deposition should, however, be taken within the next seven (7) days. Within 5 days thereafter, respondents are directed to file their trial brief, proposed findings and other related documents.

It is so ordered.

ARTHUR MURRAY STUDIO OF WASHINGTON, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 7-1807—F.T.C. Docket 8776

(United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, March 21, 1972)

1. NO ERROR IN REOPENING RECORD TO DEAL WITH $1,500 LIMIT ON DANCE CONTRACTS WHEN CLOSED SUBJECT TO REOPENING FOR GOOD CAUSE.

In proceeding against dance studios before the Federal Trade Commission, there was no error in reopening record for introduction of evidence on proposed $1,500 limitation on dance contracts, where record was initially closed subject to motion to reopen on good cause shown, such conditional closing was within authority of hearing examiner, sufficient good cause was shown in need for record on the propriety of the monetary limitations, which was only portion of proposed order in dispute after Commission's rejection of higher figure in proposed settlement agreement, and where there was no showing of prejudice in the reopening.

2. SUBSTANTIAL PREJUDICE MUST BE SHOWN TO MAKE OUT CASE OF DENIAL OF PROCEDURAL DUE PROCESS.

In order to make out case of denial of procedural due process in administrative proceeding, there must be showing of substantial prejudice.

3. REMEDIES OF COMMISSION SHOULD BE NO BROADER IN RESTRICTING LEGITIMATE ACTS THAN NECESSARY UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES.

Federal Trade Commission has authority to restrict otherwise lawful practices and activities when they are likely to be used to carry out an unlawful purpose, but the remedy should be no broader in restricting legitimate acts than is reasonably necessary under the circumstances.

4. RIGHT TO CONTRACT MUST BE ACCOMMODATED CONSISTENT WITH COMMISSION'S DUTY TO FORMULATE REMEDY TO ELIMINATE UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES.

Right to contract of persons subject to regulation by the Federal Trade Commission must be accommodated if at all possible consistent with Commission's statutory duty to formulate a remedy to eliminate unfair and deceptive trade practices.

5. ORDER PROHIBITING CONTRACTS IN EXCESS OF $1,500 WAS PROPER DESPITE CONTENTIONS BY RESPONDENTS THAT OTHER PROVISIONS AND SAFEGUARDS MADE SUCH PROVISION UNNECESSARY.

In light of evidence showing multitude of transactions in which customers of dance studios were overreached in executing contracts in large amounts, portion of FTC cease and desist order prohibiting contracts

---

* Reported in 458 F.2d 622 (1972). Rehearing denied May 11, 1972. For case before Commission see 78 F.T.C. 401.

for dancing instruction in an amount in excess of $1,500 was proper despite contention that such provision was not necessary in view of fines which could be imposed for violations, other provisions of the order, including seven-day period during which contracts could be canceled, and proposed alternative of reporting all contracts in excess of $1,500 to the Commission, where the limitation was adjusted to the prices usually charged by dance studios for the number of lessons [623] ordinarily needed to reach a basic stage of accomplishment.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 458 F.2d 622.)

On appeal, Court ordered dance studio to limit its individual contracts to $1,500 despite various contentions by the studio. Order enforced.

Tom M. Schaumberg, Washington, D.C., for petitioners; Gadsby & Hannah, Washington, D. C., of counsel.

Joseph Martin, Jr., Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsels, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Robert E. Duncan, Thomas F. Howder, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., for respondent.

Before BELL, DYER and CLARK, Circuit Judges.

BELL, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition to review and set aside a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission entered against four Arthur Murray dance studio corporations and two individuals who were officers of each of the corporations. The primary issue before this court is whether the Federal Trade Commission may properly prohibit these dance studio petitioners from entering into contracts for dance instruction in an amount in excess of $1,500. A second issue is whether it was error for the hearing examiner to reopen the record for reception of evidence on the $1,500 limitation after the parties agreed that it be closed and the issues determined on their stipulations of fact. The petition will be denied and the order enforced.

The complaint in this matter was issued by the Commission on April 3, 1969, charging the petitioners with unfair methods of competition in commerce and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.A., § 45.[1] More specifically, petitioners were charged with various misleading and deceptive acts intended to induce unwary members of the public into entering dance lesson contracts at exorbitant prices. Attached to the complaint was a proposed order which, inter alia, would prohibit petitioners from entering into contracts which would obligate any individual to pay a total amount which exceeds $1,500 at any one time. (The only portion of this order in dispute is the monetary limitation.)

The petitioners answered, denying any illegality, and thereafter entered into a proposed settlement agreement with Commission counsel. Under the proposed settlement, the limit on indebtedness was raised to $4,000. However, the Commission rejected this provision, indicating that any acceptable consent order would require the $1,500 limitation.

Stipulations of fact were entered and the record closed to the reception of evidence, subject however, "to a motion by complaint counsel if they so wish to reopen the record on good cause shown for the introduction of further evidence." Shortly thereafter, and over objection of petitioners, the record was reopened for the reception of evidence on the $1,500 limitation. Hearings were then held, [624] and the hearing examiner found that the charges against petitioners had been sustained. The examiner's cease and desist order incorporated the $1,500 limitation and his order was affirmed on appeal to the Commission.

I.

[1, 2] Petitioners' contention that it was error to reopen the record for the introduction of evidence on the $1,500 limitations is without merit for at least two reasons. First, as stated, the record was closed subject to a motion by Commission counsel to reopen it on good cause shown for the introduction of further evidence. This order was well within the authority of the hearing examiner under the Commission rules, 16 C.F.R. § 3.51(d), which

---

[1] In pertinent part:

§ 5(a)(1) Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful.

§ 5(a)(6) The Commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce.

§ 5(b) Whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that any such person, partnership, or corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition or unfair or deceptive act or practice in commerce, and if it shall appear to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public, it shall issue and serve upon such person, partnership, or corporation a complaint stating its charges in that respect. * * * If upon such hearing the Commission shall be of the opinion that the method of competition or the act or practice in question is prohibited by this Act, it * * * shall issue * * * an order * * * to cease and desist * * * See Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry and Hutchinson Co., 1972, 405 U.S. 233, 92 S.Ct. 898, 31 L.Ed.2d 170.

vests in the hearing examiner the authority in his discretion to reopen the record for the reception of evidence at any time prior to filing his initial decision. Here the examiner added "the good cause shown" requirement which was otherwise not necessary. The good cause shown was sufficient. It was the need for a record centering on the unconscionable activities of petitioners in their trade practices which might indicate the propriety of the monetary limitation to protect the public. Second, there is no showing of prejudice to petitioners by the reopening of the record. In order to make out a case of denial of procedural due process, there must be a showing of substantial prejudice. Cf. Pacific Molasses Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir., 1966, 356 F.2d 386.

We therefore hold that there was no error in reopening the record for the introduction of evidence on the $1,500 limitation.

II.

The more difficult question is presented by the argument that it was improper to limit petitioners' contracts with individual dance students to an amount not exceeding $1,500 at any one time. Basically, they argue that this aspect of the remedy does not have a reasonable relationship to the unlawful practices found to exist and thus fails to meet the standard established by Federal Trade Commission v. National Land Company, 1957, 352 U.S. 419, 77 S.Ct. 502, 1 L.Ed.2d 438. See also Jacob Siegal Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 1946, 327 U.S. 608, 613, 66 S.Ct. 758, 90 L.Ed. 888.

Our determination of the question presented must be made in light of the authority of the Commission to eliminate unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, as this authority has been construed by the Supreme Court. No better statement on the subject can be found than that of Justice Clark, speaking for an unanimous court, in Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Company, supra:

> The Court has held that the Commission is clothed with wide discretion in determining the type of order that is necessary to bring an end to the unfair practices found to exist. In Jacob Siegal Co. v. Federal Trade Com., 327 U.S. 608, 66 S.Ct. 758, 90 L.Ed. 888 (1946), the Court named the Commission "the expert body to determine what remedy is necessary to eliminate the unfair or deceptive trade practices which have been disclosed. It has wide latitude for judgment and the courts will not interfere except where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist." Id. 327 U.S. at [pages] 612–613, [66 S.Ct. at page 760]. * * * Again, in Federal Trade Com. v. Ruberoid Co., supra, 343 U.S. at [page] 473 [72 S.Ct. at page 803], we said that "if the Commission is to attain the objectives Congress envisioned, it cannot be required to confine its road block to the narrow lane the transgressor has traveled; it must be allowed effectively to close all roads to the prohibited goal, so that its order may not be bypassed with impunity." We pointed out there that Congress had placed the primary responsibility for fashioning orders [625] upon the Commission. 352 U.S. at 428–429, 77 S.Ct. at 509.

[3] And, as is also stated in National Lead, the Commission has the authority to restrict otherwise lawful practices and activities when they are likely to be used to carry out an unlawful purpose. 352 U.S. at 430, 77 S.Ct. 502. On § 5 cases involving fact posture, see also Jacob Siegal Company, supra; S & S Pharmaceutical Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir., 1969, 408 F.2d 487; Slough v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir., 1968, 396 F.2d 870; All-State Industries of North Carolina, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 Cir. 1970, 423 F.2d 423.

[4] The right of petitioners to contract must be accommodated by the Commission if at all possible with its statutory duty to formulate a remedy to eliminate unfair and deceptive trade practices, once such practices have been found. Jacob Siegal Company, supra, teaches this principle in the context of protecting an asset consisting of a trade name. Moreover, the remedy should be no broader in restricting legitimate acts than is reasonably necessary under the circumstances obtaining. See Cotherman v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir., 1969, 417 F.2d 587, where we found the order overbroad to the extent that petitioners were prohibiting from actually lending money on lawful representations.

[5] Turning to the facts underlying the $1,500 limitation here, we find an abundance of evidence showing a multitude of transactions where customers of petitioners were overreached in executing contracts. One example was seven contracts totalling $17,820, made in a period of twelve months by a 69 year old widow. Examples of other totals for dance lessons, trips, club memberships, parties and the like, extracted from various individuals, were in ranges from $4,300 to $13,000. Many attempted without success to withdraw from the contracts.

The charge against petitioners out of which the $1,500 limitation arose was the petitioners' contracts were the product of intense, emotional and unrelenting sales pressure. The evidence more than supports this charge. The record is replete with trick advertisements to draw prospects, sham dancing analysis tests, relay salesmanship, some under secret electronic supervision by management, promises of social status and companionship, psychological sales techniques based on past unpleasant experiences (described as X-Factor or "past is black" technique). In many instances these tactics added up to cajolery and coercion. Many were reduced to tears. One woman begged from her knees to be allowed to contract. Another woman testified:

> The constant battering, it never let up. Two weeks at a time was about all they would let you go without being approached for some little additional something, not a big one, the big ones were about every two months and the little ones were about every two weeks. I was a nervous wreck there most of the time.

It was commonplace for contracts to be outstanding for several hundred hours of lessons which would take several years to complete. In one case, an elderly woman was signed up over a period of slightly more than a year for 696 hours of lessons. One of her contracts was in excess of $6,000. Many of the customers were placed in financial straits due to the contracts. The sales pitch for more contracts was based on the different levels of accomplishment offered—bronze, silver, gold, gold star and gold bar are illustrative. In addition, there were clubs to be joined by invitation and trips to be taken.

It can be said for petitioners that they offered activities and companionship for the lonely and the socially insecure. Some customers testified that they were completely satisfied. We can infer that many others were satisfied.

[626] Petitioners contend that the no monetary limitation was necessary, given the fines which could be imposed under the Act for violations of the order. 15 U.S.C.A., § 45 (l). They also urge that other provisions of the order, such as the seven day cooling off period—i. e., the contract may be cancelled within seven days, render the monetary limitation unnecessary. An alternative approach would be to report all contracts in excess of $1,500 to the Commission. The Commission could then check for violations of its order. We find no merit in these suggestions.

The record makes out a case that a contractual limitation was indicated and that the limitation selected by the Commission bore a reasonable relationship to the unfair and deceptive practices found. It is clear from the record that the $1,500 line of demarcation was reasonable from the standpoint of alleviating the practices in question. This limitation is adjusted to the prices usually charged by petitioners and other dance studios for the number of lessons ordinarily needed to reach a basic stage of accomplishment.[2]

We cannot say that the limitation is overbroad in amount, or unnecessary because of the other provisions in the order, or because petitioners are subject to fines for violations of the order. Nor can we say that the rights of petitioners to contract have been improperly accommodated.

---

[2] On the other hand, the California and Illinois legislatures have set a limitation on such dance contracts of $2,500.

The petition to review and set aside the cease and desist order of the Commission is denied, and the order will, pursuant to statute, be enforced. 15 U.S.C.A., § 21(c).

Enforcement ordered.

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING AND PETITION FOR REHEARING En Banc

PER CURIAM.

The Petition for Rehearing is denied and no member of this panel nor Judge in regular active service on the Court having requested that the Court be polled on rehearing en banc, (Rule 35 Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure; Local Fifth Circuit Rule 12) the Petition for Rehearing En Banc is denied.

NATIONAL PETROLEUM REFINERS ASSOCIATION, ET AL.
v.
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. 1180–71.—F.T.C. File 215–21

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, Apr. 4, 1972)

1. FOR PURPOSE OF CARRYING OUT OTHER PROVISIONS OF F.T.C. ACT, WORDS "RULES AND REGULATIONS" SHOULD NOT BE DEFINED AS THEY WERE IN ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT.

   Words "rules and regulations," as used in Federal Trade Commission Act section providing that the Commission has power to make "rules and regulations" [1344] for purpose of carrying out other provisions of the Act, should not be defined as they were in the Administrative Procedure Act, where the former statute was passed in 1914, while the latter statute was not passed until 1946, and where there existed no cross reference or other legal relationship between the words in their respective statutes.

2. COMMISSION'S AUTHORIZATION BY F.T.C. ACT TO "PREVENT" UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN IMPLIED RULE-MAKING POWER.

   Section of Federal Trade Commission Act that authorizes it to "prevent" unfair methods of competition did not constitute an implied rule-

---

*Reported in 340 F. Supp. 1343 (1972); rev'd & rem'd 482 F. 2d 672 (1973), see p. 714 herein; cert. denied, 415 U.S. 951 (1974).

making power, where general rules of statutory construction and the scheme of the Act itself demonstrated that the mandate of the section was to be carried out by means of adjudicative process specified in the very next paragraph of the statute.

3. F.T.C. ACT DOES NOT CONFER UPON COMMISSION AUTHORITY TO PROMULGATE TRADE REGULATION RULES WITH EFFECT OF SUBSTANTIVE LAW.

   Federal Trade Commission Act does not confer upon the Federal Trade Commission the authority to promulgate trade regulation rules that have the effect of substantive law; the rule-making power of the Act conveys only the authority to make rules and regulations in connection with the Commission's housekeeping chores and with its investigative responsibilities.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 340 F. Supp. 1343.)

On motion for summary judgment, Court held that F.T.C. Act does not confer upon Commission authority to promulgate trade regulation rules that have effect of substantive law. Plaintiff's motion granted, Commission's motion denied.

William Simon, J. Wallace Adair, Robert W. Steele, Roger C. Simmons, of Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D.C., for plaintiffs.

L. Patrick Gray, III, Asst. Atty. Gen., Harold H. Titus, Jr., U.S. Atty., Harland F. Lathers, and Stuart E. Schiffer, Attys., Dept. of Justice, Ronald M. Deitrich, Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Alvin L. Berman, James P. Timony, Nicholas S. Reynolds, Attys., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for the Federal Trade Comm. and others.

OPINION

AUBREY E. ROBINSON, JR., District Judge.

This suit questions the authority of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to promulgate Trade Regulation Rules pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq. (1971). It is a case of "first impression," no other courts having directly considered the issue.[1]

The FTC announced, on July 30, 1969, that it intended to issue a Trade Regulation Rule declaring that failure to post octane numbers on gasoline pumps at service stations would be an "unfair method of competition" and a "deceptive practice," constituting a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission

---

[1] In two cases, courts have refused to enjoin the Commission from holding hearings looking toward the promulgation of Trade Regulation Rules holding that the proper procedure was to attack the rule after it issued. Bristol-Myers Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 1968 CCH Trade Case. ¶72, 496, pp. 85,677–78 (D.D.C.1968), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 22, 424 F.2d 935 (1970); Lever Brothers v. Federal Trade Commission, 325 F.Supp. 371 (D.Me.1971).

Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45 (1971) (hereinafter FTCA).[2] On December 30, 1970, the Commission issued such a Rule;[3] extended the effective date of the Rule on April 13, 1971 for the purpose of considering a revision thereof; withdrew the effective date[4] and proposed an alternative Rule on August 19, 1971;[5] and on December 9, 1971 isued a revised Rule in this respect that was to be effective [1345] March 15, 1972[6] but for a stay entered by this court.

This Rule, in simple fashion, makes the failure to post octane numbers an "unfair method of competition" and an unfair or "deceptive act" or practice without the necessity of further proof. Plaintiffs here contend that the Commission lacks statutory authority to promulgate this Rule.

The Court need not consider the several other contentions raised by the Plaintiffs, for the answer reached here pretermits all other issues. For the reasons set forth below, that to this Court are persuasive, it is held that the FTC lacks the requisite statutory authority to issue Trade Regulation Rules.

Initially, one considers that the FTC is materially distinct from other administrative bodies. The FTC was created with the express purpose that it be a purely investigative body. This factor distinguishes the FTC from other agencies that are regulatory in nature. Recognizing that the FTC might serve a more vital function, Congress appended to FTC's investigatory powers, quasi-judicial authority to file complaints, hold hearings, afford due process and determine, based upon a finding of fact, whether violations of the FTCA had or were occurring. The determination having been made that a violation existed, the FTC was granted cease and desist power to correct and prevent its continuance. Judicial review of cease and desist orders was specifically provided for to the Courts of Appeals. These quasi-judicial powers are laid out separately in Section 5 of the FTCA.[7] The investigative powers of the FTC are expressed in Section 6 of the FTCA.[8]

There is only one reference in the FTCA that speaks to the issuance of rules and regulations. The FTC relies heavily upon its substance and it states:

---

[2] 34 F.R. 12449 (1969).
[3] 36 F.R. 354 (1971).
[4] 36 F.R. 7309 (1971).
[5] 36 F.R. 16120 (1971).
[6] 36 F.R. 23871 (1971).
[7] 15 U.S.C. § 45 (1971).
[8] 15 U.S.C. § 46 (1971).

> The commission shall also have power
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (g) From time to time to classify corporations and to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 41–46 and 47–58 of this title. (emphasis added)[9]

This clause is located in Section 6 of the FTCA where the investigative powers are conferred.

While the authority at issue may at first impression be thought to fall within this section, to issue rules and regulations concerning deceptive or unfair trade practices or competition, both the context of Section 6(g) and the legislative history accompanying it demonstrate that this particular authority was not, nor has been, granted.

The history of this section is clear. Section 6(g) of this Act was intended only as an authorization for internal rules of organization, practice, and procedure. The section was to insure that the FTC had the power to require reports from all corporations.[10] Section 6(g) of the FTCA originated in Section 7 of the House Bill of 1914 that conferred only investigative powers on the Commission.[11] This House Bill did not contain provisions analogous to Section 5 of the Statute, as enacted, that conferred adjudicative authority upon the FTC. This is because the House Bill considered the FTC as an investigative body. Thus, the rulemaking grant in Section 6(g) could only have been intended as an adjunct to the Commission's investigative powers. Supportive of this analysis is the fact that the Senate version of this FTCA made no provision whatever for the promulgation of rules [1346] and regulations in any context. Therefore, the only provisions concerning rules and regulations that were considered by the Conference Committee and the Congress stem from the House Bill. The existence of Section 6(g) in this statute could only pertain to housekeeping or procedural matters, as under the House Bill, the Commission had no authority to prescribe unfair, deceptive, or anti-competitive business practices.[12] The House Bill conferred only investigative powers.

---

[9] 15 U.S.C. § 46(g) (1971).

[10] Federal Trade Commission Bill, Comparative Print, S.Doc. No. 573, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 14, 15 (1914); H.R.Rep. No. 533, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3 (1914); 51 Cong.Rec. 8845, 9047, 9048 (1914).

[11] H.R. 15613, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., Sec. 8 (1914).

[12] Having admitted that both the drafters in the House and the Senate had no intention of granting the Commission any rulemaking power, the Commission took the position that rulemaking authority was somehow mysteriously incorporated into the Conference Committee Report that was ultimately passed. Reasoning from this unsupported position, the Commission claimed that the House and Senate debates prior to

Notably, when the Senate Bill's provision enabling the Commission to institute adjudicative proceedings to prevent unfair methods of competition was added, there was no indication that Section 6(g) rulemaking authority was intended to extend to this new area affixed by the Senate Bill in such a way as to circumvent the extensive due process procedures expressly provided for in Section 5 of the FTCA. Despite several amendments to the Act, no indication of such an intent has since been expressed.

Significantly, Congress refused to amend its proposals on two separate occasions that would have granted the Commission the very rulemaking power it now seeks to exercise.[13] In addition to the provisions of Section 6(g), the Amendment offered by Congressman Lafferty urged that the Commission be given the power to "make, alter, or repeal regulations further defining more particularly unfair trade practices or unfair or oppressive competition."[14] Thus when Sections 6(g) and 5 were first proposed, Congress felt that an explicit grant of legislative authority was necessary, other than 6(g), to grant substantive rulemaking powers to the FTC. This Congress consistently refused to permit.[15]

[1347] Section 6(g) has remained unchanged since 1914, and it is still located in Section 6 of the Act among the Commissions'

---

[12] (Continued)
the Conference Report were of no relevance to whether Congress intended to grant substantive rulemaking powers to the Commission.

In making this argument, the Commission ignores the fact that the legislative authority of a Conference Committee is limited to resolving differences between the two Houses. Such a Conference Committee cannot authorize new legislation that has not been submitted by one of the two Houses. See Jefferson's Manual, Section 546, which has governed House procedures since 1837. In short, the Conference Committee could not have given the FTC a power that was not included in the bill as it passed one of the Houses. House Rule XXVII (3) (1971); Rules and Manual of the United States Senate, Section 343 (1965). See also comments of Judge Convington, a member of the Conference Committee, 51 Cong.Rec. 14932 (Sept. 14, 1914); and the remarks of Congressman Sherley, 51 Cong.Rec. 14938 (Sept. 10, 1914).

[13] 51 Cong.Rec. 9047, 9049–50, 9056–57 (1914).

[14] H.R.Rep. 533, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., Part 3, p. 21 (1914).

[15] The amendment proposed by Congressman Lafferty that would have given the Commission the power to make, alter, or repeal regulations further defining more particularly unfair trade practices or unfair or oppressive competition also included the text of Section 6(g) within it. Thus, even in Congressman Lafferty's own view, Section 6(g) did not in and of itself confer the legislative rulemaking powers that the Commission now asserts it confers upon it. See also 51 Cong. Rec. 14,932 (1914) where Judge Covington, a member of the Conference Committee, who was called the "author of the bill," specifically stated in this regard: "The Federal Trade Commission will have no power to prescribe the methods of competition to be used in the future. In issuing its orders it will not be exercising power of a judicial nature * * *."; and 51 Cong.Rec. 14,928 (1914) where Congressman Sherley expressed the thought: "In other words, (the Trade Commission) exercises in no sense a legislative function such as is exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission." Moreover, the evidence is overwhelming that Congress intended the Commission to act only upon Orders issued in specific proceedings after a complaint, hearings, and basis in fact established. 51 Cong.Rec. 14,928 (1914).

other investigative powers.[16] If Congress at any time had intended to confer upon the Commission the authority to prescribe substantive law in such a manner as to vitiate the substantial procedural safeguards specified in the Act itself, there certainly would be some reference to this extraordinary grant of power in the Act or the legislative history. The fact that there is none lends credence to the conclusion that the Commission has no substantive, legislative rulemaking authority under the FTCA.

It is important, also, to consider the fact that the FTC, for approximately 50 years from the passage of the FTCA, never asserted the authority it claims to have always possessed. This indicia points to the fact that the FTC knew it was not originally granted this rulemaking authority.

Another critical analytical factor is that where Congress intended to grant substantive rulemaking authority to the FTC, it has done so clearly and unequivocally.[17] In each of those instances Congress felt the need to specifically authorize the Commission to issue substantive rules.[18] These examples of specific authorization would be "a meaningless and superfluous legislative gesture" if the Commission had had the authority it now claims was given it in 1914.[19] The fact that Congress particularized the grant of substantive rulemaking power in these narrowly circumscribed statutes and yet did not do so with respect to the Federal Trade Commission Act, that deals, not with consumer labeling, but with "competition" generally in all its many aspects, makes clear that Congress did not intend the Commission to have such powers under the latter statute.

This conclusion is further substantiated by the history of the Flammable Fabrics Act. Unlike the Wool, the Fur, and the Textile Fiber Acts, the general rulemaking power granted the Commission in the Flammable Fabrics Act did not specify the subjects upon which rules could be issued, nor did it contain an express provision that a violation of rules promulgated would constitute a violation of the FTCA.[20] It provided only that the Commission could make, "such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for purposes of administration and enforcement of (the Act),"[21] i.e., in language similar to that of Section 6(g) of the FTCA. In 1967, however, Congress amended the Flammable Fabrics Act [22] to specifically provide that the Commission could issue rules requiring the "maintenance of records relating to fabrics, related materials, [1348] and products" and the following language was added by Congress to that provision:

---

[16] 1951 Annual Report of the Federal Trade Commission, pp. 16–18 that states "the broad scope of the Commission's authority to investigate is indicated" by the powers conferred on the Commission in Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, specifically including the rulemaking powers of Section 6(g). Other annual reports also refer to the Commission's rulemaking power in an investigative context. See, e.g., 1954, p. 12; 1955, p. 9; 1956, p. 9; and 1957, p. 8; all Annual Reports of the Federal Trade Commission.

[17] Wool Products Labeling Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 68–68j (1971); Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 70–70k (1971); Fur Products Labeling Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 69–69j (1971); Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1191–1200 (1971); and the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1451–61 (1971).

[18] This is consistent with the Congressional belief in 1914 that a separate provision from Section 6(g) was necessary to grant the FTC substantive rulemaking authority.

[19] R. Burris and H. Teter, Antitrust: Rulemaking v. Adjudication in the FTC, 54. Georgetown L.J. 1106, 1125 (1965).

> The violation of such rules and regulations shall be unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce, under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The purpose of that amendment, according to the Report of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, was to "make the Flammable Fabrics Act more flexible by permitting flammability standards and other regulations to be issued under rulemaking procedures rather than having them fixed by law as is now the case." [23] The report explained further that, under the amended Flammable Fabrics Act, the Commission was authorized "to establish regulations for recordkeeping" and that "(v)iolations of any such regulation would be an unfair trade practice under the Federal Trade Commission Act." [24]

The original language of the Flammable Fabrics Act was in pari materia to Section 6(g) of the FTCA.[25] Nevertheless, Congress felt the need to amend the statutes to give the Commission the power to include "provisions for maintenance of records relating to fabrics, related materials, and products," and the further need to amend the statutes to provide that violations of such rules would constitute a violation of Section 5.[26] Logic compels a similar need to spell out substantive rulemaking authority in the case of Section 6(g) before such authority can be said to exist. Congress has not done so.[27] The Commission's claim of unlimited rulemaking power under the FTCA is, therefore, not only unsupported by anything in that Act itself, or its legislative history, but is also inconsistent with the history of other statutes entrusted to the Commission's administration by Congress.

---

[20] Compare 15 U.S.C. § 1192 (1964) with 15 U.S.C. § 68a, 15 U.S.C. § 69a(a). (b). (c), and 15 U.S.C. § 70a(a), (b), (c) (1964).

[21] 15 U.S.C. § 1194(c) (1971).

[22] Id. at 5.

[23] H.R.Rep. No. 972, 90th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 1 (1967) U.S.Code Cong. & Admin. News, p. 2136.

[24] Id. at 5.

[25] 67 Stat. 112 (1953).

[26] 81 Stat. 570 (1967).

[27] See Textile and Apparel Group, American Importers Ass'n v. Federal Trade Com-

[1] The Federal Trade Commission further argues that the words "rules and regulations" in Section 6(g) are to be defined as they are in the Administrative Procedure Act (APA): "The whole or a part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy * * *." [28] The Federal Trade Commission Act was passed in 1914. The APA was passed in 1946. It is inconceivable to this Court that those words, when written and considered by Congress in 1914, can have the same exact meaning as those words carry today via the 1946 APA. There exists no cross reference or other legal relationship between these words in their respective statutes. The APA gave a specialized construction to these words. Congress recognized this special meaning by amending the National Labor Relations Act, also passed before the APA, to read, "to make * * * in the manner prescribed by the Administrative Procedure Act, such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subchapter." [29] Congress, however, did not make a similar amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act. The inference, therefore, is that Congress did not expect the FTC to engage in substantive rulemaking in the manner prescribed by the APA. The rulemaking power in Section 6(g) of the FTCA remains unchanged by Congress to date, and conveys only the authority to make such rules and [1349] regulations in connection with its housekeeping chore and investigative responsibilities.

[2] The Commission further contends that Section 5(a)(6) of the Act, that authorizes it to "prevent" unfair methods of competition, constitutes implied rulemaking power. In making this argument, the Commission ignores Section 5(b), the very next paragraph of the statute that requires the Commission to conduct adjudicative proceedings. General rules of statutory construction mission, 133 U.S.App.D.C. 353, 410 F.2d 1052, cert. denied, National Knitted Outwear Ass'n v. Textile and Apparel Group, Am. Importers Ass'n, 396 U.S. 910, 90 S.Ct. 223, 24L.Ed.2d 185 (1969); Federal Trade Commission v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 100 U.S.App. D.C. 58, 242 F.2d 31 (1957) which indicates that broad power to promulgate trade regulation rules does not exist beyond the narrower grants of rulemaking authority given by the Congress.

---

[27] (Continued)

[28] 5 U.S.C. § 551(4) (1971).

[29] 29 U.S.C. § 156 (1971).

and the scheme of the FTCA itself demonstrate that the mandate of Section 5(a)(6) is to be carried out by means of adjudicative process specified in Section 5(b).[30] Moreover, the Supreme Court has expressly stated that the FTCA must "be read as an integrated whole." [31] Thus, the FTC's claim is patently untenable. If the legislative history of the Act will not permit the issuance of Trade Reguation Rules under the only section explicitly granting the Commission rulemaking authority, such sweeping authority cannot be based upon an implied grant of power in some other section of the Act or in the Act as a whole. In the face of an overwhelmingly contrary legislative history, there must be some basis for granting an agency unprecedented and farreaching rulemaking power other than the claim of the agency itself that such power is necessary or desirable for its more efficient operation. The only support, however, for the Commission's novel theory of statutory construction is its own words. While the courts may have sustained imprecise grants of rulemaking power in some instances, they have never done so in the face of an overwhelmingly contrary legislative history, such as that of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[32]

---

[30] Section 5 remained a single unitary provision without separate, designated subsection throughout the House and Senate consideration of the measure. Today's lettering of Section 5 paragraphs resulted from the 1952 McGuire Act, a development 38 years after the original passage of the statute and completely unrelated to the question here under consideration.

[31] United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 650, 70 S.Ct. 357, 368, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950).

[32] This factor readily distinguishes cases such as National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 63 S.Ct. 997, 87 L.Ed. 1344 (1943) where neither the statutory scheme nor the legislative history of that Act clearly negated an implied grant of legislative power to the Federal Communications Commission and that statute was intended to authorize an agency to broadly regulate a specific, narrow segment of industry; United States v. Oregon, 336 U.S. 643, 648, 81 S.Ct. 1278, 6 L.Ed.2d 575 (1961); United States v. Public Utilities Comm. of Calif., 345 U.S. 295, 73 S.Ct. 706, 97 L.Ed. 1020 (1953); Schwegman Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 71 S.Ct. 745, 95 L.Ed.2d 1035 (1951); Pacific Coast European Conf. v. Federal Maritime Comm., 126 U.S.App.D.C. 230, 376 F.2d 785 (1967). See also Weston, Deceptive Advertising and the Federal Trade Commission: Decline of Caveat Emptor, 24 Fed.Bar.J. 548, 570–71 (1964) where it is stated:

> To support its theory (of implied power), the FTC cites Supreme Court decisions involving the S.E.C. under the Public Utility Holding Co. Act, and the F.C.C. and the F.P.C. as authority for the proposition that an administrative agency has the choice to use either adjudication or rulemaking procedure to make 'substantive' rules. These cases, however, involve agencies with not only express power to issue 'legislative' rules but also with far more pervasive regulatory jurisdiction over the specialized industries involved. It may be that some agencies vested with both adjudicatory and legislative rulemaking powers have a choice of which procedure to use. But it is not at all clear that an adjudicatory agency specifically denied 'legislative' rulemaking power can use legislative type hearings to make 'substantive' rules other than merely 'interpretative' rules that are open to full-scale judicial review.

Testimony by former Federal Trade Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon before a Senate Subcommittee, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 88th Cong., 1st Sess. 169–70 (Oct. 31, 1963).

The record amply reflects that the Commission itself has repeatedly admitted [1350] that it has no power to promulgate substantive rules of law[33] and Congress has implicitly rejected the efficacy of Commission Trade Regulation Rules by legislatively superseding them.[34] Moreover, the Supreme Court has impliedly rejected the Commission's claim of rulemaking power, as have many of the legal commentators.[35]

[3] The Court has considered fully all the other arguments put forth by the FTC in this suit. The sum total of their argument is a "bootstrap" operation, designed to conclude that the FTC possesses powers that it clearly does not have. The famous stricture of Mr. Justice Brandeis applies here:

> What the Government asks is not a construction of the statute, but, in effect, an enlargement of it by the court, so that what was omitted, presumably by inadvertence, may be included within its scope. To supply omissions transcends the judicial function.[36]

---

[33] Hearings before the Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 88th Cong., 1st Sess. 169–70 (Oct. 21, 1963); Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 88th Cong., 1st Sess. 281 (March 20, 1963); Hearings before the Senate Committee on Commerce, 91st Cong., 1st and 2d Sess., p. 9 (Dec. 17, 1969); Hearings before the House Subcommittee on Commerce and Finance of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 54, 76–77 (Feb. 4, 1970). See also Title II of S. 986, 92d Cong., 2d Sess. § 206 (1972), currently pending in Congress, where Section 206 of that Bill would amend Section 6(g) of the FTCA to authorize the Commission to define with specificity through legislative rules those acts or practices which are unfair or deceptive to consumers and in violation of Section 5(a)(1) of the FTCA. It is noteworthy, here, that almost sixty years after the passage of the original Act that the Commission claims implicity granted it authority to promulgate rules to regulate all otherwise non-regulated industries, the Senate found the grant of such authority so far reaching and so inherently capable of abuse that it retained a sixty day veto over any use of that power in their proposed Bill. It is further significant that Congress has still not passed this legislation giving the Commission rulemaking authority. See, Cong.Rec., Nov. 8, 1971, Daily Ed., p. S 17828 and statements of Senator Hruska Id., at p. 17857; Senator Cotton, Id., at S 17873; and Senator Cooper, Id., at S 17884.

[34] The Trade Regulation Rule relating to unsolicited mailing of credit cards (16 C.F.C. 415) was superseded by express provisions in the Truth-In-Lending Act (15 U.S.C. §§1642–44, et seq. (1971); the Rule relating to the prevention of unfair or deceptive advertising in labeling of cigarettes (29 F.R. 12626, 15570) was preempted by the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1331 et seq. (1971); and the proposed Rule relating to shipment of unordered merchandise (16 C.F.R. 427) was superseded by express provisions of the Postal Reorganization Act, 39 U.S.C. § 3009 (1971).

[35] Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 385, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965); Addison v. Holly Hill Fruit Products, Inc., 322 U.S. 607, 617–618, 64 S.Ct. 1215, 88 L.Ed. 1488 (1944); Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 532–533, 55 S.Ct. 837, 79 L.Ed. 1570 (1935); Fedeal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 283 U.S. 643, 648, 51 S.Ct. 587, 75 L.Ed. 1324 (1931); Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421, 427, 40 S.Ct. 572, 64 L.Ed. 993 (1920). See Comment, 113 U.Pa.L.Rev. 303, 304–305 (1964); R. Burris and H. Teter, Antitrust: Rulemaking v. Adjudication in the FTC, 54 Georgetown L.J. 1106 (1965); Weston, Deceptive Advertising and the Federal Trade Commission: Decline of Caveat Emptor, 24 Fed.Bar. J. 548 (1964). But see, Wegman, Cigarette and Health: A Legal Analysis, 51 Cornell L.Q. 678, 741 (1966); Elman, Rulemaking Procedures in the FTC's Enforcement of the Merger Law, 78 Harv.L.Rev. 385 (1964).

[36] Iselin v. United States, 270 U.S. 245, 251, 46 S.Ct. 248, 70 L.Ed. 566 (1926).

It is therefore the conclusion of this Court, that for the above stated reasons, the statute (FTCA) does not confer upon the Federal Trade Commission the authority to promulgate Trade Regulation Rules that have the effect of substantive law.

Plaintiffs' motion for Summary Judgment is hereby granted. Defendants' motion for Summary Judgment is hereby denied.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
v.
APPROXIMATELY 500 DOZEN FLAMMABLE CHENILLE BERETS*

No. 71-1197—F.T.C. File 99-102

(United States Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, April 25, 1972)

1. STANDARD OF FLAMMABILITY APPLICABLE TO HATS UNDER 1953 ACT STILL EFFECTIVE.

   Standard of flammability applicable to hats under 1953 Flammable Fabrics Act is still effective considering that Secretary of Commerce has promulgated no superseding or modifying standards.

2. LANGUAGE OF 1953 ACT INTENDED TO INCLUDE THOSE HATS WHICH PRESENT A DANGER IN LIGHT OF THEIR FLAMMIBILITY AND THEIR COVERAGE OF THE NECK, FACE OR SHOULDERS AS TO CREATE PROBABILITY OF SERIOUS INJURY.

   Under 1953 Flammable Fabrics Act defining an article of wearing apparel subject to flammability standards and to prohibitions on sales or offering for sale in commerce as any article of clothing except hats which do not "constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders," quoted phrase was intended to include within coverage of Act those hats which present a danger to the public, in light of their flammability, and their coverage of such a portion of the neck, face or shoulders as to create probability of serious injury if ignited.

3. BERETS COVERING ONLY PART OF FACE AND NECK DID NOT "CONSTITUTE OR FORM PART OF A COVERING FOR THE NECK, FACE OR SHOULDERS" AND WERE EXEMPT FROM PROVISION OF THE FLAMMABLE FABRICS ACTS.

   Berets which covered the ears, part of the face, and part of the neck when worn, did not "constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders" and were exempt from provisions of 1953 Flammable Fabrics Act defining an article of wearing apparel subject [1278] to flammability standards and to prohibitions of sales or offering for sale in commerce as any article of clothing except hats which do not constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders when worn by individuals.

4. JUDICIARY MUST NOT INTERFERE IN LEGISLATIVE AND EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS OF GOVERNMENT.

   Judiciary must exercise restraint not to interfere in legislative and

---

* Reported in 458 F.2d 1277 (1972).

executive functions of government lest it abdicate its role, mandated by Constitution, of impartial decision-making.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 458 F.2d 1277)

On appeal Court held that berets which cover only part of neck or face were exempt from provisions of the 1953 Flammable Fabrics Act. District Court affirmed.

Charles C. Moore, Jr., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for appellant.

Albert H. Brodkin, Keating & Brodkin, New York City, for appellee.

Before MCLAUGHLIN, VAN DUSEN and ADAMS, Circuit Judges.

OPINION OF THE COURT

VAN DUSEN, Circuit Judge.

This case involves an appeal by the Federal Trade Commission from a ruling of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey that certain flammable berets were exempt from seizure under the terms of the Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1191 et seq. (1970). The berets in question were manufactured in Italy and were imported into this country by claimants-appellees, Betmar Hats, Inc. and M. Grossman & Son, Inc., in August of 1970. The Federal Trade Commission (Commission) obtained several of these berets in September of 1970 and subjected them to flammability tests in accordance with Commercial Standard 191–53 of the Department of Commerce. As a result of these tests, the Commission determined that the berets were dangerously flammable and that their introduction into commerce violated Section 3 of the Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1192 (1970). The Commission then instituted a seizure action[1] pursuant to Section 6(b) of the Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1195(b) (1970), which provides:

> (b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that any product has been manufactured or introduced into commerce * * * in violation of section 1192 of this title, it may institute proceedings by process of libel for the seizure and confiscation of such product * * * in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such product * * * is found.

The complaint alleged in paragraph 4, inter alia, that the berets "[w]hen worn, * * * form a covering for the ears, forehead, part of the neck, and the top of the head" and claimants concede the accuracy of this allegation for purposes of the decision from which this appeal is taken (see paragraph 4 of answer).

---

[1] Two separate seizure warrants were executed by the Commission and a total of 6,385 berets were seized.

Claimants asserted ownership of the seized berets in accordance with Supplemental Rule C(6), F.R.Civ.P., and filed an answer. Claimants then moved for dismissal of the claim and summary judgment, and supported their motion with three sworn affidavits. The Commission filed a cross-motion for summary judgment and oral arguments were heard on these cross-motions on December 14, 1970. At this oral argument and in their papers claimants contended that flammability standards only apply to hats under Section 4(a) of the 1953 Flammable Fabrics Act and that such provisions had been repealed by the 1967 Flammable Fabrics Act, which had not included coverage of hats. The district court rejected this contention and held that the 1953 standard (191–53) is applicable under the savings clause of the 1967 Act. However, the court went on to hold that the berets in question were not covered by the wording of Section [1279] 2(d), 15 U.S.C. § 1191(d), 67 Stat. 111 (1953), and were thus not properly seized by the Commission. The cross-motion for summary judgment was denied and an order was entered prohibiting the claimants from selling or otherwise disposing of the berets pending appeal. We agree with these rulings of the district court and affirm on the basis of the record presented to us on this appeal.

The 1967 Flammable Fabrics Act contains no specific reference to hats but applies to "any article of wearing apparel." [2] Section 2 of the Act (15 U.S.C. § 1192 (1970)) prohibits the sale or offering for sale in commerce of any article of wearing apparel which fails to conform to a flammability standard promulgated under Section 3 of the 1967 Act (15 U.S.C. § 1193 (1970)). That section provides for the adoption of such standards by the Secretary of Commerce upon a showing of a need to protect the public and after an appropriate hearing. No such standard has been promulgated for hats. However, when the 1967 Act was passed, Congress included a savings provision which provides:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, the standards of flammability in effect under the provisions of the Flammable Fabrics Act, as amended, on the day preceding the date of enactment of this Act, shall continue in effect for the fabrics and articles of wearing apparel to which they are applicable until superseded or modified by the Secretray of Commerce.

* * * § 11, P.L. 90–189, 81 Stat. 568, 1967 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin. News, p. 625; see also notes following 15 U.S.C. § 1191 (1970).

---

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 1191(h) (1967). This section defines the term "product" as including any article of wearing apparel.

[1] We agree with appellant and the district court that the standard of flammability applicable to hats under the 1953 Flammable Fabrics Act is still effective since the Secretary of Commerce has promulgated no superseding or modifying standards.

The above-mentioned Section 2(d) of the 1953 Act (15 U.S.C. § 1191(d), 67 Stat. 111 (1953), defined "article of wearing apparel," which is subject to the flammability standards of Section 4 (15 U.S.C. § 1193 (1953)) and to the prohibitions on sales or offering for sale in commerce in Section 3 (15 U.S.C. § 1192, 67 Stat. 111 (1953)), as meaning any article of clothing except hats, "Provided, however, That such hats do not constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face or shoulders when worn by individuals." [3]

The district court decided that the berets in question were not subject to the provisions of the Flammable Fabrics Act, apparently for the reason that they did not "constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders when worn by individuals," and that, therefore, there was no applicable standard of flammability for these berets. Under such a decision, their sale or introduction into commerce was not prohibited by Section 2 of the 1967 Act (15 U.S.C. § 1192 (1970)). As a basis for such conclusions, it is necessary to determine what is meant by the phrase "constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders" and then to apply that standard to the berets in question on the basis of the record.

[2] In determining the scope of the above-quoted proviso, the legislative history of the 1953 Act is pertinent. See United States v. *An Article of Drug * * * Bacto-Unidisk*, 394 U.S. 784, 799, 89 S.Ct. 1410, 22 L.Ed.2d 726 (1969). Beginning in 1945 legislation [1280] was introduced in the Congress to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of highly flammable fabrics.[4] Several subsequent bills were introduced and in 1953 H.R. 5069 was enacted into law. The legislative purpose of all of these bills was to protect the public against the dangers of highly flammable wearing apparel. The Senate Report to H.R. 5069 cited numerous examples of injuries caused by "torch sweaters" and other such flammable garments.[4] Earlier versions of the legislation had ex-

---

[3] Act of June 30, 1953, Pub.L. No. 164–83, § 2, 67 Stat. 111, 15 U.S.C. § 1193(a) makes Commercial Standard 191–53 applicable to all articles of wearing apparel and provides that it "shall apply with respect to the hats * * * covered by section 1191(d) of this title, not withstanding any exception contained in such Commercial Standard with respect to hats * * *" This language was necessary to overcome the exception from coverage of all hats contained in § 2.2 of Commercial Standard 191–53.

[4] See Senate Report No. 400, 83 Cong. 1st Sess. (1953), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin. News 1953, p. 1722.

empted all hats, gloves and footwear from the coverage of the Act. The Federal Trade Commission, which had promoted flammable fabrics legislation because of its inability to deal with the problem under its existing statutory powers, suggested that the exemption of hats be limited by a proviso which would include within the coverage of the Act "such wearing apparel as hoods, baby bonnets, head scarves, or other headwear which provide a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders." [5] The Commission felt that absent such a limitation on the hat exception the Act would "leave the public exposed to the dangers against which the bill is intended to afford protection." [6] It thus appears that the above-quoted proviso to Section 2(d) of the 1953 Act was intended to include within the Act's coverage those hats which present a danger to the public, in light of their flammability, and their coverage of such a portion of the neck, face or shoulders as to create the probability of serious injury if ignited. Such an analysis of the coverage of the Act focuses on the statutory purpose in order to interpret the imprecise language of the proviso.[7]

[3, 4] Applying this standard to this record, we find that the berets in question do not come within the Section 2(d) proviso and are exempt from coverage, since the berets only cover the ears, part of the face, and part of the neck under the wording of paragraph 4 of the complaint. In addition, photographs showing the manner in which the berets are worn were submitted by both sides as parts of their affidavits. On the basis of this record, we agree with the findings and conclusions of the district court that the berets in question are exempt from coverage under the above-described provisions of the 1953 Act, as continued in effect by the 1967 Act, § 11 of P.L. 90–189, 81 Stat. 568, 1967 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News, p. 625.[8] Although we are concerned with the result reached in this appeal, the solution to the problem rests with the Secretary of Commerce [9] or Congress, or both. The judiciary

---

[5] Senate Report No. 1869, 82 Cong. 2nd Sess. (1952).

[6] Letter of James H. Mead, FTC Chairman, of March 19, 1953, appended to Senate Report No. 400, 83 Cong. 1st Sess. (1953).

[7] See United States v. An Article of Drug . . . Bacto-Unidisk, 394 U.S. 784, 799, 89 S.Ct. 1410, 22 L.Ed.2d 726 (1969); SEC v. Ralston Purina Co., 346 U.S. 119, 124–125, 73 S.Ct. 981, 97 L.Ed. 1494 (1953).

[8] While we disagree with claimants' contention that hats must cover all of the face, neck, or shoulders to come within the proviso, the district court was justified in deciding that berets do not cover a sufficient portion of the face, neck or shoulders so as to create the probability of serious injury if ignited.

[9] In view of Section 1 of the 1967 Act (15 U.S.C. § 1191), defining articles of wearing apparel as "an article of clothing worn or intended to be worn by individuals," the Secretary of Commerce is able at any time to establish an appropriate flammability standard in accordance with Section 3 of that Act (15 U.S.C. § 1193) covering berets of the type involved here. A copy of this opinion will be sent to the Secretary of Commerce to call his attention to the situation presented by this case.

must exercise restraint not to interfere in the legislative and executive functions of government lest it abdicate its role, mandated by the Constitution, of impartial decision-making.

Accordingly, we affirm the district court order of December 17, 1970, and [1281] date that portion of such order which prohibited the sale or distribution of the berets pending appeal expires as of the date on which the appeal is determined.

GERALD MCLAUGHLIN, Circuit Judge (dissenting).

In 1967, despite the strong, high level political pressure put upon the Congress and the Department of Commerce which embraces appellant "Federal Trade Commission," the revised Flammable Fabrics Act contained a savings clause carried over from the 1953 Act which clearly states that "Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, the standards of flammability in effect under the provisions of the Flammable Fabrics Act, as amended, on the day preceding the date of enactment of this Act, shall continue in effect for the fabrics and articles of wearing apparel to which they are applicable until superseded or modified by the Secretary of Commerce pursuant to the authority conferred by the amendments made by this Act." [Follows 15 U.S.C. § 1191 in Supplement V 1965–69].

It is not disputed and cannot be, that the standards applicable under the 1953 Act continue in effect under the 1967 Act and Commercial Standard 191–53 remains appropriate for such hats as "constitute or form part of a covering for the neck, face, or shoulders when worn by individuals." Despite the unmistakable meaning of the above clear language the appellees amazingly and successfully argued that the 1953 language in the savings clause merely meant hats which do not themselves cover any part of the neck, face or shoulders or are attached to some other garment which completely covers the neck, face or shoulders. That brazen theory was put forward by a witness who was not a general hat expert but merely claimed knowledge of ladies' hats and headwear.

The berets in question, affirmatively found to be dangerously flammable, are close fitting hats which concededly cover a part of the neck and face, and it is not denied that they also cover the ears. The appellees would have it that Congress, despite its specific language, only meant hats that totally cover the entire neck and face. What appellees avoid noting is that Congress was trying to protect the public from the very real danger of wearing a close fitting, flammable hat that could result in horrible injury before it could even be removed from a person's head. It is really a great pity that not only the expertness of the Commission and its sound common sense in obtaining the savings clause are brushed aside to perpetuate the political victory in the retention of headwear that no one should be allowed to inflict upon a public completely unaware of its terrible potential. The result before us is utterly wrong. I would reverse the judgment of the district court.

COCA-COLA COMPANY, ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

Civ. A. No. 16484—F.T.C. Docket 8855

(United States District Court, N.D. Georgia, Atlanta Div., May 16, 1972)

1. District Court Held Without Jurisdiction to Hear Suit by Soft Drink Manufacturer Seeking Dismissal of Commission Complaint.

   Federal district court was without jurisdiction of action by soft drink manufacturer and bottlers seeking dismissal of administrative complaint issued by Federal Trade Commission, and which Commission had refused to dismiss, for failure to join indispensable parties.

2. Ordinarily District Courts Lack Jurisdiction to Review Agency Actions.

   In view of statutory prescription of judicial review of agency action directly in Court of Appeals, district courts ordinarily lack jurisdiction to review agency action.

3. Only in Extraordinary Circumstances will Parties be Allowed to Deviate from Established Judicial Procedures.

   Where Congress has provided adequate procedure for judicial review of administrative action, procedure must be followed, and only in extraordinary cases will parties be allowed to deviate from statutory course and seek injunctive relief from district court, short-circuiting administrative procedures.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 342 F. Supp. 670)

Court held it has no jurisdiction to hear dismissal suit by soft drink manufacturers and bottlers for failure to join indispensable parties.

Miller, Martin, Hitching, Tipton, Lenihan, & Waterhouse, Chattanooga, Tenn., King & Spalding, White & Chase, Atlanta, Ga., for the Coca-Cola Co.

Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein, Atlanta, Ga., for Coca-Cola Bottling Co. (Thomas), Inc., Coca-Cola

---

*Reported in 342 F. Supp. 670 (1972). Fifth Cir., 475 F. 2d 299 (1973), see p. 557 herein, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 877, 94 S. Ct. 121 (1973). See also p. 446 herein.

Bottling Works (Thomas), Inc., & Coca-Cola Bottling Works 3rd, Inc.

Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan, Atlanta, Ga., for Elberton Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Roddy Mfg. Co., Westminster Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Inc., Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Keene, Inc., Ann Arbor Coca-Cola Bottling Co., the Scioto Coca-Cola Bottling Co. & Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Co.

Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Comm., Washington, D.C., for defendant.

ORDER

RICHARD C. FREEMAN, District Judge.

In this action for injunctive and declaratory relief, plaintiffs attack an interlocutory order of the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as FTC) entered in an adjudicative proceeding pending before the FTC. Plaintiffs [671] are a soft drink manufacturer. The Coca-Cola Company, and ten bottling companies who package and distribute its products. Defendant is a regulatory agency of the United States—FTC. Plaintiffs assert that this court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question), 28 U.S.C. § 1337 (antitrust), 28 U.S.C. § 1361 (mandamus) and 28 U.S.C. § 1651 (All Writs Act).

Plaintiffs have moved for a preliminary injunction. Defendant has moved to dismiss the action. On May 3, 1972 this court heard argument on the above motions.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Plaintiff, Coca-Cola, is a Delaware corporation with its principal office and place of business in Atlanta, Georgia. Coca-Cola is engaged primarily in the business of manufacturing syrups and concentrates used by over nine hundred (900) contract bottlers in the preparation of soft drink products under its trademarks, including the trademark Coca-Cola. The bottlers, licensed by Coca-Cola to sell in certain geographical areas, mix the concentrate purchased from Coca-Cola, package it in bottles and resell the product. In addition to manufacturing and selling soft drink products, Coca-Cola also operates bottling plants in twenty-six (26) cities and sells soft drink products to retailers in those areas.

Plaintiffs, Coca-Cola Bottling Co. (Thomas), Inc.; Coca-Cola Bottling Works (Thomas), Inc.; and Coca-Cola Bottling Works 3rd, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Thomas Companies), are Delaware corporations with their principal offices and places of business in Chattanooga, Tennessee. The Thomas Companies are parent bottlers who have operated for many years under contract with Coca-Cola whereby they purchase concentrate from Coca-Cola for resale to numerous bottlers which have obtained licenses from the Thomas Companies to bottle and resell Coca-Cola products within certain geographical territories.

The remaining plaintiffs (hereinafter referred to as FTC Intervenor Bottlers) are corporations organized, existing and having their principal offices and places of business as follows: Elberton Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Elberton, Georgia; Roddy Manufacturing Company, Knoxville, Tennessee; Westminster Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Inc., Westminster, Maryland; Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Keene, Inc., Keene, New Hampshire; Ann Arbor Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Ann Arbor, Michigan; The Scioto Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Circleville, Ohio; Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Abilene, Texas. The FTC Intervenor Bottlers are engaged in the processing and sale of Coca-Cola products in designated territories pursuant to bottler contracts.

Defendant, FTC, is an administrative agency of the United States charged with, among other things, the duty of investigating, issuing and prosecuting in its adjudicative proceedings alleged violations of the antitrust laws.

On July 15, 1971, the FTC issued an administrative complaint (Docket No. 8855) charging The Coca-Cola Company (hereinafter referred to as Coca-Cola), Coca-Cola Bottling Co. (Thomas), Inc., Coca-Cola Bottling Works (Thomas), Inc. and Coca-Cola Bottling Works 3rd, Inc. with a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45).[1] Specifically, the administrative complaint[2] charges that, in the course of their business, Coca-Cola and the Thomas Companies have entered into licenses [672] with their bottler customers whereby the bottlers agree not to resell Coca-Cola products outside a designated geographical area, and that such license provisions constitute an unfair method of competition.

Coca-Cola and the Thomas Companies filed an answer admitting the material facts in the complaint, including the existence of the territorial restrictions; but they denied the alleged violation of law. The FTC Intervenor Bottlers applied for and were granted permission to intervene in the proceeding.

---

[1] Section 5(a) provides in part:

(1) Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful.

* * * * * * *

(6) The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce.

[2] The FTC also issued administrative complaints involving seven (7) other soft drink manufacturers, alleging similar theories.

Plaintiffs filed motions to dismiss the administrative complaint in Docket 8855 for failure to join indispensable parties. In their motions, plaintiffs contended that all bottlers licensed to bottle and distribute Coca-Cola products are indispensable parties to the administrative adjudication and therefore must be joined. On March 23, 1972, the FTC denied plaintiffs' motions to dismiss.[3]

Plaintiffs instituted the present action seeking: (1) a declaratory judgment decreeing that the bottlers of plaintiff Coca-Cola and plaintiff Thomas Companies are indispensable to the FTC proceeding challenging the contractual provisions and, the FTC having willfully failed to join them as parties, the complaint therein should be dismissed; and (2) an injunction enjoining the FTC from conducting any further proceedings in Docket 8855 as long as the bottlers are not joined as parties to said proceeding, and, failing that, requiring defendant to dismiss the complaint therein.

Plaintiffs base the requests for relief on the allegations that unless the FTC is enjoined it will proceed with the adjudication without all the bottlers being parties and should the FTC prevail therein with respect to its challenge to the exclusive territorial provisions of the bottlers' contracts:

> (a) Plaintiffs Coca-Cola and the Thomas Companies would be subject to two inconsistent decrees, to wit: the decree of the United States District Court of Deleware [4] and the order of the Federal Trade Commission;

---

[3] Plaintiffs initially presented their motions to the hearing examiner who denied them on January 7, 1972. Plaintiffs sought review of the hearing examiner's order by filing an application for permission to file an interlocutory appeal under the FTC's Rules of Practice (16 C.F.R. § 3.23) or, in the alternative, to treat the motions as certified to the Commission by the hearing examiner pursuant to FTC's Rules of Practice (16 C.F.R. § 3.22). Since the Commission found that the hearing examiner did not have authority to add parties, it dealt with plaintiff's motions under the latter Rule, stating that:

> The Commission has made a distinction however, between those instances in which the motion to dismiss challenges the Commission's legal power to issue the complaint and those in which it seeks to probe the Commission's discretion or judgment on whether or not a proceeding would be in the public interest. It is only in the latter instance in which the examiner is considered to be without authority to rule. See, The Drive-X Company, Inc., Docket No. 8615, Order Denying Application for Leave to File Interlocutory Appeal, or in the Alternative for an Order Requiring Certification of Question, June 10, 1964. While it is clear that the present situation falls within the former, i.e., the category of cases challenging the Commission's legal authority to issue the complaint, and hence within the examiner's authority to decide, we have nevertheless determined that that question is so intertwined with the question of amending the complaint by the addition of parties that both should have been certified to the Commission. Order Ruling on Motions to Dismiss for Failure to Join Indispensable Parties, The Coca-Cola Company, et. al, Docket No. 8855 (March 23, 1972) at 4.

[4] Without passing on the merits of this contention the court makes the following comments. In The Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. The Coca-Cola Co., 269 F. 796 (D.Del. 1920) the court considered the legality of a 1894 contract between Coca-Cola and a predecessor to the Thomas Companies. Under that contract, Coca-Cola, which previously had sold syrup only through soda fountains, licensed the distribution of soft drink in bottles and granted exclusive right to establish plants throughout a large part of the United States. In 1919, Coca-Cola and the bottling company had a disagreement concerning a

[673] (b) The judicially declared property rights of the bottlers who are not parties, including the rights of said bottlers vis-a-vis other such bottlers, would be altered;

(c) All bottlers must have the opportunity to be heard further in other proceedings in defense of their property rights. As a result thereof, without the presence of the bottlers, Docket 8855 cannot result in effective relief of the kind sought by defendant Commission;

(d) Plaintiffs and the public would also be subject to multiple litigation and would be deprived of the right to a settlement of the dispute by wholes;

(e) The ultimate resolution of the matter will be inordinately delayed;

(f) The proceeding would have to be dismissed or repeated with the bottlers as parties;

(g) Bottlers might be forced out of business.

Plaintiffs contend that a continuation of the proceedings in Docket No. 8855 without the presence of the bottlers as parties will deprive plaintiffs of their rights to due process of law and to basic fairness under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the Administrative Procedure Act.

Since defendant's motion to dismiss raises the issue of this court's jurisdiction to entertain the present action, the court will deal with it first.

JURISDICTION

[1] Although plaintiffs contend that the present action is a suit for a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief to protect plaintiffs' fundamental rights and to prevent the exercise of engaging in a potentially futile trial, the court believes that it is more appropriately characterized as a collateral suit to review agency action which is procedural in nature. Thus, the court will treat this as an action seeking judicial review of an administrative decision.

Both plaintiffs and defendant concede that the FTC's order denying plaintiffs' motion to dismiss is reviewable. Therefore, the questions for this court to determine are: first, when is the price rise in the cost of syrup. Coca-Cola attempted to unilaterally terminate the contract. The bottling company sued for specific performance. Coca-Cola defended, inter alia, on the grounds that the terms of the contract violated federal antitrust laws. The court held that the contract was not terminable at the will of Coca-Cola. The court also held that the various restrictions in the contract were ancillary to the main purpose of the contract which was to develop a system of distributing the soft drink in bottles. Thus, the "territorial provision", whereby Coca-Cola agreed to "select [the bottling company] as its sole and exclusive customer and licensee for the purpose of bottling Coca-Cola in the territory heretofore acquired * * *" (269 F. at 802), was found to be reasonable. However, there is no mention in the case of any provision whereby the bottlers agree not to sell Coca-Cola products outside a certain territory which is the provision under attack in the present FTC proceeding Docket No. 8855. Thus, it would appear that unless such a provision can be inferred from the above quote, the legality of the "territorial provision" under attack in the FTC proceedings was not ruled upon by the Delaware Court.

---

[4] (Continued)

FTC's action reviewable; and second, by whom is it reviewable? The first question presents the issues of ripeness and exhaustion, while the second question presents the issue of the proper court —District Court or Court of Appeals. In determining the answers to these questions the court will look first to the statutory law and then to the case law.

STATUTORY LAW

Congress has delegated the administration of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq.) (hereinafter referred to as the Act) to the FTC. That delegation gives the FTC jurisdiction to institute and conduct adjudicative proceedings whenever it has reason to [674] believe that an unfair method of competition is being used and a proceeding would be in the public interest.[5] If, as a result of such adjudicative proceeding, the FTC finds that there has been an unfair method of competition practiced, it has the power to issue cease-and-desist orders.[6] Section 5(c) of the Act confers jurisdiction to review cease-and-desist orders upon the courts of appeals.[7] That jurisdiction is made exclusive by Section 5(d).[8] The Act is silent as to any other type of judicial review. Since no cease-and-desist order has been entered, this court must look elsewhere.

Plaintiffs assert that the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq.) makes such agency action reviewable at this time. The review provision of Section 10 of that Act provides in part:

> Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review. A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on the review of the final agency action. 5 U.S.C. § 704.

Before determining when the above section makes the FTC's denial of plaintiffs' motions to dismiss reviewable, it is necessary to characterize the denial of a motion to dismiss in an agency adjudication.

Since the agencies frequently refer to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to make procedural determinations in their proceedings, the court will use the federal judicial proceedings by way of analogy. In a proceeding before a federal district court the denial of a motion to dismiss is not a final order and therefore is not appealable. 2A Moore's Federal Practice, Section 12.14 at 2338. Thus, a denial of a motion to dismiss is interlocutory in character. Under the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, Rule 5(a), appeal of an interlocutory order may be had under certain circumstances. However, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, Rule 20, excludes the application of Rule 5 interlocutory appeals from review or enforcement of agency orders. Thus, it would appear that Congress did not provide for any review of interlocutory agency orders in the Federal Rules.

---

[5] 15 U.S.C. § 45 et seq. Docket 8855 is such a proceeding.

[6] Plaintiffs do not contest the FTC's authority to conduct adjudicative proceeding dealing with alleged unfair methods of competition. Neither do plaintiffs contest the FTC's authority to issue cease-and-desist orders to prevent such practices.

[7] 15 U.S.C. § 45(c).

[8] 15 U.S.C. § 45(d).

Turning now to the review provisions of Section 10 of the Administrative Procedure Act, the first sentence addresses itself to agency action which is reviewable by statute or final in character. The court has determined that the Federal Trade Commission Act does not provide for review of the denial of a motion to dismiss and the court is not aware of any other statutory provision making such action reviewable. The court has characterized the FTC's action as interlocutory rather than final. Thus, the first sentence of Section 10 does not confer the power on this court to review the FTC's action. The second sentence of Section 10 provides for review of "preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action" on the review of final agency action. Since interlocutory is synonymous with intermediate, the Administrative Procedure Act provides for review of the FTC's denial of plaintiffs' motion to dismiss only upon review of a cease-and-desist order entered by the FTC as a result of the adjudicative proceeding in Docket 8855. However, such review is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals. Thus, there is no statutory basis for this court's jurisdiction over the present action. Therefore, if this court has jurisdiction, then it must be conferred by case law.

CASE LAW

[675] [2, 3] In view of the statutory prescription of judicial review of agency action directly in a court of appeals, district courts ordinarily lack jurisdiction to review agency action. Thus, where Congress has provided an adequate procedure for judicial review of administrative action, that procedure must be followed. Only in extraordinary cases will parties be allowed to deviate from this statutory course and seek injunctive relief from the district court, short-circuiting the administrative procedures. The court agrees with and adopts the reasons for the exhaustion doctrine as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Burger, while a circuit judge, in Wolf Corp. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 115 U.S.App. D.C. 75, 317 F.2d 139 (1963):

> Judicial power to impose prior restraint is not called an extraordinary remedy without reason. Even as between private parties the ordinary remedy is legal action after injury. Prior restraint is granted only upon a strong showing and is subject to definite and well established limitations. Prior restraint against governmental action, regular on its face and under color of authority, is even more cautiously exerted. Still higher hurdles stand in the way of prior restraint against the processes of a regulatory body exercising quasi-judicial powers which can be judicially reviewed as a matter of right before they become final. In this third category the jurisdiction of the regulatory or administrative body is exercised within the framework of a statutory scheme in which it acts as an arm of Congress; moreover it has established patterns of procedure and acts in a context where courts have long acknowledged a considerable deference to the specialized experience and competence of such a body. To exert judicial power to stop processes of this third category, which can always be judicially reviewed when the story is fully told and recorded, is an extraordinary step in the usual as well as the legally artful sense of that word. One who seeks our employment of such powers must make the strongest kind of showing; his jurisdictional "t's" must be crossed and the factual "i's" dotted.
>
> The reasons for this restrained attitude on our part are plain if we look at the whole panorama. When Congress vested broad powers in the Commission it was not unaware of possible risks of misuse or even abuse of those powers by administrators. But except in the very unusual and limited circumstances Congress did not contemplate a grant of jurisdiction to the courts to prevent abuse or misuse of power by prior restraint of the exercise of the powers. Instead judicial review after full hearing was accorded. While this does not preclude judicial restraint in advance of the administrative process in all circumstances, such relief is to be very sparingly applied and is limited to cases where on its face the contemplated hearing or other administrative process, if consummated, would be set aside on review on procedural grounds. 317 F.2d at 142–143.

There are however cases which recognize very narrow and extraordinary exceptions to the general rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies. Plaintiffs contend that the present action falls within the limited exceptions carved out of the exhaustion doctrine by the cases. Although most of the exceptions have been established in labor cases, the principles established are equally as applicable to actions before the FTC.

Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938) established that a district court did not have jurisdiction to enjoin the hearing of a case before, or to review any interlocutory order of, the National Labor Relations Board because Congress had vested the exclusive power of review in the Circuit Courts of Appeal and for the additional reason that "* * * no one is entitled to judicial relief for a supposed or threatened injury [676] until the prescribed administrative remedy has been exhausted." Myers, supra, at 50, 58 S.Ct. at 463. The Myers ruling has consistently been approved and the principle has become well established that a district court does not possess the power to police either the procedural or the substantive purity of a proceeding in progress before an agency. Bokat v. Tidewater Equipment Co., 363 F.2d 667 (5th Cir. 1966).

The Myers principle is, however, not without exceptions and case law has allowed district court interference in agency proceedings in a few narrowly circumscribed instances, all of which have been thought to be based upon "exceptional circumstances". Boire v. Miami Herald Publishing Company, 343 F.2d 17 (5th Cir. 1965).

The first exception is where the suit tenders a "public question particularly high in the scale of our national interest because of their international complexion." McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 17, 83 S.Ct. 671, 675, 9 L.Ed.2d. 547 (1963). There the court permitted review of an NLRB election order because of the international overtones involved in the Board's application of the National Labor Relations Act to foreign maritime crews. In the present case, there is no international implication or urgency as there was in Sociedad Nacional. Thus, the present action does not fall within this exception.

A second exception to the rule of exhaustion was fashioned by the Second Circuit in Fay v. Douds, 172 F.2d 720 (2d Cir. 1949). This exception allows a district court to assert jurisdiction where there has been a substantial showing that agency action has violated the constitutional rights of the complaining party. This exception has only limited application in the Fifth Circuit. See Boire v. Miami Herald Publishing Company, 343 F.2d. 17, 21 at n. 7 (5th Cir. 1965). Plaintiffs may be attempting to invoke this exception by alleging that by failing to join all the Coca-Cola bottlers as indispensible parties the FTC is denying them due process and basic fairness. The court finds this proposition has no merit. Since a party to a judicial action before a federal district court could not be said to be denied due process by a court's denial of a motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties, the same must hold true for a party to an administrative action. See Frito-Lay v. Federal Trade Commission 380 F.2d 8 (5th Cir. 1967).

A third exception was developed by the court in Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958). There the court permitted review of the NLRB's certification of a bargaining unit which included both professional and nonprofessional employees even though the professional employees had not consented to inclusion in the otherwise nonprofessional unit. This action was in direct defiance of an express provision of the National Labor Relations Act. The District Court, whose judgment was affirmed by the Second Circuit, held that the Board had acted in excess of its powers and set aside the Board's determination even though it was not a "final order." On appeal the Board contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In this extreme factual context the Supreme Court held that the District Court had original jurisdiction:

> This suit is not one to "review," in the sense of that term as used in the Act, a decision of the Board made within its jurisdiction. Rather it is one to strike down an order of the Board made in excess of its delegated powers and contrary to a specific prohibition in the Act. * * * Plainly, this was an attempted exercise of power that had been specifically withheld. It deprived the professional employees of a "right" assured to them by Congress. Surely, in these circumstances a Federal District Court has jurisdiction of an original suit to prevent deprivation of a right so given. 358 U.S. at 188, 189, 79 S.Ct. at 184.

Leedom could easily have opened the doors to the Federal District Courts for numerous attacks on agency action. However the exception created by Leedom [677] has remained very narrow. The narrowness of this exception was pointed out by the Fifth Circuit in United States v. Feaster, 410 F.2d 1354 (5th Cir. 1969):

> * * * Leedom v. Kyne represents only a narrow and rarely successfully invoked exception to the doctrine that exhaustion of administrative procedure is a condition precedent to federal court jurisdiction. Under this exception access to the courts is accorded only if the Mediation Board's determination is infused with error which is of a summa or magna quality as contraposed to decisions which are simply cum error. Only the egregious error melds the Board's decision into justiciability. Lesser malignancies thwart the jurisdiction of the courts. (cases cited) at 1368.

In the present action there is no statutory prohibition or provision of the Federal Trade Commission Act which the FTC is alleged to have violated. Even if on review by the Court of Appeals it was found that the FTC should have joined all the bottlers as indispensable parties, the FTC's failure to do so is not such an abuse by it that it is obvious on its face that it has acted incorrectly. Even if it was, the court does not believe that this is the kind of agency action protected against by the Leedom exception. Accordingly the court finds that the present action does not fall within this exception.

A fourth exception is recognized by the Fourth Circuit. In Deering-Milliken Inc. v. Johnston, 295 F.2d 856 (4th Cir. 1961), an action was brought pursuant to Section 10(e) of the Administrative Procedure Act [5 U.S.C. § 1009(e)] to compel agency action wrongfully withheld. The Court concluded that Section 6(a) of the Administrative Procedure Act [5 U.S.C. § 1005(a)] gave the complaining party a "specific statutory right" to have his hearing concluded with reasonable dispatch and that, as judicial review to prevent delay was adequate only through district court intervention, a district court was vested with the power to act. Delay on the part of the agency was considered implicitly to constitute exhaustion of administrative remedies. This exception has no application to the present case since there has been no delay on the part of the FTC.

The Court has also considered the other cases relied on by plaintiffs such as: McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194 (1969); Skinner & Eddy Corp. v. United States, 249 U.S. 557, 39 S.Ct. 375, 63 L.Ed. 772 (1919); Jewel Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 432 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970); Davis v. Secretary, Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, 386 F.2d 429 (4th Cir. 1967); Wolf Corp. v. Securities Exchange Commission, 115 U.S.App.D.C. 75, 317 F.2d 139 (1963); The Coca-Cola Company v. Federal Trade Commission (N.D.Ga.1972), Civil Action No. 15436; Lehigh Portland Cement Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 291 F.Supp. 628 (E.D.Va.1968); Union Bag—Camp Paper Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 233 F.Supp. 660 (S.D.N.Y.1964); Yanish v. Wixon, 81 F. Supp. 499 (N.D.Cal.1948). None of these cases creates any new exception or broadens any of the above exceptions.

Thus, this court has been unable to find any case which has broadened the exhaustion doctrine to the point where the denial of a motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties by an administrative agency can amount to the kind of agency action which will create jurisdiction in a Federal District Court to grant review or relief of any kind.

This court has been unable to find jurisdiction in either the statutory law or the case law to entertain the present action. Thus, the answers to the questions before the court as to when review of the FTC action is available and by whom the FTC's action is reviewable, are at the time any cease-and-desist order is reviewed and that review must be by the Court of Appeals.

Accordingly, defendant's motion to dismiss is hereby granted.

It is so ordered.

NABISCO, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 25231—F.T.C. Docket 5013

(United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, May 19, 1972)

1. COMMISSION WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO MODIFY CONSENT ORDER UNILATERALLY.

   Federal Trade Commission was without authority to unilaterally modify consent cease and desist order.

2. INVALIDITY OF MODIFYING ORDER ALSO INVALIDATES SUBSEQUENT ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDING.

   Where order of Federal Trade Commission purporting to modify cease and desist order was invalid, subsequent enforcement proceedings were also invalid.

3. COMMISSION COULD MODIFY ORDER BY FILING NEW COMPLAINT CHALLENGING PRICING SCHEDULES OR BY VALID PROCEDURAL MEANS.

   Federal Trade Commission could seek modification of consent cease and desist order through valid procedural means or could challenge petitioner's pricing schedules by filing of new complaint.

4. COURT WILL NOT REMAND CASE TO DETERMINE WHETHER LACK OF COMPETITIVE INJURY WAS A DEFENSE TO PRICE DISCRIMINATION CHARGES.

   Where appeal from Federal Trade Commission was born entirely of invalid enforcement proceedings, court would not remand for hearings to determine whether under antecedent order lack of competitive injury was contemplated as defense to price discrimination charges.

5. COURT WILL NOT SPECULATE AS TO WHICH REGULATIONS MIGHT BE APPLICABLE IN NEW COMMISSION PROCEEDINGS.

   Court of Appeals would not speculate as to which Federal Trade Commission rules and regulations might be applicable in event Commission instituted new proceedings against petitioner under Robinson-Patman Act.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 459 F.2d 1023).

Following a remand, Court held the Commission was without authority to unilaterally modify consent order. Modified order set aside and enforcement proceedings discontinued, cease and desist order reinstated.

J. Randolph Wilson, Geoffrey R. W. Smith, Washington, D. C., for petitioner.

J. B. Truly, Asst. Gen. Counsel, Thomas F. Howder, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Miles J. Brown, Attys., Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Comm., Washington, D. C., for respondent.

---

* Reported in 459 F.2d 1023 (1972). For case before Commission see 38 F.T.C. 213, 50 F.T.C. 932, and 81 F.T.C. 196.

Before RIVES, BELL and MORGAN, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM:

[1024] This appeal arises out of the mandate of this court which was issued in connection with a prior appeal. We refer to our opinion therein for a statement of the background facts and circumstances. National Biscuit Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 5 Cir., 1968 400 F.2d 270.

Briefly, the case may be stated as follows. In 1967 the FTC instituted proceedings against Nabisco to enforce a 1954 modification of a 1944 consent cease and desist order. The 1954 modification had been unilaterally implemented by the Commission, apparently to abrogate Nabisco's claimed right under the 1944 order to use lack of competitive injury as a defense to price discrimination charges.

Nabisco challenged the validity of the 1967 proceedings in this court. We concluded that the validity of those proceedings turned on the threshold question of whether the 1944 order was in fact a consent order. The court also noted the presence of additional issues:

> Additional issues involve the propriety of the Commission's actions measured by the criteria governing the modification of orders under Section 11 of the Clayton Act, prior to its amendment in 1959, and the propriety of the Commission's orders related to the persent enforcement proceedings as measured by the Commission's rules of practice and the Administrative Procedure Act. Finally, the peripheral but substantively basic issue concerning cost justification and competitive effects of Nabisco's discount schedule remains unanswered. 400 F.2d at 274.

After noting that no FTC hearings had been held in connection with any of these issues, we stayed the 1967 proceedings and remanded the case to the FTC "for such hearings as may be indicated" by the court's opinion.

On remand, the Commission limited the hearings solely to the question whether the 1944 order was a consent order. The hearing examiner answered the question in the affirmative. The FTC acquiesced in that finding and certified the record of the hearings to this court, thus precipitating the present case.

[1] Nabisco asks that we remand this case once again and that we instruct the Commission to hold hearings to resolve the additional issues noted supra in our prior opinion. Since we agree that the 1944 order constitutes a consent order, the 1954 modification is without validity. Viewed in that light, we are persuaded that the additional issues are not ripe for consideration, either by this court or by the FTC.

[2] The first additional issue was the propriety of the 1954 modification by the FTC, measured by the criteria governing modification. That modification has now been declared invalid. Similarly, there is no need to inquire into the propriety of the Commission's orders related to the 1967 enforcement proceedings since those proceedings were also invalid. Only if the Commission had determined that the 1944 order was not a consent order would resolution of these two issues be necessary.

[3, 4] The only question left unresolved has to do with cost justification and the competitive effects of Nabisco's discount schedules which are on file with the FTC. That issue is live in one sense. The Commission may bring a new action, either to modify the 1944 consent decree through valid procedural means or to challenge the Nabisco pricing schedules by the filing of a new complaint. See Federal Trade Commission v. Jantzen, Inc., 1967, 386 U.S. 228, 235, 87 S.Ct. 998, 18 L.Ed.2d 11. In either event, the question whether lack of competitive effect may be asserted as a defense under the 1944 consent order will be aired. The issue raised in the 1967 proceedings was not whether such a defense was available under the 1944 order but whether it was cognizable under the 1954 modification. Since this appeal is born entirely of the 1967 proceedings, now invalid, we will not remand the case for hearings to determine whether, under the 1944 order, lack of competitive injury was contemplated [1025] as a defense to price discrimination charges.

[5] Nor will we rule, as Nabisco asks, on which of the FTC rules and regulations would be applicable in the event the FTC institutes new proceedings against Nabisco. It may be that no further action will be taken. We can only speculate as to the form of the additional proceedings if additional proceedings are instituted. Only in the context of concrete litigation can this court determine which Commission rules and regulations are applicable.

In sum, we dissolve the order of this court heretofore entered which stayed the 1967 proceedings. The 1954 modification of the 1944 order will be vacated and set aside and the 1944 order reinstated as a consent order. It follows that the FTC will discontinue all action against Nabisco which has been taken pursuant to the 1967 proceedings and that those proceedings will be dismissed.

It is so ordered. 15 U.S.C.A. § 21(a).

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. H. R. GIBSON, SR., ET AL.*

No. 71-3080—F.T.C. File 691 0058

(United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, May 19, 1972)

1. REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1949 DOES NOT GRANT UNCONSTITUTIONAL DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWERS OF CONGRESS TO THE PRESIDENT.

   Reorganization Act of 1949 permitting reorganization plans which authorizes any officer to delegate any of his functions where appropriate does not grant an unconstitutional delegation of legislative powers of Congress to the President.

2. ISSUANCE OF SUBPOENAS DUCES TECUM WAS PROPERLY DELEGATED TO ASSISTANT ATTORNEYS IN 11 F.T.C. FIELD OFFICES BY REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 4.

   Authority to issue investigative subpoenas duces tecum was properly and unequivocally delegated to the assistant attorneys in charge of the 11 Federal Trade Commission field offices by an order of the Commission whose power to make such delegation was derived from Reorganization Plan No. 4, contrary to claim of parties that the subpoenas issued and signed by an assistant attorney were invalid on ground that only members of Commission could validly sign and issue subpoenas.

3. POWER TO SUBPOENA WITNESSES AND DOCUMENTS NECESSARILY ENTAILED POWER TO SIGN THE SUBPOENAS.

   Since power of Federal Trade Commission to require by subpoena and subpoena duces tecum the attendance and testimony of witnesses and production of documents was properly delegated to the assistant attorneys in charge of field offices, the power to require the attendance necessarily entailed power to sign [605] the subpoenas.

4. LANGUAGE OF SUBPOENA SPECIFICATIONS NEITHER AMBIGUOUS NOR IMPRECISE, AND NOT IN VIOLATION OF FOURTH AMENDMENT.

   Review of specifications in subpoena duces tecum issued by Federal Trade Commission in connection with investigation of pricing policies of company and its franchisees showed the language thereof was neither ambiguous nor imprecise on its face and left no doubt about identity of documents whose disclosure was sought, despite claim that specifications were so broad and indefinite as to violate Fourth Amendment.

5. INFORMATION SOUGHT BY COMMISSION RELATIVE TO POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF CLAYTON ACT WAS NOT IRRELEVANT TO INVESTIGATION.

   Examination of specifications of subpoenas duces tecum in connection with Federal Trade Commission's investigation of pricing policies of company and its franchisees in order to determine whether they have knowingly induced or received discriminations in price prohibited by Clayton Act from various suppliers of milk and dairy products disclosed that the information sought was not irrelevant to the investigation.

---

* Reported in 460 F.2d 605 (1972).

6. Whether or not Activities of Company were in Interstate Commerce is Premature on Appeal from Subpoenas.

Determination of jurisdictional issue of whether or not activities of company, for which a subpoena duces tecum was issued with regard to Federal Trade Commission investigation into its pricing policy, were in interstate commerce would be premature on appeal from order requiring compliance with the subpoenas.

7. Subpoenas Issued by Administrative Agencies are Enforceable where Evidence Establishing Interstate Commerce is in Possession of suspected Violator, and He may not Litigate Jurisdictional Issue as Defense to Subpoenas Enforcement.

Subpoenas duces tecum issued by federal administrative agencies are enforceable where evidence necessary to establish interstate nature of commerce involved is in possession of suspected violator and can only be secured by such subpoena, and hence suspected violator may not litigate jurisdictional issue as a defense to subpoena enforcement proceeding.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 460 F.2d 605)

On appeal, Court held the Commission may delegate power to issue subpoenas to its 11 assistant attorneys in its field offices, such power being delegated by Reorganization Plan No. 4.

Bardwell D. Odum, Dallas, Tex., for respondents-appellants.

Eldon B. Mahon, U.S. Atty., Dallas, Tex., Howard Shapiro, Atty., Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Nicholas S. Reynolds, Atty., Harold D. Rhynedance, Asst. Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Comm., Bruce D. Wilson, Chief, Howard Epstein, C. Coleman Bird, Consumer Affairs Section, Antitrust Div., Walker B. Comegys, Acting Asst. Atty Gen., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D. C., for petitioner-appellee.

Before AINSWORTH, GODBOLD and MORGAN, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM

This is an appeal from an order of the district court requiring that appellants H. R. Gibson, Sr., H. R. Gibson, Jr., and G. P. Gibson comply with three identical subpoenas duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission in connection with an investigation of the pricing policies of the Gibson Products Company and its franchises. Finding the arguments of appellants to be without merit, we affirm the district court's order.

I.

The subpoenas in question were issued and signed by the Assistant Attorney in Charge of the New Orleans Field Office of the FTC. Appellants contend that the subpoenas were not validly issued in that only members of the Commission may validly sign and issue subpoenas. They argue that power to sign subpoenas has been improperly delegated to lower Commission officials. We disagree.

[607] [1, 2] The authority to issue investigative subpoenas duces tecum was properly and unequivocally delegated to the Assistant Attorneys in charge of the eleven FTC field offices by a Commission order which became effective on July 1, 1970.[1] The Commission's power to make such a delegation of authority is derived from Reorganization Plan No. 4. 1961 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News, p. 1358, which provides as follows:

> In addition to its existing authority, the Federal Trade Commission hereinafter referred to as the "Commission," shall have the authority to delegate, by published order or rule, any of its functions to * * * an employee * * *.

Reorganization Plan No. 4 was promulgated by the President pursuant to the authority granted by the Reorganization Act of 1949, 5 U.S.C. § 901 et seq. That Act expressly permits reorganization plans which involve the "authorization of any officer to delegate any of his functions" where appropriate to effectuate any of the Act's purposes. 5 U.S.C. § 903(a) (5).

Appellants are aware of the existence of these statutory materials. However, they contend that the Reorganization Act of 1949 is an unconstitutional delegation of the legislative powers of Congress to the President. Since appellants cite no authorities which even remotely support this proposition, we reject the argument as being frivolous.

Secondly, appellants contend that Reorganization Plan No. 4 does not authorize the delegation of the power to "sign" subpoenas even though it concededly authorizes delegation of the power to "issue" subpoenas. As we understand the argument, it is that the power to "sign" subpoenas is a power which resides with the individual Commissioners and is not possessed by the Commission as a whole. See 15 U.S.C. § 49. Since Reorganization Plan No. 4 literally authorizes the delegation of the functions of the Commission but not of the individual Commissioners, it is said that it does not authorize delegation of the power to sign subpoenas.

[3] We conclude that this asserted distinction is unsupportable. The Commission is explicitly given the power "to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such documentary evidence relating to any matter under

---

[1] The order, published at 35 Fed.Reg. 10627 (170) provides, inter alia:
[t]he commission or any member thereof may issue a subpoena—and the attorneys in charge and assistant attorneys in charge of the Commission's Field Offices, pursuant to delegation of authority by the Commission, without power of re-delegation, also may issue investigative subpoenas, * * * (Emphasis supplied.)

investigation." 15 U.S.C. § 49. This power was properly delegated to the Assistant Attorneys in charge of the field offices. Since the power to require the attendance of witnesses by subpoena necessarily entails the power to sign the subpoena, we conclude that the power to "sign" subpoenas has also been validly delegated.

Cudahy Packing Company v. Holland, 315 U.S. 357, 62 S.Ct. 651, 86 L.Ed. 895 (1942) relied upon by appellants as supporting this argument was decided prior to the Reorganization Act of 1949. More recently, a delegation of the power to sign subpoenas which is very similar to that involved here has been approved by this court. See United States v. Marshall Durbin & Co., 363 F.2d 1 (5 Cir. 1966).

II.

[4] Appellants contend that the specifications attached to the subpoenas are so broad and indefinite as to violate the Fourth Amendment. Appellants have not, however, specified the particular language in the specifications which they regard as being vague. We have carefully reviewed the specifications. The language does not appear ambiguous or imprecise on its face nor does it leave any doubt about the identity of the [608] documents whose disclosure is sought. We conclude, therefore, that this argument is without merit. See Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 66 S.Ct. 494, 90 L.Ed. 614 (1946).

III.

[5] Appellants urge that enforcement of the subpoenas should be denied because the information and documents sought are not relevant or material to the investigation of Gibson Products Company which has been authorized by the Commission. By a resolution dated September 17, 1969, the Commission authorized an investigation of appellants' business practices to determine whether appellants may have:

> * * * knowingly induced or received discriminations in price prohibited by Section 2(a) of the amended Clayton Act from various suppliers of milk and dairy products and obtained discriminatory prices from milk and dairy products suppliers through unfair methods of competition in commerce or unfair acts or practices in commerce, and sold milk and dairy products at unreasonably low or below cost prices to the injury of competition in the retail and wholesale sale of milk and dairy products.

We have reviewed the specifications and cannot conclude that the information sought is irrelevant to this investigation. The bulk of the information sought in specification 1 is essential to determine the extent of appellants' actual control over the purchasing and selling practices of their various franchisees, licensees, and subsidiaries. Specification 2 focuses on eight stores and requests the retail prices charged for milk, as well as expenses and net profits or loss on food products broken down by departments. This request is patently relevant to the Commission's investigation of whether Gibson stores have been selling milk and milk products at unreasonably low or below cost prices to the detriment of competition.

IV.

[6] Gibson Products Company does business in 27 states. Notwithstanding this fact, appellants contend that enforcement of the subpoenas should be denied because their activities are not in interstate commerce. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 13, 45. Because a determination of this jurisdictional issue by the federal courts would be premature at this stage of the proceedings, we reject this contention.

[7] The role of the federal courts in reviewing the jurisdictional determinations of federal administrative agencies during preliminary agency investigations is a narrowly restricted one. The Supreme Court defined that role in Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 214, 66 S.Ct. 494, 508, 90 L.Ed. 614 (1946) as follows:

> We think, therefore, that the Courts of Appeals were correct in the view that Congress had authorized the Administrator, rather than the District Courts in the first instance, to determine the question of coverage in the preliminary investigation of possibly existing violations; in doing so to exercise his subpoena power for securing evidence on that question, by seeking the production of petitioner's relevant books, records and papers.

The rationale of the Oklahoma Press rule is that it allows enforcement of subpoenas where the evidence necessary to establish the interstate nature of the commerce involved is in the possession of the suspected violator and can be secured only by such a subpoena. Under this rule, appellants may not litigate the jurisdictional issue as a defense in a subpoena enforcement proceeding.

V.

We have carefully considered the numerous other contentions made by appellants and conclude that they are without merit.

Affirmed.

PEPSICO, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION *

No. 72 Civ. 1770—F.T.C. Docket 8856

(United States District Court, S.D., New York, June 2, 1972)

1. ORDINARILY FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT LACKS JURISDICTION TO REVIEW INTERLOCUTORY ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY DECISION

[397] Federal district court ordinarily lacks jurisdiction to review interlocutory administrative agency decision.

2. MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION DENIED WHERE DENIAL OF MOTION TO DISMISS BY AGENCY WAS NOT A FINAL ORDER REVIEWABLE BY FEDERAL COURTS

Federal Trade Commission's denial of motion to dismiss, for nonjoinder of individual bottlers, a proceeding brought against soft drink manufacturer allegedly engaging in unfair methods of competition was not a final order which could be reviewed by federal courts prior to termination of agency proceedings and manufacturer's motion for preliminary injunction would be denied.

3. WHERE IMPORTANT CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT HAS BEEN VIOLATED, COURT MAY GRANT REVIEW PRIOR TO END OF PROCEEDING

Where administrative agency has violated important constitutional right, court may grant judicial review prior to termination of administrative proceedings.

4. COURT MAY INTERVENE WHERE ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY ACTS IN EXCESS OF ITS DELEGATED POWERS

Where administrative agency acts in excess of its delegated powers and contrary to applicable statute, court may intervene prior to termination of administrative proceedings.

5. COURT MAY GRANT REVIEW PRIOR TO END OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS WHERE HIGH NATIONAL OR INTERNATIONAL FEATURES ARE INVOLVED

Where administrative proceeding involves question of high national interest because of international complexities, court may grant review prior to termination of administrative proceedings.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 343 F. Supp. 396)

On appeal, Court held that soft drink manufacturer's motion to dismiss case for nonjoinder of individual bottlers be denied because proceeding was not yet final.

Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays & Handler, by Milton Handler, New York City, for plaintiff.

---

*Reported in 343 F. Supp. 396 (1972). For case before the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit see 472 F.2d 179, and page 407 herein. For the case before Commission see ——— F.T.C. ———.

Whitney North Seymour, Jr., U.S. Atty., for the S.D. of New York, by Richard S. Toder, Asst. U.S. Atty., New York City, for defendants.

Hughes, Hubbard & Reed, by Robert J. Sisk, New York City, for the intervenor Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. of Corvallis, Inc.

CANNELLA, District Judge.

Plaintiff's application for a preliminary injunction, made pursuant to Rule 65(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (F.R.Civ.P.), is denied.

Defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, made pursuant to Rule 12(b) (1), F.R.Civ.P., is granted.[1]

On July 15, 1971 the Federal Trade Commission instituted proceedings against the plaintiff and other soft drink manufacturers alleging violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45), which prohibits unfair methods of competition. The complaint against the plaintiff challenges the validity of exclusive bottling agreements in effect between the plaintiff and some 513 franchised Pepsi-Cola bottlers, wherein the bottlers have agreed not to sell PepsiCo products outside of a designated territory.

In the course of the proceedings before the FTC, the plaintiff moved before the hearing examiner to dismiss the complaint for non-joinder of each of the 513 bottlers as indispensable parties. The examiner denied the plaintiff's motion, stating in part that as a practical matter it was not feasible to attempt to join all of the bottlers as parties since it would create an unmanageable situation for trial purposes and some bottlers might not be subject to jurisdiction if they operate within a small territory within a state. However, before this order was issued, the examiner indicated at a hearing that all of the bottlers were free to intervene in the proceedings.[2] [398] Three individual bottlers and the Pepsi-Cola Bottling Association, an organization representing 512 of the 513 bottlers, elected to intervene while none of the remaining 510 bottlers have sought to intervene up to this point.

On March 23, 1972 the FTC upheld the examiner's decision denying the motion to dismiss the complaint. The Commission stated, after citing numerous authorities, that it was a well established rule that third parties to a contract, the legality of which is being challenged under the antitrust laws, need not be joined in a suit against the first party.[3] Thereafter, on April 28, 1972, the plaintiff instituted this action in this District Court seeking a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief to prohibit the FTC from conducting any further proceedings against the plaintiff unless the bottlers were joined as indispensable parties.

---

[1] A motion made by Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Corvallis, Inc. to intervene in support of the application for a preliminary injunction, made pursuant to Rule 24, F.R.Civ.P., was granted without objection during oral argument. See Hearing Minutes, pp. 2–3.

[2] The examiner's order provided that the intervenors would have certain rights, within the control of the examiner, to object to questions, to cross-examine witnesses, to offer evidence, and to file proposed findings of fact and briefs. Absent, of course, would be the right of the intervenors to appeal any action taken by FTC.

The court concludes that it has no jurisdiction to consider the interlocutory order of the Federal Trade Commission because the plaintiff has not exhausted its administrative remedies.[4] In view of the absence of jurisdiction, the court takes no position on the issue of indispensable parties.

[1] It is a well settled principle of law that a federal district court ordinarily lacks jurisdiction to review interlocutory administrative agency decision.[5] See, e.g., Boire v. Greyhound Corporation, 376 U.S. 473, 84 S.Ct. 894, 11 L.Ed.2d 849 (1964); Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 303 U.S. 41, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938). One court stated the rule as follows in Wolf Corporation v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 115 U.S.App.D.C. 75, 317 F.2d 139 (1963) (Burger, J.):

> Judicial power to impose prior restraint is not called an extraordinary remedy without reason. Even as between private parties the ordinary remedy is legal action after injury. Prior restraint is granted only upon a strong showing and is subject to definite and well established limitations. Prior restraint against governmental action, regular on its face and under color of authority, is even more cautiously exerted. Still higher hurdles stand in the way of prior restraint against the processes of a regulatory body exercising quasi-judicial powers which can be judicially reviewed as a matter of right before they become final. In this third category the jurisdiction of the regulatory or administrative body is exercised within the framework of a statutory scheme in which it acts as an arm of Congress; moreover it has established patterns of procedure and acts in a context where courts have long acknowledged a considerable deference to the specialized experience and competence of such a body. To exert judicial power to stop processes of this third category, which can always be judicially reviewed when the story is fully told and recorded, is an extraordinary step in the usual as well as the legally artful sense of that word. 317 F.2d at 142–143.

---

[3] In addition, the Commission stated that Rule 19, F.R.Civ.P., even if it were applicable to administrative agency proceedings, would not change the result.

[4] In this regard, the court is in accord with a recent decision by a Georgia federal court involving the Coca-Cola Company. See Coca-Cola Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 342 F. Supp. 670 (1972). The intervening party seeks to distinguish this case but the court does not agree with its position.

[5] The plaintiff argues that Jewel Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 432 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970), has relaxed the exhaustion rule where abstract issues of law are involved. However, the crucial distinction in that case was that the aggrieved party was unable to raise the issue again from a later order of the FTC. In this case the aggrieved party will get relief from the Circuit Court rather than from one district court judge.

[399] In effect, piecemeal review of interlocutory matters should be rarely exercised.

[2] The court finds that the Commission's denial of the motion to dismiss for non-joinder is not in the nature of a final order and therefore, under the applicable statutes, it cannot be reviewed by the federal courts at this stage of the proceedings. Cf. Ritter v. Wyoga Gas & Oil Corporation, 110 F.2d 524 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 311 U.S. 669, 61 S.Ct. 29, 85 L.Ed. 430 (1940). The usual avenue for judicial review of actions taken by the Federal Trade Commission is through the courts of appeal after a final cease and desist order issues. See 15 U.S.C. § 45(c), (d). Similarly, the Administrative Procedure Act provides for judicial review of intermediate agency action only upon review of the final agency action. 5 U.S.C. § 704.

[3–5] The courts, however, have carved out certain narrowly circumscribed areas where judicial review is appropriate before the agency proceedings have terminated. One of these exceptional circumstances includes instances where an agency has very clearly violated an important constitutional right. See e.g., Herald Company v. Vincent, 392 F.2d 354 (2d Cir. 1968); Fay v. Douds, 172 F.2d 720 (2d Cir. 1949). When the agency acts in excess of its delegated powers and contrary to the applicable statute, the courts have also seen fit to intervene. See e.g., Breen v. Selective Service Local Board No. 16, 396 U.S. 460, 90 S.Ct. 661, 24 L.Ed.2d 653 (1970); Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958); Federal Trade Commission v. B. F. Goodrich Company, 100 U.S.App.D.C. 58, 242 F.2d 31 (1957); Skinner & Eddy Corporation v. United States, 249 U.S. 557, 39 S.Ct. 375, 63 L.Ed. 772 (1919). Another circumstance justifying interference in the administrative process occurs when the action involves a question of high national interest because of international complexities. See McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 83 S.Ct. 671, 9 L.Ed.2d 547 (1963).

The plaintiff argues that the Commission's refusal to join the bottlers as indispensable parties is such an exceptional circumstance which would allow this court to entertain jurisdiction. More specifically, the plaintiff claims, inter alia, that the bottlers, who are facing serious business uncertainty, are threatened with the deprivation of valuable contract and property rights without due process of law. In addition, the plaintiff urges that the question of joinder should be resolved at this point rather than waste a great deal of time and expense by raising the issue when a final order is issued. The court has considered all the arguments and concludes that there are no substantial grounds based upon the exceptions developed by case law to warrant the extraordinary exercise of jurisdiction by this court.

In support of its contention that the court has jurisdiction, the plaintiff cites American Communications Association v. United States, 298 F.2d 648 (2d Cir. 1962) and Interstate Broadcasting Company v. United States, 109 U.S.App.D.C. 255, 286 F.2d 539 (1960) which involved proceedings before the Federal Communications Commission in which certain parties were denied the right to intervene. These cases held that immediate review was desirable so that the intervenors could be heard from the start in order to advance the public interest. Clearly this is not the situation presented in this case since the bottlers have not been deprived of their rights to intervene in the FTC proceedings.

The plaintiff, citing the Supreme Court's decision in McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194 (1969), also contends that this court should exercise jurisdiction since the Commission's administrative expertise is not involved and judicial review would not be significantly aided by an additional administrative decision. However, the Court, in McKart, emphasized that the administrative process [400] was at an end and that the defendant was faced with a criminal prosecution. Moreover, in the case at bar, it cannot be assumed that judicial review will not be enhanced by allowing the administrative process to be completed. In addition, it is conceivable that the Commission could alter its position or refuse to issue a cease and desist order, in which case there would be no need for judicial review. See Sterling Drug Inc. v. Federal Trade Commision, 450 F.2d 698, 711 (D.C.Cir. 1971).

In view of the foregoing, the plaintiff's application for a preliminary injunction is denied; the defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint is granted.

So ordered.

UNITED STATES v. LITTON INDUSTRIES, INC.*

No. 72-1001.—F.T.C. File 691 0629

(United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, June 15, 1972
As Amended on Denial of Rehearing July 28, 1972)

1. COMMISSION INVESTIGATIVE ORDER MAY BE CONTESTED ON GROUNDS THAT IT IS BEYOND SCOPE OF AUTHORITY OR THAT IT IS VAGUE OR IRRELEVANT
   In an enforcement proceeding under the Federal Trade Commission

---

* Reported in 462 F.2d 14 (1972).

Act, a defendant may contest a Federal Trade Commission investigative order on the grounds that the inquiry is not within the agency's scope of authority, that the order is too vague or that it seeks irrelevant information.

2. APPEALS COURT MAY DECIDE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF DISTRICT COURT ORDER FOR DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION IN MERGER CASE

On appeal from district court order which directed corporation to comply with Federal Trade Commission orders for disclosure of information to aid the F.T.C. in its investigation of conglomerate corporation mergers, Court of Appeals could decide whether the investigative orders were unconstitutional on their face.

3. DUE PROCESS NOT VIOLATED WHERE COMMISSION WAS CONDUCTING OVERLAPPING INVESTIGATIVE AND ADJUDICATIVE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST SAME CORPORATION

Orders of Federal Trade Commission directing corporation to disclose information to aid the F.T.C. in its investigation of conglomerate corporation mergers did not violate the due process clause because the F.T.C. was conducting simultaneous overlapping investigative and adjudicative proceedings against the same corporation.

4. COMBINATION OF INVESTIGATIVE AND JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS WITHIN AN AGENCY DOES NOT VIOLATE DUE PROCESS

The combination of investigative and judicial function within an agency does not, of itself, violate due process.

5. ADMINISTRATIVE IRREGULARITY NOT PRESUMED BY RELIANCE ON IMPROPER EVIDENCE IN PENDING ADJUDICATIVE CASE

Courts do not presume administrative irregularity by the reliance upon improper evidence in pending adjudicative proceedings.

6. DEFENDANT IN ACTION TO ENFORCE COMMISSION DISCOVERY ORDER NOT ENTITLED TO ENGAGE IN COUNTERDISCOVERY

In an action to enforce Federal Trade Commission discovery order, the defendant is not entitled to engage in counterdiscovery in order to find grounds for resisting the order.

7. ONLY IN "EXCEPTIONAL" CASE OF ADMINISTRATIVE PREJUDICE WILL COURT INTERRUPT AN AGENCY ADJUDICATIVE HEARING

The courts do not normally consider assertions of administrative bias prior [15] to the completion of an adjudicative proceeding; only in the "exceptional" case where the court is presented with undisputed allegation of fundamental administrative prejudice will the court interrupt the progress of the agency adjudicative hearing.

8. RESPONDENT'S CONTENTION THAT COMMISSION'S CONDUCT AS BOTH ADJUDICATIVE AND INVESTIGATIVE WAS PREMATURE AND NOT PROPERLY BEFORE COURT.

Where corporation had not yet furnished the Federal Trade Commission the information which corporation predicted would prove prejudicial to its position in pending divestiture proceeding, corporation's contention that the conduct of simultaneous adjudicative and investigative proceedings by the F.T.C. deprived corporation of due process in that the F.T.C. might consider evidence compiled by its staff from the investigative proceedings in the adjudicative proceeding was premature and not properly before the district court proceeding for enforcement of disclosure orders.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 462 F.2d 14.)

On appeal Court held that FTC orders did not violate the due process clause because FTC was conducting simultaneous overlapping investigative and adjudicative proceedings against same corporation.

John R. McDonough (argued), of Ball, Hunt, Hart, Brown & Baerwitz, Beverly Hills, Cal., Theodore F. Craver (argued), Beverly Hills, Cal., Israel B. Greene, Newark, N.J., Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton, Los Angeles, Cal., J. Wallace Adair, Washington, D.C., for appellant.

Gerald Harwood, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr. (argued), Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Comm., Washington, D.C., Howard E. Shapiro, Walker E. Comegys, Acting Asst. Atty. Gen., Washington, D.C., Robert L. Meyer, U.S. Atty., Frederick M. Brosio, Jr., Larry M. Dier, Asst. U.S. Attys., Los Angeles, Cal., for appellee.

Before KOELSCH, BROWNING, and GOODWIN, Circuit Judges.

ALFRED T. GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Litton Industries, Inc., appeals from a district court order directing Litton to comply with Federal Trade Commission (FTC) orders for the disclosure of information to aid the FTC in its investigation of conglomerate corporation mergers.

The FTC issued its orders pursuant to Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 46.[1] Upon Litton's refusal to comply, the FTC requested the Attorney General to seek judicial enforcement pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49.[2] He did so. After a minor modification of the request, which is not here relevant, the district court ordered Litton to produce the desired information. Litton appealed, and was granted a stay pending our decision. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. The order is affirmed and the stay is vacated.

---

[1] U.S.C. § 46(b) empowers the FTC:

"* * * to require, by general or special orders, corporations engaged in commerce * * * to file with the commission * * * special, reports * * * furnishing to the commission such information as it may require as to the [corporation's] organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations * * *."

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 49 provides in pertinent part:

"Upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the commission, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person or corporation to comply with the provisions of sections 41–46 * * * of this title or any order of the commission made in pursuance thereof."

The FTC, on July 2, 1968, adopted a resolution directing an investigation of the social and economic consequences of corporate mergers in the United States. The investigation was specifically directed toward Litton and eight other corporations.

On January 2, 1969, the FTC issued to the nine corporations subpoenas duces tecum and orders requiring the filing of special reports. Litton moved in the FTC to quash or limit the subpoena and order, contending that the information [16] sought was both irrelevant and confidential.

While that motion was pending in the general investigation of "bigness," the FTC filed a separate divestiture complaint against Litton under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. In the Section 7 proceeding, the FTC seeks divestiture of two recently acquired German typewriter companies.

Upon commencement of the divestiture proceeding, Litton supplemented, in the investigative proceeding, its pending motion to quash the FTC discovery order, arguing that Litton should be excluded from the general investigation because the divestiture proceeding had been filed. The FTC denied Litton's motion, leaving two proceedings, one investigative and one adjudicative, in progress before the FTC.

On February 3, 1972, the examiner in the divestiture proceeding concluded that Litton's typewriter-manufacturing acquisitions did not violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act. That conclusion is now before the FTC for administrative review.

In defense of its refusal to comply with the FTC investigative orders, Litton made two arguments in the district court:

First, Litton contended that Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act cannot, consistent with the Fifth Amendment's due process clause, authorize the FTC to conduct simultaneous overlapping investigative and adjudicative proceedings against the same corporation. We will call this the "unconstitutional-on-its-face" defense.

Second, Litton argued that the disclosure orders are unconstitutional as applied, in the factual circumstances of this case. As a related issue, Litton also argues that it is entitled to engage in discovery in order to substantiate its allegations related to its "unconstitutional-as-applied" defense.

The FTC argues that both of Litton's defenses lack merit, and that, in any event, they are premature. If the FTC rules in Litton's favor in the divestiture case, Litton's protests will be moot. See

Public Utilities Commission of State of California v. United States, 355 U.S. 534, 539–540, 78 S.Ct. 446, 2 L.Ed.2d 470 (1958); Allen v. Grand Cent. Aircraft Co., 347 U.S. 535, 74 S.Ct. 745, 98 L.Ed. 933 (1954). The FTC urges, therefore, that Litton's due process defenses can be raised, if at all, only on appeal from an adverse adjudicative order pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 21.[3]

[1–3] In an enforcement proceeding pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49, a defendant may contest an FTC investigative order on the grounds that the inquiry is not within the agency's scope of authority, that the order is too vague, or that it seeks irrelevant information. United States v. Morton Salt, 338 U.S. 632, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950); Okla. Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 327 U.S. 186, 66 S.Ct. 494, 90 L.Ed. 614 (1946). Litton argues that the FTC's investigative orders are not within the FTC's constitutional scope of authority. This "unconstitutional-on-its-face" defense presents a single question of law which may be decided on the present record. Like the district court, we reject the contention. See Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C., 445 F.2d 1382, 1388 (5th Cir. 1971); Lehigh Portland Cement v. F.T.C., 291 F.Supp. 628, 632 (E.D.Va. 1968), aff'd, 416 F.2d 971 (4th Cir. 1969).

[4] The combination of investigative and judicial functions within an agency does not, of itself, violate due process. Federal Trade Com'n. v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 700–702, 68 S.Ct. 793, 92 L.Ed. 1010 (1948); San Francisco Mining Exch. v. Securities & Exchange [17] Com'n, 378 F.2d 162, 167 (9th Cir. 1967); Pangburn v. C.A.B., 311 F.2d 349 (1st Cir. 1962).

From the provision of the Administrative Procedure Act which prohibits the same person from investigating and rendering a decision in the same matter, Congress has expressly excluded "the agency * * * or a member or members of the body comprising the agency." 5 U.S.C. § 554(d) (1966), formerly 5 U.S.C. § 1004 (1964).

[5] The FTC's ex-parte reliance, in the pending adjudicative proceeding, upon evidence obtained outside that proceeding's record would, of course, present due process problems. Republic Aviation Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 324 U.S. 793, 799–800, 65 S.Ct. 982, 89 L.Ed. 1372 (1945); San Francisco Mining Exch. v. Securities & Exchange Com'n., 378 F.2d at 168. However, acceptance of Litton's unconstitutional-as-applied argument would require this court to indulge in a presumption that the FTC will,

---

[3] 15 U.S.C. § 21 provides, inter alia, that whenever the FTC orders a corporation to cease and desist from violating Section 7 of the Clayton Act the corporation may obtain review of such order in the United States Court of Appeals for the Circuit where the violation occurred or where the corporation resides or does business.

or will be likely to, rely upon improper evidence. Courts do not presume such administrative irregularity. National Labor Relations Board v. Donnelly Garment Co., 330 U.S. 219, 229, 67 S.Ct. 756, 91 L.Ed. 854 (1947); Securities and Exchange Com'n. v. R. A. Holman & Co., 116 U.S.App.D.C. 279, 323 F.2d 284 (1963).

Litton contends that it presented the district court with alleged "facts" which, if true, would establish that the Commission's simultaneous proceedings at least violate due process in the circumstances of this case. Litton alleged, in substance, that the FTC would consider evidence compiled by its staff from the investigative proceedings as "background" information in the adjudicative proceeding. Litton alleged further that it would have no opportunity to know what the staff report and data contained. Finally, Litton alleged that one FTC member, Commissioner Jones, had been substantially involved in, and necessarily would be prejudiced by, the investigation. The district court denied Litton's efforts to discover evidence to support these claims.

[6] In an action to enforce an FTC discovery order under 15 U.S.C. § 49, the defendant is not entitled to engage in counter-discovery to find grounds for resisting the order. See Genuine Parts Co. v. F.T.C., supra; F.T.C. v. Browning, 140 U.S.App.D.C. 292, 435 F.2d 96 (1970). See also United States v. Newman, 441 F.2d 165, 169 (5th Cir. 1971).

[7] The courts do not normally consider assertions of administrative bias prior to the completion of an adjudicative proceeding. Securities and Exchange Com'n. v. R. A. Holman & Co., supra. Only in the "exceptional" case where the court is presented with undisputed allegations of fundamental administrative prejudice will the court interrupt the progress of the adjudicative hearing. Amos Treat & Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 113 U.S.App.D.C. 100, 306 F.2d 260 (1962).

[8] Litton's case is not "exceptional" within the meaning of Amos Treat. Litton's allegations are purely speculative. The bias which Litton sought to establish by discovery could not have developed within the FTC, because Litton has not yet furnished the FTC the very information which, Litton predicts, could prove prejudicial to its position in the divestiture proceedings.

Since the courts do not presume administrative irregularity, National Labor Relations Board v. Donnelly Garment Co., supra, Litton's unconstitutional-as-applied claim is presently too remote and too vague to warrant either discovery or judicial consideration. San Francisco Mining Exch. v. Securities & Exchange Com'n., 378

F.2d at 169–170. In Amos Treat, a factual record existed upon which a commissioner's prejudice could be readily established.

In Federal Home Loan Bank Bd. v. Long Beach Fed. S. & L. Ass'n., 295 F.2d 403 (9th Cir. 1961), specific allegations of bias and an offer of proof were sufficient to justify an inquiry into the alleged bias on the part of board members. But the record on the question of bias was made in the administrative hearing.

[18] Commissioner Jones, to whom Litton specifically attributes bias, has, by affidavit, sworn to consider against Litton only such evidence as is presented on the adjudicative record. Significantly, in Amos Treat the defendant's claims of administrative prejudice were not denied. See Securities and Exchange Com'n. v. R. A. Holman & Co., supra.

Absent a record to which Litton could point as establishing prima facie evidence of fraud, prejudice, or other administrative wrongdoing, this is not an Amos Treat situation. We will not speculate as to the possible states of the Commissioners' minds during the pending decisional process. United States v. Morgan, 313 U.S. 409, 422, 61 S.Ct. 999, 85 L.Ed. 1429 (1941); National Labor Relations Bd. v. Botany Worsted Mills, 106 F.2d 263, 267 (3rd Cir. 1939); San Francisco Mining Exch. v. Securities & Exchange Com'n., 378 F.2d at 168. If we were to presume anything, we would presume administrative regularity. Due process will be served at the adjudication's conclusion if Litton appeals from an adverse FTC order. 15 U.S.C. § 21. At such time, Litton will have available a complete factual record upon which to base its claims that individual commissioners were prejudiced and that they relied upon information received by them outside the adjudicative record. Cinderella Career and Finishing Schools, Inc. v. F.T.C., 138 U.S. App.D.C. 152, 425 F.2d 583 (1970); Sperry and Hutchinson Company v. F.T.C., 256 F.Supp. 136 (S.D.N.Y.1966); R. H. Macy & Company v. Tinley, 249 F.Supp. 778, 783 (D.D.C.1966).

Litton, therefore, must await the event rather than attempt to anticipate it. Securities and Exchange Com'n. v. R. A. Holman & Co., supra; National Lawyers Guild v. Brownell, 96 U.S.App.D.C. 252, 225 F.2d 552, 555 (1966), cert. denied, 351 U.S. 927, 76 S.Ct. 778, 100 L.Ed. 1457 (1956).

In the circumstances of this case, Litton's "as-applied" due process defense was premature, and was thus not properly before the district court. That court, therefore, did not abuse its discretion by denying Litton's discovery motion.

Affirmed.

UNITED STATES v. ITT CONTINENTAL BAKING COMPANY *

Nos. 72–1072, 72–1073—F.T.C. Docket 8309

(United States Court of Appeals, Tenth Circuit, July 12, 1972)

1. Civil Actions for Imposition of Monetary Penalties are not Appealable Directly to Supreme Court Under the Expediting Act

   Under Expediting Act to effect that in every civil action brought in any district court under acts relating to monopolies and combinations, wherein United States is complainant, an appeal from final judgment of district court will lie only to the Supreme Court, civil actions brought by United States for imposition of monetary penalties are not appealable directly to Supreme Court.

2. Granting Injunctive Relief to Remedy Three Violations of F.T.C. Order Did Not Divest Court of Appeals of Jurisdiction

   Fact that injunctive relief was granted along with monetary penalties in action by United States against violations of Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order did not divest Court of Appeals of jurisdiction to hear appeal and case was not appealable under Expediting Act only to the Supreme Court.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 462 F.2d 1104.)

On appeal, Court held that fact the injunctive relief was granted along with monetary penalties did not divest Court of Appeals and case was not appealable to the Supreme Court under the Expediting Act. Motion to dismiss denied.

George Edelstein, Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff-appellant.

Gerald P. Norton, Washington, D.C. (John H. Schafer, III, Washington, D.C., and Robert F. Welborn, Denver, Colo., on the brief), for defendant-appellee.

Before HILL and BARRETT, Circuit Judges, and LANGLEY, District Judge.

HILL, Circuit Judge.

[1105] This appeal is from a final judgment of the United States District Court for the District of Colorado in a civil action commenced by the United States against ITT Continental Baking Company to remedy three alleged violations of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order.

---

* Reported in 462 F.2d 1104 (1972). For case before the Commission, see 64 F.T.C. 1079, 66 F.T.C. 1222.

In 1960 the FTC issued a complaint charging that Continental Baking Company (predecessor of ITT Continental Baking Company) had violated § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act by acquiring a number of bakeries. The parties terminated this litigation by agreeing to a cease and desist order which forbad acquisition by Continental of other baking concerns for a ten-year period without prior FTC appoval.

In 1965 and 1966, Continental entered into transactions with three firms engaged in the production and sale of bread. These transactions provided that the three firms would discontinue producing bread and would become exclusive distributors of bread produced by Continental. Two of the firms were acquired outright by Continental; the third firm continued to operate as an exclusive distributor of bread produced by Continental. In June, 1968, Continental and International Telephone and Telegraph agreed to merge; the merger was completed by September, 1968.

The instant action was instituted by the United States in December, 1968; the trial court entered judgment on August 2, 1971. The trial judge found that the two direct acquisitions were violations of the FTC cease and desist order, and imposed the maximum penalty of $5,000 for each of the two acquisitions. The third transaction was adjudged to be non-violative of the order. The United States requested an injunction commanding compliance with the Commission's order, which was granted, but injunctive relief requiring ITT Continental to divest itself of the assets unlawfully acquired was denied. The government appeals and ITT Continental cross-appeals.

The appellee has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that under the Expediting Act, 15 U.S.C. § 29, this appeal lies only to the Supreme Court, and this Court thus lacks jurisdiction. The Expediting Act provides:

> In every civil action brought in any district court of the United States under any of said Acts, wherein the United States is complainant, an appeal from the final judgment of the district court will lie only to the Supreme Court.

ITT Continental contends that the instant appeal falls squarely within the language of the Expediting Act.

[1] This is a question of first impression in this Circuit. An examination of cases dealing with like appeals in other circuits convinces us that it would be inconsistent with the intent of the Expediting Act to construe the words "in every civil action" to make civil actions brought by the United States for the imposition of monetary penalties to be appealable directly to the Supreme Court. The Second Circuit has specifically so held in United States

v. New York, N.H. & H. R.R. Co., 276 F.2d 525 (2d Cir. 1957). See also United States v. St. Regis Paper Co., 285 F.2d 607 (2d Cir. 1960). Although the question of jurisdiction was not discussed therein, four other circuits have decided appeals in like cases in which monetary penalties were sought by the United States. United States v. Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Co., 288 F.2d 257 (3d Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 821, 82 S.Ct. 38, 7 L.Ed.2d 26; Am. Greetings Corp. v. United States, 272 F.2d 945 (6th Cir. 1959); Mueller v. United States, 262 F.2d 443 (5th Cir. 1958); United States v. Lowenthal, 248 F.2d 397 (7th Cir. 1957).

[2] We are not persuaded that the grant of injunctive relief along with the imposition of the monetary penalties divests this Court of jurisdiction to hear this appeal. Although jurisdiction was [1106] not an issue, two circuits have decided appeals from decisions in civil actions brought by the United States for monetary penalties and injunctive relief. Herbold Laboratory, Inc. v. United States, 413 F.2d 342 (9th Cir. 1969); United States v. Vitasafe Corp. 352 F.2d 62 (2d Cir. 1965). Jurisdiction of appeals in civil penalty cases, even where injunctive relief is additionally sought, lies in the courts of appeal.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

TYSONS CORNER REGIONAL SHOPPING CENTER, ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, ET AL.*

Civil Action No. 1125–72—F.T.C. Docket 8886

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, July 13, 1972)

A bureau director's participation in a case against respondent prior to his appointment to the F.T.C. is not a procedural infirmity warranting intervention by this court in an incompleted proceeding. Standard of Conduct Sec. 0.735–10 was not violated. Since plaintiffs would not be irreparably injured, the proceeding will go forward, the court denying a preliminary injunction.

George W. Wise, Washington, D.C., for Tysons Corner Regional Shopping Center and Woodward and Lothrop, Inc.; James C. McKay, Washington, D.C., for May Dept. Stores Co., for plaintiffs.

Harold H. Titus, Jr., Joseph M. Hannon, Gil Zimmerman and Ronald M. Dietrich, Washington, D.C., for defendants.

PRATT, District Judge.

---

* Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶74,091, at 92,487 (1972 Trade Cases). Appeal to Court of Appeals denied, July 24, 1972. For case before Commission see 83 F.T.C. 1598, 85 F.T.C. 970, modified 86 F.T.C. 921.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

This matter having come before the Court on plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction and on defendants' opposition thereto; defendants also having suggested pursuant to Rule 12(h) (3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that the Court now dismiss the action for lack of jurisdiction; upon consideration of the foregoing, the complaint, exhibits and other papers of record and the Court having heard oral argument in open Court on July 7, 1972, the Court viewing the allegations in the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiffs' claims, makes the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Plaintiffs are respondents in an adjudicative proceeding presently pending before the Federal Trade Commission ("Commission") under FTC Docket No. 8886. The complaint which initiated the FTC proceeding was issued on May 8, 1972. The administrative complaint, in general, charges that Tysons Corner Regional Shopping Center ("Tysons") is one of the nation's largest regional shopping centers, and that May Department Store Company ("May Company") through its subsidiary the Hecht Company, and Woodward and Lothrop, Inc. ("Woodward") are large department store operators in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area and that they are major tenants of Tysons. The complaint further charges that May Company and Woodward, in leasing store space at Tysons, induced Tysons to execute leases with them which included provisions giving May Company and Woodward the power, individually, to exclude competitors from leasing store space at Tysons, and the power to exercise control over the conduct of the business operations of other tenants of Tysons, and that City Stores Company, operator of Lansburgs' department stores, subsequently also executed a similar lease with the knowledge and consent of May Company and Woodward. The complaint finally charges that such lease provisions restrain competition in the retail distribution of goods and services, and that the execution of these lease provisions and their enforcement by each of the parties to the leases are unfair mehods of competition prohibited by Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45.

2. The Commission's complaint followed an investigation by the Commission of restrictive leasing practices at Tysons Corner Regional Shopping Center. The investigation was conducted by the Commission's Bureau of Competition, in connection with its general investigation of restrictive leasing practices in shopping centers. A complaint was issued at the same time (FTC Docket No. 8885) against Gimbel Brothers, Inc., for engaging in similar restrictive leasing practices in leasing store space in other regional shopping centers throughout the country.

3. Mr. Allen S. Ward is presently the Director of the Bureau of Competition of the Federal Trade Commission and has held that position since November 1, 1970.

4. Prior to becoming director of the Commission's Bureau of Competition, Mr. Ward had been a partner in the Washington, D.C. law firm which had represented Dalmo Sales Company ("Dalmo") in an antitrust case brought by that company against plaintiffs and City Stores Company. The complaint charged that plaintiffs and City Stores Company had violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, by entering into a group boycott and preventing Dalmo from leasing store space at Tysons. Mr. Ward's activities in the litigation were limited to taking part in the decision to represent Dalmo, discussing the case and the issues with attorneys who were responsible for the litigation, reviewing one of the briefs filed by the plaintiffs, and attending the oral argument in the court of appeals. Mr. Ward shared in the fee his firm received in the litigation.

6. The Dalmo case was settled on August 3, 1970. The fee received by Mr. Ward's firm for representing Dalmo was paid and his firm's representation of Dalmo in the matter was ended before Mr. Ward left his firm and assumed his duties as Director of the Commission's Bureau of Competition.

7. Mr. Ward assumed his position as a Director of the Commission's Bureau of Competition on November 1, 1970. Prior to that time, starting on February 8, 1969, the staff of the Commission's Bureau of Competition had been conducting an inquiry of restrictive leasing practices in shopping centers, including the leases involved in leasing store space at Tysons; in July 1970, the staff of the Bureau of Competition determined that shopping center leasing practices should receive top priority in the Bureau of Competition and on September 16, 1970, the Commission was granted clearance by the Department of Justice to proceed with an investigation of Tysons. By late September or early October 1970, the attorneys in the Bureau of Competition assigned to the shopping center investigation had determined to concentrate their investigational efforts on Gimbel Brothers, Inc., and Tysons.

8. On Nevember 24, 1970, three and one-half weeks after Mr. Ward became director, the staff of the Commission's Bureau of Competition, after approximately three months of informal investigation, recommended, and Mr. Ward approved, the opening of a formal investigation under FTC File No. 711 0046, of plaintiffs' leasing practices at Tysons.

9. Thereafter, Mr. Ward had general supervision of the formal investigation as Director of the Bureau of Competition. The primary responsibility for the investigation, however, was assigned to John L. Ferguson, Assistant to Mr. Ward, who worked under the immediate supervision of Mr. Ernest G. Barnes, an Assistant Director of the Bureau. Mr. Ferguson was assisted by Commission attorneys Alan S. Ransom and Barbara Wiggs.

10. Mr. Ward was not involved in organizing the investigation, drafting requests for information, preparing the memorandum recommending a complaint or drafting the formal complaint or proposed order. His actual participation was limited to consulting with the staff at times on the progress of the investigation, and forwarding to the Commission with his approval the staff recommendation that a complaint issue against plaintiffs.

11. Upon receipt of the staff recommendation, the Commission made its own independent evaluation respecting whether this complaint should issue. Based on the evidence on file, the Commission decided that a proposed complaint should issue under the Commission's consent order procedures, 16 CFR §§ 2.31–2.35. Plaintiffs, accordingly, were notified by the Commission of its intention to institute a formal proceeding against plaintiffs, and were also served with a copy of the proposed complaint and proposed form of order.

12. On receipt of the notice of the proposed complaint and order, plaintiffs sought to have the proceeding settled by entry of a consent order.

13. Plaintiffs' initial settlement discussions were with Commission attorneys Barnes, Ransom and Wiggs. On September 2, 1971, after being unable to reach an agreement with the staff, plaintiffs' counsel requested Mr. Ward to personally take part in the consent settlement negotiations, and Mr. Ward did so.

14. Plaintiffs thereafter negotiated directly with Mr. Ward for approximately two months in an attempt to persuade Mr. Ward of the propriety of their proposed settlement, without raising any question as to Mr. Ward's qualifications to participate in the negotiations.

15. On November 1971, it became apparent that plaintiffs and the Commission's staff could not agree on a satisfactory settlement. On notice to plaintiffs by the staff, the entire file, including the staff's recommendations and plaintiffs' written proposals, was submitted to the Commission, pursuant to Section 2.34 of the Commision's Rules, 16 C.F.R. § 2.34. Also forwarded to the Commission was plaintiffs' request to Mr. Ward that they be furnished with copies of the materials submitted by the staff to the Commission concerning their written proposals so that plaintiffs might have the opportunity to comment thereon. This request had been denied by Mr. Ward on the grounds that the Commission's rules do not provide for furnishing plaintiffs with copies of the staff's comments to the Commission.

16. Thereafter and for the first time, plaintiffs, by letter dated December 14, 1971, raised the question of the propriety of Mr. Ward's participation in the proceedings. Specifically, they stated that they were concerned as to whether his participation in the matter was consistent with the Commission's Standards of Conduct as set forth in subparagraphs (d) and (f) of Section 0.735–10 of the Commission's Procedures and Rules of Practice.

17. On January 18, 1972, after meeting with Mr. Ward, plaintiffs wrote Mr. Ward and stated that they were of the opinion that Mr. Ward's participation in the case violated Section 0.735–10 of the Federal Trade Commission's Standards of Conduct, 16 C.F.R. § 0.735–10. Specifically, they asserted that Mr. Ward's conduct violated the following portions of 16 CFR § 0.735–10:

> An employee shall avoid any action, whether or not specifically prohibited by this part, which might result in, or create the appearance of:
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (d) Losing complete independence or impartiality;
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (f) Affecting adversely the confidence of the public in the integrity of the Government.

They requested Mr. Ward to join with them in an application to the Commission that the proposed complaint should be withdrawn and the entire matter be reconsidered de novo by the Commission on the basis of an evaluation by staff personnel not subject to Mr. Ward's supervision.

18. Mr. Ward replied and declined to join in any such recommendation. He did not agree that the Commission's standards of ethical conduct had been breached by his participation, or that plaintiffs had any reason to complain of his impartiality. He did, however, request them to bring the matter to the Commission for its consideration.

19. Plaintiffs moved before the Commission for withdrawal of the proposed complaint and for reconsideration of the matter de novo on the basis of an evaluation by staff personnel not subject to Mr. Ward's supervision.

20. On May 3, 1972, the Commission responded to plaintiffs' motion. By letter of the Secretary, plaintiffs were informed that the Commission had denied the motion. At the same time, the Secretary made available to plaintiffs the affidavits submitted by Mr. Ward and members of his staff regarding Mr. Ward's participation in the matter.

21. On May 12, 1972, the Commission served upon plaintiffs its formal complaint commencing the adjudicative proceeding in Docket No. 8886. In a letter accompanying the complaint the Commission stated that the Commission had given careful consideration to plaintiffs' proposed settlement and had rejected it as inadequate. The Commission denied plaintiffs' request for copies of materials filed with the Commission by the staff relating to plaintiffs' submission to the staff, and also denied plaintiffs' request filed with their written proposals for oral arguments on their written proposals and for industrywide hearings.

22. At the oral hearing before this Court on July 7, 1972, plaintiffs' counsel questioned the sufficiency of Mr. Ward's affidavit which explained his conduct in the administrative proceedings (Exhibit B to the Complaint). Mr. Ward was present in Court and the Court and counsel for defendants afforded plaintiffs' counsel the opportunity to cross-examine Mr. Ward with respect to the matters in his affidavit. Plaintiffs' counsel declined to take advantage of this opportunity to cross-examine Mr. Ward.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Plaintiffs have not demonstrated that they are likely to prevail on the merits of their complaint.

2. Plaintiffs will not be irreparably injured if a preliminary injunction is denied. Plaintiffs will have an adequate remedy in the judicial review afforded them under 15 U.S.C. § 45 of any Commission order to cease and desist.

3. The likelihood of harm to defendants, if the Commission's proceeding is stayed, and the public interest both require that the Commission's administrative proceeding in FTC Docket 8886 be allowed to go forward.

4. The procedural infirmity in the administrative proceedings alleged by plaintiffs does not present the exceptional case warranting district court intervention in the uncompleted administrative proceedings. The issue in question can be raised by plaintiffs on judicial review of a final Commission order, if a final order is issued in the administrative proceeding. No important constitutional or statutory rights of plaintiffs appear to have been violated. Upon suggestion by the defendants pursuant to Rule 12(h) (3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court will dismiss this action for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, U.S.App.D.C. 450 F.2d 698, 710–711 (1971).

Accordingly, the motion for a preliminary injunction shall be denied and the complaint shall be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, and the Court will enter an appropriate order.

ORDER

Upon consideration of plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction, defendants' opposition thereto, the complaint, exhibits and other papers of record, and a hearing having been held in open Court on July 7, 1972, and defendants having suggested pursuant to Rule 12(h)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that the Court now dismiss the action for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, and this Court having made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, it is by the Court on this 13th day of July 1972, hereby Ordered, That plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction be denied, and it is further Ordered, That pursuant to the suggestion of lack of subject matter jurisdiction made by defendants, the complaint sua sponte be, and the same hereby is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter.

GARDNER AND NORTH ROOFING AND SIDING CORPORATION v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM, ET AL.*

No. 71–1089—F.T.C. File 99–89

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, July 14, 1972)

1. Meaningful Disclosure of Credit Terms to Customers is Purpose of Truth in Lending Act

   Purpose of Truth in Lending Act is to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms to customers.

2. Broad Construction Must be Used to Effectuate the Purpose of the Truth in Lending Act

   Truth in Lending Act must be broadly construed to effectuate its purpose.

---

* Reported in 464 F.2d 838 (1972).

3. MECHANICS AND MATERIALMEN'S LIENS ATTACHED TO EVERY CONTRACT TO RENOVATE, REMODEL OR REPAIR A HOUSE

   Since a contract to renovate, remodel or repair a house imports that work will be done by mechanics and artisans and that materials will be furnished in connection with that work, implicit in contract is a provision that a lien will attach to secure payment for work and materials, and statutory provisions for mechanic's and materialmen's liens must be taken as a part of contract.

4. TRUTH IN LENDING ACT REQUIRES DISCLOSURE OF ALL CONSEQUENCES FLOWING FROM SIGNING OF A HOME IMPROVEMENT CONTRACT

   A reasonable construction of Truth in Lending Act is that Congress intended to require disclosure of all consequences flowing from signing of a home improvement contract, including not only consequences spelled out in contract, but also those necessarily inherent therein.

5. REGULATION PROVIDING THAT CUSTOMERS SHALL HAVE RIGHT WITHIN THREE DAYS TO RESCIND ANY TRANSACTION INVOLVING CUSTOMER'S RESIDENCE IS CONSISTENT WITH LEGISLATIVE PURPOSE

   Regulation which was promulgated by Federal Reserve Board pursuant to Truth in Lending Act and which provides that within three days of consummation [839] of any credit transaction in which a security interest is or will be retained or acquired in customer's residence, customer shall have right to rescind transaction and which requires creditor to notify customer of his right to rescind when there is a probability that a lien on his home will arise by operation of law even though he has not executed an indenture on property is entirely consistent with legislative purpose and is a reasonable and proper device for carrying it out.

6. LETTER WRITTEN BY CONGRESSMAN A YEAR AFTER LEGISLATION PASSED WAS NOT PART OF LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE TRUTH IN LENDING ACT.

   Scope of Truth in Lending Act is not limited to mortgages and other consensual liens but includes mechanic's, materialmen's, artisan's and other similar liens which may arise by operation of law even though obligor has not executed an indenture on property, notwithstanding fact that a Congressman indicated in a letter that much of discussion in committee and on floor focused on credit transactions involving second mortgages, where letter, written a year after legislation was passed, was not a part of legislative history and could not be considered on question of congressional intent.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 464 F.2d 838)

On appeal, Court held regulation made pursuant to Truth in Lending Act providing right of customer to cancel contract for residence repairs within three days is valid and entirely consistent with Act's legislative purpose.

Mr. Joseph J. Lyman, Washington, D.C., for appellants.

Mr. Thomas J. Press, Atty., Dept. of Justice, with whom Mr. L. Patrick Gray, III, Deputy Atty. Gen. at the time the brief was filed, Messrs. Thomas A. Flannery, U.S. Atty. at the time the brief was filed, and Alan S. Rosenthal, Atty., Dept. of Justice, were on the brief, for appellees. Messrs. Harold D. Rhyndedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, and Gerald Harwood, Atty., F.T.C., also entered appearances for appellee Federal Trade Comm.

Before LEVENTHAL and ROBB, Circuit Judges, and FRANK A. KAUFMAN,* U.S. District Judge for the District of Maryland.

ROBB, Circuit Judge:

In an action for declaratory judgment the appellants challenged as invalid a regulation promulgated by the Federal Reserve Board under the Truth in Lending Act, Title I of the Consumer Credit Protection Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq. On cross motions for summary judgment the district court upheld the validity of the regulation and dismissed the action. We affirm.

The appellant Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corporation, a New York corporation, is engaged in the business, of renovating, remodeling, reconstructing and repairing dwelling houses in and around Syracuse, New York. The appellant Surfa-Shield Corporation, a Virginia corporation, engages in a similar business in the area of Fairfax, Virginia.

In the course of the appellants' businesses their salesmen solicit homeowners to contract for the repair, renovation or modernization of their houses. Credit is extended to customers pusuant to a "deferred payment plan" under which the customer executes a promissory note, without collateral, for the amount to be charged for labor and materials. Although no mortgage is executed, the laws of New York [1] and Virginia,[2] and of many other states, give home improvement contractors a lien on the customer's home—a contractor's or mechanic's lien—at the time the work is performed.

[840] Section 125(a) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1635(a), provides:

> (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, in the case of any consumer credit transaction in which a security interest is retained or acquired in any real property which is used or is expected to be used as the residence of the person to whom credit is extended, the obligor shall have the right to rescind the transaction until midnight of the third business day following the consummation of the transaction or the delivery of the disclosures required under this section and all other material disclosures required under this part, whichever is later by notifying the creditor, in accordance with regulations of the Board of his intention to do so. The creditor shall clearly and conspicuously disclose, in accordance with regulations of the Board,

---

* Sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 292(c) (1970).

[1] N.Y. Lien Law § 3 (McKinney's Consol. Laws, c. 33 1966).

[2] Va.Code Ann. § 43-3 (1950).

> to any obligor in a transaction subject to this section the rights of the obligor under this section. The creditor shall also provide, in accordance with regulations of the Board, an adequate opportunity to the obligor to exercise his right to rescind any transaction subject to this section.

Section 105 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1604, directs the Federal Reserve Board to "prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this subchapter," and provides that:

> These regulations may contain such classifications, differentiations, or other provisions, and may provide for such adjustments and exceptions for any class of transactions, as in the judgment of the Board are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this subchapter, to prevent circumvention or evasion thereof, or to facilitate compliance therewith.

Pursuant to this authority the Board promulgated the challenged regulation. 12 C.F.R. § 226.9(a). The regulation provides that within three days of the consummation of "any credit transaction in which a security interest is or will be retained or acquired" in customers' residences, the customer shall have the right to rescind the transaction.[3] (Emphasis supplied.) In addition, the Board by regulation 12 C.F.R. § 226.2(z) defined the term "security interest" to include liens created by operation of law, such as mechanic's, materialmen's, artisan's and other similar liens.[4] The effect of these regulations is that the appellants are required to notify a customer of his right to rescind when there is a probability that a lien on his house will arise by operation of law even though he has [841] not executed an indenture on the property.

The appellants contend, as they did in the district court, that section 125(a) of the Act limits an obligor's right of rescission to transactions in which the obligor executes a mortgage or other similar indenture in favor of the creditor or lender. Conceding that the term "security interest" as used in section 125(a) is not defined and is therefore ambiguous, the appellants argue that Congress did not intend the term to include liens created by operation of law as distinguished from consensual security interests. Noting that section 125(a) speaks only of a security interest which "is retained or acquired" they assert that this language does not encompass a lien that may arise in favor of a third party not privy to the original contract. Finally, the appellants point to section 125(b), 15 U.S.C. § 1635(b), which provides that upon rescission "any security interest given by the obligor becomes void * * * ." The appellants argue that since an obligor cannot give mechanic's or materialmen's liens the statute must refer only to mortgages or other consensual liens. From all these considerations the appellants conclude that the Board's regulations relating to a security interest that "is or will be retained or acquired" are beyond its power and invalid. We are unable to agree.

---

[3] 12 C.F.R. § 226.9(a) provides in pertinent part:

(a) General rule. Except as otherwise provided in this section, in the case of any credit transaction in which a security interest is or will be retained or acquired in any real property which is used or is expected to be used as the principal residence of the customer, the customer shall have the right to rescind that transaction until midnight of the third business day, following the date of consummation of that transaction or the date of delivery of the disclosures required under this section and all other material disclosures required under this part, whichever is latre, by notifying the creditor by mail, telegram, or other writing of his intention to do so. Notification by mail shall be considered given at the time mailed; notification by telegram shall be considered given at the time filed for transmission; and notification by other writing shall be considered given at the time delivered to the creditor's designated place of business. (Footnote omitted.)

[4] 12 C.F.R. § 226.2(z) provides in pertinent part:

(z) "Security interest" and "security" mean any interest in property which secures payment or performance of an obligation. The terms include, but are not limited to, security interests under the Uniform Commercial Code, real property mortgages, deeds of trust, and other consensual or confessed liens whether or not recorded, mechanic's, materialmen's, artisan's, and other similiar liens, vendor's liens in both real and personal property, the interest of a seller in a contract for the sale of real property, any lien on property arising by operation of law, and any interest in a lease when used to secure payment or performance of an obligation.

[1] In general the purpose of the Consumer Credit Protection Act was "to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms" to consumers. 15 U.S.C. §1601. The specific purpose of section 125(a), 15 U.S.C. § 1635(a), was to protect homeowners from the unscrupulous business tactics of certain home improvement contractors. The need for such protection was emphasized in testimony before congressional committees concerning "second mortgage" racketeers who encumbered their customers' houses to secure payment for unneeded or shoddy work. There was also reference to the liens of artisans, materailmen and others arising by operation of law which could subject a consumer's property to loss by foreclosure. Witnesses told of cases in which consumers paid double for work because artisans, unpaid by an unscrupulous contractor, filed mechanic's liens.[5] All this is conceded by the appellants in their brief (App.Brief p. 18). The appellants also concede that "[i]n either instance, whether the cloud on the homeowner's title was induced by a second mortgage, or by other consensual liens of his own making, or, from liens arising by operation of law, the possibility of loss by foreclosure was evident." As we have said, however, the appellants contend that the "plain language of Section 125(a), as enacted, made rescindable only those contracts

---

[5] Hearings on S.J.Res. 130, S. 3065, and S. 3066 Before the Senate Commerce Committee, 90th Cong., 2d Sess., ser. 90-64, at 10, 42-43, 75, 241-42 (1968), in Unfair Practices in the Home Improvement Industry and Amendments to the FTC Act (1968). See H.R.Rep. No. 1397 (Conference Report), 90th Cong., 2d Sess. (1968). Regarding rescission of certain contracts, see id. at 26.

[involving] a security interest through a second mortgage or other consensual type lien."

[2] We think the appellant's construction of the statute is too narrow and technical. Being remedial legislation to protect the homeowner, the Act must be broadly construed to effectuate its purpose. Peyton v. Rowe, 391 U.S. 54, 65, 88 S.Ct. 1549, 20 L.Ed.2d 426 (1968); Tcherepnin v. Knight, 389 U.S. 332, 336, 88 S.Ct. 548, 19 L.Ed.2d 564 (1967). So construed, the statute supports the challenged regulation.

[3] A contract to renovate, remodel or repair a house imports that work will be done by mechanics and artisans and that materials will be furnished in connection with that work. Implicit in the contract, therefore, is a provision that a lien will attach to secure payment for the work and materials. In other words, the statutory provision for mechanic's [842] and materialmen's liens must be taken as a part of the contract. This conclusion is fortified by the settled rule that "the laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract * * * enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorpoated in its tems." Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 535, 550, 18 L.Ed. 403 (1866).

[4, 5] We think it a reasonable construction of the statute that Congress intended to require disclosure of all the consequences flowing from the signing of a home improvement contract, including not only the consequences spelled out in the contract, but also those necessarily inherent therein. Any other construction would expose the homeowner to hidden and perhaps fatal traps; it would lead to precisely the kind of imposition that Congress intended to prevent. Viewed in this light we think the challenged regulation is entirely consistent with the legislative purpose and is a reasonable and proper device for carrying it out.

[6] We have carefully considered the appellants' argument that the legislative history of section 125(a) of the Act indicates that Congress intended to limit its scope to mortgages and other consensual liens. Alhough it is true that much of the discussion in committee and on the floor focused on credit transactions involving second mortgages, we find nothing to indicate that Congress intended to exempt other liens from the salutary effect of the legislation. The appellants' reliance upon a letter from one congressman is misplaced. The letter, written a year after the legislation was passed, is not a part of the legislative history and cannot be considered on the question of congressional intent. See National

School of Aeronautics, Inc. v. United States, 142 F. Supp. 933, 938, 135 Ct.Cl. 343 (1956).

The Board's construction of the statute is entitled to deference, and we find nothing unreasonable in its use of its authority, under section 105 of the Act, to issue the regulation. Udall v. Tallman, 380 U.S. 1, 85 S.Ct. 792, 13 L.Ed.2d 616 (1965).

The judgment is affirmed.

UNITED STATES v. BEATRICE FOODS CO.*

No. 4–70 Civ. 459—F.T.C. Docket 6653

(United States District Court, District of Minnesota, Fourth Division, July 16, 1972)

1. WHERE MOTIVE AND INTENT ARE IMPORTANT, SUMMARY JUDGMENT IS INAPPROPRIATE

   [105] Summary judgment is inappropriate in complex antitrust cases where motive and intent are important and credibility is a factor.

2. SUMMARY JUDGMENT PROPER WHEN CASE TURNS ON DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE AND INVOLVES CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

   Where gist of case turns on documentary evidence and involves conclusions of law, summary judgment is proper.

3. DAIRY PRODUCTS DISTRIBUTOR VIOLATED F.T.C. CONSENT ORDER WHEN IT ACQUIRED FIVE-YEAR LICENSE AND RIGHTS OF ANOTHER DISTRIBUTOR

   Distributor and processor of dairy products "acquired" an "interest," in violation of Federal Trade Commission consent order requiring that such processor cease and desist from acquiring, directly or indirectly, any interest in any firm engaged in distributing retail milk, by group of transactions with another milk distributor consisting of five-year license for use of other distributor's label and assignment of other distributor's rights under notes, distributorship agreements, sales contracts and factor's liens.

4. IN CIVIL ENFORCEMENT ACTION COURT SHOULD LOOK TO PURPOSE OF ORDER AND WHAT IT INTENDED TO ACCOMPLISH

   Court, in civil enforcement action brought at instance of Federal Trade Commission for alleged violations of Commission order which was product of negotiations between parties during pendency of appeal from earlier adverse order, should look to purpose of the order in question and what it was intended to accomplish.

5. PAROL EVIDENCE OF PREORDER NEGOTIATIONS NOT ADMISSIBLE IN CIVIL ENFORCEMENT ACTION

   Where Federal Trade Commission consent order was not ambiguous,

---

*Reported in 344 F. Supp. 104 (1972). For case before the Commission, see 67 F.T.C. 473, 68 F.T.C. 1003, modified 71 F.T.C. 797. For penalty proceedings, see pp. 437,867 herein.

and there was no suggestion that agreement in question was not integrated in the order, parol evidence of preorder negotiations was not admissible so as to provide factual basis to preclude summary judgment in civil enforcement action brought at instance of the Commission for alleged violations of the order.

6. EVEN IF AMBIGUITY EXISTED AFTER 11 YEARS LITIGATION PAROL EVIDENCE OF PREORDER NEGOTIATIONS NOT ADMISSIBLE

Even if ambiguity existed in part of Federal Trade Commission consent order, where 11 years of litigation preceded the order, including full hearings on both question of antitrust violations and as to sanctions imposed, and where there was full record of hearings before examiner, an opinion of the examiner and two opinions of the Commission providing assistance in construing the order, parol evidence of preorder negotiations would not be admissible so as to provide factual basis to preclude summary judgment in enforcement action brought at instance of the Commission for alleged violations of the order.

7. VALUABLE BUSINESS ASSETS INCLUDE TRADEMARKS AND LABELS

Trademarks and labels are valuable business assets.

8. UNTIMELY DIVESTITURE OF STOCK BY DAIRY PRODUCTS DISTRIBUTOR WAS IN VIOLATION OF F.T.C. CONSENT ORDER

Divestiture, by dairy products distributor and processor of its stock interest in dairy corporation operating in specified town, through contracts which were not executed until December 24, 1969, was untimely in violation of Federal Trade Commission consent order requiring that such processor divest itself absolutely and in good faith of all dairy plants which were owned in whole or in part by it or operated by it in such named city, notwithstanding contention [106] that its stock interest was not a "plant" within meaning of the order.

9. GOOD FAITH EFFORT TO DIVEST ALL DAIRY PRODUCTS IN SPECIFIED CITY NOT A DEFENSE TO CIVIL ENFORCEMENT ACTION

Good faith effort of distributor and processor of dairy products to comply with terms of Federal Trade Commission consent order, requiring divestiture of all dairy products such processor owned or operated in specified city, was not a defense to civil enforcement action brought against the processor by United States at instance of the Commission for alleged violations of the order.

10. ARGUMENTS AS TO DIFFICULTY OF DIVESTING STOCK IN DAIRY PLANT NOT A DEFENSE TO CIVIL ENFORCEMENT ACTION

Arguments of distributor and processor of dairy products as to difficulty or impossibility of divestiture of stock in dairy plant, required by Federal Trade Commission consent order did not constitute defense to civil enforcement action against it for alleged violations of the order, even though the arguments might have carried weight behind a request to modify the order.

11. TERM "GOOD FAITH" IN CONSENT ORDER APPLIES TO REQUIREMENT OF ACTUAL RATHER THAN ILLUSORY DIVESTITURE

The term "good faith," in Federal Trade Commission consent order requiring distributor and processor of dairy products to divest itself absolutely and in good faith of certain dairy plants, applied not to the processor's efforts to divest but rather to requirement of actual rather than illusory divestiture.

12. BY APPROVING UNIT SALE OF OTHER DAIRY PLANTS COMMISSION DID NOT IMPLIEDLY AGREE THAT REMAINING SOUTHWEST PLANT NEED NOT BE DIVESTED

Federal Trade Commission did not, by approving sale as a unit of other dairy plants in southwestern United States by distributor and processor of dairy products, impliedly agree that such processor's stock in its remaining plant in the southwest need not be divested pursuant to consent order of the Commission and was not thereby estopped from claiming, and did not waive its right to claim, that such processor violated the order.

13. STAFF HAD NO AUTHORITY TO GRANT YEAR'S EXTENSION OF TIME TO COMPLY WITH ORDER

Where Federal Trade Commission staff advised that distributor and processor of dairy products apply for extension of time for compliance with consent order of the Commission and that the staff would support it if one was applied for, but where such processor knew that the staff had no authority to make decision as to an extension, and the Commission responded to processor's formal application for one-year extension by formally granting two months to present a suitable purchaser in connection with required divestiture of dairy plant, such processor was not given an oral extension of time for compliance by the staff.

14. LETTER GRANTING TWO MONTHS EXTENSION OF TIME TO "PRESENT A SUITABLE PURCHASER" DID NOT ESTABLISH A REQUIREMENT LESS THAN FULL DIVESTITURE

Federal Trade Commission letter giving distributor and processor of dairy products two months to "present a suitable purchaser" for approval in connection with divestiture of dairy plant required by consent order of the Commission did not establish a requirement less than full divestiture.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 344 F.Supp. 104.)

In civil enforcement action, on motion for summary judgment, Court held dairy products company violated consent order requiring that it cease and desist from acquiring any firm engaged in the distribution of milk; and that untimely divestiture was in violation of the order.

Robert G. Renner, U.S. Atty., by Neal J. Shapiro, Asst. U.S. Atty., Minneapolis, Minn., together with H. Robert Field, and James E. Corkey, Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., appeared for plaintiff.

Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson, by Ronald Butler, Chicago, Ill., appeared for defendant.

NEVILLE, District Judge.

The government has brought this civil enforcement action at the instance of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), seeking monetary penalties and other relief from the defendant Beatrice Foods Co. (Beatrice) for alleged violations of a Federal Trade Commission order which was the product of negotiations between the parties during the pendency of an appeal by defendant from an earlier adverse FTC order. The government moved for summary judgment on the issue of as to whether violations occurred, with the thought that if the motion be granted, the parties and the court should [107] contemplate further proceedings relative to penalties to be imposed or other relief to be granted. Penalties for violation of FTC orders are provided in the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l); and in the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 21(l). Jurisdiction is found under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1337 and 1345; venue under 28 U.S.C. § 1395 and 15 U.S.C. § 22. For the reasons stated below, the motion of the government should be granted on both counts of the complaint.

The case arises from a protracted proceeding before the FTC, In the Matter of Beatrice Foods Co., FTC Docket 6653. A complaint filed in 1956 there charged that Beatrice, a distributor and processor of milk and allied products among other things, had violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 45, by acquiring numerous companies engaged in various facets of the dairy industry. The hearing examiner filed an initial decision and order on March 2, 1964, wherein he found that five of the acquisitions complained of constituted violations of the Clayton Act. He recommended divestiture of four of those companies and a ten-year prohibition on future similar acquisitions.

Beatrice appealed the examiner's order. The FTC confirmed his findings on April 26, 1965 and entered a substantially similar final order on December 10, 1965.[1] Beatrice then sought review in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. While the appeal was pending, negotiations between the parties resulted in a joint motion to the Circuit Court recommending entry of an agreed order by that court. The appeals court granted the motion on May 23, 1967, some 11 years after initiation of the original proceeding and on June 7, 1967, the FTC issued a modified order identical with that of that court.[2]

Two sections of the final order are the focus of the instant case, parts I and III which read in pertinent part as follows:

---

[1] The complaint, initial decision and Commission opinion are reported in 67 FTC Decisions 473–734. The December order and accompanying opinion are reported in 68 FTC Decisions 1003–08.

[2] There is controversy as to the date the last FTC order became final. For purposes of this motion the government accepts defendant's date of June 7, 1967.

[Part I]

> Beatrice Foods Co., ('Beatrice') within a period not exceeding (18) months from the effective date of this order, unless extended, shall divest itself absolutely and in good faith to a purchaser approved in advance by the Commission of all plants which are owned in whole or in part by Beatrice or operated by Beatrice at * * * Albuquerque, New Mexico; * * * and which are engaged in the manufacturing, processing or distribution of pasteurized and homogenized milks, buttermilk, skim milk, cream, half and half, sour creams, cottage cheese, ice cream, ice milk, mellorine-type products, sherbert, or water ices. * * *

[Part III]

> Beatrice shall cease and desist, for a period of ten (10) years from the effective date of this order from acquiring, directly or indirectly, any interest in any firm, corporate or noncorporate, engaged principally or as one of its major commodity lines at the time of such acquisition in any state of the United States or in the District of Columbia in the business of manufacturing, processing or distributing at wholesale or at retail milk or any of the products described in Paragraph I of this order, without the prior approval of the Commission. [Emphasis added]

Count I of the complaint here charges that during the 10 year operative period of the order, Beatrice entered into a group of transactions involving a certain Maple Island Dairies, Inc. of Minnesota, which resulted in an acquisition or acquisitions violative of Part III of that order.

[108] By Count II the government charges that Beatrice's failure to divest itself of its corporate stock interest in the Valley Gold Dairy of Albuquerque, N.M. within 18 months from the date the order became final was a violation of the order. Although the Valley Gold Stock eventually was sold, the government claims the divestiture was not timely.

Resisting the government's motion, Beatrice claims essentially that, as to Count I, there are numerous disputed issues of material fact both as to the nature of the transactions involved—whether or not anything prohibited was "acquired"—and as to the meaning of the term "interest" in the consent order (quoted above). As to Count II, Beatrice claims there were de facto extensions granted by the FTC and good faith substantial compliance with the divestiture order, and that in any event whether or not there was substantial compliance is an issue of fact requiring a jury decision. In summary, thus, the issues are:

> As to Count I, did Beatrice "acquire" an "interest" as a result of its transactions with Maple Island Dairies, Inc.?
>
> As to Count II, was any extension of time for compliance granted and was there "substantial compliance" as a defense to failure to divest within the time presented by the order or any extension therof?

[1, 2] On a summary judgment motion, where there are disputes as to material fact, the question must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. As defendant points out there is authority which holds that summary judgment is inappropriate in certain complex antitrust cases where motive and intent are important and credibility is a factor.[3] However, the more apposite line of authority is that which holds that where the gist of the case turns on documentary evidence and involves conclusions of law, summary judgment is proper.[4] Here the evidence is substantial in volume and the transactions were intricate, but there is no dispute over the factual events which are represented by documents produced from or by Beatrice itself, only over their characterization within the meaning of this FTC order. The issue it seems to the court is not, for example, did Beatrice intend to acquire an interest in another company, but rather was an interest acquired.

COUNT I

The undisputed facts of the transactions underlying Count 1 are as follows:

In the Spring of 1968 Maple Island Dairies, Inc., a milk distributor, concluded to dispose of an unprofitable segment of its business which it called the northern division. That division consisted of four company-owned and operated dairy stores, 11 company owned branch distributors with established routes and 11 independent distributors also with established routes. Maple Island had had prior business dealings with two wholly owned Beatrice subsidiaries, competitors of Maple Island, Russell Creamery Company of Superior, Wisconsin and Russell Creamery Co. of Brainerd, Minnesota, both milk processors and distributors. In a series of meetings to discuss the disposition of Maple Island's northern division, the president of Maple Island, met with the president of Russell Creamery of Superior. A set of transactions resulted, after oral approval in principle by Russells' Beatrice superiors on July 11, 1968, whereby Russell would supply all but a few of the former Maple Island routes. The changeover began September 1, 1968, and a set of transactions was worked out for each distribution point.

---

[3] Norfolk Monument Co. v. Woodlawn Memorial Gardens, 394 U.S. 700, 89 S.Ct. 1391, 22 L.Ed. 2d 658 (1969); Poller v. CBS, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S.Ct. 486, 7 L.Ed.2d 458 (1962).

[4] White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 83 S.Ct. 696, 9 L.Ed.2d 738 (1962). See generally text and cases cited in Moore's Federal Prac. § 56.16, especially pages 2452–53.

[109] The company owned routes were converted into independent distributorships. In all but two cases, the new distributors were the former operating employees of Maple Island or an existing independent Russell distributor. In each such case, a meeting was held where the new distributor purchased the assets at the location, including any inventory and accounts receivable. The purchaser made a modest down payment with the remainder being financed by Beatrice.[5] Present at each meeting were the purchaser and representatives of Maple Island and Beatrice. The exhibits attached to the government brief produced from Beatrice show that, typically, at each meeting the former Maple Island employee or existing Russell distributor first executed an "Agreement to purchase," distributorship contract, factor's lien, conditional sales contract and note bearing 7% interest. Contemporaneously, a Beatrice subsidiary executed a check for the balance due after the down payment.[6] Also at each meeting Maple Island assigned all its rights under the distributorship contracts to Beatrice. The assignment was accomplished in each case by a document, signed by Maple Island, Russell and the new distributor, which contained the following recital:

> For value received, I hereby assign the attached conditional Sales Contract, Factor's Lien, Note, Franchise Agreement of ———— to Russell Creamery Co. * * * .

As to the 11 independent Maple Island distributors in the northern division, the only assets transferred were 30 day trade accounts owed by them to Maple Island. In six cases, the Beatrice subsidiary issued a check to the distributor who in turn, by prior agreement with Beatrice, endorsed it to Maple Island in payment of outstanding accounts. Four distributors financed their own transfers. One in Amery, Wisconsin, was dropped from the arrangement by mutual agreement.

Also included in the arrangements between Maple Island and Beatrice was a five-year license for use of the Maple Island label. During the period when the transfers were being made, an exchange of correspondence between Russell and Maple Island resulted in a letter (Government Exhibit No. 14, Beatrice Special

---

[5] Of the 11 branch offices, the transfer of seven was financed by Beatrice. Two were financed from other sources, one by Maple Island and the eleventh was not transferred. Of the four stores, two were portable and removed. one at Virginia, Minnesota was transferred with the branch office, and the fourth, Grand Rapids, was finally transferred to an existing Russell distributor.

[6] All but one of these checks were made payable to Maple Island. One was endorsed to Maple Island by the new distributor.

Report Exhibit II–X–5) which gave that license and is otherwise instructive.

September 23, 1968

Mr. R. E. Russell
Russell Creamery Co. of Wisconsin, Inc.
1625 Broadway
Superior, Wisconsin 54881

Re: Fluid Milk and Ice Cream Distribution Under Maple Island Label

Dear Mr. Russell:

This will confirm our agreement with you concerning the processing and sale of fluid milk and ice cream products under the Maple Island label to certain independent distributors, company owned branches and dairy stores located in the area north of the Twin Cities, which locations are described on the attached sheet.

Effective September 1, 1968, or as soon thereafter as possible, you are to commence serving these locations direct from your plants at Superior, Wisconsin, and Brainerd, Minnesota, with such sales to be made on an open account basis in accordance with your normal selling terms, as we have previously discussed this matter.

As we informed you, we have decided to discontinue serving these locations, since their location in the area north of the Twin Cities has been unprofitable due to the long hauling distances [110] and the fact that they are mostly in small towns where the growth potential is not large. For this reason, we have also decided to dispose of these company branches and dairy stores to independent distributors and as these disposals are accomplished, we will expect you to continue to serve such accounts and bill them direct, however, in the meantime we will continue to operate these locations.

Since a substantial portion of this volume is packaged under our Maple Island private label for which a consumer demand has been established, we hereby agree to authorize you to use such label on the packages now being processed and distributed at these locations for a period of five years from September 1, 1968.

You agree to hold Maple Island, Inc. and its subsidiary companies harmless from any and all claims and losses including costs of defence arising out of the use of our name from and after September 1, 1968. You also agree that you will do nothing to injure the goodwill of the name or jeopardize its value. If this meets with your approval, please sign the extra copy of this letter enclosed and return it to me.

Very truly yours,

MAPLE ISLAND DAIRIES, INC.

By: /s/ D. W. O'Brien

D. W. O'Brien, Vice President

[Emphasis added]

That letter together with other correspondence and documents clearly shows that the transactions were a "package deal." In addition, various documents from Russell and Maple Island files refer to their "courtship" and to the "disposal" or "sale" of the northern division. As previously noted prior to the transactions Maple Island was a competitor of Russell in many of the towns and cities in the northern division area. Afterwards, only Russell supplied milk to those locations.

While there is no direct indication of the "value received" by Maple Island for its assignments, certain letters and account sheet in the record reveal that after September 1, 1968, Maple Island was charging—and Russell was paying—interest on the unpaid balance of the book value of the physical assets plus a $20,000 upward adjustment. Also, between September 1, 1968 and December 13, 1968, checks totalling about $230,000 were negotiated from Beatrice subsidiaries to Maple Island, either directly or by immediate endorsement from the distributor to Maple Island.[7] At minimum, therefore, with Beatrice providing financing in most cases, Maple Island was able to recover its investments or a substantial portion thereof in the northern division, including its accounts receivable, immediately rather than having to finance the transactions itself or to depend upon the ability of the purchasers to find independent sources of credit. Primarily as a direct result of the arrangement with Maple Island, the annual sales of Russell Creamery of Superior alone increased by some 30%, or by nearly $1 million.

The government asserts that by virtue of the series of transactions described above, Beatrice through its subsidiaries Russell, acquired the sales volume or market share, good will and the beneficial use of the label and other assets of Maple Island, its former competitor in northern Minnesota. The government contends that what was acquired is an "interest" within the meaning of the FTC consent order. Beatrice disputes these assertions, arguing the following issues of material fact:

(1) Whether the word "interest" as used in the negotiated decree is not in fact an ambiguous term and therefore [111] oral negotiations between FTC personnel and Beatrice attorneys and personnel prior to the decree and post decree conduct in relation to other cases should be the subject of an evidentiary hearing to determine as a fact issue the intent of the parties at the time.

(2) Whether as a matter of fact Maple Island sold or transferred no part of its business or operations to Beatrice, which paid no money to purchase anything from Maple Island but rather

---

[7] See Appendix I, Gov't Brief. Checks in the amount of about $175,000 were made out directly to Maple Island by Russell to finance the purchase of Maple Island owned routes. (The purchasers of the routes made down payments totalling $27,000.) Indirect payments by immediate endorsement totalled some $55,000.

served only as an available, alternate financing source for the various purchasers and acquired no interest but simply began to supply dairy products where Maple Island had previously; and,

(3) Whether Beatrice acquired any interest in the license for use of the Maple Island label.

Beatrice does not contest that Maple Island was the kind of dairy firm which the order prohibited acquiring. At first blush these assertions might appear to present questions of material fact but upon analysis it is clear they do not.

That the parties dispute the contest and meaning of the negotiations prior to the consent order is clear. The parties also differ as to their characterizations of the arrangement with Maple Island. But a defendant cannot create an issue of material fact requiring a jury trial simply by saying over and over that one exists. Defendant's claimed factual issues in Count I either are completely contradicted by a record consisting of documents primarily obtained from defendant's own files and by deposition testimony, or depend upon clearly inadmissible evidence or are legal conclusions.

Beatrice asserts that issues of material fact are raised concerning the meaning of the word "interest" in the order from statements made by FTC staff personnel during the pre-order negotiations after the original adverse order from the FTC and from the post order conduct of the parties. Regarding the negotiations, Beatrice states that it was assured by FTC staff that "interest" was meant to be narrower in scope than the equivalent language in orders directed at three other major dairy companies.[8] Beatrice officers have so testified in deposition, and defendant asserts that such testimony is admissible to explain an ambiguous term, "interest," in the order, relying on numerous cases it asserts hold that consent orders or decrees are in the nature of private contract and the usual rules relating to use of parol evidence to explain ambiguities apply.[9]

[3] The government strongly opposes consideration of the negotiations behind the order and the court agrees. "Interest" is hardly new in the law. The precise phrase used in the order has been used in another consent decree recently construed by the Supreme Court.[10] Equally significant, the term has a fairly con-

---

[8] All three other orders prohibited the acquisition of the "* * * stock, share capital or assets * * *" of other dairy firms for a ten year period. In the Matter of National Dairy Products Co. (FTC Docket 6651) Jan. 30, 1963, 62 FTC Decisions 120; In the Matter of the Borden Company (FTC Docket 7129), Jan. 30, 1963, 62 FTC Decisions 130; In the Matter of Foremost Dairies, Inc. (FTC Docket 6495), Mar. 5, 1965, 67 FTC Decisions 282.

[9] E.g., Heights Funeral Home v. McClain, 288 S.W.2d 839 (Tex.Civ.App.1956); see generally, 49 C.J.S. Judgments § 178.

[10] United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 91 S.Ct. 1752, 29 L.Ed.2d 256 (1971).

sistent, precise usage in relationship to property, businesses and other things of value.[11] For example, the Restatement, Property § 5 states:

> The word "interest" is used in this Restatement both generically to include varying aggregates of rights, privileges, powers, and immunities, and distributively to mean any one of them.

[112] Other examples of the consistent use of the term include the following:

> More particularly it [interest] means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title * * * . Black's Law Dictionary, Revised 4th Edition 950 (1968).
>
> In a contract of sale of a business providing that vendors agreed to sell and assign to purchaser all other interests which they may have in the business, the word "interest" meant a valuable property or right, forming a part of the business sold, a part of said business and its assets.
>
> The word "interest" when applied to property means the legal concern of a person in the thing or property, or in the right to some of the benefits or uses from which the property is inseparable. Parsons v. Parsons, 141 P.2d 559, 561, 193 Okl. 160.

The foregoing clearly indicates that "interest" includes, by definition, the rights transferred here to Beatrice by Maple Island. The license to use the label,[12] the notes, distributorship agreements,[13] sales contracts and factor's liens are all "rights in the nature of property" and valuable rights forming a part of the business and in many instances comprising assets of Maple Island. Whereas before, Maple Island held all rights, privileges, powers, and immunities relating to the assets transferred, after the transfer, Beatrice held some of those rights and the independent distributors held the rest. And while the sales contracts, factor's liens and notes did not give Beatrice title, Beatrice clearly held a security interest, i.e., a right of ownership contingent upon the default of the titleholder. Such interests are no less interests within the terms of the order because contingent upon default of the debtor.[14] Perhaps most significant, prior to the transfer, Maple Island had the "rights to the benefits" inseparable from the property transferred, i.e., the sales of its milk to the customers along Maple Island's former routes. After the transfer, Beatrice had those rights at least for the minimum period of the distributorship agreements and the advantage of an established and continuing relationship with the distributors. Beatrice thereby gained access to all or most of the customers—the sales volume [15]—who previously bought milk from Maple Island. The net result was an increase in gross sales of Russell Creamery in Superior alone of nearly $1 million, about 30%.

---

[11] See generally 22 Words & Phrases, p. 53 et seq.

[12] United States v. Columbia Pictures, 189 F.Supp. 153 (S.D.N.Y.1960); Western Geophysical Co. of America v. Bolt Associates, Inc., 305 F.Supp. 1248 (D.Conn. 1969.)

[13] The distributorship agreements included provisions that the distributor would handle Maple Island brand products exclusively in a territory described in that contract, giving the defendant first refusal in purchasing the distributor's business, a liquidated damages clause for any violation and a non-competition agreement. A handwritten note on defendant's own copy of a letter of inquiry sent by the FTC (Exhibit 34, Fox deposition Exhibit 41, Defendant's Ex. 14) contains the following notation, "we acquired distributorship contracts from Maple Island."

[14] Indeed, artful real estate lawyers have for centuries been creating interests much less valuable than those here transferred in the form of contingent remainders.

[4] The transactions thus constitute at least an indirect acquisition of an interest in violation of the order. It is at best disingenuous for Beatrice to contend that the particular "aggregate of rights, powers, privileges and immunities" transferred was not an interest in the milk distribution firm of Maple Island. [113] The court should look to the purpose of the FTC order, and what it was intended to accomplish.

The United States Supreme Court recently stated in United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 91 S.Ct. 1752, 29 L.Ed.2d 256 (1971):

> The * * * scope of a consent decree must be discerned within its four corners, and not by reference to what might satisfy the purposes of one of the parties to it. [Id. at 682, 91 S.Ct. at 1757]

Nothing in the remainder of the final Beatrice order contradicts the construction of the order here made by this court.[16]

[5] Moreover, if the parties had agreed to a consent order which permitted the acquisition of the sales volume of a firm while avoiding the corporate shell and the physical assets, they were certainly capable—after 11 years of litigation and negotiation—of drafting language less broad than that used here. The order is not ambiguous so as to allow admission of parol evidence of the pre-

---

[15] The only case cited by either party relating to whether sales volume is an asset is that of United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., Civil Action No. C–1220 (D.Colo. 8/2/71) (Exh. 48). There Judge Winner answered the question in the affirmative, stating. "I find that, particularly in businesses where route salesmen are involved, customer lists have a peculiar value, and that they frequently represent the principal asset of a business. * * * and these assets, the most important of which were sales routes and sales volume, were acquired."

[16] Paragraph II, 2 of the order reads as follows:

"By these divestitures no interest shall be sold or transferred, directly or indirectly to anyone who is at the time of the divestiture an officer, director, employee or agent of, or directly or indirectly under the control or direction of Beatrice * * *."

The FTC opinion accompanying the order stated in part:

"In the view of the majority of the Commission the proposed consent settlement achieves in large measure the original objective of the complaint which was to prevent the disappearance from the dairy industry of viable regional dairy companies."

Both paragraph II. 2 and the 10 year acquisition ban are consistent with that purpose and use the same term. Paragraph II. 2 insures that the divestiture will not be illusory. The identical term is used to insure that other regional dairy companies will not be acquired. Defendant's construction would permit an illusory ban on acquisitions.

order negotiations. There is no suggestion that the agreement was not integrated in the order. Thus, the negotiations can provide no factual basis precluding summary judgment.

[6] Even assuming ambiguity in the word "interest" arguendo, defendant's contentions are not well founded. As noted 11 years of litigation preceded the modified order, including full hearings on both the question of antitrust violations and as to sanctions imposed. There is a full record of the hearings before the examiner, an opinion of the examiner, and two FTC opinions which provide ample assistance in construing the order, if clarification is needed.

The extensive quasi-judicial litigation before the FTC resulted in 51 pages of findings and an opinion by the Commission, detailing the anticompetitive effects of the mergers and acquisitions typifying the dairy industry in general and Beatrice's own growth in particular. When the modified order was entered by the Court of Appeals by consent, the FTC reiterated its view that the order accomplishes the objective sought in the previous findings and order, namely the prevention of the disappearance of regional dairy firms through acquisition by the multi-market giants such as Beatrice.[17] Thus, if the public record behind the order is consulted, it is clear that the acquisition of the sales volume by Beatrice and the loss of Maple Island as a competitor is the kind of event the order was intended to prevent.

Defendant's cited cases where the contents of negotiations behind an order were allowed are all, with one set of exceptions,[18] civil cases between private [114] individuals and are either divorce cases or relate to issues of res judicata or collateral estoppel, clearly different from that here where the issue is: What does the order prohibit the defendant from doing?; not what was decided. With the one exception described below no cases have been cited, and this court's research has revealed none, in which any court has accepted evidence relating to the negotiations between the staff of a public agency and a respondent in interpreting an order by the agency.

The exception is a line of tax cases involving prior efforts by the Office of Price Administration to recover overcharges and statutory penalties for violations of price control regulations. The OPA claims were settled by negotiation resulting in payment of a sum of money and the issue before the court in the tax cases was the deductibility of the payments. Deductibility turned on whether the payments included amounts for trebel penalties which would indicate "willful" violation of the price control regulations, the deduction of which would not be allowable. The courts in each case admitted testimony regarding pre-decree negotiation as well as other evidence on the issue of willfulness. These tax cases are not on point. The issue in those cases was akin to a res judicata problem, namely what issues were submitted and decided. Here the issue is the interpretation of the agency or court order.[19] One case which points to the proper resolution of this issue is Gila Valley Irrigation District v. United States, 118 F.2d 507, 510 (9th Cir. 1941), where the court held that evidence as to negotiations between the parties was inadmissible in inerpreting a consent decree stating:

---

[17] Compare 68 FTC 1007 with page 3 of the opinion of the FTC accompanying its modified order of June 7, 1967 (quoted page 12, n. 16, supra.)

[18] United State v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 240 F.2d 759 (9th Cir. 1956); Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Pacific Mills, Inc., 207 F.2d 177 (1st Cir. 1953); Milton S. Kronheim & Co. v. United States, 163 F.Supp. 620, 143 Ct.Cl. 390 (1958); American Brewery, Inc. v. United States, 223 F.2d 43 (4th Cir. 1955), rev'g 126 F. Supp. 477 (D.Md.1954).

> Even if we assume that the terms of the decree were ambiguous, contrary to our conclusion, evidence of negotiations leading up to the decree would not be admissible, for we are concerned not with the intention of the parties as in the case of a contract between them, but the intention of the court as expressed in the decree. Moreover, if there was an error in the ruling it was not shown to be prejudicial for, in case of an ambiguity, the pleadings [i. e., the official or public record] should be first consulted to resolve the ambiguity. [Emphasis added]

The Gila Valley rule appears particularly appropriate here.

The remaining alleged issue of material fact requires only summary treatment. It matters not whether Maple Island "sold" its business to defendant, although there is evidence that suggests a sale was made. The issue, disposed of above, is whether Beatrice acquired an interest in Maple Island or its business or assets. The issue as to whether Beatrice may have paid no money to purchase anything from Maple Island is similarly irrelevant.[20] The issue is one of acquisition by Beatrice whether by direct sale, or an indirect transaction. Clearly, there was a transfer of something of value to Beatrice.

[7] As to defendant's alleged lack of interest in the license for the Maple Island label, the law is clear that trademarks and labels are valuable business assets, and defendant's own documents re-

---

[19] Whether the order here construed is considered a court order or as an order of the FTC would seem to be irrelevant: defendant has suggested no basis for distinction. Since the case was settled during the pendency of the appeal to the Circuit Court, however, it appears accurate to consider the order here as the order of the court, to be construed as other consent judgments.

[20]. Already noted is the recitation of "for value received", the transfer of more than $230,000 from Beatrice to Maple Island, either directly or through the distributors, and the payment of interest by Beatrice's subsidiary to Maple Island.

flect the defendant's belief that the label on a milk product is such.[21]

[115] The court thus concludes that as to Count I there are no issues of material fact, and summary judgment is proper.

COUNT II

[8] Summary judgment is even more clearly proper as to Count II. Part I of the consent order required Beatrice to divest itself within 18 months "* * * of all plants which are owned in whole or in part by Beatrice or operated by Beatrice at * * * Albuquerque, New Mexico; * * *" as part of the divestiture of a group of plants in the American Southwest. Defendant owned an 18½% stock interest in the Valley Gold Dairy Co. of Albuquerque, which was not divested until late 1969 or early 1970. The 18 month period expired on December 7, 1968. Defendant divested all of the other Southwest plants to a single purchaser. Following that action and in March, 1969, the FTC notified Beatrice that it was still obliged to divest the Valley Gold stock. A series of letters and conferences with FTC staff ensued. After denial by the FTC of defendant's request for an extension until August 1970, Beatrice formally requested the FTC approval of a purchaser for the stock in a letter received by the FTC on January 2, 1970. The government contends the divestiture was untimely as a matter of law. Defendant's contentions resisting the government position are considered seriatim.

Beatrice first argues that a jury must determine whether its stock interest was a "plant" within the meaning of the order, either because a stock interest is not literally a plant or because it was understood that Beatrice had to acquire all of the Valley Gold stock before the order was applicable to that interest. The order itself, however, speaks of plants owned "* * * in whole or in part * * *" in Albuquerque. Defendant's answer admits that it was required to divest itself of its interest in the Albuquerque Dairy plant within 18 months. The record reflects no other interest of any kind in any other dairy business in Albuquerque. Footnote 2 on page 2 of the FTC opinion of June 7, 1967 (which accompanied the consent order) states:

---

[21] The letter of agreement (quoted in full, supra, pp. 6, 7) signed by Beatrice subsidiary is an example. Relevant excerpts include the following:

"Since a substantial portion of this [sales] volume is packaged under our Maple Island private label for which a consumer demand has been established * * *."

"You [Russell] also agree that you will do nothing to injure the goodwill of the name or jeopardize its value." [emphasis added]

Attached as an exhibit to defendant's compliance report to the FTC for 1970 is a letter to all dairy plant division managers, dated 6/11/70, which states defendant's then current policy on private label agreements. The letter states in pertinent part,

"Where Beatrice is having another processor or manufacturer custom pack Meadow Gold or our label products, we should have a similar written agreement to protect our valuable trademarks and reputation for quality." [Emphasis added]

> Beatrice is also divesting the Valley Gold operations in New Mexico * * *

A booklet describing defendant's "Southwest Dairy Operations" and submitted to the FTC on 10/18/67 as part of defendant's compliance report contains the following statement (Exh. 60, p. 22):

> Beatrice is offering its wholly-owned southwestern dairy operations as outlined above for sale at a price of $6,272,519. In addition Beatrice's 3,458 shares of Valley Gold common stock are available for purchase at $636,686. Pursuant to agreement with the Federal Trade Commission, the dairy properties are offered as a unit to a single purchaser.

Finally, if more proof be needed, defendant's own internal memorandum for Beatrice of July 16, 1969, from General Attorney John P. Fox, Jr. to William Karnes states:

> You are familiar with the fact that as to the divestiture provision of the consent decree in the Merger Case, Beatrice is still under the obligation to [116] dispose of our interest in Albuquerque. This of course means some arrangement relative to our 3,458 shares of Valley Gold stock (18.5% of the outstanding shares.) [Emphasis added]

In the face of such overwhelming documentary evidence, for defendant now to contend that its Valley Gold stock was outside the consent order is quite without merit. The only evidence offered to support this position is the fact that Beatrice and the then principal stockholder of Valley Gold had discussed, prior to the entry of the consent order, defendant's possible acquisition of his majority interest. The fact of such negotiations does not contradict the clear interpretation of the order as evidenced by the order itself, the accompanying FTC opinion, Beatrice's compliance report, and defendant's own internal memorandum. The first indication that the Valley Gold interest might not be subject to the order—anywhere in the record—was in defendant's briefs on the instant motion. As a matter of law the divestiture order clearly applies to the Valley Gold stock; there is no issue for a jury raised on this point.

[9–11] Equally groundless is defendant's contention that it's efforts to dispose of the Valley Gold stock were in good faith and that a good faith effort to comply with the terms of the order is a complete defense. Assuming such good faith arguendo, that issue was passed upon by this court in a previous order, United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 52 F.R.D. 14 (D.Minn.1971), where it was stated:

> * * * while good faith is not a defense to such an action, it is clearly relevant to the court's discretionary determination of the extent of civil penalties to be assessed under that provision. United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F.Supp 383, 388–389 (S.D.N.Y.1966); United States v. Vitasafe Corp., 212 F.Supp. 397 (S.D.N.Y.1962), aff'd 352 F.2d 62 (2d Cir. 1965). 52 F.R.D. 14, 18.

Similarly, defendant's arguments as to the alleged difficulty or impossibility of divesting the stock may have carried weight behind a request to modify the order, but they are not a defense to the action here.[22] Moreover, defendant did in fact divest. Whether its negotiations over price with the ultimate purchaser were reasonable is irrelevant to whether the stock was timely divested. The good faith language in the order clearly applies not to defendant's efforts to divest, but to a requirement of actual rather than illusory divestiture. Neither the order itself nor its public record background, suggests anything to indicate that defendant's divestiture obligation under the order was to be affected by the price defendant received, and defendant's position in being forced to sell is no defense. Defendant's bargaining position may have been weakened by virtue of the order.[23] But any unequal bargaining [117] position is the product of defendant's earlier found violations of the antitrust laws and the resultant order consented to by defendant. Having consented, defendant may not now indirectly attack the order.[24] Here, defendant expected to get a price it desired. Because the ownership of the majority of the Valley Gold stock changed due to a death, leaving those expectations unfulfilled, defendant cannot now claim "foul." There is no issue of material fact raised by defendant's alleged good faith or inability to comply.

---

[22] St. Helen v. Wyman, 139 F. Supp. 545 (N.D.Calif.1956), is not apposite. There the issue was whether the good faith attempts of certain army personnel to notify persons responsible for discharge of a soldier whose discharge had been temporarily restrained by a court were a defense to claims based on violation of the restraint. The case is distinguishable on three grounds. Firstly, the time within which the requisite notice could be given was apparently extremely short whereas here, defendant had more than 18 months to comply. Secondly, the restraining order was an attempt to maintain the status quo for a short time until the main issues could be litigated, under the court's general equity powers; good faith would be relevant to an equity claim. Here the order was the considered and negotiated product of 11 years of litigation, consented to by defendant. Thirdly, there were procedures established for modification of the order and time to use them if the difficulties were insurperable.

[23] Two cases cited by defendant as authority for its claimed defense of inability to comply. Healey v. United States, 186 F.2d 164 (9th Cir. 1950), and Federal Trade Commission v. Blaine, 308 F.Supp. 932 (N.D.Ga.1970), are instances where contempt citations were sought for failure to produce documents not shown to be in the possession or control of the defendants. The inability to comply was in each case actual rather than that here, i. e., the result of defendant's desire to get a better price. Similarly, there is no indication here, as in the strike case, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen v. Bangor & A.R.R., 127 U.S.App.D.C. 223, 380 F.2d 570 (1967), that the third party whose cooperation was required for compliance was unwilling to deal with the party under the court's order.

[24] United States v. Vitasafe, supra, and United States Bio-Genics Corp. v. Christenberry, 173 F. Supp. 645 (S.D.N.Y. 1959), aff'd 278 F.2d 561 (2d Cir. 1960). The FTC opinion accompanying the consent order states that divestiture of the Valley Gold and other Southwest operations was in place of defendant's Idaho division and part of its Utah division which were ordered to be divested under the appealed order.

[12] Also groundless, is the assertion that by approving the sale of the other Southwest plants as a unit, the FTC impliedly agreed that the Valley Gold stock need not be divested and is therefore estopped from claiming, or has waived its right to claim, that defendant violated the order. Defendant cites no authority, the record is devoid of evidence to support such a claim, and defendant's own internal documents reflect its continuing awareness of its obligation. The fact that Beatrice may have inferred briefly that the FTC was no longer interested in the Valley Gold stock is irrelevant. The order makes explicit provision for divestiture. There is no material issue of fact on the issue of waiver or estoppel.

[13] Defendant claims that it was given an oral extension of time for compliance by FTC staff until August, 1970. At most, however, the testimony of the defendant's officers supports only the conclusion that FTC staff advised defendant to apply for an extension and that, if one was applied for, the staff would support it. (See Fox deposition, pp. 37–42.) And the record is clear that defendant knew that, however influential the staff may be in FTC decisions, the staff had no authority to make a decision as to an extension. There is no evidence to support either actual or apparent authority in the staff. To the contrary, Beatrice applied formally for a one year extension; the FTC responded formally by granting defendant two months to present a suitable purchaser until November 15, 1969.[25] There was no one-year extension. It is clear to the court that there is no issue of material fact on this issue.

[14] Defendant argues that the FTC letter of September 12th, which gave Beatrice two months to "present a suitable purchaser" for approval, established a requirement less than full divestiture. Since, it is argued, the FTC knew of the negotiations with the ultimate purchaser, and had made inquiry about it, defendant had substantially complied [118] with the November 15th deadline. The record belies this claim. The earliest possible presentment of a purchaser was, by any view of the facts, no earlier than the letter to the FTC dated December 19, 1969. That letter indicated agreement with the estate of one Price had been reached. The contracts were not executed until December 24, 1969, however, and a formal request for approval of the FTC was not sent until

---

[25] The government argues that no extension was given by its letter of September 12, 1969, but rather only a period of grace as to enforcement of the order. The text of the September 12th letter supports that contention. Since the government is claiming penalties only for the period after November 15th, however, the court need not determine whether what the Commission did was de facto an extension.

December 30, 1969, received on January 2, 1970. Whether the suitable purchaser was presented on December 19, 1969, January 2, 1970 or any date between, it is clear that none was presented by the November deadline. The violation of the order, even if considered as extended two months in some manner, clearly occurred and the precise date of presentment is relevant only to the question of penalties. Again there is no issue of material fact, only disputes as to the legal conclusions to be drawn from those facts. Summary judgment is appropriate as to Count II.

CONCLUSION

As the foregoing indicates somewhat in extenso, defendant has raised no issue of material fact necessitating a trial. As to Count I, the unchallenged documentary evidence shows that Beatrice "acquired" an "interest" in Maple Island Dairies. As to Count II, the evidence is quite clear that Beatrice's divestiture of the Valley Gold stock was untimely. Both are violations of the order entered on June 7, 1967. Summary judgment in favor of the government on the issue of defendant's liability is therefore appropriate.

On the question of the penalties which should be imposed for the violations of the FTC order by Beatrice, the court should like to hear further from counsel for the parties, before ordering the entry of judgment and accordingly has set a hearing date for consideration thereof in a separate order which has been entered.

UNITED STATES v. SILVER STAR CHINCHILLA, INC., ET AL.*

Civ. A. No. 6–71–219—F.T.C. Docket C–1144

(United States District Court, District of Minnesota, August 15, 1972)

Seller of chinchilla breeding stock fined $2,500 civil penalties and prohibited from selling ever again chinchilla breeding stock or any similar breedng stock. Respondent further required to deposit $2,000 with the court for ultimate payment in equal shares to the ten complainants named in the government's suit.

Joseph M. Livermore, Asst. U.S. Atty., Gregory B. Hovendon and Lee I. Weintraub, Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

Robert M. Hegg, Edward W. Schulke and George J. King, for defendants.

DEVITT, District Judge.

---

* Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶74,128 at 92,723 (1972 Trade Cases). For case before the Commission, see 70 F.T.C. 1456.

FINAL JUDGMENT

Plaintiff, the United States of America, having filed its complaint against defendants Silver Star Chincilla, Inc., a corporation, and Edward W. Schulke, an individual, for violations of an Order to Cease and Desist issued by the Federal Trade Commission in Docket No. C–1144, on December 6, 1966, which order became final by operation of law on February 12, 1967; and defendants having filed their answer; and, plaintiff and defendants, by their respective attorneys having consented to the making and entering of this Final Judgment, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law and without any admission by plaintiff or defendants with respect to any such issue, and this Court having examined the files and considered the statements of counsel and being fully advised in the premises,

Hereby orders, adjudges and decrees that:

I.

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of the parties hereto. The complaint herein states a cause of action against each of the defendants under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commision Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45.

II.

Judgment is hereby entered in favor of plaintiff, the United States of America, and against defendants, Silver Star Chinchilla, Inc. and Edward W. Schulke, jointly and severally, in the amount of Two Thousand and Five Hundred Dollars ($2,500.00), payable to the Treasurer of the United States.

III.

Defendants Silver Star Chinchilla, Inc. and Edward W. Schulke, directly or through any corporate or other device, are forever enjoined and restrained from offering for sale, selling or distributing chinchilla breeding stock, or any similar breeding stock, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

IV.

Pursuant to the agreement of the plaintiff and defendants herein, and within eighteen months of the date of the entry of this judgment by the Court, defendants will pay to the Court the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00), which will be distributed by the Court in equal shares to the ten individual complainants named in the Government's complaint. See Schedule I.

V.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the interpretation, construction or modification of this Judgment, for the enforcement of compliance therewith or for the punishment of violations thereof.

VI.

Pursuant to the agreement of the parties, the entry of this Judgment for plaintiff, the United States of America, shall constitute the complete and final settlement of all claims accruing to plaintiff as a result of any violations by defendants of the above mentioned cease and desist order occurring prior to the entry of this Judgment.

CONSENT AGREEMENT

Plaintiff and defendants, by their respective attorneys, hereby consent to the making and entering of the foregoing Final Judgment.

SCHEDULE I

The ten individual complainants named in the Government's complaint are:

1. Mr. and Mrs. Norman R. Ule
   Rt. 2
   Auburndale, Wisconsin
2. Mr. and Mrs. Andy G. Stublaski
   431 South 19th Avenue
   Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin
3. Mr. and Mrs. Vilas J. Verhulst
   Rt. #1
   Box 64A
   Abbotsford, Wisconsin
4. Clarence A. Clark
   801 South Main Street
   Alma, Wisconsin
5. Clarence J. Becker
   Box 127
   Almena, Wisconsin
6. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney W. Reek
   Route 2
   Box 249
   Marshfield, Wisconsin
7. Mr. and Mrs. Cecil A. Renner
   Route 2
   Box 16
   Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin

8. Arthur O. Jacobson
RR #4
Box 191
Marshfield, Wisconsin
9. Mr. and Mrs. Ronald J. Manecke
Route 1
Box 220
Rice Lake, Wisconsin
10. William L. Paul and Corine L. Paul
Route 2
Nekoosa, Wisconsin

KENNECOTT COPPER CORPORATION
v.
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION *

No. 71-1371—F.T.C. Docket 8765

(United States Court of Appeals, Tenth Circuit, Sept. 15, 1972)

1. WHOLE NATION IS RELEVANT MARKET WHERE LARGEST COPPER PRODUCER ACQUIRES ONE OF NATION'S LARGEST COAL PRODUCERS

Finding of Federal Trade Commission that the nation as a whole constituted a relevant geographic market in determining anticompetitive effect, if any, of transaction by which nation's largest copper producer and owner of industries related thereto acquired one of the nation's largest coal producers and distributors was supported by record.

2. THAT ACQUIRING COMPANY WAS NOT THEN AN ACTIVE COMPETITOR OF ACQUIRED COMPANY DID NOT REMOVE MERGER FROM SCOPE OF CLAYTON ACT

Fact that acquiring firm was not at time of acquisition directly engaged in the business of acquired firm so that merger did not have effect of removing a direct and active competitor did not serve to remove merger from scope of Clayton Act and did not necessarily result in the use of different criteria in determining probable competitive effect of acquisition.

3. NO ERROR IN COMMISSION ASSESSING SITUATION THAT COAL INDUSTRY WAS ON ITS WAY TO BECOMING HIGHLY CONCENTRATED

In light of general objectives of Clayton Act there was no error in Federal Trade Commission's approach to case, which involved the acquisition by the leading copper producer in United States of the leading coal producer by assessing probabilities in coal market, which was admittedly not a tight oligopoly, rather than assessing on a basis of present conditions after Commission had determined that the industry was on its way to becoming highly concentrated.

4. EVIDENCE SUPPORTS FINDING THAT COPPER PRODUCER WAS A SUBSTANTIAL POTENTIAL ENTRANT INTO COAL INDUSTRY DUE TO ITS INTEREST IN COAL BUSINESS AND ITS LONG-TERM PLANS

Record before Federal Trade Commission regarding the transaction

---

* Reported in 467 F.2d 67 (1972). Petition for review denied: October 13, 1972. Petition for writ of certiorari filed October 25, 1972. For case before Commission, see 78 F.T.C. 744.

whereby the nation's largest copper producer acquired the nation's largest coal producer supported finding that copper producer, which had acquired a small coal company previously to obtain a source of coal for its own use and for the purpose of producing and selling coal on a commercial basis, was, prior to acquisition of largest coal producer a substantial potential entrant into the coal industry over which it exerted substantial influence due to its interest in coal business and its long-term plans.

5. EVIDENCE SUPPORTS FINDING THAT RESPONDENT'S ENTRY INTO COAL PRODUCING FIELD HAD EFFECT OF RAISING ENTRY BARRIERS EVEN FURTHER

Evidence in hearing before Federal Trade Commission regarding transaction in which the nation's largest copper producer acquired the nation's largest coal producer supported finding that the transaction which removed copper producer, shown to have been a most likely entrant, from entry into coal market had effect of raising entry barriers even further.

6. RECORD SUPPORTED FINDING OF COMMISSION THAT THE ACQUISITION WAS VIOLATION OF CLAYTON ACT

Evidence before Federal Trade Commission regarding anticompetitive effect, if any, of transaction by which the nation's largest copper producer, found to be a potential entrant into the coal producing field, acquired the nation's largest coal producer supported finding of Commission that the transaction was a violation of Clayton Act in that the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

7. LAW GIVES COMMISSION THE COMBINED FUNCTIONS OF INVESTIGATOR, PROSECUTOR AND JUDGE AND DOES NOT INFRINGE DUE PROCESS

Federal Trade Commission was not disqualified from extending to copper producer a fair and judicious hearing concerning its acquisition of coal producer because of Commission's varied other duties including its numerous contacts with members of Congress and others on issues relating to the very subject matter of case, and the law giving Commission combined functions of investigator, prosecutor and judge did not infringe due process.

8. RESPONDENT WAS NOT DEPRIVED OF A FAIR TRIAL BECAUSE A COMMISSIONER REFUSED TO DECLARE HERSELF DISQUALIFIED

[69] In view of record showing that Federal Trade Commissioner in granting public interview was discussing the complaint in an effort to illustrate point and did not comment or editorialize to show a viewpoint, party was not deprived of a fair trial because such Commissioner refused to declare herself disqualified.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 467 F.2d 67.)

On appeal, Court held that evidence before FTC regarding anticompetitive effect of acquisition by nation's largest copper producer of the largest coal producer supported finding of violation of Clayton Act in that its effect may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Petition for review denied and orders of Commission affirmed and enforced.

Roy H. Steyer, of Sullivan & Cromwell, New York City (Arthur H. Dean, John L. Warden and Barrington D. Parker, Jr., of Sullivan & Cromwell, New York City, William Simon, John Bodner, Jr. and Francis A. O'Brien, of Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D.C., (Winston S. Howard, and Hugh A. Burns, of Dawson, Nagel, Sherman & Howard, Denver, Colo., on brief) for petitioner.

Montgomery K. Hyun, Atty., Federal Trade Commission (Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, and Frederick H. Mayer, Atty., Federal Trade Commision, on brief) for respondent.

Before HILL, BARRETT and DOYLE, Circuit Judges.

WILLIAM E. DOYLE, Circuit Judge.

I.

INTRODUCTION

The matter before us is the petition of Kennecott Copper Corporation seeking review of a divestiture order issued by the Federal Trade Commission. Kennecott, a New York corporation, is engaged in the production of copper and industries related to this. It is a producer, smelter, refiner and fabricator of copper and other metal products. It acquired Peabody Coal Company, an Illinois corporation, which is one of the two leading coal producers and distributors in the United States. A tentative agreement for this acquisition was signed July 1, 1966, and the final agreement providing for the acquisition was signed on March 17, 1967. On or about March 29, 1968, the transaction was closed, Kennecott paying 285 million dollars in cash and assuming 36.5 million dollars in liabilities and subject to the reservation of a production payment from Peabody's coal properties which was sold by Peabody for about 300 million dollars in cash.

On August 5, 1968, the Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint alleging a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18.[1] Trial was thereafter had before a hearing examiner in New York, San Francisco and Salt Lake City on 48 hearing days extending from January to June 1969. Numerous witnesses testified, the record consisting of more than 6,000 pages of testimony together with some 450 documentary exhibits. In addition to the expert witnesses, there was testimony from coal company executives, utility company officials and economists. Following this trial the hearing examiner, in March 1970, issued lengthy finding and conclusions and determined that the complaint should be dismissed.

---

[1] This section provides as follows:

No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, * * * the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

The pivotal question in the case was whether prior to the merger Kennecott was a recognized potential entrant into the coal producing business and whether the elimination of Kennecott by its purchase of Peabody may have substantially lessened competition or tended to create a monopoly. The examiner found that the evidence failed to establish that there was a likelihood that Kennecott would enter into the coal business from an internal expansion or by expansion from a limited base, but that Kennecott was a potential entrant by acquisition. He further found, however, that even if [70] Kennecott were regarded as a recognized potential entrant, the questioned acquisition would not have the effect which the complaint alleged, since the coal industry was found by him not to have been highly concentrated but rather to have been competitively structured. The examiner further found that there were numerous other potential entrants into the sale of coal, all of whom had special capabilities, and thus the elimination of a single potential competitor would not be significant. The examiner also based his conclusion on the fact that even though the production market was limited to coal, there was some degree of cross-elasticity of demand for coal and other fuels, and this factor was determined to contribute to his conclusion that the elimination of a single potential competitor was lacking in significance.

The Federal Trade Commission issued its decision reversing the examiner on May 13, 1971. The Commission concluded that Kennecott was indeed a substantial potential entrant and that the removal of Kennecott from this position on the threshold of the industry removed a potential competitor and had the effect of substantially lessening competition. The Commission determined that although the coal business was not at the time of the filing of its opinion in May 1971 a concentrated market, that it was nevertheless trending in that direction and that this tendency would continue in the future. It concluded that it was obligated to deal not only with present threats to competition but also with future threats in their incipient stages rather than to await the concentrated condition. The Commission cited another basis and that was Kennecott's deep pocket operating on a market which, though a loose oligopoly, is growing more concentrated. The Commission saw a likelihood of diminishing competition resulting from the merger of the great economic resources of Kennecott and Peabody.

In urging that the order of the Commission be reversed, Kennecott argues, first, that the Commission erred in holding that the relevant market was the entire United States and in refusing to consider competition which coal had with the other fuels, including nuclear energy, oil and gas. Secondly, that the Commission erred in holding that Kennecott was the most likely entrant into the coal business and in holding that the coal industry, although now a loose oligopoly, is trending toward a highly concentrated market and in failing to hold that the coal market is competitively structured and likely to remain so. It is further contended that the Commission erred in failing to address the issue whether the elimination of Kennecott as one of many potential entrants into a competitive industry had the effect of substantially lessening competition.

Further contentions are that the Commission violated standards of administrative adjudication in setting aside the hearing examiner's findings and in not making adequate findings of its own and in adopting the so-called deep-pocket theory, it being Kennecott's contention that this was not presented before the Commission. Complaint is also made that the hearing was not fair in that the Commission issued certain statements to Congress contemporaneously with the carrying out of the proceedings, which statements were said to be inconsistent with the Commission's findings and conclusions. It is also contended that one of the commissioners should have been disqualified because of her alleged prejudgment of the case.

II.

THE PRODUCT MARKET

The Commission found that the relevant line of commerce consisted of bituminous, sub-bituminous and lignite coal and in that respect endorsed the view expressed by the examiner. However, the Commission rejected the examiner's finding that:

> Factually, legally, and pragmatically, it is reasonable, therefore, to consider coal as the product market and at the same time to take into account the competition that other fuels offer to coal.

[71] The Commission said:

> Coal, in our view, is clearly a relevant product market for antitrust purposes, separate and distinct from other fuels, by virtue of the fact that coal has unique characteristics which are commercially significant and a technology obviously different from such power sources as gas or nuclear energy.

The examiner did not rule that coal does not constitute a product market in and of itself. He merely noted the market interplay between coal and other fuels. The examiner's determination that nuclear energy and natural gas competition should be considered was largely based on the competition which is shown to exist in the generation of electrical energy by utility companies, and unquestionably in this area of economic activity coal is in direct competition with other fuels, and so it seems reasonable to consider as did the examiner the competition that exists between coal and other fuels, at least in the mentioned context.

III.

THE RELEVANT GEOGRAPHIC MARKET

[1] The Commission correctly found that the nation as a whole constitutes a relevant geographic market, based as it is on the Commission's analysis that the large coal companies compete with each other throughout the United States, plus the fact that Kennecott fully intended to become a nationwide competitor. The Commission cited United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 86 S.Ct. 1665, 16 L.Ed.2d 765 (1966) in support of this finding and conclusion and, particularly, the Supreme Court's approval of general testimony in proof of the geographic market.

As we view it, the Commission's finding was not contrary to the record in this case, for although coal reserves are not found in all the states of the union, such reserves are found in virtually every section of the country, and more and more the market is acquiring a national character.

IV.

KENNECOTT COPPER CORPORATION

Kennecott was shown to have been formed in 1915 and has been engaged in the mining of copper and associated metals since. It is the largest copper producer in the United States accounting for approximately 33 percent of the 1,372,000 tons shown to have been produced in 1966. It also produces molybdenum, silver, gold, lead and zinc. It owns and operates mines in the United States under the direction of its Western Mining Divisions. One of these is in Utah, another in Nevada, one in Arizona and one in New Mexico.

A fifth mine is located in Chile, but in 1967 it was forced to sell 51 percent of its interest in this mine in Chile to the government.

Prior to the acquisition of Peabody, Kennecott devoted itself to the mining and production of copper and its by-products. In its process it uses a tremendous amount of electricity, and for the most part has its own generating plants and, of course, consumes a great amount of fuel, both natural gas and coal. It sometimes sells some of this electrical energy.

Its total assets are well over a billion dollars, and its income is substantial. It is rated 55th among United States industrial corporations in terms of assets and 111th in terms of sales.

The evidence established that Kennecott entered the coal business basically because of the fact that its copper reserves were dwindling. It concluded that it had a limited future in the mining and production of copper because of the limited sources within the United States and that it is thus engaged in a liquidating process. Its cash reserves were increasing and it foresaw that these would reach about one billion dollars in 1980 and so diversification was essential.

It first explored the possibility of getting into the oil business, and during the [72] years 1963 and 1964 made a careful inquiry, looking to the acquisition of a going oil concern. After studying this possibility, it abandoned this oil quest and turned to the coal business. Meanwhile, in 1963, it had purchased the Knight Ideal Coal Company in Utah. Although this company had considerable reserves it was a small concern and its production was very limited. This property was shown to have been purchased so as to gain reserves which would provide a hedge against rising natural gas costs, but also with the thought in mind, according to the evidence and the finding (of the examiner), of engaging at least to some extent in the coal business.[2]

It was the interest in coal which started with the Knight Ideal purchase that led to the focus on Peabody. Undoubtedly it was the difficulties in starting from scratch which led to this decision. A very careful study preceded the step, it having been previously determined that the Knight Ideal property was not a satisfactory base for getting into the coal business. Peabody was not only a going concern but the very largest coal producer with extensive reserves which were well located, and also with transportation facilities. The acquisition was finally completed on March 29, 1968, on which date Kennecott, through its subsidiary, acquired the business and substantially all of the assets of Peabody.

---

[2] The examiner wrote:

Although the foregoing evidence demonstrates (1) that the Knight Ideal project developed in negation of the broad coal diversification study originally proposed and (2) that it was closely associated with Kennecott's own fuel needs, the record also makes clear that WMD viewed the project as preliminary to the production and sale of coal on a commercial basis and that while it was being developed, it was consistently so presented without any suggestion of a contrary view on the part of management in New York.

V.

PEABODY COAL COMPANY

As previously stated, Peabody was one of the two leading producers of coal in the United States. In 1966 it was shown to have produced approximately 52.8 million tons of coal, or approximately 10 percent of the total produced domestically. In addition, it sold 8.3 million tons of coal produced by others. In 1967 its total production was 59.4 million tons, considerably more than the next leading producer, Consolidation Coal Company. Its reserves were over five billion tons.

It had coal reserves in states in the southwest, west, midwest, and east-central regions of the United States. It was shown to have been aggressively expanding its marketing areas with long-term contracts, mostly to utility companies.

The examiner further found:

> During 1966, Peabody and its subsidiaries had coal sales and other revenues of $233,923,483 that provided a net income of $26,279,973. Total consolidated assets of Peabody as of December 31, 1966 were $315,629,163. Peabody's rate of return on stockholders' investment during 1966 was 14.6 percent. Among United States industrial corporations listed in "Fortune's 500" for 1966, Peabody ranked 186th in terms of assets and 317th in terms of sales.
>
> At all times relevant to this proceeding, Peabody has sold and has shipped its products in interstate commerce and has been engaged in "commerce" within the meaning of the Clayton Act.
>
> In addition to its domestic operations, Peabody owned 58 percent of an Australian company that operated a large metallurgical (coking) coal mine in Australia. Most of its output was sold to the Japanese steel industry.[3]

VI.

THE COAL INDUSTRY

The evidence showed that coal had been a dying industry prior to the 1950's. [73] During the post-World War II period (starting in 1947) the number of coal companies declined considerably, and there has been a more gradual decline in the number of the larger coal companies.

---

[3] A more detailed history and analysis of Peabody Coal Company is appended hereto and is marked Appendix II.

During the period from 1948 to 1958 the coal industry was on the decline. However, from 1959 forward there has been a considerable upsurge, notwithstanding that domestic consumption declined, railroad use declined and general manufacturing use of coal declined; consumption of coal in the electrical utility industry increased markedly. This increase in consumption (by electrical utilities) was considerable—86 million tons in 1947 to 272 million tons in 1967. This phenomenal increase in sales to utilities has been attributable to more efficient coal production methods, including mining techniques and general mechanization. Transportation methods have also improved, and the net result has been that the coal industry has been able to complete successfully with gas and other energy sources for use in the generating plants. All of this is noted in the findings of the Commission which declares that by the year 2000 it is expected that coal consumption by electric utilities will reach 755 million tons.[4]

The Commission has noted that despite the expansion the market has tended to become concentrated:

> Notwithstanding the ever growing demand for, and the concomitant expansion of production of, coal, the industry is experiencing a steady trend toward rising concentration. In 1947, there were 68 firms producing more than one million tons of coal annually. In 1947, their share of the domestic coal production amounted to 48 percent; by 1967, it reached 70 percent. During the period 1954 to 1967, the top four companies increased their share of production from 15.8 percent to 29.2 percent. While during the same period the market expanded by 40.9 percent, the share of the top four companies grew by 160.5 percent. Further, the top four firms accounted for 63 percent of the total market expansion. This trend, unless halted, foreshadows ominous developments in the coal industry, with production and sale of coal concentrating in fewer and fewer hands. Cf. United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 273, 274, 276–[277, 86 S.Ct. 1478, 16 L.Ed. 2d 555] (1966).

One noteworthy fact is that the coal reserves are being bought up by the oil companies and other large corporations, including Stardard of Ohio, Gulf Oil, Bethlehem Steel, General Dynamics, U.S. Steel and Republic Steel. For example, the second largest coal company, Consolidated, is owned by Continental Oil Company. The chart appended hereto shows this ownership in relation to the individual and total production of the several producers which exceeded three million tons in 1967.

It is thus apparent that the coal industry has changed in many respects in recent years. First of all, Peabody's growth has been remarkable. It has, in a ten-year period, from 1955, increased its sales from 19 million tons to 60 million tons per year. On this question, the Commission found that of the increase in domestic production in this ten-year period of 88 million tons, Peabody accounted for 45 percent of the increase. In 1965 Peabody accounted for 90 percent of the total domestic increase.

---

[4] It is noteworthy that contracts with electric utilities are long-term, generally for the life of the utility plant, which fact serves to stabilize the coal production and to enable it to systemize its distribution facilities.

The total market share of the four largest firms, according to the findings of the Commission which are supported by the evidence, rose from 15.8 percent in 1954 to 29.2 percent in 1967, and the top eight companies increased their market share from 23.6 percent to 39.7 percent in the same period. Both the top four and top eight companies experienced phenomenal disproportionate growth in this period.

[74] A number of factors militated against new entry into the coal business. The fact that the big demand was for consumption by utility companies involving long-term contract, extensive reserves and ready ability to deliver all contributed. Thus, experience, know-how and equipment are essentials.

There is, of course, no lack of demand for coal. The oil companies are, which has been shown, likely purchasers of coal reserves, but not necessarily with a view to entering the coal business, although some of them have done so. Rather, the oil companies are concerned with a possible source of petroleum and petroleum products. Therefore, the coal market as such, although perhaps not concentrated at the time of trial, is headed in that direction. As the Commission points out, it seems inevitable that the market shares will, to an increasing extent, go to the top producers in the industry not only because of their reserves but also because of their productive capacities, transportation facilities, expertise in extraction and marketing and, of course, because of their great resources which are shown to be essential to the coal business in its present and foreseeable future form.

Kennecott tries to turn these facts to its advantage, pointing out that substantial concerns like Continenal Oil Company, Occidental Pertoleum, U.S. Steel, Gulf Oil and Standard Oil of Ohio operate as a stabilizing factor in the competition picture and furnish some assurance that Peabody and Kennecott will not simply because of Kennecott's resources make any great impact.

VII.

ANALYSIS OF THE ISSUES

We are called on to determine whether the Commission was correct in holding that Kennecott was a most likely entrant into the coal business and, indeed, a more likely entrant than other forms, including the major oil and gas companies, railroads and utilities. We must also appraise the Commission's holding that the coal industry is presently a loose oligopoly which is moving at an accelerated rate toward a highly concentrated condition and is not, as Kennecott maintains, an industry which is competitively structured and likely to remain so in the future.

We must also consider the Commission's holding that there is a dearth of potential new entrants into the coal business and, further, whether the elimination of Kennecott had the effect of substantially lessening competition.

The remaining question of substance is whether the Commission erred in its conclusions as to the probable effects of the acquisition on competition and particularly in its conclusion that the special circumstances of the merging companies in relationship to the concentrated market may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly.

VIII.

KENNECOTT AS A MOST LIKELY ENTRANT

This is an unusual merger case in that it is neither a horizontal nor a vertical merger such as the courts have most frequently considered. Nor is it a product extension merger such as that in Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Company, 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303 (1967). This latter type has distinct characteristics, although it is more similar to the conglomerate type merger which we have here than it is to the horizontal and vertical. It is also unusual in that it brings together the two largest companies in their respective industries. However, as was said by the Supreme Court in Procter & Gamble, 386 U.S. at 577, 87 S.Ct. 1229:

> All mergers are within the reach of § 7, and all must be tested by the same standard, whether they are classified as horizontal, vertical, conglomerate or other. * * *

A conglomerate merger was defined in Procter & Gamble as being one in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm.

[75] [2] Since this was a conglomerate merger there existed little direct economic relationship between the two firms, although Kennecott was shown to have been a substantial consumer of coal and was thus a potential customer. It was also shown to have been a potential coal producer, and thus in its latter capacity had at least some competitive relationship to Peabody and to the industry.

Nevertheless, the facts are peculiar in that Kennecott was not at the time of the acquisition directly engaged in coal production so that the merger did not have the effect of removing a direct and active competitor. But this is a factor which will be present in every conglomerate merger case, and it does not serve to remove the merger from the scope of § 7 of the Clayton Act; neither does it necessarily result in the use of different criteria, although it must be conceded that the criteria applicable to the horizontal merger furnish limited help in judging the validity of the conglomerate acquisition.[5] To the extent that these economics criteria are helpful they should, of course, be employed.[6]

[3] Still another differentiating unusual factor is that the market here is not presently an oligopolistic one. The Commission's decision is based on its predictions derived from the evidence that the market would become a tight oligopoly if action were not taken at what it considered to be the incipient stage. In the light of the general objectives of the Act we perceive no error in the Commission's approaching the case on the basis of assessing probabilities rather than present conditions. The Act contemplates this.

A. The Commission's Potential Competition Concept.

The actual terms of § 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, sometimes called the Celler-Kefauver Act, are addressed not only to conditions which are presently apparent but contemplate the prevention of mergers which will lessen competition in the future. Section 7 has been frequently employed in the merger case. See United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Company, 376 U.S. 651, 84 S.Ct. 1044, 12 L.Ed.2d 12 (1964); United States v. Penn-Olin

---

[5] See Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv. L.Rev. 1313, 1362 (1965):

> Even though an acquiring company has not been a direct competitor in the acquired firm's industry, a conglomerate acquisition may diminish competitive influences from outside the market that might otherwise exist. Such adverse effects may come about in three different ways. First, as previously discussed, the acquisition may diminish potential competition by raising barriers to entry. Second, a conglomerate acquisition may remove as a independent competitive force a firm that, although not actually selling in the market of the acquired firm, has had a substantial impact on the behavior of companies in that market because it was recognized as a likely entrant. Finally the merger may involve a firm that would actually have entered the acquired firm's market by internal expansion if the merger had not occurred. The latter two phenomena will often coincide: a firm that would have entered an industry by internal expansion will often be a firm that exerts an influence on market behavior even while it is an outsider. However, the two need not go together. It is not likely, for example, that the Ronson cigarette lighter company was recognized as a threat by the producers of electric razors before it expanded into that market. Therefore, the two possibilities deserve separate analytical treatment.

[6] These are at best guides and are not to be regarded as ends in themselves. There is some apparent danger in slavish adherence to criteria, whereby the terms and philosophy of the Act itself are submerged.

Chemical Company, 378 U.S. 158, 84 S.Ct. 1710, 12 L.Ed.2d 775 (1964) ; Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Company. 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303 (1967) ; and see also United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915 (1963) and United States v. Von's Grocery Company, 384 U.S. 270, 86 S.Ct. 1478, 16 L.Ed.2d 555 (1966).

Ordinarily the potential competition concept comes into play where the industry [76] is regarded as an oligopoly. Admittedly, the industry as it existed at the time of trial was not a tight oligopoly. Based, however, on the findings of the Commission that the industry is on its way to becoming highly concentrated, the Commission determined that it was justified in acting so as to prevent the development of a tightly concentrated industry. This approach has been generally approved in the cases. Thus, in Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Company, supra, the Court said:

> [T]here is certainly no requirement that the anticompetitive power manifest itself in anticompetitive action before § 7 can be called into play. If the enforcement of § 7 turned on the existence of actual anticompetitive practices, the congressional policy of thwarting such practices in their incipiency would be frustrated. 87 S.Ct. at 1229

The Court went on to say that since the important question is whether a merger may substantially lessen the competition, it is necessary to make a prediction as to the merger's impact on competition, present and future.

Also, in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Company, 378 U.S. 158, 84 S.Ct. 1710, 12 L.Ed.2d 775, it was said:

> The existence of an aggressive, well equipped and well financed corporation engaged in the same or related lines of commerce waiting anxiously to enter an oligopolistic market would be a substantial incentive to competition which cannot be underestimated.

See also United States v. Continental Can Company, 378 U.S. 441, 84 S.Ct. 1738, 12 L.Ed.2d 953 (1964) and United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Company, supra.

Brown Shoe Company[7] clearly recognized that the government

---

[7] The dissenting opinion of Justice Stewart in United States v. Von's Grocery Company, supra, in commenting on Brown Shoe Company ably sums up this concept:

Under § 7, as amended, a merger can be invalidated if, and only if, "the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." No question is raised here as to the tendency of the present merger to create a monopoly. Our sole concern is with the question whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition.

The principal danger against which the 1950 amendment was addressed was the erosion of competition through the cumulative centripetal effect of acquisitions by large is not required to stay its hand until the market has reached an oligopolistic stage or condition. Thus, there is ample authority for the Commission's potential competiton concept. The threat to potental competition approach can be employed in projecting the trend of the market and the probability of a future monopoly.

B. Influence of Kennecott on the Edge of the Market.

[4] The Commission found that Kennecott was indeed a substantial potential entrant into the coal industry. Its interest dated back to 1963, at which time it commenced to plan an extension of its activities so as to utilize its very substantial cash reserves. In the year 1963, it acquired the Knight Ideal Coal Company and did so for the purpose of obtaining a source of coal for its own use and, secondly, for the purpose of producing and selling coal on a commercial basis. The evidence establishes that at that time the company manifested an interest in entering the coal business on [77] a national basis. For a time, it is true, it considered entering the oil business, but even during this period did not abandon its intention to become a producer and seller of coal. Its dwindling copper reserves and the necessity for utilizing its cash surplus, together with its acknowledged and manifest interest in mining, furnished ample evidence to support the Commission's determination that it was a likely entrant. The Commission noted that the record was devoid of evidence to show that there were any other potential entrants possessing the necessary financial resources to build a substantial coal business.

Based on the evidence that Kennecott was peculiarly well qualified because of its long experience in hard rock mining and its acknowledged capabilities, its financial resources and its close proximity to the coal industry, it was found that Kennecott was not only a likely entrant but also the most likely entrant into the coal business. In this connection, the Commission noted that oil companies, natural gas companies, electric utilities and railroads are not to be regarded as likely entrants. The oil and gas companies are primarily interested in acquiring coal reserves for synthetic corporations, none of which by itself might be sufficient to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Congress' immediate fear was that of large corporations buying out small companies. A major aspect of that fear was the perceived trend toward absentee ownership of local business. Another, more generalized, congressional purpose revealed by the legislative history was to protect small businessmen and to stem the rising tide of concentration in the economy. These goals, Congress thought, could be achieved by "arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 317, 82 S.Ct. 1502 at 1520, 8 L.Ed. 2d 510.

---

[7] (Continued)

384 U.S. at 283, 284, 86 S.Ct. at 1485.

fuels and the sale of coal is a secondary objective. The record fully supports these findings.

C. Kennecott as a Competitor Prior to the Merger.

The Commission expressed the view that Kennecott was not only a potential entrant into the coal industry but exerted substantial influence on the market due to its interest in the coal business and its long-term plans. Its acquisition of the Knight Ideal reserves and its use of this Knight Ideal property as a lever in negotiating fuel contracts, both gas and coal, support the Commission's position; however, it is not shown actually to have engaged in the production of coal prior to the acquisition of Peabody. Peabody was shown to have been apprehensive about the possibility that Kennecott would become a producer, and in at least one instance this was a factor in a Kennecott-Peabody negotiation for the purchase of coal. Undoubtedly Kennecott was the most likely entrant, considering its resources and capabilities, and as such it exercised influence on the market and the industry.

Much documentary evidence was introduced to show Kennecott's long-range study of the coal business. A desire to engage in the coal business was expressed by high level management officials starting in 1963. This was undoubtedly influenced by the fact that Kennecott's main experience was not only in extracting ore but also in strip mining which has become the most important extractive method in the coal industry. This was coupled with the fact that the coal business did not have a prohibitively high entry price as did the oil business. Finally, it offered about the only outlet for Kennecott's growing cash resources. Thus, the Commission was justified in determining that Kennecott's entry into the coal business one way or another was almost certain. There is also the factor that no other likely entrants were shown to exist. These peculiar circumstances thus exerted influence on the market which offset the factor of direct or actual competition.

D. Barriers to Entry by Expansion.

[5] The evidence is clear that the coal industry had become so complex and specialized even before the instant merger that it was virtually impossible for a company with fewer resources than Kennecott to start a coal company by the acquisition of reserves and equipment. The experiences of Kerr-McGee and Utah Mining and Construction Company demonstrate that there is a basic time requirement of from 10 to 15 years to which must be added the necessity to obtain the large utility contracts which justify the large scale operations. The removal of Kennecott, which was shown to have been a most likely entrant had the effect of raising the entry barriers even further, since it removed a potential entrant.[8] The Commission's finding that [78] Kennecott intended to enter the coal industry by one means or another is supported by the evidence.

E. The Effects of the Acquisition on Competition.

[6] Kennecott takes strong exception to the Commission's consideration of the anticompetitive effect of its great financial resources. The Commission reasoned that it was likely that this "deep pocket" of funds would be employed to acquire vast coal reserves and massive mining developments to enable Kennecott to compete for long-term utility supply contracts and thus to gain more market share. As we view it, this did not, as Kennecott contends, introduce a new and untried issue. It was proper for the Commission to consider the actual effect on competition of the merger of two very large corporations with their tremendous resources and to place major emphasis on this factor. The trend towards high concentration is material. Moreover, the preservation of the possibility of future deconcentration is a legitimate aim, and the inhibition of that possibility, because of the acquisition, is a relevant factor in assessing illegality. See United States v.

---

[8] Kennecott objects strenuously to the Commission's determination that Kennecott could have entered the industry in a way other than by internal expansion. The Commission ruled on the other hand that a finding of illegality does not depend on this; that Kennecott was admittedly a potential entrant by acquisition and that it could have entered the industry by acquiring a small company rather than the industry leader. The result, according to the Commission, was that a new competitive force was lost and the high concentration of the coal industry was accelerated.

The possibility of new rivals coming into the industry by internal expansion, or by acquisition of a firm too small to compete by itself against the largest firms, is essential to effective competition. The Report of the Attorney General's Committee (1954) states:

> The basic characteristic of effective competition in the economic sense is that no one seller, and no group of sellers acting in concert, has the power to choose its level of profits by giving less and charging more. Where there is workable competition, rival sellers, whether existing competitors or new or potential entrants into the field, would keep this power in check by offering or threatening to offer effective inducements, so long as the profits to be anticipated in the industry are sufficiently attractive in comparison with those in other employment, when all risks and other deterrents are taken into account. The result would be to force the seller who sought to increase his profits above this level by employing a high-price, limited-output monopoly policy either to give it up, or to lose ground to his rivals at a rate sufficient to reduce his profits, thus defeating his policy. (The inducements referred to are those of quantity, quality, time and place of delivery, incidental services, selling effort and price.)

Oppenheim, Cases on Federal Antitrust Laws 66 (2d ed. West 1959).

When a market consists of a relatively few sellers each with a significant share of a market which is isolated from such competitive pressures, there is greater possibility that the firms will not compete against each other strenuously. The preservation of the opportunity for entry of new rivals is a fundamental requisite for effective competition in the long run. Id. at 72–74. Added vigilance is necessary where true economies of scale permit only a relatively few sellers in the market.

Continental Can Company, 378 U.S. 441, 461–462, 84 S.Ct. 1738, 12 L.Ed.2d 953 (1964); United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365 n. 42, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915 (1963).

Justice Harlan in his concurring opinion in Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Company, supra, recognized that the anticompetitive effects are properly to be considered. The Justice concluded that the Commission in the Procter & Gamble Clorox case was justified in concluding that the merger carried with it a reasonable probability of a substantial increase in barriers to entry and of enhancement of pricing power in the industry.

In our case it was reasonable for the Commission to conclude that Kennecott would use its immense resources to gain for Peabody, already the number one producer in the industry, an even larger share of a market which promises to be a concentrated one in a relatively short time.

We have weighed the possible effect of competing fuels, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear energy, but are of the opinion that the price of competition does [79] not detract from our conclusion that the Commission correctly determined that it was a violation of § 7. The coal industry is a distinct submarket which has characteristics which are not shared by the other fuel industries. It has shown its ability to maintain prices at a level which allows it to compete successfully against natural gas, its closest rival. Within its own ambit, however, its price structures are now, and promise to be in the future, subject to the peculiarities of the coal business. Thus, other fuels appear to have a limited effect.

In summary we conclude:

1. The product market which is mainly directed to supplying electric utilities was and is well defined and at the same time is a somewhat structured one trending toward concentration.

2. Due to the specialized nature of the industry requiring as it does particular knowledge and highly developed equipment, the entry barriers are formidable. Lengthy effort and great resources are necessary.

3. Kennecott was prior to the merger the most likely entrant and as such exerted a substantial influence based on the likelihood of its entrance rather than on its actual competition.

4. The removal of Kennecott from the edge of the market and the substitution of it within the market for Peabody, the leading producer and distributor, eliminated a substantial potential competitive force.

5. The merger brought together the largest copper producer and the largest coal producer. The combined financial and other resources of the merging companies resulted in a merged company with a real potential to accelerate the already remarkable trend toward oligopoly.

6. "The acquisition may substantially lessen competition in the coal industry."

IX

WHETHER KENNECOTT WAS DEPRIVED OF A FAIR HEARING

The final contention is that the Commission was in effect disqualified from extending to Kennecott a fair and judicious hearing because of varied other duties, including its numerous contacts with members of Congress and others in matters related to the very subject matter of the case. Kennecott also challenges the fairness of the hearing on the ground that Commissioner Mary Gardiner Jones refused to disqualify herself following her giving an interview to a magazine reporter.

[7] On the first point this court pointed out in an early case, Brinkley v. Hassig, 83 F.2d 351, 357 (10th Cir. 1936), that the Federal Trade Commission combines the functions of investigator, prosecutor and judge and that Congress designed it in that manner. Thus Kennecott's complaint goes to the nature of the law itself. As to this, the courts have uniformly held that this feature does not make out an infringement of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. See the discussion in Federal Trade Commission v. Cinderella Career and Finishing Schools, Inc., 131 U.S.App.D.C. 331, 404 F.2d 1308, 1315 (1968). It has been pointed out, however, that a Commissioner who had previously acted in an investigatory or prosecutory capacity in a case cannot sit as a member of the Commission in deciding it. See Amos Treat & Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 113 U.S.App.D.C. 100, 306 F.2d 260, 263 (1962).

In support of its contention that it could not get a fair trial, Kennecott has tendered a vast quantity of documents accompanied by a motion to supplement the record. We have examined these in camera, and although we see no reason why they should not be made a part of the record, with the exception of the Wier Report (Appendix XI),[9] we do not believe after reading these documents that they furnish reason in support of the Kennecott position that the cause should be reversed for unfairness. These are routine communications pertaining to Commission studies of the energy field, including coal, together with communications from congressmen and other interested groups seeking action against concentrations [80] in these fields. The Commission is charged with the performance of certain public interest functions, and these documents appear to be incident to these functions. We agree with Kennecott to the extent that this places an extra burden on a Commissioner to avoid policy issues and to make a special effort to focus exclusively on the issues of the case. Undoubtedly, the Commissioners are mindful of this and are accustomed to evaluating matters before them in accordance with the issues and the evidence. The Commissioner does not, of course, enjoy any immunity because of his broad scale obligations. He must conduct himself circumspectly and with fairness and must at all times maintain the outward posture as well.

---

[9] Kennecott's motion to supplement the record is granted except for the mentioned report.

[8] This brings us to Kennecott's second challenge pertaining to the public interview given by Commissioner Jones which reads as follows:

> COMM. JONES. When we look at the structure of a market, we must look at the barriers to entry. We have to determine whether the acquired company could have gone into the market on its own or whether its new presence might keep others out. Perhaps it's easier to see in a case like the Kennecott Copper-Peabody Coal complaint. We have here an instance of a copper company that was actually moving into the coal industry on its own. Kennecott was experimenting with a small, previously acquired coal property. The complaint says that Kennecott, in effect, eliminated itself as a probable new entrant into the coal industry when it went out and bought a major coal company. (Emphasis added.)

The rule is that a Commissioner must be disqualified if he or she has prejudged the case or has given a reasonable appearance of having prejudged it. See Federal Trade Commission v. Cinderella Career and Finishing Schools, Inc., 131 U.S. App.D.C. 331, 404 F.2d 1308, 1315 (1968) and Texaco, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 118 U.S.App.D.C. 366, 336 F.2d 754, 760 (1964):

We have examined the cases and in each instance in which the courts considering the facts ruled that the Commissioner had to be disqualified, action was entirely justified based on comments showing what appeared to be a prejudice or a viewpoint. No such commenting or editorializing is present here. From a reading of the statement in its entirety, it is clear that Commissioner Jones was discussing the complaint and was doing so in an effort to illustrate a point. Thus, it does not appear that she stepped over the line, whereby she showed even a slight commitment. For this reason, we hold that the expressions do not violate the standard which is set forth in the cases. In other words, she is not shown to have prejudged the central issue of the case, namely, whether "the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly." See Skelly Oil Company v. Federal Power Commission, 375 F.2d 6 at 17–18 (10th Cir. 1967).

Effort was there being made to show that one of the Commissioners was disqualified based upon a public address. It was there said:

> * * * In our opinion no basis for disqualification arises from the fact or assumption that a member of an administrative agency enters a proceeding with advance views on important economic matters in issue. * * * 375 F.2d at 18.

Public expressions with regard to pending cases cannot, of course, be approved because regardless of what is said such expressions tend not only to mar the image but to create embarrassment and to subject the proceedings to question. We do not, however, perceive any evidence of prejudging or the appearance of it.

The petition for review is denied, and it is directed that the orders of the Commission be affirmed and enforced.

APPENDIX I

A-3921

RX 170

Page 1 of 2

[a]

CONSOLIDATED ASSETS, SALES REVENUES AND PRODUCTION OF COAL* PRODUCERS WITH PRODUCTION OF 3,000,000 TONS OR MORE IN 1967 (RANKED BY COAL* PRODUCTION)

Tonnage Production Rank	Coal Producer	Parent Company	Total Assets	Sales Revenues	Production
			——$ Million——		(1,000 tons)
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)
1	Peabody^{2}	Kennecott Copper^{2}	1,489^{1}	757^{1}	59,407
2	Consolidation	Continental Oil	2,354	2,083	56,460
3	Island Creek	Occidental Petroleum	779^{1}	826^{1}	25,880
4	Pittston	Pittston	299^{3}	387^{3}	19,681
5	U.S. Steel	U.S. Steel	5,606	4,006	19,010
6	United Electric and Freeman	General Dynamics	920	2,253	14,124
7	Bethlehem Mines	Bethlehem Steel	3,084	2,594	12,623
8	Eastern Associated	Eastern Gas & Fuel	290	203	12,339
9	Old Ben Coal^{3}	Standard Oil of Ohio	736^{1}	724^{1}	10,272
10	Pittsburg & Midway	Gulf Oil	6,458	4,202	8,974
11	North American Coal	North American Coal	45^{3}	37^{3}	8,692
12	Ayrshire Collieries	Ayershire Collieries	94^{3}	62^{3}	8,604
13	Southwestern Illinois	Southwestern Illinois	N.A.	N.A.	7,527
14	Westmoreland Coal	Westmoreland Coal	35^{3}	32^{3}	6,337
15	Valley Camp	Valley Camp	N.A.	N.A.	5,487
16	Republic Steel	Republic Steel	1,523	1,266	4,646
17	Jones & Laughlin Mining and Gateway Coal^{4}	Jones & Laughlin Steel	1,093	904	4,440^{4}
18	Carbon Fuel	Carbon Fuel	N.A.	N.A.	4,136
19	Central Ohio and Central Appalachian	American Electric Power	2,156	524	4,095
20	Bell & Zoller and Ziegler Coal & Coke	Ziegler Coal & Coke	20^{3}	16^{3}	4,079

A-3922

RX 170

[b]

Page 2 of 2

CONSOLIDATED ASSETS, SALES REVENUES AND PRODUCTION OF COAL* PRODUCERS WITH PRODUCTION OF 3,000,000 TONS OR MORE IN 1967 (RANKED BY COAL* PRODUCTION) (CONTINUED)

Tonnage Production Rank	Coal Producer	Parent Company	Total Assets	Sales Revenues	Production
			—$ Million—		(1,000 tons)
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)
21	Winding Gulf	Winding Gulf	N.A.	N.A.	4,067
22	Rochester & Pittsburgh	Rochester & Pittsburgh	42[3]	31[3]	3,863
23	Ranger Fuel Corp.	Ranger Fuel Corp.	N.A.	N.A.	3,451
24	Amherst Coal	Amherst	N.A.	N.A.	3,443
25	Barnes & Tucker	Barnes & Tucker	N.A.	N.A.	3,220
26	Youghiogheny & Ohio	Youghiogheny & Ohio	N.A.	N.A.	3,074
TOTAL OF PRODUCTION LISTED					317,931
TOTAL INDUSTRY PRODUCTION					552,626
TONNAGE LISTED ABOVE AS PER CENT OF TOTAL INDUSTRY PRODUCTION					57.53%

* Coverage includes bituminous, sub-bituminous and lignite, as in Bureau of Mines statistics.

N.A.: Not Available

[1] Coal company acquired in 1968. Assets and revenue figures are for combined coal company and parent company in 1967.

[2] Data obtained from corporation annual reports.

[3] As reported in Moody's Industrial Manual, 1968.

[4] Gateway Coal is owned 64.5% by Jones & Laughlin, 22.5% by Pittsburgh Steel (remaining ownership not given). Gateway leases its coal properties, but the production from them is distributed to the steel companies in proportion to their ownership interests in Gateway. Production shown is for Jones & Laughlin Mining Co. (3,021,000 tons) plus 64.5% of the production by Gateway Coal Co. (1,419,000 tons).

Source: (Cols. 2, 6): Coal Production in the United States, 1967, compiled by Keystone Coal Buyers Manual and Coal Mine Directory (New York: McGraw-Hill, Inc., 1968).

(Cols. 3, 4, 5): "Fortune Directory of the 500 Largest U.S. Industrial Corporations," Fortune, June 15, 1968 (except as noted in footnotes).

APPENDIX II

HISTORY OF PEABODY COAL COMPANY AND THE MERGER

[84] Prior to 1955, Peabody Coal operated principally underground mines, most of them in Illinois; as of that year, it was producing on the order of eight to nine million tons of coal per year, and running at a loss (i.e., in 1954 it lost over $1,000,000). Its stock sold for under $3.00 per share.

In 1955, Peabody merged with a group of mines run by several related corporations, called the Sinclair group; this group had production roughly equivalent to that of Peabody at that time, but secured all its coal from strip mines and was run profitably. Merl Kelce, who was chairman and chief executive officer of Peabody until 1964, and then again from 1965 to the Kennecott merger, came into the new Peabody in 1955 from Sinclair as executive vice-president, assuming his duties as chief operating officer in 1957 upon the death of his older brother. During this period Peabody operations went from a production of 19 million tons to one of over 60 million tons; its stock price went from under $3.00 per share to over $47.00 per share, and it became one of the two largest coal companies in the country. Mr. Kelce attributed this principally to the growth in demand for coal by utilities, coupled with his practice of acquiring all reserves he could and closing down underground mines in favor of strip operations (there is currently only one underground mine left in the Peabody structure).

Mr. Kelce outlined the difficulties the company faced in the 1950's and 1960's in getting capable young men to enter the coal business, which everyone assumed to be moribund; he also stated that he encountered considerable opposition to and derision regarding his policy of putting all available funds into acquisition of reserves, which everyone assured him he would never be able to use. He wished he had been able to acquire more reserves, but felt the supply achieved to be adequate; on the other hand, the shortage of capable executives he felt to be a most serious problem for the company and for the industry in general.

Mr. Kelce resigned from Peabody in 1964, but reassumed his post as chairman and chief executive officer somewhat reluctantly in 1965. One of his thoughts at that time was to secure the sale of Peabody, and he let it be known that the company was for sale, conducting several negotiations to that end over the next few years. When asked why he wished to sell Peabody (the Kelce family had the largest share of stock in the company by a wide margin; although it was in itself fairly small—15 percent roughly—it gave the family effective control), he responded thus:

A. There were several reasons: air pollution, the threat of nuclear power, and our share price had been going down. When I made the agreement with Milliken of Kennecott, I think our shares were less than $30.

He explained each of the above considerations: air pollution was a considerable worry, not for the expense of developing clean-up technology but because there was considerable talk of the government's limiting the permissible use of coal to that having a sulphur content of one percent or less. This would have been a severe blow to Peabody, for just about all the coal it mined was "in the high range" of three and one-half to four percent sulphur content.

The nuclear power problem arose particularly from the fact that Peabody's two largest customers, Commonwealth Edison of Chicago and the TVA, both told Peabody that they were planning to make substantial investments in nuclear power—from which, they said, they could secure fuel costs which Mr. Kelce testified were "substantially lower than we had been delivering coal for"—and then went ahead and made some actual investments therein. Sales to these two companies [85] accounted for up to 40 percent of Peabody's production.[1]

The significance of the decline in price of Peabody's stock—which Mr. Kelce attributed principally to investor worry about pollution and nuclear power, as earnings remained high and even increased—was explained by him thus:

Q. At that time—and I am now talking about '65—'66—were these people you gave stock to when you opened mines back in your early days still shareholders of the company?

A. They had sold some of it, but the majority of them had held their stock.

Q. Was consideration for the investments of those people any factor in your decision to sell the company?

A. Well, my older brother had had a heart attack. Then other shareholders who had gotten stock through the old Sinclair Coal Company had come to me and said, "Well, why don't you sell the company?" Then, myself, I had gotten to the point where I wasn't a young man any more. I quit once, and then I came back into the business. I didn't want to have to spend as much time as I had been spending in the business running Peabody Coal Company.

Mr. Kelce had seriously discussed sale of Peabody with the Cerro Corporation, with Texas Gas Transmission of Owensboro, Kentucky, with Sunray DX Oil Co. of Tulsa, and with Atlantic

---

[1] The full advent of nuclear power on the scene has been delayed, and both TVA and Commonwealth Edison have since brought coal-burning plants. The potential still remains, of course.

Richfield of Philadelphia. He had also discussed things informally with Dean McGee of Kerr-McGee, but did not feel that to have been on the same level as negotiations with the other companies.

Finally, Mr. Kelce testified that the entrance of the oil companies into the coal business had had an adverse effect on Peabody:

> A. After the oil companies got in, it was pretty difficult for a company like Peabody, with a limited amount of cash, to go in and complete. Prices went up two and three times what we had been paying. (A–1825)

The first direct contact anyone from Peabody had with anyone from Kennecott took place in April of 1966, when Kelce, Jim Taylor (former general counsel of Peabody) and Harry Burgess (vice-president of Kennecott) got together following Peabody's annual meeting. This meeting was set up following a contact made by Paul Weir to Kelce between two and three weeks earlier. At this meeting, Kelce confirmed to Burgess that Peabody was for sale, and Burgess so reported to Milliken, Kennecott's president.

In this regard, there is a memorandum from Burgess to Milliken dated March 24, 1966, regarding a conversation between Burgess and Paul Weir and one Clayton Ball, an associate of Paul Weir. The Paul Weir Company is a consulting operation which is in the business of locating executives and generally helping make contacts and expediting the flow of information in industry; Kennecott has used them frequently.

The memorandum states that the subject of the conversation was specifically "coal opportunities," and says that both Weir and Ball stressed the dearth of much in the way of currently exploitable coal reserves to be bought from scratch, and the non-advisability of going after "cats and dogs" of companies in any effort to get into the coal business. It then states that Weir mentioned that if Kennecott were interesed in "going overboard" it might consider Peabody, which might be for sale. Burgess concludes the memo by stating that he told Weir—who is described as a good friend of Kelce—to ask Kelce if he might be interested in working something out, and appends a few sketchy facts about Peabody (gross sales, net profits, estimated reserves, and a brief comparison to Consolidated Coal, then being acquired by [86] Continental Oil). The memo is dated some three weeks before the meeting between Burgess and Kelce.

Following that latter meeting, merger negotiations began in earnest; Kennecott's Board was advised three months later, in July of 1966, of the state of affairs, and was asked for its approval to carry on negotiations to conclusion. Enclosed with that request was a rather detailed report on Peabody and the coal industry in general, as well as Kennecott's embarrassment of then-current riches. The report predicts that in the long run the acquisition will materially increase Kennecott's assets and the stockholders' equity over what they could be expected to be in the same period without the acquisition. The report anticipates a rosy future for the coal industry, and never mentions Knight Ideal.

In all events, the Kennecott Board approved continued negotiations at its meeting on July 15, 1966, and the acquisition was consummated on March 29, 1968.

SEVEN-UP COMPANY v. ANDREW C. GOODHOPE, ET AL.*

No. 72 C 285(2)—F.T.C. Docket 8857

(United States District Court, E.D. Missouri, September 12, 1972)

DISTRICT COURT HELD WITHOUT JURISDICTION ON SOFT DRINK MANUFACTURER'S ACTION FOR INJUNCTIVE AND DECLARATORY RELIEF

> [552] Federal district court was without subject matter jurisdiction of soft drink manufacturer's action for injunctive and declaratory relief challenging propriety of interlocutory order of Federal Trade Commission denying motion to dismiss proceeding, in which manufacturer was charged with engaging in unfair methods of competition by reason of license provision whereby bottlers agreed not to sell product outside of designated geographical area, for failure to join bottlers as indispensable parties.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 349 F. Supp. 551)

On action for injunctive and declaratory relief, Court held that it was without jurisdiction and denied the motion for summary judgment while granting defendants' motion to dismiss.

John T. Tabor and J. Stewart Bakula, St. Louis, Mo., Earl W. Kintner, Mark R. Joelson, Eugene J. Meigher and I. C. Waddey, Jr., Arent, Fox, Kintner, Plotkin & Kahn, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

Daniel Bartlett, Jr., U.S. Atty., and David W. Harlan, Asst. U.S. Atty., Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, James P. Timony, Atty., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for defendants.

ORDER

REGAN, District Judge.

---

*Reported in 349 F. Supp. 551 (1972). See also Seven-Up Company v. F.T.C., 8th Cir., 478 F. 2d 755 (1973), p. 670 herein, cert. denied 414 U.S. 1013, 94 S. Ct. 379 (1973). For case before the Commission, see ____ F.T.C. ____.

Presently pending before the Federal Trade Commission is a proceeding charging plaintiff, a soft drink manufacturer, with engaging in unfair methods of competition in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C., Section 45, by reason of provisions in licenses granted to its bottlers whereby the bottlers agree not to sell the product outside of a designated geographical territory. Similar complaints were filed and are pending against other soft drink manufacturers, including Coca Cola and Pepsi Cola. Plaintiff moved to dismiss the Commission proceedings on the ground of non-joinder of plaintiffs' many bottlers as indispensable parties.

This action for injunctive and declaratory relief challenges the propriety of the interlocutory order of the Commission denying the motion to dismiss. Similar orders in the Coca Cola and Pepsi Cola proceedings have been unsuccessfully attacked in other United States District Courts. See The Coca-Cola Company v. Federal Trade Commission, N.D.Ga., 342 F.Supp. 670, and Pepsi-Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, S.D.N.Y., 343 F. Supp. 396. Appeals have been taken from both rulings.

Defendants have moved to dismiss, or in the alternative for summary judgment. Plaintiff has moved for summary judgment. After full consideration, we agree with the rationale of the district court rulings in the Coca Cola and Pepsi Cola cases dismissing the complaints therein for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

Accordingly, it is hereby ordered that the defendants' motion to dismiss be and the same is hereby sustained and the complaint is dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment is denied.

STANLEY WORKS v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 11, Docket 71—1742—F.T.C. Docket 8760

(United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, October 17, 1972)

1. TO PERMIT COURT TO PROCEED TO QUESTION OF WHETHER COMPETITION GROUND WAS ADEQUATELY SUSTAINED, FTC DECISION DISCLOSED THAT MERGER WAS INVALIDATED ON GROUNDS OF POTENTIAL COMPETITION AND THAT ACQUIRING CORPORATION HAD NOTICE OF COMPETITION THEORY.

Federal Trade Commission decision sufficiently disclosed that merger was invalidated on ground of actual competition as well as on ground of potential competition, and that acquiring corporation had notice of actual competition theory, to permit reviewing court to proceed to question of whether actual competition ground was adequately sustained by substantial evidence.

---

*Reported in 469 F. 2d 498 (1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 928 (1973). For case before the Commission, see 78 F.T.C. 1023.

2. ANY MERGER BETWEEN MARKET LEADERS SUSPECT WHERE MARKET IS CONCENTRATED

Where market is already concentrated any merger between market leaders is suspect.

3. INDUSTRY SUFFICIENTLY CONCENTRATED WHERE FOUR LEADING FIRMS DOMINATED 49–51% OF THE MARKET

Where four leading firms in cabinet hardware industry dominated 49–51% of market, industry was sufficiently concentrated to invoke proscriptive sanction of Clayton Act, under circumstances of case.

4. FTC JUDGMENT AS TO MARKET CONCENTRATION FOR ANTITRUST PURPOSES IS ENTITLED TO SUBSTANTIAL WEIGHT

Judgment of Federal Trade Commission as to what type of market is concentrated for antitrust purposes is entitled to substantial weight.

5. MARKET IS "CONCENTRATED" WHERE MERGER BETWEEN FIRST AND TENTH RANKING FIRMS THREATENS ANTICOMPETITIVE CONSEQUENCES

Where merger beween first and tenth ranking firms in market threatens substantial anticompetitive consequences, market is "concentrated" by any measure.

6. INVOLVED SECTION'S INCIPIENCY STANDARD PROVIDES PREVENTIVE AS WELL AS REMEDIAL THERAPY FOR AN AILING INDUSTRY

Incipiency standard of antimerger provision of Clayton Act, which requires not merely appraisal of immediate impact of merger on competition but prediction of its impact on competitive conditions in future, provides preventive as well as remedial therapy for ailing industry, and its salutary medicines need not be withheld until diagnosis reads "terminal."

7. COURT BOUND BY STIPULATED FACTS AND CANNOT PICK AND CHOOSE AT WILL

Parties and court were bound by stipulated facts in antitrust case, and court could not pick and choose at will.

8. WHERE CORPORATION RANKS TENTH IN MARKET, ACQUIRING CORPORATION'S 1% SHARE OF MARKET WAS NOT DE MINIMIS.

Acquiring corporation's 1% share of cabinet hardware market was not de minimis where such corporation was tenth ranking corporation in market.

9. SUBSTANTIAL ELIMINATION OF COMPETITION RESULTED FROM ACQUISITION OF CORPORATION WITH 22% OF MARKET BY CORPORATION WITH 1% OF MARKET IN VIEW OF EXISTING LEVEL OF CONCENTRATION

Acquisition, by corporation with 1% share of cabinet hardware market, of corporation with more than 22% of market resulted in substantial elimination of competition, in view of existing level of concentration and of likelihood that acquiring corporation would have been more active competitor in future but for merger.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 469 F.2d 498.)

On petition to review and set aside, Court held that acquisition, by corporation with 1% share of cabinet hardware market, of corporation with more than 22% of market resulted in substantial elimination of competition in view of existing level of concentration. Order affirmed and enforced.

[499] John W. Douglas, Washington, D.C., for petitioner.

Alvin L. Berman, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Before KAUFMAN, SMITH and MANSFIELD, Circuit Judges.

IRVING R. KAUFMAN, Circuit Judge:

This appeal presents important questions of antitrust law. The central issue is whether the August 1966 acquisition of Amerock Corporation by The Stanley Works violated § 7 of the Clayton Act[1] and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[2] The Federal Trade Commission held that it did and ordered divestiture.[3] Stanley filed a petition asking this Court to review and set aside the Commission's order. See 15 U.S.C. § 45(c). For the reasons given below, we believe the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen actual competition in the national cabinet hardware market. Accordingly, we affirm the decision of the Commission and direct that its order be enforced.

I.

As always, resolution of a question of antitrust illegality requires us to describe the companies involved, analyze the product and geographic market in which they compete, and explore the structure of the industry affected by the merger, to the end that we may properly assess the probable effects of the merger on competition.

---

[1] 15 U.S.C. § 18. Section 7 as amended, provides:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1). That section provides:

"Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. are declared unlawful."

The complaint in this case, issued against Stanley on April 30, 1968, charged a violation of Clayton § 7 and Federal Trade Commission Act, § 5. The Commission found that the merger transgressed both statutes. Although a violation of § 5 is not necessarily a violation of § 7, see Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry Hutchinson, 405 U.S. 233, 246, 92 S.Ct. 898, 31 L.Ed.2d 170 (1972). It is the case that every violation of § 7 is also a violation of § 5. Since we hold that the Stanley-Amerock merger is illegal under § 7, and therefore illegal under § 5, we need not give special consideration to § 5 analysis.

[3] The Commission's decision was rendered on May 17, 1971.

The Companies

Stanley is a Connecticut corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of hand and power tools, hardware products, steel and steel strapping, with its principal place of business in New Britain, Connecticut. It is a large, multi-plant, multi-product concern with a history of expanding sales. In 1965, a year prior to the merger, Stanley's domestic sales were $123,000,000, an increase of $29,000,000 over its 1963 sales figures. For the period 1963–65, its net earnings after taxes rose from $4,200,000 to $6,600,000, an advance of more than 57%. In 1965 Stanley's sales in the relevant product market[4] were $814,000. It operated numerous production facilities, including plants located in California, Connecticut, Florida, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Tennessee, Vermont and Illinois.

Amerock was incorporated in 1928 and maintains its principal place of business in Rockford, Illinois. At the time of this merger, Amerock was engaged in the manufacture and sale of certain hardware products for use primarily in kitchens, in addition to a broad line of window, appliance, furniture and general household hardware products. Its domestic [500] sales in 1963 totaled $23.8 million, and increased by 1965 to $29.4 million, an advance of more than 23%. Amerock's 1965 net earnings after taxes were $2.8 million, a gain of over 47% over its 1963 earnings figures. Amerock's 1965 sales in the relevant product market were in excess of $18,000,000.

The Industry

Since Section 7 of the Clayton Act forbids mergers between companies "in any line of commerce in any section of the country," when the merger may result in substantial lessening of competition, determination of the relevant product and geographical markets is of critical significance. See, e.g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962). Here the task of isolating the relevant markets has been made simpler for us, since Stanley and the Commission stipulated that within the general hardware industry, sales of cabinet hardware products in the Nation constitute the appropriate product and geographic markets. The parties agreed also that for purposes of this case, there are no relevant product or geographic submarkets. The Examiner and the Commission grounded their findings of fact on these stipulations; their findings are conclusive, if supported by substantial evidence. 15 U.S.C. § 45(c).

---

[4] For our discussion of the relevant product market see p. 500.

The parties are agreed that cabinet hardware includes pulls, knobs, hinges, latches, catches and similar products, including drawer slides and shelving hardware, used principally in kitchen cabinets. The cabinet hardware market comprises two related lines, residential cabinet hardware and architectural, or institutional, cabinet hardware.[5] Residential cabinet hardware is used in houses and apartments. At one time, residential cabinet hardware was made primarily of metal stampings and extrusions, and was essentially functional in nature, with simple lines and designs. In the years folowing World War II, as the American home began to reflect post-war economic affiuence, consumer demand for more highly ornamented cabinet hardware designs increased, and the industry underwent a dramatic change. Manufacturers of residential cabinet hardware turned to a zinc die-casting process, and, as a result, products in this line were transformed into highly stylized, fashion-oriented items, which were offered in a wide variety of designs and finishes to complement the motifs of contemporary cabinet work. Virtually all residential knobs and pulls are now made by the die-casting method. This enables manufacturers to produce the intricate styles and designs demanded by consumers of residential cabinet hardware.

Architectural cabinet hardware is produced for use in institutional and commercial buildings, such as schools, recreational centers and office buildings. The marketing watchword of architectural cabinet hardware is embodied in the phrase, "form follows function;" products in this line must be more durable than residential cabinet hardware in order to withstand the heavier wear to which they are subject in an institutional or commercial setting. As a result, architectural cabinet hardware is rarely made by the die-cast method but is stamped out of bronze, brass, aluminum or steel. These metals are more durable than zinc die-cast material and also more expensive.

Market Shares

Cabinet hardware sales in the United States in 1965, a year prior to the merger, were between $76,000,000 and $80,000,000. The record discloses that in 1965, Stanley ranked as the tenth leading producer of cabinet hardware products with sales of $814,000, representing a market share of 1%. Amerock, the acquired company, ranked first as the seller [501] of cabinet hardware products in the United States. Its 1965 sales exceeded

---

[5] We stress that neither of these lines constitutes a separate product market for purposes of this case, an element ignored in the dissenting opinion. Our division of the market at this point is designed to serve descriptive, not analaytic, purposes.

$18,000,000, and the company controlled 22–24% of the market.[6]

The Commission upheld the Trial Examiner's finding that the cabinet hardware industry was concentrated. As the table in the margin indicates, the four leading firms in the industry accounted for total sales ranging from 49% to 51% of the market.[7]

II.

[1] Our attention initially must focus on a threshold dispute between the parties. It is Stanley's contention that the rationale and critical findings of the Commission's decision indicate that the Stanley-Amerock merger was declared illegal solely on the ground that the merger eliminated potential competition in the cabinet hardware market. The Commission opposes this characterization of its decision and insists that elimination of both actual and potential competition triggered application of Clayton § 7 to the merger. The Commission's position on appeal is that either ground for its decision adequately made out a violation of the Clayton Act in this case. The argument is of central importance because under the rule enunciated in SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 92, 63 S.Ct. 454, 87 L.Ed. 626 (1943), we must find that the considerations urged on appeal in support of the Commission's order are those upon which the Commission's acquisition was based, if we are to sustain the order.

Chenery instructs that "the orderly functioning of the process of review requires that the grounds upon which the administrative agency acted be clearly disclosed and adequately sustained." Chenery, supra, 318 U.S. at 94, 63 S.Ct. at 462. It is clear to us that the Commission's decision was dual pronged and that the Stanley-Amerock merger was invalidated on both actual and potential com-

---

[6] The respective totals in cabinet hardware sales, and Stanley's and Amerock's percentage market shares, were agreed to by stipulation.

[7]

	1965
	Cabinet Hardware Sales in U. S.	Total Assets
1. Amrock Corp.	$18,218,474	25,133,914
2. National Lock Company	$11,499,445	37,992,215
3. Ajax Hardware Corp.	$ 6,798,000	3,338.412
4. Knape & Vogt Mfg. Co.	$ 6,013.304	7.968,450
5. Jaybee Mfg. Corp.	$ 3,056.673	1.710,989
6. Grant Pulley & Hardware Corp.	$ 2.168.397	2,369,165
7. David Allison Co., Inc.	$ 1.500,000	1,500.000
8. Tassell Industries. Inc.	$ 1.408,600	2,483.424
9. Hyer Hardware Mfg. Corp.	$ 1,344.464	524,452
10. Stanley Hardware Division	$ 814,000	125,926.000

petition grounds. And in our view, the actual competition case was "clearly disclosed" within the meaning of Chenery.[8]

[502] We do not develop a "new ground" for the Commission's holding, as the dissent mistakenly suggests, but find the actual competition case clearly underscored in the proceedings before the Examiner, and also in the opinion rendering the Commission's decision. The complaint charged that as a result of the merger "substantial actual and potential competition has been, or may be, eliminated." Stanley's clear perception that an actual competition theory had been litigated before the Trial Examiner is evident from its brief on appeal to the Commission which discussed the merits of the actual competition case at some length.[9]

To preserve the integrity both of judicial review and of agency procedures we must be persuaded not only that Stanley had notice of the actual competition theory, but that the Commission specifically adopted the actual competition case as a reason for its decision. Any doubts on that score, however, are convincingly dispelled by a careful reading of the Commission's opinion, which repeatedly relates the effect of the merger on actual competition.

The Commission adopted at the outset the Examiner's finding that "the merger between Stanley and Amerock led to increased concentration in the already concentrated cabinet hardware market as well as eliminating Amerock as the leading independent producer of cabinet hardware * * *." Unmistakably this is the argot of an actual competition case.

---

[8] Stanley's position is that the Commission's potential competition theory is inadequate to support a finding of merger illegality in this case. The Commission held that Stanley was a reasonably probable entrant into the residential cabinet hardware market, and that Stanley would have entered by internal development had it not acquired Amerock. In the Commission's view, the merger eliminated Stanley as a potential entrant, removed the "disciplining effect" it exercised on the market, and raised barriers to entry in an already concentrated market. The Commission did not find that Stanley was the "most likely entrant," see FTC v. Procter & Gamble, 386 U.S. 568, 581, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303 (1967); cf United States v. El Paso Natural Gas, 376 U.S. 651, 658–659, 84 S.Ct. 1044, 12 L.Ed.2d 12 (1964). In addition, the Commission did not point to any evidence indicating that Stanley exercised a "disciplining effect" on the market, nor did it illustrate how Stanley's acquisition of Amerock would contribute to raising barriers to entry in the residential cabinet hardware industry. Inasmuch as we conclude that the Stanley-Amerock merger is illegal because it eliminated substantial actual competition and thereby may lessen competition in the cabinet market as a whole, we need not decide the merits of the potential competition case.

Thus, in this part of our opinion, we consider Stanley's argument that the actual competition theory was not "adequately disclosed." In Part III, we shall treat the question whether that ground is "adequately sustained" by substantial evidence.

[9] Thus, to note only a few examples, at page 23 of its brief Stanley argued that "[t]he so-called 'horizontal' aspects of the case, i. e., the amount of actual competition in cabinet hardware eliminated by the merger, is de minimis, and the Examiner erred in not so finding." At pages 25–26 of its brief, Stanley argued that the examiner had incorrectly assessed "the amount of actual competition in fact eliminated by the merger." And finally Stanley asserted that "[i]n view of all the considerations summarized above [at pages 23–30 of its brief], it is clear that the horizontal aspect of this case is quite different from the situations involved in the leading horizontal cases. . . ."

Moreover, that portion of the Commission's opinion which discussed the competitive effects of the Amerock acquisition articulated the Commission's overall view of the case in language that indicates beyond doubt the mix of actual and potential competition theories underlying the Commission's decision. It was the Commission's view that the "case presents * * * a mingling of the effects which are traditionally cognizable under the discrete categories of actual and potential competition." After reviewing Stanley's role in the cabinet hardware market, the Commission characterized Stanley as both "an actual and potential competitor in the stipulated market." "Viewing the case in this light, the Commission concluded, "and within the general confines of the established analytical framework relating to actual and potential competition, we are convinced from the present record that the examiner was correct in concluding that the merger of Stanley and Amerock had significant anticompetitive consequences proscribed by Section 7 * * * "

In addition, the Commission's opinion (footnote 12), establishes clearly that the elimination of actual competition was a ground on which the Commission's decision rested. Noting that the examiner had concluded that the cabinet hardware market was concentrated, the Commission [503] cited two studies[10] which bolstered that finding. The opinion sets forth the view shared by a number of scholars that "any horizontal acquisition involving a firm with more than 20% of the relevant market [Amerock's share was 22–24%] should be deemed illegal," and refers to authorities which support that view.[11] Both sources, at the cited pages, clearly address themselves to cases in which mergers eliminated actual competition.

Finally, and most convincingly, the Commission emphasized the importance of closely scrutinizing mergers in markets that are already concentrated, relying on United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915 (1963). The question in that case was whether a merger between Philadelphia National Bank and Girard Trust Corn Exchange Bank, the second and third largest commercial banks in the Philadelphia metropolitan area, violated § 7 by lessening competition in the commercial banking business. The Court held that it did, and grounded its decision on the elimination of actual competition. The Commission clearly understood and considered the rationale of the case, and applied it to the Stanley-Amerock merger.

---

[10] K. Kaysen & D. Turner, Antitrust Policy: An Economic and Legal Analysis 72 (1959), and J. Bain, Industrial Organization 14–41 (2d ed. 1968).

[11] K. Kaysen & D. Turner, supra, at 133; Stigler, Mergers and Preventive Antitrust, 114 U.Pa.L.Rev. 176, 182 (1955).

In light of the above, we would be remiss in our duty as a reviewing court if we abstained from considering the merits of the actual competition theory and remanded the case to the Commission, as Stanley urges us to do. The record contains ample evidence to enable this Court to assess the merits, and it is abundantly clear that the Commission relied on the actual competition theories, among others, in reaching its conclusion. Chenery does not predicate judicial review of an agency finding on the correctness of that finding, nor does it require an agency to crystallize its basis of decision into a single, rarefied reason. All that is required is that "[i]f the administrative action is to be tested by the basis upon which it purports to rest, that basis must be set forth with such clarity as to be understandable." SEC v. Chenery Corp. (Chenery II), 332 U.S. 194, 196, 67 S.Ct. 1575, 1577, 91 L.Ed. 1995 (1947). We believe the Commission's decision with respect to the actual competition case satisfies that test.

III.

Having reached the merits, we must decide whether the effect of the merger "may be substantially to lessen competition" in the cabinet hardware market. Mindful of the admonition that questions of antitrust laws are not always "susceptible of a ready and precise answer," United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at 362, 83 S.Ct. at 1741, we take as our starting point, and touchstone of analysis, that "[t]he dominant theme pervading congressional consideration of the 1950 amendments [to § 7] was a fear of what was considered to be a rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1518, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962). And we recognize "that a keystone in the erection of a barrier to what Congress saw was the rising tide of economic concentration, was [§ 7's] provision of authority for arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency. Congress saw the process of concentration in American business as a dynamic force; it sought to assure the Federal Trade Commission and the courts the power to brake this force at its outset and before it gathered momentum." Id. at 317–318, 82 S.Ct. at 1520.

[2] Unlike the factual settings presented in Brown Shoe, supra, United States v. Von's Grocery, 384 U.S. 270, 86 S.Ct. 1478, 16

L.Ed.2d 555 (1960), and United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 [504] U.S. 546, 86 S.Ct. 1665, 16 L.Ed.2d 765 (1966), where an analysis of the relevant market structure revealed only a trend toward concentration, the Commission clearly found here that the relevant market was already concentrated. Stanley argues, however, that the failure to find a trend toward concentration takes this case out of the line of Brown, Von's and Pabst, decisions which held horizontal mergers between actual competitors invalid. But United States v. Continental Can, 378 U.S. 441, 84 S.Ct. 1738, 12 L.Ed.2d 953 (1964), teaches that where a market is already concentrated any merger between market lenders is suspect. The court said:

> [W]here there has been a "history of tendency toward concentration in the industry" tendencies toward further concentration "are to be curbed in their incipiency." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 345, 346, 82 S.Ct. [1502] at 1535. Where "concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365, n. 42, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 1742 [10 L.Ed.2d 915]; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, [377 U.S. 271, 84 S.Ct. 1283, 12 L.Ed.2d 314 (1964)]. United States v. Continental Can, supra, 378 U.S. at 461–462, 84 S.Ct. at 1749.[12]

[3] We have indicated that the four leading firms in the cabinet hardware industry dominated 49–51% of the market. The Examiner and the Commission thought these figures reflected market concentration. We agree that the industry is sufficiently concentrated to invoke the proscriptive sanction of the Clayton Act under the circumstances of this case.[13]

The relevant literature strongly supports this view.[14] To mention only one example. Kaysen and Turner describe a "tight oligopoly" as an industry in which eight firms or less supply 50% of the market, with the largest firms controlling 20% or more.[15] Under their analysis, the cabinet hardware market falls [505] well within the economic parameters which describe a concentrated market.

---

[12] Our dissenting brother ignores this admonition, and would confine the power of antitrust enforcement agencies to cases where a "trend" toward concentration in the industry has been proven. In doing so, he disregards the teaching of Continental Can that actual concentration is a far more insidious base upon which to build a merger. This would seem to pay greater heed to the symptom than the disease.

[13] Stanley insists that such a market is not "concentrated." They cite Justice Department Merger Guidelines, see 1 Trade Reg. Law Rep. ¶ 4510, which indicate that a market is highly concentrated when shares of the four largest firms account for 75% or more of the market. But as often proves true, reading on to the end of a sentence can be instructive. It appears that the Department of Justice will ordinarily challenge mergers in a "highly concentrated market" where the acquired and acquiring firm account for 1% and 15% of the market respectively. 1 Trade Reg. Law Rep. ¶ 4510 at 6884. But the Department also characterizes some markets as "less highly concentrated"—markets in which the four leading firms account for less than 75% of the market. Under such conditions the Department will ordinarily challenge mergers when the parties account for 1% and 25% of the market. Stanley controlled 1% of the cabinet hardware market; Amerock 22–24%. It should be evident that market shares in this case are sufficiently close to the Department guidelines to cause us to hesitate before accepting Stanley's view.

[14] Although the teachings of scholars cannot be dispositive, it would be foolhardy, in an area as complicated as this, to wholly disregard the lessons they have learned in a lifetime of study.

[4] Most persuasive of all in our view, however, is the unanimity reached by the trial examiner and the Commission in holding this market concentrated. In view of the Commission's expertise in assessing the impact of business practices on economic market forces, we believe its judgment as to what type of market is concentrated for antitrust purposes is entitled to substantial weight.[16]

Upon its review of all the evidence, the Commission concluded that > * * * the very reasons leading Stanley to acquire Amerock are the same reasons which support the charge in this case that the merger will have significant anticompetitive effects. Stanley acquired Amerock precisely because it was the dominant company in the market . . . and because it believed that the acquisition would further entrench Amerock's already dominant position, while any other course designed to achieve Stanley's goals in the cabinet hardware market—internal expansion by Stanley or acquisition of a smaller company in the industry—would only stir up competition.

There was substantial evidence in the record to support that view. Among the evidence we find a Stanley Hardware Division task force report, prepared on June 10, 1964, as part of a study of possible new ventures for the Hardware Division, which concluded:

> it is felt that a strong Stanley entry into parts of the cabinet hardware market via product development could be expected to accentuate industry-wide declines in prices and profits. A strong properly oriented Stanley entry into the market via acquisition could, on the other hand, be designed to contribute to a reversal in the downward trend in prices and profits.

In the general hardware industry, in which most of Stanley's business was transacted, it was not only the leading firm, but a price leader as well. A long-range Stanley Hardware Division report, prepared in mid-1965, stated: "As the largest firm in the industry, the Hardware Division must continue to show leadership in the important area of pricing policy. As conditions warrant, we must continue to take the initiative and corresponding risks of being the first within the industry to raise prices and attempt to keep them at such higher levels." This policy undoubtedly presented a threat to the future competitive vitality of the industry, which had recently experienced price decreases.

---

[15] Kaysen & Turner, supra, at 72. The authors define economic markets in terms of four levels of concentration. A "dominant firm" or "partial monopoly" market is one in which a single large firm supplies 60% of the market and no other seller supplies a significant portion of the demand. "Tight oligopoly" is the next level of concentration. See also Bain, Industrial Organization 131 (2d ed. 1968). (Market in which four firms control 50% reflects high-moderate concentration.)

[16] Stanley's own partial reliance on Justice Department Merger guidelines, discussed at note 13, supra, reflects this same view. Stanley concedes that the Justice Department's view expressed in its guidelines should be given special weight; so too, we believe, should the Commission's views.

[5, 6] In light of these disclosures, the Commission justifiably was apprehensive that the Stanley-Amerock merger, by increasing concentration at the top of the market, might have a "tipping effect" in the cabinet hardware industry, turning a concentrated market manifesting limited signs of price competition into a rigid, lifeless market tending toward even greater concentration and economic enervation. A market as delicately balanced as this, such that a merger between the first and tenth ranking firms threatens substantial anti-competitive consequences, is "concentrated" by any measure. Section 7's incipiency standard, which "requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future",[17] provides preventive as well as remedial therapy for an ailing industry; surely its salutary medicines need not be withheld until the diagnosis reads "terminal."

[7, 8] Stanley argues that foreclosure of a de minimis share of a market [506] bars application of § 7, and that the competitive overlap between Stanley and Amerock in this case was de minimis. Our dissenting brother has adopted this view, but has based his conclusion on an altogether erroneous analysis of market shares. After parsing the stipulated product market, he proceeds to treat residential cabinet hardware and institutional cabinet hardware as distinct lines of commerce, thereby ignoring the clear agreement between the parties that no product or geographic submarkets exist in the cabinet hardware industry. He then announces, virtually ex cathedra, that the degree of competitive overlap existing between Stanley and Amerock amounted to a mere .35% of the market. The dissent concludes that the percentage of the market affected by the merger is de minimis and, on that account, Stanley's acquisition of Amerock survives even the most critical antitrust scrutiny. In light of the stipulation, we regard the dissent's method of analysis as puzzling. It is also dangerous for it may have the effect of both dissuading litigants from agreeing upon facts and deterring agencies from acting on those agreed stipulations of fact. No amount of statistical legerdemain justifies disregarding the binding stipulation that controls this case, under which the relevant product market is defined as the entire cabinet hardware industry and Stanley's market share is agreed to as constituting 1% of total sales. The parties conceded those facts, the Examiner acted upon those facts, and the Commission based its decision on those facts. There may have been strategic litigation tradeoffs that led to the adoption of the stipulation; but we shall never know. Nor can we guess what posture this case would have assumed had there been no stipulation. What constellation of facts might have emerged, but for the stipulation, is wholly a matter of surmise, in which we may not permit ourselves to engage. Having agreed on a set of facts, the parties, and this Court, must be bound by them; we are not free to pick and choose at will. While we recognize that § 7 can tolerate de minimis foreclosure, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 329, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510, we cannot agree that the competition eliminated by this merger was sufficiently insubstantial to purge it of illegality under the Clayton Act.

---

[17] United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at 362, 83 S.Ct. at 1741.

Although the market shares involved here do not precisely match market shares in any case cited to us by either Stanley or the Commission—rarely are two antitrust cases alike—we believe that the rationale underlying at least two Supreme Court decisions indicates that Stanley's 1% is not a de minimis share of the cabinet hardware market. Most persuasive is United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 86 S.Ct. 1665, 16 L.Ed.2d 765 (1966), in which a merger between two companies engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of beer was held invalid under § 7 because it eliminated competition in three markets, including the national market.[18] In the national market, Pabst ranked tenth among the leading firms, with 3.02% of the market; Blatz, the acquired company, ranked eighteenth with 1.47%. The relevant product market, though tending toward concentration, was not nearly as solidified as the market in this case: in 1957, one year prior to the Pabst-Blatz merger, 10 companies controlled 45.06% of the market; in 1961, ten companies controlled 52.6% of the market. Even after taking into account the trend toward concentration, competition in the product market in Pabst appears robust in comparison to the cabinet hardware market, in which four firms control approximately 50% of the [507] market. In view of this market concentration in the sale of cabinet hardware products, we cannot assume, as Judge Mansfield does, that a difference of less than one-half of one per cent—the difference between Blatz's 1.4% and Stanley's 1% market shares—is of decisive significance for a question of such controlling importance as whether 1% market control is, or is not, de minimis.

---

[18] The relevant geographic markets in Pabst were Wisconsin, the Tri-State market consisting of Wisconsin, Michigan and Illinois, and the Nation. The Court held that "the evidence as to the probable effect of the merger on competition in Wisconsin, in the three-state area, and in the entire country was sufficient to show a violation of § 7 in each and all of these three areas." 384 U.S., at 552, 86 S.Ct., at 1669.

Stanley's rank in the industry also contributes to the conclusion that its 1% share of the market is not insubstantial. The Supreme Court noted in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 84 S.Ct. 1283, 12 L.Ed.2d 314 (1964), that central to the underlying philosophy of § 7, as amended, is the principle "that competition will be most vital 'when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share.' United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. at 363, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, 377 U.S. at 280, 84 S.Ct. at 1289. But the greater the concentration in the market "the greater is the likelihood that parallel policies of mutual advantage, not competition, will emerge. That tendency may well be thwarted by the presence of small but significant competitors." Ibid.[19] In Alcoa, the Court specially noted that no more than a dozen companies could account for as much as 1% of industry production and therefore Rome, ranking ninth with 1.3% of the market, was a substantial competitor.[20] Stanley, like Rome, is a small but significant competitor in a market with few sellers. Based on the record in this case, only ten companies, of which Stanley was tenth, accounted for 1% or more of the cabinet hardware market. We cannot say, therefore, that under the circumstances involved here, Stanley's 1% share was insubstantial.[21]

---

[19] The Court found that Alcoa's acquisition of Rome Cable Corporation was reasonably likely to result in a substantial lessening of competition in the highly, concentrated aluminum conductor industry where 5 companies controlled 76% of the relevant market. Alcoa was the leading producer of aluminum conductor, with 27.8% of the market; Rome was ninth with 1.3%.

[20] United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, 377 U.S. at 281, 84 S.Ct. 1283.

[21] Stanley relies on Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961) to support its assertion that 1% is a de minimis share of the market. Tampa was brought under § 3 of the Clayton Act, which forbids certain types of exclusive dealing contracts where the effect of such a contract may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 14. Tampa and Nashville had entered into a requirements contract under which Nashville agreed to supply Tampa's coal requirements for a period of twenty years. The District Court and the Court of Appeals held the contract invalid under § 3, and the Supreme Court reversed. The Court said: " . . . the proportionate volume of the total relevant coal product as to which the challenged contract preempted competition, less than 1%, is, conservatively speaking, quite insubstantial. A more accurate figure, even assuming pre-emption to the extent of the maximum anticipated total requirements . . . would be .77%." 365 U.S., at 333, 81 S.Ct., at 631. Justices Black and Douglas dissented.

[508] [9] Finally, we note that though a market may be concentrated, forces may operate so as to maintain some level of competition and thus preserve the possibility of eventual deconcentration. That is why the continued independence of companies with relatively small market shares is so crucial to the health and vitality of a market threatening to become oligopolistic.[22] Not only was Stanley an active competitor in the cabinet hardware market at the time it acquired Amerock but the record indicates that Stanley would have been a more active competitor in the future, absent mergers.[23] For all the reasons set forth, it is clear to us that the elimination of competition resulting from the merger was substantial and not de minimis, within the meaning of § 7's prohibitions.

---

[21] (Continued)

"Stanley and our dissenting brother," ignore the significance of the fact that Tampa Electric involved the validity of a contract under Clayton § 3, not § 7. The parameters of analysis in § 7 cases are not the same as in § 3 cases. Courts are cautioned to exercise greater care before upholding a merger under § 7 inasmuch as "integration by merger is more suspect than integration by contract, because of the greater permanence of the former." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S., at 366, 83 S.Ct., at 1743. Furthermore, the Court in Tampa thought it necessary to distinguish Standard Fashion Company v. Magrane-Houston Company, 258 U.S. 346, 42 S.Ct. 360, 66 L.Ed. 653 (1922), a prior § 3 case which had invalidated a two-year exclusive agency contract between Standard, a manufacturer and distributor of patterns, and Margane, a Boston retail dry goods store. Standard Fashions, the Court said, involved a market with a dominant seller and there was no evidence of any concentration in the Tampa product market. Because the instant case calls into question the validity of a merger under § 7, not the legality of a contract under § 3, and because of the concentrated structure of the cabinet hardware market, we find Stanley's reliance on Tampa Electric misplaced.

Stanley has also cited to us, without discussion, several district court cases, which, it says, involved de minimis foreclosures. We have carefully considered these cases and find them inapposite.

[22] In fact, some scholars are of the view that any horizontal acquisition involving a firm with more than 20% of the relevant market—Amerock's share is 22–24%—should be prima facie illegal. See K. Kaysen & D. Turner, supra, at 133. Stigler, Mergers and Preventive Antitrust, 104 U.Pa.L.Rev. 176, 182 (1955).

[23] The Commission found that it was reasonably probable that Stanley would have become increasingly more active in the residential cabinet hardware segment of the relevant market by way of internal expansion had expansion not been effected by merger. Stanley disputes this finding and says that top level Stanley management rejected the option of internal expansion in residential cabinet hardware. Instead, however, Stanley concedes that in January, 1965, approximately nine months prior to initial merger contacts between Stanley and Amerock, it was decided that Stanley would expand its production of architectural cabinet hardware. Donald Davis, then Executive Vice-President and now President of Stanley, in testimony before the Trial Examiner, stated: "I was convinced that the best thing for the Hardware Division to do was to try to maximize their sales and profits in their existing product lines rather than spending their time and efforts looking for . . . new growth areas . . ." And he asserted that Stanley had decided "to concentrate [its] efforts in the area where [it] had some strength, namely, architectural cabinet hardware . . ."

Whether we accept the Commission's or Stanley's view, once it is understood that the parties agreed that the cabinet hardware market as a whole is the relevant product market for this case, it is clear that Stanley had plans to become an even more significant competitor in the market. Therefore maintenance of its independence in the concentrated market, even as a 1% competitor, was of great importance in holding open the possibility of future deconcentration.

We cannot conclude without observing that our dissenting brother incorrectly reads our opinion as announcing a rule of per se illegality for horizontal mergers. This is regrettable for nothing we decide today remotely hints at such a conclusion. The law is clear in its teaching that in an already concentrated industry with few sellers, in which the four leading companies dominate aproximately 50% of the market, a merger involving the leading firm, controlling 22–24% of the market, with a firm like Stanley, would seriously threaten substantial anti-competitive consequences. This merger cannot survive in the face of the Clayton Act and its history. Accordingly, we affirm the Commission's order and direct its enforcement.[24]

[509] MANSFIELD, Circuit Judge (dissenting):

I respectfully dissent for the reason that in my view the majority, which adopts a new ground (the horizontal impact of the Amerock-Stanley merger on actual competition) for upholding the Commission's decision (which was squarely bottomed on elimination of potential competition), has automatically applied an oversimplified quantitative "rule of thumb" instead of recognizing economic realities of the market. It ignores the fact that the actual competitive overlap between the two companies is less than ½ of 1% of the market, that there has been a complete absence (1) of any trend toward concentration in the industry, (2) of any parallel action by leading producers, or (3) of any appreciable enhancement in the market power of the merged enterprise as compared with that of its two components.

The court's decision, therefore, amounts to a holding that a horizontal merger is per se unlawful even where one party controls but an infinitesimally small percentage of the market and there is a complete absence of indicia indicating a possible anti-competitive impact. The effect is to repeal the principle that

---

[24] In view of our decision in this case, we have no occasion to pass on the merits of the Commission's "toe-hold theory" which would have declared this merger illegal for the reason that even if Stanley were permitted to expand in the market via acquisition, it should have purchased one of the lesser firms in the industry, and not the market leader. Stanley urges that the "toehold theory" was not raised in the complaint, never litigated at the hearing, nor considered by the Examiner. It contends therefore, that any judgment based on the "toehold theory" would be violative of Fifth Amendment Due Process, and Section 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 554. We agree that the "toehold theory" was not litigated before the Examiner, and that the Commission was without authority to consider it. Cf. Bendix Corp. v. FTC, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971). Because the "toehold theory," however, was an alternative basis of illegality, and since the actual competition case adequately established the finding of invalidity under the Clayton Act by substantial evidence, the Commission's error worked no prejudice to Stanley.

Finally, Stanley contends that the Commission prejudged the facts of the case thereby denying petitioner its right to a fair hearing. We have given this charge the serious attention it deserves but find it to be without merit.

"foreclosure of a de minimis share of the market will not tend 'substantially to lessen competition' ", Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 329, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962). Since the record further establishes, as the majority implicitly recognizes, that the merger cannot be upset on the ground adopted by the Commission, i.e., elimination of potential competition, I would reverse the Commission's decision.

I further believe that the majority decision is unfortunate for the reason that by adopting a new ground for affirmance it has indulged in post hoc rationalization of agency action, a course condemned by the Supreme Court as incompatible with the functioning and integrity of judicial review. SEC v. Chenery Corp., 332 U.S. 194, 196–197, 67 S.Ct. 1575, 1760, 91 L.Ed. 1995 (1947); Burlington Truck Lines, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 156, 168–169, 83 S.Ct. 239, 9 L.Ed.2d 207 (1962). The Hearing Examiner limited himself to a finding that the merger might lessen competition in the cabinet hardware market because of the elimination of Stanley as a potential competitor.[1] Upon review his decision was summarized by the Commission as being based on this potential competition ground.[2] After a lengthy discussion [510] of the competitive effects of the Amerock acquisition the Commission concluded:

> Accordingly, we conclude that the fact of its entry by acquisition eliminated the substantial possibility that Stanley itself would become a significant competitor in the cabinet hardware market, with all of the increase in competitive vitality which Stanley's presence would have implied. (Appendix at 128).

Apparently recognizing the weakness of the case based upon elimination of potential competition the majority now turns to elimination of actual competition as a ground for affirmance. This substitution of a horizontal basis, not invoked by the Commission, constitutes a departure from well established principles of review.

---

[1] The Hearing Examiner concluded:

"The acquisition and merger of Amerock the leading independent domestic manufacturer and seller by Stanley increased this high level of concentration and may result in a substantial lessening of competition in the said cabinet hardware market because of the elimination of Stanley as a reasonably probable, potentially capable and significant domestic manufacturer and seller in the residential cabinet hardware segment of the said market, and particularly in the decorative residential cabinet hardware sales area of the said market."

[2] The Commission described the Hearing Examiner's Initial Decision as follows: "Thus, the examiner found that respondent's acquisition of Amerock lessened competition because (1) absent the merger Stanley would probably have entered the cabinet hardware market on its own; (2) the elimination of Stanley as a potential competitor had the effect of increasing the barriers to entry; and (3) Stanley, as a potential competitor, had an influence on the performance of the cabinet hardware market.

"On the basis of these findings, the hearing examiner concluded that the effect of the merger may be to substantially lessen competition in the cabinet hardware market in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

It is true that in the course of its discussion the Commission alluded to the degree of concentration in the cabinet hardware market, citing some authorities which refer to horizontal acquisitions, and stating that "Stanley's acquisition did or could contribute to the degree of competition prohibited by the statute." However, it is apparent that these passing references were merely intended to buttress a decision focused entirely on potential competition. If the Hearing Examiner or the Commission had considered the merger unlawful because of the horizontal overlap between Amerock and Stanley, they would have so stated in plain language; only one sentence would have been required. They did not do so, undoubtedly because (as is shown below) the overlap was too miniscule and insignificant to warrant such a finding. Indeed the Commission said, "Thus, it is not the 1% increase in market share brought about by the Stanley-Amerock merger by itself which posits the anti-competitive aspect of this merger." Although the Commission referred to Stanley's actual competition as a fact to be considered, the real basis of its decision was its finding of foreclosure of potential competition.

Actual Competition

Even assuming that the Commission's decision permits our consideration of the horizontal impact of the merger, undisputed market facts demonstrate that the merger's effect on actual competition was entirely too diminutive to violate § 7 of the Clayton Act. The majority concludes that since the cabinet hardware industry is concentrated, with four firms controlling 49–51% of the market, a merger of the first ranking firm, Amerock (23%), and the tenth ranking firm, Stanley (1%), though bordering on de minimis, may have a "tipping effect" in the industry, which might tend to lessen competition. In support of this conclusion it relies upon an isolated report by subordinate marketing personnel employed by Stanley, prepared on June 10, 1964, and invokes Supreme Court decisions outlawing mergers by giants of industry in the fields of beer, aluminum, containers, shoes and banking, where there was either a higher market concentration or a trend toward such concentration in the industry under review.[3]

---

[3] United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 86 S.Ct. 1665, 16 L.Ed.2d 765 (1966); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 84 S.Ct. 1283, 12 L.Ed.2d 314 (1964); United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 84 S.Ct. 1738, 12 L.Ed.2d 953 (1964); Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962); United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915 (1963).

At first blush this traditional approach seems reasonable enough, particularly since antitrust law, at least with respect to the legality of mergers, has been characterized by decisions based on differences [511] in degree rather than upon sharp, crystallized lines. See United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915 (1963). However, we are not here dealing with industrial giants threatening to gobble up lesser competitive fry but with modest participants in a relatively small industry. Unlike the cases relied upon by the majority, there is here a complete absence of any trend toward concentration. Although the industry is somewhat concentrated, other characteristics of the market, including the existence of a large number of strong and thriving competitors, demonstrate that the instant merger cannot have the possible anti-competitive impact attributed to it. As for the evidence relied on by the majority, it is undisputed that the Stanley task force report referred to by it was neither seen nor approved by Stanley's management. On the contrary, the possibility of entry by either acquisition or by internal expansion was thoroughly rejected. On this record, therefore, I fail to find substantial evidence that would adequately sustain the view that the merger posed actual anti-competitive consequences which might tend to lessen competition. On the contrary, undisputed evidence with respect to competitive realities of the relevant market, including an overlap compels me to conclude that neither the actual nor the potential competitive effects of the merger are unlawful and it should therefore be upheld.

Product markets and market percentages, whether or not stipulated, are of significance in determining the probable effect of a merger on competition where they reflect actual competition between the parties. But to determine whether a merger forecloses actual competition, one looks to the actual competitive facts (the competitive overlap between the parties) within the given product market rather than halt at overall market percentages and look no further. This process does not, as the majority suggests, change the parties' stipulation as to the overall market, or create distinct lines of commerce or submarkets. It merely judges actual competitive effects according to economic realities within the stipulated market rather than ignore undisputed competitive facts of record.

Applying this standard the record is clear that in this case the stipulated overall market percentages, while useful for some purposes, do not reflect the actual competition, i.e., the competitive overlap, between the parties within the stipulated market.

Undisputed facts with respect to the actual competition between Stanley and Amerock reveal, on the contrary, that the competitive overlap between them is far less than the 1% accepted by the majority and that the merger is thus governed by the accepted principle that "foreclosure of a de minimis share of the market will not tend 'substantially to lessen competition,'" Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 329, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1526, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962). The de minimis impact of the Stanley-Amerock merger is due mainly to three factors: (1) the differing types of business conducted by each of the two participants, which for the most part do not compete, (2) the differing channels of distribution used by each, which likewise do not substantially compete, and (3) the fact that size does not carry any competitive advantages in this industry, where small companies thrive and have increased in number.

To appreciate the diminutive effect of the merger under review, certain facts about the industry, in addition to those described by the majority, should be known. Cabinet hardware comes in two kinds, (1) Residential, which is used in both houses and apartments, and (2) Architectural (Institutional) which is used in commercial or institutional structures. Residential hardware is highly stylized. Its production requires die-casting machinery, which is used to fashion intricate ornamentation. Architectural cabinet hardware, on the other hand, is primarily functional in design. Since sturdiness and durability are [512] paramount, it is generally stamped out of metal.

Residential cabinet hardware is the vastly more significant part of the cabinet hardware industry, accounting for approximately 90–95% of the $76–$80 million total market—or about $72 million. The architectural market constitutes the remaining 5–10%, or approximately $8 million.

Distribution of cabinet hardware moves through six channels:

(1) Full Line Wholesalers, which carry predominately residential cabinet hardware for sale to retail hardware and department stores and, to a lesser extent to local builders and contractors;

(2) Specialty Wholesalers, which specialize in either architectural or residential cabinet hardware and sell to lumberyards, retail hardware stores, cabinet shops, and to small companies which build and sell finished cabinets, including the attached hardware;

(3) National Accounts (e.g., Sears, Montgomery Ward, J. C. Penny), which purchase residential cabinet hardware directly from the manufacturer and distribute it through their own retail outlets;

(4) Original Equipment Manufacturers of Residential Cabinets (Residential OEM's), which sell finished kitchen and bathroom cabinets. These companies are larger and more likely to be automated than residential cabinet shops; they avoid the wholesaler by purchasing directly from the manufacturer;

(5) Original Equipment Manufacturers of Architectural Cabinets (Architectural OEM's) the analogue to Residential OEM's in the architectural market. They purchase the hardware directly from the manufacturer and in turn sell finished institutional cabinets primarily to contractors for institutional structures;

(6) Contract Hardware Distributors, which sell the whole range of architectural hardware to institutional builders, generally on a bid basis.

Residential cabinet hardware is distributed through Full Line Wholesalers, National Accounts, Specialty Wholesalers and Residential OEM's. The latter two are used to distribute ⅔ of all residential cabinet hardware. Architectural hardware, on the other hand, is distributed through Specialty Wholesalers, Architectural OEM's and Contract Hardware Distributors. Each channel is aimed at particular kinds of ultimate buyers. There is little inter-channel competition. Thus, the method of distribution is crucial and represents an important guage by which to measure competitive impact.

Amerock is the largest firm in the industry with approximately 23% of the market in 1965, the year immediately preceding the merger. Its 1965 sales totalled $18,218,474, with all but approximately $200,000 derived from the residential market. In contrast, Stanley's 1965 sales in the cabinet hardware industry totalled $814,000 or only 1% of the cabinet hardware market. More crucial, however, is the fact that only $200,000 of this figure, was derived from the residential market; the remaining $614,000 stemmed from architectural cabinet hardware sales.

Even these low figures do not accurately reflect Stanley's minimal competitive impact. Stanley owned no die-casting machinery —a sine qua non for full scale activity in the residential market. Several of its attempts to expand its share of the residential market had failed, giving it a poor reputation with distributors of residential hardware (i.e., Full Line Wholesalers, National Accounts, Specialty Wholesalers, and Residential OEM's).

In fact, Stanley's sales in the cabinet hardware market were on decline. Thus, within the boundaries of the cabinet hardware market, which mark the outer limits of the "area of effective competition" under review, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962) (quoting from United States v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593, 77 S.Ct. 872, 1 [513] L.Ed.2d 1057 (1957), Stanley was definitely not a significant competitive force.

To determine whether the joinder of the market shares held by Stanley and Amerock posed an anticompetitive threat one must look beyond wooden percentage figures to live economic realities in the market itself, including such indicia as reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it . . . the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1523, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962).

Applying these practical criteria, the record is clear that the percentage of actual competitive overlap between Stanley and Amerock prior to the merger was far less than Stanley's 1% of the overall cabinet hardware market. Stanley's sales of residential cabinet hardware, $200,000 out of total residential cabinet hardware sales of approximately $70,000,000, amounted to about ¼ of 1% of the residential market, which is de minimis by any standard. Moreover, when one takes into consideration the channels of distribution used by the two parties to the merger, as required by Brown Shoe's mandate to consider "distinct customers" and "specialized vendors," the level of competition between them further decreases. Of Stanley's $200.000 derived from residential cabinet hardware sales, $8,041 was distributed via a single National Account, with the remainder directed to hardware and lumber outlets, mostly through Full Line Wholesalers. In contrast, ⅔'s of Amerock's residential sales were through OEM's and Specialty Wholesalers, with ⅓ going to Full Line Wholesalers and National Accounts. Thus, while there was a $200,000 competitive overlap, Stanley afforded no competition to Amerock's major channels of distribution.

As for the vastly less important area of institutional sales, which comprise only 5% to 10% of the aggregate cabinet hardware market, Stanley's percentage share is concededly higher.[4] However, its larger share is misleading. Examination of competition within the relevant channels of distribution reveals that while Amerock's sales of institutional hardware totalled $200,000 and Stanley's were $614,000 each sold through non-competing channels of distribution except for an overlap of $84,000.[5] [4] Stanley's $600.000 sales constituted 7½% of all institutional cabinet hardware sales; Amerock's $200,000 equalled about 2½%.

---

In summary, the total actual competition between Stanley and Amerock amounted to an overlap of only $284,000 ($200,000 of residential sales and $84,000 of institutional sales), or approximately .35% of the market. Even if we disregard other relevant factors (discussed below) which militate against the likelihood of competition being diminished, the percentage of the market affected by the merger is simply too small. See, e.g., Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 329–334, 81 S.Ct. 623, 5 L.Ed.2d 580 (1961) (under analogous language of § 3 of the Clayton Act); American Smelting and Refining Co. v. Pennzoil United, Inc., 295 F.Supp. 149, 157 (D.Del.1969) (1% increase in concentrated industry reduced in significance because of the nature of industry); United States v. First National Bancorporation, Inc., 329 F.Supp. 1003, 1019 (D.Colo.1971), juris. noted, 407 U.S. 902, 92 S.Ct. 2431, 32 L.Ed.2d 679 (1972) (even 1.2% insubstantial).

Other indicia traditionally considered in determining the legality of a merger allegedly violative of § 7 of the Clayton Act confirm that the impact here was to miniscule to be of antitrust significance. [514] For example, the instant merger completely lacks a factor found to be of controlling significance in most leading horizontal cases,[6] i.e., an industry-wide trend toward concentration either before or after the merger. It is uncontested that Amerock's share of the market remained constant through the 1965–1968 period. Moreover, there is no evidence of any other mergers between manufacturers in the industry at any time prior to or since the Amerock-Stanley merger.

Competition in the cabinet hardware industry has been vigorous, due in no small measure to the fact that it is a business in which numerous small companies, which can cater effectively to frequently changing stylistic demands of a specialized market, thrive. Thus size offers no effective competitive advantages. The market structure, regardless whether it be characterized as a

---

[5] The $84,000 overlap is based on the fact that Stanley's sales through Architectural OEM's was only $44,000 (compared with Amerock's sales of $160,000) and Amerock's sales of institutional hardware to Contract Hardware Distributors only $40,000 (compared with Stanley's sales of $570,000).

[6] E. g., United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra; United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 86 S.Ct. 1478, 16 L.Ed.2d 555 (1966); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra; United States v. Continental Can Co., supra; United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., supra.

"loose" oligopoly, satisfies "Congress' desire to promote competition through the protection of viable, small, locally owned businesses", Brown Shoe, supra, 370 U.S. at 344, 82 S.Ct. at 1534. In 1965 the four (4) largest firms comprised approximately 50% of the market, and the nine (9) largest totalled 65%. However, smaller firms, operating within limited geographical areas, have continued to offer vigorous competition, often enjoying a lion's share of the business within their respective locales. In fact, during the period 1963–1968, the number of firms in the market actually increased to a total of 97.[7] At the same time prices and profits remain low. Such modest price increases as have occurred have been attributable largely to inflation, and have been at a slower pace and lower rate than prices of other building products. There is no evidence of price leadership or price uniformity. Nor is there any showing that the merger might tend to maximize profits for the members of the so-called oligopoly.

The healthy competitive climate in the industry may also be attributed in part to other factors. Unlike other markets (e.g., Clorox, beer, containers, banking), advertising plays but a minor role in the sale of cabinet hardware. Hence, a large advertising budget that might be provided by a financially powerful entrant is superfluous. This unusual characteristic is due in part to the highly specialized, style-oriented nature of cabinet hardware and to the fact that before it reaches the consumer it has been incorporated into a cabinet which is usually sold to the consumer without reference to the brand identity of the hardware forming part of it. From the standpoint of the hardware manufacturer, the significant buyers are the different types of distributors described above, which are relatively few in number. In the dominant residential hardware market, where style is a vital competitive factor, the small manufacturer offering aesthetically pleasing designs to distributors within a limited geographical area, can successfully compete without an enormous expenditure on consumer advertising that would be required to sell a homogeneous product purchased directly by the consuming public, such as Clorox.

Of further competitive significance is the fact that among the many successful smaller manufacturers in the cabinet hardware market, several possessed the resources to expand in size if they considered such a move to be economically advantageous. At least four were subsidiaries or divisions of large diversified companies with substantial capital.[8] In [515] addition, several leaders in the manufacture of decorative furniture hardware, with die-casting facilities capable of being used to make residential cabinet hardware virtually identical with that made by those already in the field, had entered the residential hardware market, and others stood at its edge.

---

[7] Based upon figures published in the trade magazine Kitchen Week.

In such a commercial milieu, marked by robust and energetic competition, it is not surprising to find that Stanley's prior attempts at fullscale entry into the residential hardware market, where over 90% of all cabinet hardware is sold, had proved a failure. Indeed its sales in the hardware industry generally were on the decline.

The decisions cited by the majority in support of its conclusion that the horizontal impact of the merger might substantially lessen competition are all clearly distinguishable in legally significant respects. To the extent that "substantial" lessening of competition is measurable in terms of gross dollar volume Stanley's $814,000 annual sales of cabinet hardware, which involved a compettiive overlap of $284,000, stands like a tiny pigmy in sharp contrast to the huge overlaps of $750,000,000 in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 331, 83 S.Ct. 1715, 10 L.Ed.2d 915 (1963); $79,000,000 in United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 450, 84 S.Ct. 1738, 12 L.Ed.2d 953 (1964); $84,000,000 in United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 297, 86 S.Ct. 1478, 16 L.Ed.2d 555 (1966); $2,200,000 in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 84 S.Ct. 1283, 12 L.Ed.2d 314 (1964); and many millions of dollars in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962); and in United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 86 S.Ct. 1665, 16 L.Ed.2d 765 (1966), where the precise dollar volumes are not reported. Taking into account that the relevant market in the present case is the entire United States a holding that a $284,000 competitive overlap constitutes substantial lessening of competition in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act amounts to an unwarranted overkill, hardly the type of target Congress intended to reach.

A comparison of other relevant circumstances confirms the inapplicability to the present case of the "horizontal" decisions relied on by the majority, in each of which the market was tainted by anti-competitive forces not found here. In Brown Shoe, which involved a merger of Brown Shoe Co., the third largest seller of shoes in the United States, and Kinney, the eighth largest company by dollar volume, there had been a steady and long-continued trend toward concentration in the relevant markets, characterized by vertical acquisition by manufacturers of retail outlets, which then sold a greater share of the new parent's shoes than formerly, and by horizontal mergers of these integrated behemoths. Hand in hand there went an equally relentless decrease in the number of shoe-manufacturing plants. "Brown Shoe was found not only to have been a participant, but also a moving factor, in these industry trends." 370 U.S. at 302, 82 S.Ct. at 1511. In six cities the combined share of children's shoe sales by the merged companies, Brown Shoe Co. and Kinney, exceeded 40%, and in one city their combined share of women's shoe sales exceeded 57%, 370 U.S. at 343.

---

[8] National Lock, Tassell, Faultless and Bossick-Sack, for example, are respectively subsidiaries of Keystone Consolidated Industries, Gulf & Western Industries. Bliss & Laughlin Industries, and Stewart-Warner Corporation. In addition Yale & Towne, Embart Corp., and Eaton Corp., all large companies produce their own lines of cabinet hardware either directly or through subsidiaries.

In Philadelphia National Bank, supra, the merger, which was between the second and third largest competitors in the market area, would have resulted in one bank controlling 34–36% of a market in which the four largest banks would control 77–78%. Here also there had been a market trend toward concentration, with the number of competitors plummeting and the merger participants repeatedly playing a major role in that trend. The Court observed that the number of commercial banks had declined from 108 in 1947 to 42 in 1962, with [516] Philadelphia National Bank having acquired nine formerly independent banks and Girard, the other party to the merger, six.

In Continental Can Co., supra, the top two firms, of which Continental Can was one, controlled nearly 49% of the $3 billion market (combined metal-glass containers) and the top six firms controlled 70.1%. Continental had a history of growth by horizontal acquisitions, having acquired no less than 35 firms in various interrelated container markets since 1913. 378 U.S. at 445, 84 S.Ct. 1738. Lastly, the company acquired under the challenged merger, Hazel-Atlas, ranked sixth largest with 3.1% of the market and had competed vigorously against Continental Can, competition which would be eliminated by the merger.

Von's Grocery, supra, which involved the third and sixth ranking firms in the market, is another example of one more merger in an industry marked by a precipitous trend toward increasing concentration of ownership, in which the larger firms played an active role in the continuing acquisition process. Of these firms the present participants were two of the most aggressive, each having doubled in size during the ten years immediately preceding the merger under attack.

Another decision referred to by the majority, United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 86 S.Ct. 166, 16 L.Ed.2d 765 (1966), also cannot fairly be relied upon as governing the present case. It involved the merger of two huge brewers, which competed against each other in 40 states, in "an industry marked by a steady trend toward economic concentration." 384 U.S. at 550, 86 S.Ct. at 1668. Furthermore, there had been a steady increase in the size of the industry leaders, with a corresponding decrease in the overall number of competitors. The total number of competitors selling beer had declined from 206 to 162 in the five-year period from 1957 to 1962. Once again a strong anticompetitive trend had to be curtailed in its incipiency.

Lastly, the majority's heavy reliance upon United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 84 S.Ct. 1283, 12 L.Ed.2d 314 (1964), amounts to a wooden-like acceptance of substantially similar market percentage figures without making an analysis of the market structure to determine the true significance of the figures. Although the acquisition by Alcoa, with 27.8% of the aluminum conductor market, of Rome, with 1.3%, appears at first flush to be superficially similar as the merger here under review, a glance at the market there reveals how vastly different it is from that here. Unlike the present case, the top two competitors, including Alcoa, the industry leader, controlled 50% of the market and nine firms controlled 95.5%, foreclosing all but a tiny fraction from other competitors. More important, there had been a rapid trend toward concentration. "The absorption of Rome by Alcoa was one of the five acquisitions by producers of primary aluminum since 1957. . . . These moves, and the threat they were thought to pose, were specifically identified as factors influencing Alcoa's 1959 decision to acquire Rome. . . . As a result of this series of mergers, there now remain only four nonintegrated fabricators of aluminum conductor whose individual shares of total industry production . . . amounted to more than 1%." 377 U.S. at 279, n. 6, 84 S.Ct. at 1288. Since Rome had been an aggressive competitor, it is not surprising to find a judicial willingness to curtail the predatory conduct of the industry's leader, a giant by almost any standard, in attempting to absorb it. No case has gone beyond Alcoa. In view of the disparity in market concentration and the insubstantiality of the competitive overlap between Stanley and Amerock, which amounts to less than ½ of 1% of the stipulated market, extension of Alcoa to the instant facts is unwarranted.

Thus, even assuming that more stringent rules may be applied to horizontal mergers, because of the greater probability of their having an anti-competitive [517] effect, than that to vertical or conglomerate mergers, in this case, unlike those relied upon by the majority, we have undisputed "evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at 321, 83 S.Ct. at 1718.

Potential Competition

Having concluded that the Commission's decision should not be affirmed on the ground adopted by the majority, i.e., that the horizontal aspects of the merger may tend substantially to lessen competition, there remains the question of whether it should nevertheless be sustained on the ground advanced by the Commission, i.e., that the merger might substantially lessen competition by eliminating Stanley as a potential significant competitor in the manufacture and sale of residential cabinet hardware in that Stanley might have expanded either internally or by "toe-hold" acquisition of a smaller manufacturer, and that the merger therefore had the effect of increasing barriers to entry, and of destroying Stanley's disciplining effect at the edge of the market.

Although the majority opinion purports not to reach the potential competition issue, it does not hesitate to denigrate the Commission's position in several respects.[9] In these views I concur. It further appears that none of the grounds advanced by the Commission in support of its potential competition theory is supported by substantial evidence. Indeed, in reviewing the record we are confronted with a rather extraordinary infirmity, bordering upon a denial of due process. The Commission's case before the Hearing Examiner rested heavily upon the testimony of officials of two of Stanley's competitors, supported by documents from the files of Stanley and Amerock. The two witnesses testified over Stanley's objection that it had not been allowed the opportunity to complete relevant discovery that would be material in its cross-examination of them. Nevertheless their testimony was taken and Stanley was later refused the right to recall the witnesses for the purpose of cross-examining them with evidence that had been adduced through intervening discovery. The Examiner's decision relied heavily upon the testimony of the two witnesses, which he quoted at length. When the unfairness of this procedure was raised upon appeal to the Commission, it decided to treat the testimony of the Commission's witnesses as stricken rather than permit cross-examination, with the result that it relied solely upon documentary evidence. Undisputed facts of record demonstrate that this reliance on the documentary evidence was improper, especially in view of the inconclusiveness of its contents.

---

[9] See footnotes 8 and 23 (supra) of the majority opinion. Footnote 8 rejects the Commission's contention that it proved that Stanley was the most likely potential entrant, that it served to discipline the market and that the merger raised barriers to entry. Footnote 23 similarly disparages the Commission's toe-hold theory.

The linch-pin of the Commission's opinion is its conclusion that but for the merger it was reasonably probable that Stanley would have entered the residential cabinet hardware market by internal expansion. This finding was bottomed entirely upon a series of reports and studies prepared by subordinate staff marketing personnel in the Stanley organization, which considered the possibility of internal expansion substantially prior to Stanley's acquisition of Amerock. As is often the case in large organizations, including governmental agencies such as the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice, subordinates who are not invested with any decision-making responsibility will sometimes make colorful statements that do not reflect the views of the management. Ever since the famous "charnel house" letters used in United States v. Hartford-Empire Co., 46 F.Supp. 541 (N.D.Ohio 1942), modified, 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322 (1945), and the "Treanor" letter in Aetna Portland [518] Cement Institute v. FTC, 157 F.2d 533, 577 (7th Cir. 1946), reversed, 333 U.S. 683, 68 S.Ct. 793, 92 L.Ed. 1009 (1948), such gems have been seized upon as the darlings of the government investigator. Even in cases where the contents have been unauthorized and indeed are directly contrary to management decisions, they are paraded as if they had been approved. That is the case here.

Out of scores of studies prepared by low-level members of the staff of Stanley's Hardware Division, some of whom did not even have decision-making authority within that division and none of whom had the power to determine whether or not Stanley should expand its residential cabinet hardware production or acquire a competitor, the Commission has culled a few juicy comments such as the suggestions that acquisition of another manufacturer "Would knock out a competitor" or enable it "To obtain a dominant role in the hardware market." The Commission has committed the error of repeatedly mischaracterizing these studies as "management documents," "management reports," and "decisions made by Stanley's management," ignoring the undisputed fact that the documents were, by and large, neither seen nor approved by Stanley's management and that the management made unequivocal decisions to the contrary, which post-dated the studies and pre-dated its acquisition of Amerock.

Even if some weight is given to the studies of Stanley subordinates relied upon by the Commission, a careful review of all such reports (as distinguished from the few quoted from by the Commission) reveals beyond question that their overall thrust was to reject internal expansion into the residential market and to concentrate on Stanley's existing product line, which was devoted mainly to architectural hardware. Furthermore, when action was finally taken by those corporate officers responsible for determining the company's basic policies, the decision was to reject the views of subordinates who advocated expansion into the residential field and to adopt the view that the Hardware Division should concentrate on improving its existing architectural hardware line. More specifically, although the so-called "task force report," dated June 10, 1964, upon which the Commission relies, made by a group of relatively low-level staff personnel in the Hardware Division, suggested that acquisition of two cabinet hardware manufacturers, Ajax or Jaybee, be considered, it explicitly urged that internal expansion be rejected as unprofitable. Thereupon the Department Managers of the Hardware Division, albeit still a stratum below the decision-making level, rejected entry by either route (acquisition or internal expansion), taking the position that internal expansion in the residential hardware field was not justified after weighing the size of the investment that would be required against the losses or limited profit that could be anticipated.

July 10, 1964, was the first time when Stanley's management became involved in the review of the question whether the company should expand its cabinet hardware division, acquire a competitor, or take some other course. On that date the Department Managers of the Hardware Division advised D. W. Davis, Executive Vice President, of their conclusions and recommended that the Hardware Division limit itself to concentrating on development of an improved line of architectural hardware, for which diecasting equipment would not be needed. In the meantime independent management consultants, Stewart, Douglas & Associates, were retained to identify new product areas in which the Hardware Division might expand. On December 23, 1964, it rendered its "think-tank" report which reinforced the conclusions of the Hardware Division by recommending against product expansion.

Armed with the foregoing reports and recommendations Davis held a meeting on January 8, 1965, with the various Managers of the Hardware Division, at which the final basic policy decision was reached that instead of expanding in the cabinet hardware field Stanley would [519] concentrate on improving its existing product lines and maximizing sales and profits from those lines. Toward that objective responsibility for cabinet hardware was transferred to the Manager responsible for Contract (architectural) Products.

Despite overwhelming proof to the contrary the Commission, apparently proceeding on the erroneous assumption that the burden was on Stanley rather than on Commission counsel, see United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 246 F.Supp. 917, 919 (D.Del. 1965), aff'd by an equally divided court, 389 U.S. 308, 88 S.Ct. 502, 19 L.Ed.2d 545 (1967), concluded, notwithstanding Stanley's unequivocal rejection of acquisition or expansion, that "[t]here is no persuasive indication in the record that respondent irrevocably abandoned either of these alternatives [acquisition of a competitor or internal expansion into resident hardware] in January of 1965." (Appendix at 126). This crucial finding, unsupported by any substantial evidence, reflects administrative zeal which, while generally desirable, was misdirected in the present case. In a belated effort to support it with record proof, Commission counsel point to some rather euphemistic generalities in the Hardware Division's Long Range Plan, dated June 17, 1965, and in accompanying working papers, to the effect that during the latter part of the next five years the Division would "give increasing attention to the residential market." These statements by lesser personnel, however, are a far cry from reversal or modification of the final decision taken by Stanley's management on January 8, 1965. It was against this background that executives of Amerock in October, 1965, approached Stanley's Executive Vice President regarding the possibility of a merger. Faced with "a whole new ball game" Stanley for the first time reconsidered its earlier decision and finally decided in favor of the newly proposed merger.

Viewed in the light of Stanley's January 8, 1965 decision, it is clear that there is no substantial evidence to support the Commission's conclusion that but for the merger Stanley was a "reasonably probable" entrant into the residential hardware market. The Commission's evidence is far less persuasive than that in Penn-Olin, supra, where the district court concluded on remand that despite Olin's staff reports recommending entry

> The government has failed to sustain its burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that . . . there would have been a reasonable probability that Olin would have constructed a chlorate plant in the Southeast. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 246 F.Supp. 917, 928 (D.Del.1965), aff'd by an equally divided court, 389 U.S. 308, 88 S.Ct. 502, 19 L.Ed.2d 545 (1967).

The Commission next asserts that the elimination of Stanley as a potential competitor may have substantially reduced competition by removing it as a disciplining force on the edge of the market. To exercise such an effect a minimum requirement is that "the merging firm at the edge of the market must be recognized by those in the market as the most likely entrant or one of a very few likely entrants. * * *" Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv.L.Rev. 1313, 1363 (1965). A careful search of the record discloses no evidence that firms in the residential market recognized Stanley as a likely entrant.[10] On the contrary, the record indicates that Stanley's position on the edge of the residential market had no competitive effect on those in the market. This is in dramatic contrast to potential competition cases in which the doctrine has been applied. See, e. g., United States v. El [520] Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 659, 84 S.Ct. 1044, 12 L.Ed.2d 12 (1960); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303 (1967).[11] Thus, another peg upon which the Commission relies must fall.

The Commission's conclusion that the instant merger raised barriers to entry is likewise not supported by substantial evidence. The Commission found three barriers to entry: (1) the cost of the initial investment in die-casting equipment and design which would be required (approximately $600,000); (2) the need for a full line of up-to-date product styles; and (3) the cost of sales promotion and advertising in trade journals. At the same time the Commission rejected the Hearing Examiner's reliance as a factor on the difficulty of securing channels of distribution.

There is no direct or circumstantial evidence in the record that the $600,000 initial start-up costs, $400,000 of which might be needed to acquire machinery, would be increased by the Stanley-Amerock merger. Nor is there any substantial evidentiary support for the conclusion that the need for product differentiation might be increased. Stanley was not a style oriented company; its history was grounded in the production of non-ornamental hardware and tools. Finally, there is no substantial evidence to support the conclusion that the merger would increase the need for sales promotion and advertising. The Commission conceded that "advertising at the consumer level may be small" but relied on the cost of advertisements in trade publications—somewhere in the vicinity of $50,000–$100,000. These figures are a far cry from the $80,000,000 per year found to be a decisive element in the landmark case of FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303 (1967); see also General Foods Corp. v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936 (3d Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 391 U.S. 919, 88 S.Ct. 1805, 20 L.Ed.2d 657 (1968). Furthermore, the Commission fails to point to any evidence indicating that the instant merger would increase an entrant's need for, or cost of, advertising. What is crucial is that unlike Proctor & Gamble and General Foods, which dealt with consumer items where massive advertising was the crucial competitive factor, the role of advertising and sales promotion here is of minor significance and hence does not pose a barrier to entry.

---

[10] Compare footnote 8 of the majority opinion, which reaches substantially the same conclusion. The Examiner made no finding that Stanley, as a potential competitor at the market's edge, had any competitive effect upon those in the market, and witnesses representing competitors in the cabinet hardware market testified that it did not have such an influence.

[11] It may well be, as the majority opinion suggests, that FTC v. Procter & Gamble, 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303 (1967), requires a finding that the acquiring firm was "the most likely entrant." Id. at 581, 87 S.Ct. 1224. Since we conclude that under any standard there is no substantial evidence to indicate that Stanley exercised a disciplining effect, that issue is not reached. Similarly, we need not discuss the significance of other potential entrants on the market.

The concept that a merger may operate to raise barriers of entry is based upon the assumption that price levels and profit margins in the industry would, but for the merger, be sufficiently high to overcome the cost of entry and thus attract new entrants. Here that is not the case. Prices were low, profits were modest at best, and there is no evidence that ease of entry, which existed before the merger, was in any way affected by it.

In support of its conclusion that the merger eliminated Stanley's potential competition, the Commission advanced for the first time a new theory, namely, that but for the merger Stanley might have entered the residential market by a so-alled "toe-hold" acquisition, which here means that it might have acquired control over one of the smaller, non-dominant firms in the cabinet hardware market instead of merging with Amerock. This theory was neither suggested in the complaint nor advanced in the hearings before the Examiner. Nor was any mention of it made by the Hearing Examiner. Indeed it was not suggested, either by the Commission or any other body, until a year after the record in the case had been closed and three months after the parties had submitted their briefs to the [521] Commission. Then for the first time, the idea was advanced by the Commission in Bendix Corp., v. FTC (FTC Dkt. No. 8739), 3 Trade Reg. Rep. ¶19,288 (June 18, 1970), which was reversed by the Sixth Circuit on the ground that "Bendix had no notice that it was charged under the toe-hold theory . . .and . . . no opportunity to present evidence in defense against this theory." Bendix Corp. v. FTC, 450 F.2d 534, 537 (6th Cir. 1971).

Since Stanley was never given timely notice of the toe-hold theory or an opportunity to be heard and to introduce evidence with respect to it, I concur in Judge Kaufman's view [12] that the Commission was precluded from basing its decision on that ground. See Bendix Corporation v. FTC, 450 F.2d 543 (6th Cir. 1971); cf. Rodale Press, Inc. v. FTC, 132 U.S.App.D.C. 317, 407 F.2d 1252 (1968). To countenance such a procedure would be to deny Stanley the due process that is mandated by the Fifth Amendment and by § 5 of the Administrative Procedure Act.[13]

In any event the Commission's newly espoused post-hearing "toe-hold" theory is not supported by substantial evidence. The record is clear that the June 10, 1964 recommendation of subordinate Hardware Division personnel that Ajax or Jaybee be acquired was rejected later that month by the Department Managers of that Division, who recommended to D. W. Davis, Executive Vice President, that no such acquisition be made. This recommendation was accepted and approved by the company's management.

Conclusion

Vigorous enforcement of antitrust laws to bar mergers that may substantially lessen competition is essential to the economic lifeblood of this nation. But Congress has not outlawed all mergers. Nor has it, despite recommendations of some distinguished experts in the field, prescribed arbitrary standards for illegality which would prohibit every merger falling within a precise definition, even those in which the market percentage of one of the parties may be de minimis. On the contrary, Congress has recognized that antitrust flexibility is essential, since not all mergers threaten harm to the public, some even have the effect of promoting competition, and the issues turn on an understanding of the complexities of any given market.

The Commission assumes the burden of proving that any merger attacked by it will have the probable effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly. This it has failed to do in the present case. After a Hearing Examiner erred in denying Stanley the right to cross-examine those witnesses relied upon by him as the basis of his decision, the Commission, rather than remand for cross-examination, sought to sustain his decision upon a different evidentiary basis. Apparently recognizing the weakness of the grounds chosen by the Commission, the Court has affirmed on still different grounds. In view of the undisputed evidence as to the extremely limited actual competitive overlap, the vigorous competition in the marketplace, the absence of any trend toward concentration and the small percentage of the market controlled by Stanley (whether it be labelled .35% or 1%), the effect is automatically to hold such a merger illegal, thus in substance declaring it to be a per se violation because of the percentages involved.

---

[12] Compare footnote 23 of the majority opinion.

[13] Section 5 of the APA provides in relevant part:
"Persons entitled to notice of an agency hearing shall be timely informed of . . . (3) the matters of fact and law asserted." 5 U.S.C. § 554.

Since the Commission's decision is not supported by substantial evidence, I would reverse.

BRISTOL-MYERS COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ET AL.*

No. 304, Docket 72–1969.—F.T.C. File 99–130

(United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Nov. 10, 1972)

1. FAILURE TO EXHAUST ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES WAS PROPER GROUNDS FOR DISMISSAL OF CLAIMS, PREMATURELY ASSERTED, SEEKING TO COMPEL F.T.C. TO ISSUE SUBPOENAS

   Claim seeking to compel Federal Trade Commission to issue subpoenas was asserted prematurely and was properly dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies where subpoenas were sought during informal negotiations looking toward mutually satisfactory consent order agreement, following notification of intention to issue formal complaint charging drug manufacturer with allegedly deceptive advertising, it was not clear that formal complaint would ever issue on basis of present investigation and it was even less certain that cease and desist order would enter the following formal adjudication; claim could be litigated on review following entry of cease and desist order and, in such case, it could not be assumed that the Commission would fail to follow any order requiring reopening of informal negotiations.

2. COURT MAY PROPERLY CARVE AN EXCEPTION TO THE ADMINISTRATIVE EXHAUSTION DOCTRINE WHERE AN IMMEDIATE APPEAL IS NECESSARY TO GIVE PROTECTION TO CLAIMED RIGHT

   The administrative exhaustion doctrine is less an inflexible command than a general guideline; where an immediate appeal is necessary to give realistic protection to the claimed right a court may properly carve an exception to the doctrine.

3. ONLY RARELY WILL AGENCY ACTION THREATEN AN INJURY SO AS TO JUSTIFY CORRECTIVE PROCESS

   Only rarely will preliminary or procedural agency action threaten so irreparable an injury as to justify interlocutory resort to corrective judicial process.

---

* Reported in 469 F.2d 1116 (1972).

4. Wish to Litigate Issue Raised by F.T.C. Proposal is not Adequate Basis for Seeking Judicial Redress

Fact that a party may wish to litigate issue raised by proposal of Federal Trade Commission to issue formal complaint charging unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce is not an adequate basis for seeking preliminary judicial redress for Commission's failure to issue subpoenas.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 469 F.2d 1116)

On appeal, court held that claims seeking to compel Federal Trade Commission to issue subpoenas was asserted prematurely and was probably dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Following notification of intent to issue formal complaint charging drug manufacturer with allegedly deceptive advertising, it was by no means clear that formal complaint would ever issue on basis of present investigation and it was even less certain that cease and desist order would enter following formal adjudication. Affirmed.

Mansfield, Circuit Judge, concurred and filed opinion in which Lumbard, Circuit Judge, concurred.

Gilbert H. Weil, New York City (Weil, Lee & Bergin, New York City, on brief), for plaintiff-appellant.

[1117] Christopher Roosevelt, Asst. U.S. Atty. (Whitney North Seymour, Jr., U.S. Atty., S.D.N.Y., William R. Bronner, Asst. U.S. Atty., Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Alvin L. Berman, Atty., Washington, D.C., on brief), for defendants-appellees.

Before LUMBARD, FEINBERG and MANSFIELD, Circuit Judges.

FEINBERG, Circuit Judge:

Bristol-Myers Company appeals from an order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Arnold Bauman, J., dismissing a complaint which sought to compel the Federal Trade Commission to issue certain subpoenas allegedly required by 5 U.S.C. § 555(d).[1] We hold that the district court properly refused to grant the relief requested, and we affirm.

The factual background is not disputed. In April 1972, the Commission notified Bristol-Myers of its intention to issue a formal complaint charging the company with having employed unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, in violation of Sections

---

[1] The statute provides in part: Agency subopenas authorized by law shall be issued to a party on request and, when required . . . . on a statement or showing of general relevance . . . .

5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45, 52. Specifically, the proposed complaint alleged deceptive advertising for three Bristol-Myers analgesics—Bufferin, Excedrin, and Excedrin PM.[2] Following a suggestion from the Commission, Bristol-Myers availed itself of the opportunity, authorized by statute [3] and afforded by Commission rule,[4] to negotiate a mutually satisfactory consent order agreement. Although the time apparently contemplated in the rule for consent negotiations is 30 days, Bristol-Myers received extensions beyond this limit. After negotiations had commenced, Bristol-Myers petitioned the Commission to make subpoenas available to the company during these informal negotiations in order to facilitate the gathering of evidence relevant to the Commission's proposed remedy. The Commission denied the request on June 26, 1972, and Bristol-Myers brought this action in the district court on June 29.

[1] We believe that the claim is asserted prematurely and was properly dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Judicial review of Federal Trade Commission proceedings is governed by section 45(c) of Title 15, United States Code, which limits the power of review to final cease and desist orders and which makes review available in the courts of appeals. Section 10(c) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 704, provides:

> Agency action made reviewable by statute . . . [is] subject to judicial review. A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on the review of the final agency action.

If formal adjudicative procedures subsequently result in a cease and desist order directed against Bristol-Myers, it seems clear that on review by this or any other court of appeals the company will have an opportunity to press the claim that it was entitled by statute to subpoenas during the informal negotiating process.[5] See

---

[2] The Commission's proposed remedy would require Bristol-Myers to expend 25% of its advertising budget, over a two-year period, on advertisements subject to FTC approval which "correct" the misimpressions fostered by past deception. "Corrective advertising" has received considerable attention in recent commentary. See e.g., Note, "Corrective Advertising" Orders of the Federal Trade Commission, 85 Harv.L.Rev. 477 (1971).

[3] 5 U.S.C. §554(c)(1).

[4] 16 C.F.R. §§ 2.31–2.34 (1972 Supp.)

[5] The company's statutory claim is an intricate one. It primarily argues that "any party" is entitled to subpoenas; that a party, under 5 U.S.C. § 551(3) is a person named as a party in an agency proceeding, including adjudication; that "adjudication," defined by 5 U.S.C. § 551(7), is "agency process for the formulation of an order"; and that the consent settlement procedure here looks to formulation of an order. Bristol-Myers attempts to bolster this syllogism by references to legislative history; and it finally argues that denial of subpoenas effectively deprives it of its right to engage in meaningful settlement negotiations.

Frito-Lay, Inc. v. [118] FTC, 380 F.2d 8 (5th Cir. 1967); cf. Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 49–50, S.Ct. 459, 82 L. Ed. 638 (1938).

[2–4] Of course, the administrative exhaustion doctrine is less an inflexible command than a general guideline, see, e. g., McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194 (1969); where "an immediate appeal is necessary to give realistic protection to the claimed right," L. Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 429 (1965), a court may properly carve an exception to the doctrine. Only rarely, however, will "preliminary [or] procedural . . . agency action" threaten so irreparable an injury as to justify interloctory resort to corrective judicial process, see Texaco, Inc. v. FTC, 301 F.2d 662 (5th Cir.) (per curiam), cert denied, 371 U.S. 822, 83 S.Ct. 40, 9 L. Ed.2d 62 (1962); and Bristol-Myers has failed to persuade us that judicial intervention would here be appropriate.[6] Although the company may have to litigate the issues raised by the proposed complaint, it concedes that this is an inadequate basis for seeking judicial redress at this juncture. Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., supra, 303 U.S. at 51–52, 58 S.Ct. 459. Moreover, as the Commission points out, it is by no means clear that a formal complaint will ever issue on the basis of the present investigation. It is still less certain that a cease and desist order will be entered following formal adjudication [7]—during which, in any event, the company will have access to the precise investigatory tools it now seeks.

If after judicial review authorized by 15 U.S.C. § 45(c), a court of appeals agrees with the statutory claim here urged, we fail to see why the company would not receive adequate relief from an order remanding the case to allow informal negotiations to be reopened, if then desired. The company claims in effect that by that time the Commission will be so set in its views that realistic negotiation will be impossible. We do not agree. The company itself points out that the Commission has been attempting for "more than a decade" to rule unlawful the advertising claims involved here. Yet the company apparently assumes that it is still worthwhile to negotiate with the Commission, because that is the very purpose of the relief now sought. More to the point, we do not believe that the Commission will fail [119] to follow in good faith an order of a court of appeals requiring reopening of informal negotiations, assuming arguendo that such an occasion might arise. Finally, negotiations at that time might be more, rather than less, fruitful: They would be based upon complete knowledge of the opponent's case, and the prospect of a second, subsequent judicial review of the merits of a contested order would provide an additional incentive to compromise.

---

[6] We have carefully considered Bannercraft Clothing Co. v. Renegotiation Board, 466 F.2d 345 (D.C.Cir.1972), on which Bristol-Myers heavily relies, but find that case to be distinguishable. Bannercraft involved the validity of preliminary injunctions issued by district courts against continuation of administrative renegotiation of government contracts, pending determination of contractor claims to disclosure of information under the Freedom of Information Act. 5 U.S.C. § 552. Judge Wright's opinion strongly emphasizes the unusual procedure before the Renegotiation Board, id, at 349–351, and the requirements of the Freedom of Information Act. Id. at 352. Of even greater significance was the fact that the Court of Claims, to which review of the Renegotiation Board decisions is committed, had no power to afford the necessary relief. Id. at 357. Finally, the Bannercraft court expressly contrasted the issues before it with Federal Trade Commission proceedings which confronted the Fifth Circuit in Frito-Lay, supra. Id.

[7] At oral argument Bristol-Myers itself called our attention to administrative disposition of the proposed complaint issued against American Home Products Corp., 3 Trade Reg.Rep. ¶ 19,673 (FTC, June 29, 1971). In the consent order finally promulgated, id. ¶ 20,071 (FTC, August 8, 1972), the "corrective advertising" remedy, to which Bristol-Myers here objects, was apparently not included, although it had been originally proposed.

Application of the exhaustion doctrine makes it unnecessary to resolve the merits of the company's statutory claim to subpoenas. My brothers, in their concurring opinions, go on to decide that issue, but it seems more appropriate to me to postpone full consideration of that claim until review of a final cease and desist order, should one eventuate. Cf. K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise § 20.02, at 649 (1970 Supp.). This by no means indicates that I disagree with Judge Mansfield's persuasive analysis; I simply do not believe that we should reach the merits at this stage of the proceeding.

Finally, we have the impression that the company has not been unaware of the benefits of the delay in the administration proceeding caused by the action in the district court and by this appeal. At oral argument, one member of the panel felt sufficiently positive about the company's intent to delay to raise the appropriateness of taxing double costs on appeal. Fed.R.App.P. 38. Our failure to do so should not be taken as an encouragement to further attempts to prolong the administrative proceedings through efforts to obtain premature judicial review. The mandate shall issue forthwith.

Judgment affirmed.

LUMBARD, Circuit Judge (concurring):

I concur in Judge Mansfield's separate concurring opinion insofar as it reaches and resolves the medits of this dispute.

MANSFIELD, Circuit Judge (concurring):

I concur in the majority opinion. However, I would also reject on the merits Bristol-Myers' statutory claim to issuance of subpoenas during informal negotiations. While a cease and desist order may not issue, history indicates the probability of such issuance and if past delay is any criterion this will inevitably be followed by a future appeal, at which time another panel will be required once more to review the same record and arguments in order to resolve the issue. Rather than countenance such shuffling back and forth, with its consequent duplication and waste, I would decide it now.

As the majority option indicates, fn. 5, Bristol-Myers' statutory claim is labyrinthian. Reduced to simplest terms the claim is that at an informal negotiating stage it is a "party" as that term is used in the subpoena statute, 5 U.S.C. § 555 and defined in 5 U.S.C. § 551, i.e., a "person" named in an "agency proceeding." The latter term is claimed to be a step in "adjudication," which is defined as an "agency process for the formulation of an order," 5 U.S.C. § 551(7). An "order," in turn is defined as a "final disposition," 5 U.S.C. § 551(6). Since an informal negotiation can result in the issuance of an order, Bristol-Myers contends that it is a "party" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 555(d).

The fatal defect in this tortuous syllogistic reasoning is that informal negotiations under 5 U.S.C. § 554(c) are not adjudicative in nature. See The Seeburg Corp. v. FTC, 8 F.T.C. Stat & Dec. 393 (E.D.Tenn.1966), aff'd., 425 F. 2d 124 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 866, 91 S.Ct. 104, 27 L.Ed.2d 105 (1970).

> Nothing in the Administrative Procedure Act or in the basic principles of fair procedure precludes the Commission from creating and following a procedure for settling disputes without recourse to adjudication. Consent [1120] negotiations are not a stage in adjudication but a means of establishing whether adjudication can be avoided altogether. Like investigations, consent negotiations are distinct from the adjudicative process and hence not governed by the standards which control adjudicative procedure. William H. Rohrer Inc., 64 F.T.C. Dec. 1446, 1447 (1964).

Congress intended such negotiating proceedings to be informal, without the procedures inherent in trial-type hearings (right of examination and cross-examination, findings of fact and conclusions of law). Recognizing that the formalism of trial-type proceedings might not be conducive to successful settlement negotiations, Congress left to the agencies the power to develop the precise nature of the informal proceedings that might be used to implement the statute. See S.Doc. 248, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 24 (1946), Atty. Gen.'s Manual on the Administration Procedure Act (1947). Pursuant thereto the FTC enacted § 3.2 of its Rules of Practice for Adjudicative Proceeding, 16 C.F.R. § 3.2, which provides in pertinent part:

> Adjudicative proceedings are those formal proceedings conducted under one or more of the statutes administered by the Commission which are required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing. The term . . . does not include other proceedings such as negotiations for the entry of consent orders . . . .

In an informal consent negotiation pursuant to 5 U.S.C § 554 there is no examination or cross-examination of witnesses, no findings of fact and no conclusions of law. If the negotiations are unsuccessful, no order at all can be entered. At that stage only if the Commission decides to file a complaint does an adjudicatory stage commence. If, on the other hand, the negotiation is successful, the parties present an agreement with a staff report to the full Commission, which remains on record for 30 days. If the Commission approves the agreement, a formal complaint is issued together with a consent order which recites the history of the informal negotiations. The resulting order is final for the reason that the respondent waives further adjudicatory proceedings.

The conclusion that a company engaged in informal consent negotiations is not a "party" entitled to issuance of subpoenas accords with practical experience. At such a stage the issues have not been framed. Under such circumstances to permit a person under investigation to engage in a roving subpoena expedition upon the speculation that he might discover something that might persuade the agency to consent to his proposal could lead to substantial abuse, waste and delay.

Since Bristol-Myers' contentions are meritless, I would act now to foreclose the renewal of the issue upon a later appeal from a final cease and desist order.

PEPSICO, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, ET AL.[*]
and
PEPSI-COLA BOTTLING COMPANY OF CORVALLIS, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, ET AL.

Nos. 294, 295. Dockets 72-1911, 72-1912. F.T.C. Docket 8856.

(United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, November 20. 1972)

1. Intervening Bottlers would have All Rights of a Party, Except Scope of Proceeding and Possibilities of Delay Might Make More Vigorous Policing Against Dilatory Tactics Reasonable

---

[*] Reported in 472 F. 2d 179, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 876, 94 S. Ct. 44 (1973). For case before the Commission, see ______ F.T.C. ______ . See also p. 295 herein.

On complaint filed by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area, intervening bottlers before administrative agency would have all rights of a party except that scope of proceeding and consequent possibilities of delay might make it reasonable to undertake more vigorous policing against dilatory tactics than would ordinarily be necessary in the courts.

2. INCLUSION OF FIVE PARTICULAR RIGHTS IN ORDER DID NOT IMPLY AN EXCLUSION OF ALL OTHER RIGHTS

On complaint by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical [180] area, specific inclusion of five particular rights in order granting leave to intervene to three bottlers and a bottlers' association did not imply an exclusion of all other rights and intervenors could make motions or argue orally and Commission would withhold a right to appeal from examiner's initial decision at its peril where intervenors were persons whose contract rights were at stake.

3. THOUGH HEARING EXAMINER'S ORDER GRANTED LEAVE TO INTERVENE, NOTHING COMMISSION HAD DONE WOULD PREVENT FURTHER INTERVENTION BY BOTTLERS

On complaint by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area, nothing Commission had done would prevent further intervention by bottlers though hearing examiner's order granted leave to intervene to three bottlers and a bottlers' association.

4. ORDER DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS FOR FAILURE TO JOIN INDISPENSABLE PARTIES WAS NOT REVIEWABLE BY PETITION TO COURT OF APPEALS

Fact that order of Federal Trade Commission denying plaintiff's motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties was not one requiring plaintiff to cease and desist from anything did not lead inexorably to the conclusion that it was not reviewable but only that it was not reviewable by petition to Court of Appeals.

5. COURT OF APPEALS WOULD ALLOW BOTTLERS TO INTERVENE IF REVIEW OF PRESUMED ORDER IS SOUGHT BY PLAINTIFF MANUFACTURER; IF APPEAL NOT SOUGHT, REVIEW AVAILABLE TO BOTTLERS IN DISTRICT COURT WHETHER OR NOT THEY ARE PARTIES TO AGENCY PROCEEDING SINCE THEY WOULD BE ADVERSELY AFFECTED OR AGGRIEVED

Though any order on complaint filed by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area would presumably run only against plaintiff, if plaintiff manufacturer sought review, a court of appeals would surely allow bottlers to intervene and if plaintiff manufacturer did not appeal review would be available to bottlers in a district court whether or not they had been full-fledged parties before the Commission since they would be adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within meaning of relevant statute.

6. RIGHT TO JUDICIAL REVIEW IS NOT AUTOMATICALLY CONFERRED ON A PARTY TO AN AGENCY PROCEEDING

   Being a "party" before an agency neither automatically confers nor is a necessary condition of right to judicial review.

7. GROUNDLESS FEARS OF PLAINTIFF DO NOT ENTITLE REVIEW OF COMMISSION'S ORDER EVEN UNDER PRINCIPLE THAT ONE CAN FIND "FINAL AGENCY ACTION FOR WHICH THERE IS NO OTHER ADEQUATE REMEDY IN A COURT."

   Where fears of plaintiff manufacturer of soft drink syrups of determinations in private suits inconsistent with a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order were groundless and plaintiff bottler's dilemma whereby if it intervened to present its case it would be bound but non-intervening bottlers would not be was of its own making, plaintiffs were not entitled to review of Commission's order denying motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties even under possibly overgenerous principle that one can find "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court" if an agency refuses to dismiss a proceeding that is plainly beyond its jurisdiction as a matter of law or is being conducted in a manner that cannot result in a valid order.

8. GROUNDLESS FEARS OF DETERMINATIONS IN PRIVATE SUIT INCONSISTENT WITH F.T.C. CEASE AND DESIST ORDER AND AN ORDER DIRECTED TO EVERY BOTTLER ARE INSUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT CONCLUSION THAT ANY ORDER EMANATING FROM PROCEEDINGS WOULD BE VOID

   On complaint filed by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix [181] syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area, fact that plaintiff manufacturer's and plaintiff bottlers position vis-á-vis supposititious future private litigation would be more comfortable if they could proffer in bar an order in a proceeding in which every bottler had been made a party was not enough to support a conclusion that any order emanating from proceeding otherwise would be void and would not show right to review of Commission's denial of motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties.

9. DECISION WHETHER TO ACCEDE TO PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR JOINDER WAS WITHIN COMMISSION'S DISCRETION

   On complaint filed by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area, since a cease and desist order in proceeding wherein bottlers could intervene would in fact bind them, decision whether to accede to plaintiff's request for joinder was within Commission's discretion and Commission was entitled to weigh added comfort which all-out joinder would give plaintiff against mountain of paperwork and delay that would result from joining 513 bottlers of plaintiff and the bottlers in six other proceedings and also to precedent that such action would create in cases where even larger numbers were involved.

10. CHOICE BETWEEN ALLOWING JOINDER TO BOTTLERS AND USING INTERVENTION WAS TO BE MADE BY AGENCY AND NOT BY COURT SO LONG AS FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF PLAINTIFF AND BOTTLERS WERE ADEQUATELY PROTECTED

On complaint filed by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area, apart from fact that a proceeding allowing joinder to bottlers and imposing restrictions would not differ essentially from what could be accomplished through intervention, choice was to be made by the agency and not by the court so long as the fundamental rights of plaintiff manufacturer and the bottlers to be heard in opposition and not to be exposed to liability for complying with any order that might ultimately issue were adequately protected.

11. WHERE NO EFFORT HAD BEEN MADE TO CONVINCE F.T.C. THAT MOTION OF COMPLAINT COUNSEL NOW CALLED FOR JOINDER OF BOTTLER, THERE HAD BEEN NO EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

On complaint filed by Federal Trade Commission alleging that plaintiff had hindered competition in distribution and sale of premix and postmix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside a designated geographical area, where no effort had been made to convince Federal Trade Commission that, however matters previously stood, motion of complaint counsel now called for joinder of bottlers if metro area bottler handicap provision was to be imposed, there had been no exhaustion of administrative remedies with regard to that issue.

12. F.T.C. MIGHT PROPERLY CHOOSE TO PERMIT JOINDER OF BOTTLERS BUT IT WAS NOT BOUND TO DO SO AND WAS ONLY BOUND TO AFFORD FURTHER OPPORTUNITY FOR INTERVENTION

Where proposed metro area bottler handicap provision would have net effect of assuring that several bottlers could compete effectively for business in largest locations while temporary protection was afforded small bottlers, Federal Trade Commission might properly choose to permit joinder of bottlers but it was not bound to do so and was only bound to afford further opportunity for intervention by metro area bottlers, individually or as a group, since it appeared that proceeding might have more adverse consequences for them than under form of order initially proposed.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 472 F.2d 179 (1972))

On appeal, Court held that on complaint by F.T.C. alleging restraint of competition, plaintiffs were not entitled to review of Commission's order denying motions to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties.

Order dismissing complaint affirmed.

Medina, Circuit Judge, dissented and filed opinion.

[182] Milton Handler, New York City (Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays & Handler, and Fred A. Freund, Elizabeth Head, Herbert Schreiber, and Robert A. Burka, New York City, of counsel), for plaintiff-appellant.

Robert J. Sisk, New York City (Hughes Hubbard & Reed, and James B. Kobark, Jr., New York City, of counsel), for plaintiff-intervenor-appellant.

Frank H. Wohl, Asst. U.S. Atty. (Whitney North Seymour, Jr., U.S. Atty., S.D.N.Y., and T. Gorman Reilly, Asst. U.S. Atty., of counsel), for defendants-appellees.

Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., and James P. Timony, Washington, D.C., of counsel, for defendant-appellee, the Federal Trade Commission.

Before FRIENDLY, Chief Judge, and MEDINA and ANDERSON, Circuit Judges.

FRIENDLY, Chief Judge:

On July 15, 1971, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) filed a complaint against PepsiCo, Inc. under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[1] The essential allegation was that PepsiCo had "hindered . . . competition in the distribution and sale of pre-mix and post-mix syrups and soft drink products sold under its trade names by restricting its bottlers from selling outside of a designated geographical area." Annexed to the complaint was a form of order which the FTC proposed to issue if the evidence warranted. The order would prohibit PepsiCo, among other things, from entering into, continuing, enforcing, or renewing any contract that would limit the territory in the United States wherein bottlers might sell, or from refusing to sell to any bottler because of the territory wherein he sold. Also annexed was a letter which PepsiCo would be directed to send its bottlers within 60 days after issuance of the proposed order. PepsiCo's answer, dated August 23, 1971, included "as a complete defense" an allegation "that the complaint herein is fatally defective in that it fails to join as parties respondent persons needed for a just adjudication, to with the soft drink bottlers who have entered into the challenged agreements . . . and made substantial investments in plant, manufacturing and distribution facilities in reliance thereon and upon the territorial security afforded them thereunder, and ignores the property and procedural rights of these indispensable parties whose economic interests would be most directly and adversely affected by the proposed order accompanying the complaint."

---

[1] A summary of the complaint was unofficially published in 3 Trade Reg.Rep. ¶¶ 19,443, 19,740. Similar complaints were filed against six other manufacturers of soft drink syrups: Dr. Pepper Co.; The Seven-Up Co.; Royal Crown Cola Co.; and the Coca-Cola, Cott and Crush groups.

Meanwhile the Pepsi-Cola bottlers had not been idle. Two motions to intervene, both dated August 11, 1971 and signed by the same counsel who have represented the intervening plaintiff in this action, Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Corvallis, Inc., were submitted to the Hearing Examiner. One of these was on behalf of Pepsi-Cola Albany Bottling Company, Inc., Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Central Virginia, and Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Tampa. An affidavit supporting the motion set forth the facts concerning the movants' exclusive contracts and alleged that there was no assurance that their interests would be adequately represented by PepsiCo. The other was on behalf of Pepsi-Cola Bottlers' Association. This motion alleged that the Association "effectively represents the interests of all the franchised Pepsi-Cola Bottlers in the [183] United States." A supporting affidavit stated that 512 of the 513 Pepsi bottlers were members of the Association, repeated the allegation that the interests of PepsiCo and the bottlers were not identical, denied that the franchises had an anti-competitive effect, and contended that, absent the enforcement of territorial exclusivity, "a relatively few, large Bottlers, each serving extensive geographical areas and catering almost exclusively to large retail customers, will drive local Bottlers out of the business." On November 18, 1971, the two motions were granted by the Hearing Examiner whose order is quoted in relevant part below.[2] He characterized his action as "the granting of the right of full participation" which might "aid the examiner and the Commission in properly resolving the issues presented."

During the same period, PepsiCo, relying in considerable part on the analogy of F.R.Civ.P. 19, had moved to dismiss the complaint because of the nonjoinder of the 513 Pepsi bottlers. The

---

[2] It is ordered that the applicants, Pepsi-Cola Bottlers' Association; Pepsi-Cola Albany Bottling Company, Inc.; Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Central Virginia, and Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Tampa, motion to intervene in this matter be granted, including the following:

1. The right to cross-examine witnesses proffered by counsel in support of the complaint and counsel for respondent.
2. The right to cross-examine witnesses proffered by counsel in support of the complaint or counsel for respondent.
3. The right to offer evidence, both documentary and testimonial, at the conclusion of respondent's defense.
4. The right to object and cross-examine will be granted subject to strict control of the hearing examiner and the right to proffer evidence will be limited to that relevant evidence which is not repetitious of that proffered by counsel in support of the complaint or counsel for respondent.
5. The right to file proposed findings of fact and briefs with the hearing examiner as he orders.

Hearing Examiner denied the motion, finding that joinder of all the bottlers "would create a completely unmanageable situation for trial purposes" and that his grant of intervention to the Bottlers' Association had not been "on a limited basis."

PepsiCo then sought leave to file an interlocutory appeal to the Commission. The FTC chose instead to treat the question as if it had been certified to it with the Hearing Examiner's recommendation. In an opinion dated March 23, 1972, also dealing with similar motions by the other soft drink syrup manufacturers against which the FTC was proceeding, see fn. 1, the Commission denied the motions to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties.

Shortly thereafter PepsiCo instituted this action in the District Court for the Southern District of New York to enjoin the FTC from continuing the proceeding unless it joined all the bottlers. The plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction, the defendants for dismissal of the complaint. While these motions were pending, Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Corvallis, Inc., an Oregon bottler, moved to intervene as a plaintiff, and this motion was granted. Judge Cannella then granted the defendants' motion to dismiss, 343 F.Supp. 396, holding that since review was premature, the court lacked jurisdiction over the subject matter.

These appeals followed and, on appellants' request, were given expedited treatment. We shall deal first with the case as it stood before the FTC and the district court, and will later consider the effect of a motion, made after the filing of notices of appeal, by FTC complaint counsel which sought summary judgment with respect to the invalidity of the exclusive territorial clauses and gave notice of counsel's intention to propose a "Metro Area Bottler Handicap" provision as a remedy.

I.

It is desirable to consider at the outset what status the FTC has accorded [184] the bottlers who have intervened and would accord others who might seasonably seek to do so. The governing statute, 15 U.S.C. § 45(b), provides: "Any person, partnership, or corporation may make application, and upon good cause shown may be allowed by the Commission to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person." The FTC's Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. § 3.14, state, in relevant part, that "[t]he hearing examiner or the Commission may by order permit the intervention to such extent and upon such terms as are provided by law or as otherwise may be deemed proper."

[1] If this had been a civil action, intervention by the bottlers would have been not a matter of grace but of right, F.R.Civ.P. 24(a), and such an intervenor would have had all the rights of a party subject only to reasonable provisions designed to assure against repetitious evidence and argument. We see no reason why a different principle should prevail before administrative agencies, except that the scope of the proceeding and the consequent possiities of delay may make it reasonable to undertake more vigorous policing against dilatory tactics than would ordinarily be necessary in the courts. Indeed, we think the Supreme Court has held precisely this. Consolidated Edison Co. v. NLRB, 305 U.S. 197, 231–239, 59 S.Ct. 206, 83 L.Ed. 126 (1938).; FCC v. National Broadcasting Co., Inc., (KOA), 319 U.S. 239, 63 S.Ct. 1035, 87 L.Ed. 1374 (1943).

[2, 3] There is no reason to believe that the status accorded the four intervenors was anything less than is required. Although the appellants have made much of the fact that the Hearing Examiner's order granting leave to intervene provides for only five paticular rights, see fn. 2, the specific inclusion of these rights does not imply an exclusion of all others. We therefore have no cause to think that, if the intervenors wished to make motions or argue orally, the Examiner would prevent them from doing so. A more serious question is whether they could appeal to the Commission from the Examiner's initial decision. Rule 3.52(a), 16 C.F.R. § 3.52(a), limits this right to parties, and Rule 3.41(c), 16 C.F.R. § 3.41(c), is ambiguous on whether an intervenor is a party.[3] Contrast the FCC's Rules of Practice, 47 C.F.R. §§ 1.223, 1.302. However, in light of the Supreme Court decisions cited, the Commission would withhold such a right at its peril in a case such as this where the intervenors are persons whose contract rights are at stake.[4] Furthermore, we do not construe anything the Commission has done as preventing further intervention; the Examiner announced at a prehearing conference that, if other bottlers wished to intervene, "they will be most welcome by me."[5]

---

[3] The opinions of the Hearing Examiner denying the motion to dismiss the complaint for nonjoinder of indispensable parties and granting intervention indicated that the intervenors would not be parties. In addition, the Examiner stated at a prehearing conference that, if the intervenors wished to appeal his initial decision, they should seek leave to intervene from the Commission.

[4] Agencies could well consider revision of their rules on intervention to distinguish between persons whose property rights are at stake and are thus entitled to all the rights of a party, and persons with a more generalized interest, a sort of super amici curiae, whose participation can well be restricted to avoid undue prolongation of the hearing. See generally, MacIntyre & Volhard, Intervention in Agency Adjudications, 58 Va.L. Rev. 230 (1972). For rules making such a distinction, see 14 C.F.R. §§ 302.14 (b), 302.15 (Civil Aeronautics Board). See also 47 C.F.R. §§ 1.223, 1.225 (Federal Communications Commission).

[5] The FTC might consider revision of its rules to provide for publication of its com-

[185] We thus predicate our discussion on the basis that, subject to reasonable limitations to avoid repetition and delay, the four intervenors and other bottlers who may seasonably apply will receive from the FTC all those rights "provided by law" that are essential to a fair hearing. 16 C.F.R. § 3.14.

II.

[4] Although the Federal Trade Commission Act limits review by a court of appeals to "any person, partnership, or corporation required by an order of the Commission to cease and desist," 15 U.S.C. § 45(c), we agree with appellants that the fact that the order here assailed is not one requiring PepsiCo to cease and desist from anything does not lead inexorably to the conclusion that it is not reviewable, but only that it is not reviewable by petition to a court of appeals. Elmo Division of Drive-X Co. v. Dixon, 121 U.S.App.D.C. 113, 348 F.2d 342, 344 (1965). Whether it was reviewable by suit in a district court depends on the construction given to the first two sentences of § 10(c) of the APA, now 5 U.S.C. § 704:

> Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review. A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on the review of the final agency action.

Since the order was not one "made reviewable by statute," its reviewability hinges on whether it constitutes "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court . . ."

[5, 6] If the APA uses the term "final agency action" in the same sense that the Judicial Code speaks of a "final decision" of a lower court, 28 U.S.C. § 1291, there could be little doubt about the answer. It is clear that "[d]enial of a motion to dismiss is not a final order and is therefore not appealable," 2A Moore, Federal Practice ¶12.14, at 2338 & n. 16 (2d ed. 1968) and this principle has been applied to a refusal to dismiss for failure plaints in the Federal Register whenever the complaint seeks to invalidate provisions of contracts between the respondent and others. Compare the FCC's Rules, 47 C.F.R. §§ 1.221, 1.223. This may well be required by Consolidated Edison Co. v. NLRB, supra, 305 U.S. at 233–234, 59 S.Ct. 206, and, indeed, by §5(a) of the APA, now 5 U.S.C. § 554(a). But it is not here contended that the Pepsi bottlers have not in fact received notice. All but one are members of the Bottlers' Association, and Bottler No. 513 would have to possess a naivete not normally encountered in business affairs not to be aware of this proceeding which has been so extensively publicized and so vitally affects the structure of the industry—if, indeed, PepsiCo has not itself notified him. The absence of formal notice thus does not require an injunction, cf .United States v. Aarons, 310 F.2d 341 (2 Cir. 1962), although as indicated it would be preferable if the FTC were to provide this in cases like the present.

---

[5] (Continued)

to join indispensable parties. Ritter v. Wyoga Gas & Oil Corp., 110 F.2d 524 (3 Cir.), cert. denied, 311 U.S. 669, 61 S.Ct. 29, 85 L.Ed. 430 (1940). Many of the considerations supporting the final judgment rule with respect to appeals from decisions of lower courts are equally present in the case of agency action: The agency may find in favor of the respondent; the case may be settled; the reviewing court, in any event, will be in a better position to assess the matter when all the cards have been played. There can be no question that, under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(c), PepsiCo can obtain review by a court of appeals of any cease and desist order that may emanate from the proceeding. The right of the intervenors to obtain judicial review of a cease and desist order, although somewhat less clear, is clear enough. The problem arises from the fact that, as indicated, the Federal Trade Commission Act limits review by a court of appeals to "any person, partnership, or corporation required by order of the Commission to cease and desist," etc., and any order in this proceeding would presumably run only against PepsiCo. However, if PepsiCo sought review, a court of appeals would surely allow the bottlers to intervene. FRAP 15(d). If PepsiCo did not appeal, review [186] would be available to the bottlers in a district court, whether or not they had been full-fledged parties before the FTC, since they would be "adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute . . ." 5 U.S.C. § 702. The notion that being a "party" before an agency either automatically confers or is a necessary condition of the right to judicial review has in fact been dead since Pittsburg & W. Va. Ry. v. United States, 281 U.S. 479, 486, 50 S.Ct. 378, 74 L.Ed. 980 (1930), see 3 Davis, Administrative Law Treatise § 22.08, at 241–243 (1958), although courts have not always appreciated this. The provisions of § 10(a) of the APA, now 5 U.S.C. § 702, should have dispelled any lingering doubt generated by earlier Supreme Court pronouncements.

The legislative history of the APA sheds little light on what the framers meant by "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court." S.Rep.No.752, 79th Cong., 1st Sess. 27 (1945), says that the phrase "includes any effective agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in any court." H.R.Rep.No.1980, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 43 (1946), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1946, p. 1195, speaks of "any effective or operative agency action." The adjectives tend against a construction that would include denial of a motion to dismiss a complaint. A quick reading of the second sentence of § 10(c) might suggest that interlocutory rulings were never to be reviewed until there had been final agency action in the usual sense. However, the phrase "[a] preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable" (emphasis supplied) suggests that some action may be directly reviewable, although it does not explain by what authority unless the reference is to special statutory review procedures. Perhaps the second sentence could best be read as designed to insure that, like similar orders in civil actions, see 9 Moore, Federal Practice ¶110.07, at 108–09 (2d ed. 1972), preliminary orders in administrative proceedings which are not immediately reviewable do not remain beyond review forever. Cf. 3 Davis, Administrative Law Treatise § 20.08, at 101 (1958). It is arguable also that the framers must have been familiar with the well-known decision in Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938) and that, if they intended to overrule it, they would have spoken more clearly.[6] The decisions on the subject, both by the Supreme Court and by lower courts, are conflicting, as Professor Davis has pointed out, 3 Administrative Law Treatise §§ 20.01–.05 (1958). Moreover, most of them do not address themselves to what one would suppose to be the crucial issue, i.e., the proper interpretation of § 10(c).[7]

[187] We find no need to proffer a definitive solution to the question of the reviewability of agency orders which are not "final" in the ordinary sense—something which, in any event, is beyond the capability of an inferior court. Rather we shall accept for the sake of argument, despite possible contrary implications from the per curiam in Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. F.P.C., 330 U.S. 802, 67 S. Ct. 963, 91 L.Ed. 1261 (1947), rev'g 81 U.S.App.D.C. 178, 156 F.2d 821 (1946), see also Bristol-Myers Company v. FTC, 469 F.2d 1116 (2 Cir. 1972) that we can extrapolate from cases such as Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 110 (1958), and McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de Marineros, 372 U.S. 10, 83 S.Ct. 671, 9 L.Ed.2d 547 (1963), a principle that one can find "final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court" if an agency refuses to dismiss a proceeding that is plainly beyond its jurisdiction as a matter of law or is being conducted in a manner that cannot result in a valid order.[8] The injury against which a court would protect is not merely the expense to the plaintiff of defending in the administrative proceeding, which Myers held not to be enough, 303 U.S. at 51–52, 58 S.Ct. 459, but, in a case like this, the enormous waste of governmental resources and the continuing threat of a complete restructuring of an industry. While PepsiCo and its bottlers cannot be heard to complain of the Commission's attempt to accomplish this restructuring, arguably they should not be placed under that threat in a proceeding that must prove to be a nullity.

---

[6] Attorney General Clark and Representative Walter, sponsor of the House bill, indicated that § 10(c) was intended to enact existing law, S.Doc.No.248, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 230, 369 (1946), and the Attorney General's Manual on the Administrative Procedure Act 103 (1947) suggests that § 10(c) enacted the Myers rule.

[7] The courts instead speak of "exhaustion." This case shows how little help that term offers in the context here relevant. If the rule is simply that plaintiff must have "exhausted" administrative remedies with respect to the issue for which judicial review is sought, as he clearly must, PepsiCo has done that. The real question is under what circumstances a court should review an order which, in Mr. Justice Brandeis' famous phrase, "does not command the carrier to do, or to refrain from doing, any thing; which does not grant or withhold any authority, privilege, or license; which does not extend or abridge any power or facility; which does not subject the carrier to any liability, civil or criminal; which does not change the carrier's existing or future status or condition; which does not determine any right or obligation." United States v. Los Angeles & S. L. R. R., 273 U.S. 299, 309–310, 47 S.Ct. 413, 414, 71 L.Ed. 651 (1927). See the discussion in Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 398–410 (1965). Compare also Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967); Toilet Goods Ass'n, Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 158, 87 S.Ct. 1520, 18 L.Ed.2d 697 (1967); Gardner v. Toilet Goods Ass'n, Inc., 387 U.S. 167, 87 S.Ct. 1526, 18 L.Ed.2d 704 (1967).

III.

[7] We are unable to conclude, however, that appellants have brought themselves within the possibly over-generous principle with respect to reviewability that we have put forward. PepsiCo says that, unless all the bottlers are joined, its compliance with an eventual cease and desist order, after full judicial review, might subject it to liability in a suit by an unjoined bottler whose territory had been invaded by another to whom PepsiCo had sold syrup. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Corvallis says that, if a cease and desist order is issued, it might be held liable if it then sought to sell in territory now granted to an unjoined bottler.[9]

---

[8] PepsiCo argues this to be the real thrust of Interstate Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 109 U.S.App.D.C. 255, 286 F.2d 539 (1960), and American Communications Ass'n v. United States, 298 F.2d 648 (2 Cir. 1962), holding orders denying intervention in administrative proceedings to be immediately appealable in circumstances where erroneous denial might invalidate any future order, although the decisions are technically distinguishable since the precise issue was whether the orders fell within the statute permitting review of "final" FCC orders, now 28 U.S.C. § 2342. See also Public Service Comm'n v. FPC, 109 U.S.App.D.C. 66, 284 F.2d 200 (1960); Lynchburg Gas Co. v. FPC, 284 F.2d 756 (3 Cir. 1960); City of Houston v. CAB, 115 U.S.App.D.C. 94, 317 F.2d 158 (1963).

[9] Counsel for Pepsi-Cola of Corvallis seeks to explain its own failure to intervene by arguing that, if it did, it would be the only Oregon bottler bound by a cease and desist order. Putting aside the point that the same counsel apparently entertained no such fear when moving for intervention on behalf of three other bottlers, we think,

They contend that Congress could not have meant to allow the FTC to inflict such hardship when joinder of all the bottlers provides a means for avoiding it.

The proposition that a court would hold one person liable to another for doing something within the United [188] States which a federal administrative agency, acting within its jurisdiction, has found to be necessary for the enforcement of a federal regulatory statute arouses some astonishment. This is particularly so in a context where the persons who would seek to enforce liability know of the proceeding and have had an opportunity to intervene before the agency "in order to safeguard their interests." Consolidated Edison Co. v. NLRB, supra, 305 U.S. at 234, 59 S.Ct. at 219. The astonishment becomes greater in light of the Supreme Court's clear statement in National Licorice Co. v. NLRB, 309 U.S. 350, 363, 60 S.Ct. 569, 577, 84 L.Ed. 799 (1940) that, in administrative proceedings devoted "to the protection and enforcement of public rights, there is little scope or need for the traditional rules governing the joinder of parties in litigation determining private rights," then citing the very case of Shields v. Barrow, 58 U.S. (17 How.) 130, 15 L.Ed. 158 (1855), on which PepsiCo heavily relies. The Court declared, 309 U.S. at 365, 60 S.Ct. at 578, that, despite the nonjoinder of the employees with whom the employer had contracted, "it will not be open to any tribunal to compel the employer to perform the acts, which, even though he has bound himself by contract to do them, would violate the Board's order or be inconsistent with any part of it."[10] Even more to the point, for reasons explained in the text below, that non-intervening bottlers will be effectively bound, and Pepsi-Cola of Corvallis thus need have no hesitancy about intervening in the FTC proceeding if it considers this to be necessary to protect its interests.

---

[9] (Continued)

[10] PepsiCo advances two arguments to detract from the force of this seemingly controlling statement. One is that, in National Licorice, over the dissent of two Justices, the Court modified the NLRB order to provide that the notices required to be posted by the employer should include a statement that the invalidation of the contracts was "without prejudice to the assertion by the employees of any legal rights they may have acquired under such contracts." 309 U.S. at 367, 60 S.Ct. at 579. Apparently this was for the purpose of preserving employee rights, such as an irreducible wage scale, vacation with pay, extra compensation for overtime, etc., that had accrued prior to the effective date of invalidation. See Brief for Petitioner at 28. Compare FTC v. Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., 344 U.S. 392, 396 n. 3, 73 S.Ct. 361, 97 L.Ed. 426 (1953). The other is the portion of Consolidate Edison Co. v. NLRB, supra, 305 U.S. at 231–239, 59 S.Ct. 206, where the Court invalidated so much of a Board order directing the termination of contracts with independent unions, in part because the unions "were entitled to notice and hearing before [the contracts] could be set aside." Id. at 233, 59 S.Ct. at 218. But the Court was there dealing with a proceeding where the complaint had not challenged the validity of the contracts, and the opinion clearly indicates that, if it had and the unions had been given notice, the would have been "under a duty to intervene before the Board in order to safeguard their interests." Id. at 234, 59 S.Ct. at 219. Reading National Licorice and Consolidated Edison together,

Mr. Justice Stone went on to observe, citing many cases, 309 U.S. at 365–366, 60 S.Ct. at 578, that "the order does not go beyond those in suits brought by the United States to restrain violations of the Sherman Act, where the injunction was broad enough to prevent the offender from carrying out contracts with persons not parties to the suits" and that "in proceedings before the Federal Trade Commission, the order restraining unfair methods of competition may preclude the performance of outstanding contracts by the offender" and these "have never been challenged because the holders of the contracts were not made parties."

PepsiCo attempts to dispose of these references to the antitrust and FTC cases by saying that they related to situations where removal of the restrictions sought to be annulled was beneficial to the nonjoined parties. While this may often have been true, it has not always been. In Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30, 51 S.Ct. 42, 75 L.Ed. 145 (1930), aff'g 34 F.2d 984 (S.D.N.Y.1929), where the distributors but not the exhibitors were named as defendants, there was evidence that the arbitration provision there annulled [189] was favored by at least a minority of the exhibitors. See 282 U.S. at 43, 51 S.Ct. 42, 34 F.2d at 985, 988–989; Brief for the United States in the Supreme Court at 56. When such an exhibitor sought to defend a contract action by claiming that the distributor-plaintiff had not complied with the arbitration clause, this was refused. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. National Theater Corp., 49 F.2d 64 (4 Cir. 1931). Again, in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 60 S.Ct. 618, 84 L.Ed. 852 (1940), an action in which only Ethyl was named a defendant, the Court affirmed an order invalidating provisions in Ethyl's licenses to refiners which required them to sell only to licensed jobbers at a certain price differential above the refiners' best non-premium grade of gasoline, a system which, as the Court found, had the effect of controlling prices to a degree beyond that permitted by Ethyl's patent monopoly. It is rather plain that some of the refiners and jobbers might have regarded the price-fixing as beneficial. We are unable to follow PepsiCo's argument that invalidation of price-fixing agreements is invariably beneficial to a wholesaler or retailer. While it is obvious that a price-fixing agreement with a single distributor operates adversely to the latter, since he would prefer freedom to do as he wishes, it is not at all clear that the more usual case of agreements with all of a manu-

---

[10] (Continued)
we think the Court is clearly of the view that, in an agency proceeding seeking to vindicate public rights against a respondent, the private rights of other parties can be concluded if they have had notice and an opportunity to intervene.

facturer's competing distributors does; many of them very likely consider it a beneficial protection against price-cutting. Yet it would be news, indeed, that all such distributors must be joined in order for the manufacturer to be protected against subsequent suit. See United States v. National Lead Co., 63 F.Supp. 513, 525, n.8 (S.D.N.Y.1945), aff'd, 332 U.S. 319, 67 S.Ct. 1634, 91 L.Ed. 2077 (1947); cf. Paramount Lasky Corp. v. National Theatre Corp., supra, 49 F.2d 64. Most pertinently, in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 87 S.Ct. 1856, 18 L.Ed.2d 1249 (1967), the Court considered the legality of various types of territorial restrictions upon distributors and retailers, although only a distributors' association and B.F. Goodrich & Co. (both a retailer and a distributor), were named as defendants along with the manufacturer.[11]

[8–10] The upshot of all this is that the fears of PepsiCo and Pepsi-Cola of Corvallis of determinations in private suits inconsistent with a FTC cease and desist order are groundless and that Pepsi-Cola of Corvallis' dilemma whereby, if it intervenes to present its case, it will be bound but nonintervening bottlers will not be, see fn. 9, is of its own making. To be sure, the appellants' position vis-a-vis supposititious future private litigation would be more comfortable if they could proffer in bar an order in a proceeding to which every bottler had been made a party than if they were obliged to convince a court of what, on the basis of both authority and reason, we are confident the correct position is. But that is not enough to support a conclusion that any order emanating from the proceeding as now structured would [190] be void—the premise of our assumption that review at this stage may be proper. Since a cease and desist order in a proceeding wherein the bottlers could intervene would in fact bind them, decision whether to accede to PepsiCo's request for joinder was within the Commission's discretion. It was entitled to weigh the added comfort which all-out joinder would give PepsiCo against the mountain of paperwork and the delay that would result from joining the 513 Pepsi-

---

[11] Other antitrust and FTC cases where the courts have invalidated or approved the invalidation of contract provisions arguably beneficial to the other party despite the failure to join the latter are United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U.S. 241, 62 S.Ct. 1088, 86 L.Ed. 1408 (1942) (price-fixing provisions); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 64 S.Ct. 805, 88 L.Ed. 1024 (1944) (id.); Butterick Co. v. FTC, 4 F.2d 910 (2 Cir.), cert. denied, 267 U.S. 602, 45 S.Ct. 462, 69 L.Ed. 808 (1925) (resale price maintenance and exclusive dealing provisions); Q. R. S. Music Co. 1927) (resale price maintenance provisions). The last three cases were cited with approval in National Licorice, 309 U.S. at 366, 60 S.Ct. 569. While it is true that, as urged by PepsiCo's able counsel, the issue of non-joinder was not discussed, we have been cited to no case where a defendant or respondent has been held liable to an unjoined third party for complying with an antitrust decree or an FTC cease and desist order.

Cola bottlers and the bottlers in the six other proceedings, see fn. 1, and also the precedent this would create in cases where even larger numbers were involved.[12] It may be, as PepsiCo urges, that the Commission has exaggerated the burden that joinder would entail. It is by no means certain that all the bottlers would seek to offer evidence; if large numbers did, the FTC could properly impose restrictions that would limit proof to typical situations and avoid repetition. But, apart from the fact that a proceeding conducted under such restrictions would not differ essentially from what can be accomplished through intervention, this is a choice to be made by the agency and not by the courts, so long as the fundamental rights of PepsiCo and the bottlers to be heard in opposition and not to be exposed to liability for complying with any order that may ultimately issue are adequately protected.[13] See Wolf Corp. v. SEC, 115 U.S.App.D.C. 75, 317 F.2d 139, 142–143 (1963). We are convinced they have been.

IV.

Appellants urge that the already bad situation created by the FTC's initial refusal to join all the bottlers has since been altered for the worse by the motion of complaint counsel, filed on or about July 31, 1972, for partial summary judgment and, more particularly, for the inclusion in the order, if found warranted by the evidence of a Metro Area Bottler Handicap provision. Whereas the order proposed in the complaint would simply have enjoined PepsiCo from enforcing territorial restrictions, the Metro Area Bottler Handicap provision would add a proviso requiring PepsiCo, in the case of the bottlers in the 200 largest locations, to enforce for ten years a new restriction which would prohibit such bottlers from selling elsewhere than in his own territory, the territory of another similarly situated bottler, or unassigned territory. As complaint counsel argued, "the net effect of the provision is to assure that several bottlers can compete effectively for the business in [the largest locations] while temporary protection is afforded small bottlers during the period in which they adjust their marketing efforts to realize economies of scale." This, it is said, creates a clear conflict of interest between Metro Area bottlers which under the provision would remain subject to certain territorial restrictions, and the smaller bottlers which would not.

---

[12] In Eastman Kodak Co. [1952–54 Transfer Binder] Trade Reg.Rep. ¶ 11,527 (FTC 1953), cited by the Commission, there were over 6,000 dealers; in the Ethyl case, supra, 309 U.S. 436, 60 S.Ct. 618, there were 11,000 jobbers.

[13] PepsiCo argues that the bottlers' right to intervene should not affect its right to have indispensable parties joined. Although this would be true in a civil proceeding involving only private rights, the Supreme Court decisions discussed above make it clear that the analogy does not hold in court or agency proceedings to vindicate public rights.

[11, 12] It is sufficient to answer that, with respect to this new aspect of the case, there has been no exhaustion of administrative remedies in the meaningful sense of that term, see fn. 7. No effort has been made to convince the FTC that, however matters previously stood, the motion of complaint counsel now calls for joinder of all bottlers if the Metro Area Handicap is to be imposed. While we could dismiss the point on that ground, we think it better to [191] dispose of it on the merits. Although the Commission might properly choose to reserve its position on joinder in light of the Metro Area Handicap proposal, it is not bound to do so. What it is bound to do is afford further opportunity for intervention by Metro Area bottlers, individually or as a group, since it now appears that the proceeding may have more adverse consequences for them than under the form of order initially proposed.

We thus conclude that even under the perhaps unduly liberal assumption that review would now lie if the proceeding as presently structured could not result in a valid cease and desist order, appellants have not brought themselves within that principle. The order dismissing the complaint is accordingly affirmed.

MEDINA, Circuit Judge (dissenting):

I respectfully dissent. I do not think we should leave the question of the subject matter jurisdiction of the District Court up in the air. I believe the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction in this case and that in the exercise of that jurisdiction the District Court on a remand should review the action of the Federal Trade Commission and enjoin it from continuing the PespiCo proceeding unless and until it provides notice of the issues to all the PepsiCo bottlers and affords them a meaningful right to a hearing. I think this is required as a matter of sound judicial administration, as a matter of constitutional law, and as a matter of plain common sense. In the discussion that follows I shall attempt to demonstrate:

(1) That the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction.

(2) Despite the fact that the threat of suits against PepsiCo, in the event of a final decision that the contracts with the bottlers are illegal, may prove to be illusory, the provisions made by the Federal Trade Commission for intervention by the bottlers and for the protection of their rights are inadequate. Elementary principles of due process require at the very least notice to all the bottlers of the precise charges of illegality of their contracts with PepsiCo, including the Metro Area Bottler Handicap proposal of complaint counsel. It does not seem to me to make sense to go through this whole weary procedure again if the Commission accedes to complaint counsel's proposal.

(3) As a general rule courts should permit administrative agencies to exercise their expertise in deciding procedural questions affecting the administrative proceeding. Here, however, where constitutional issues of due process are present it is worth noting that the number of bottlers is no obstacle to an effective hearing. Further, the amount of paper work that has gone into this proceeding already, due to the determination of the Commission to deny full party status to the bottlers, far exceeds any necessary amount of procedural rulings and supervision the presence of any number of bottlers might be supposed to require. I find nothing "unmanageable" about the situation with the bottlers in; and this is especially true in a situation in which the Commission is endeavoring to restructure an entire industry.

I

The Facts and the Procedural Posture of the Case

On July 15, 1971 the Federal Trade Commission issued separate complaints charging PepsiCo and other soft drink manufacturers with engaging in unfair methods of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. 15 U.S.C., Section 45. The complaint alleged that exclusive bottling agreements between PepsiCo and 513 bottlers violated the Act. The agreements grant the bottlers exclusive licenses to use PepsiCo's trademark in a specific territory on soft drinks prepared by the bottlers from the concentrate and syrups purchased from PepsiCo.

[192] On August 11, 1971 three of the 513 bottlers and the Pepsi-Cola Bottlers Association moved to intervene in the FTC proceeding. On August 23, 1971 PepsiCo filed its answer to the complaint and asserted as an affirmative defense the failure of the Commission to join the 513 bottlers as parties. On October 12, 1971, PepsiCo moved before the Hearing Examiner to dismiss the complaint for nonjoinder of indispensable parties. Then on November 18, 1971 the Hearing Examiner issued an order granting the Association and the three bottlers what I believe to be a limited right to intervene. On January 20, 1972 the Hearing Examiner denied PepsiCo's motion to dismiss for nonjoinder of the bottlers and this decision was sustained by the Commission.

On April 28, 1972 PepsiCo instituted this action in the Southern District of New York and applied for a preliminary injunction.

The FTC moved to dismiss. While these motions were pending, Pepsi-Cola Corvallis (a bottler) intervened in the District Court action in support of PepsiCo's position. On June 2, 1972 District Judge Cannella denied PepsiCo's application for a preliminary injunction and granted the Government's motion to dismiss the complaint (343 F.Supp. 396). Judge Cannella was of the view that the FTC order denying joinder of individual bottlers was not a final order and that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute. PepsiCo and Pepsi-Cola Corvallis both appealed from this decision and this Court heard the appeal on October 12, 1972.

After the notice of appeal to this Court had been filed, the complaint counsel in the FTC proceeding moved for partial summary decision on July 31, 1972. Included in this motion was a proposed remedy referred to as a "Metro Area Bottler Handicap" provision. The Commission has not at this time had the opportunity to rule on this motion generally or on the "Metro" clause specifically.

II

The District Court Had Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Questions of jurisdiction have always fascinated American judges and many of them, including the writer of this dissent, have failed at times to resist the temptation to seize upon any question of law affecting the jurisdiction of a court as presenting an opportunity for a learned treatise discussing at length every decision of every court having even a remote bearing on the particular point to be decided. In this way the volumes of Law Reports keep piling up with little benefit to anyone. I shall not now succumb to this temptation. On the contrary, I shall content myself with a statement of the reasons supporting my conclusion that the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction, and, without further discussion, cite a few cases which I think are in point.

Statutory authority sustaining the subject matter jurisdiction of the District Court is to be found in the provisions of Section 10(c) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C., Section 704, that "final agency action for which there is no adequate remedy in a court are (is) subject to judicial review." There are numerous instances in which such review has been sustained, despite the interlocutory character of the administrative agency ruling sought to be reviewed. McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 83 S.Ct. 671, 9 L.Ed.2d 547 (1963); Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958); Jewel Companies, Inc. v. FTC, 432 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970); American Communications Association v. United States, 298 F.2d 648 (2d Cir. 1962); Interstate Broadasting Co. v. United States, 109 U.S. App.D.C. 255, 286 F.2d 539 (1960). The only satisfactory test is that involving a pragmatic and flexible approach to insure that the ends of justice will be served. See, Parisi v. Davidson, 405 U.S. 34, 92 S.Ct. 815, 31 L.Ed.2d 17 (1972); McKart v. United [193] States, 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194 (1969). Naturally, where the ruling complained of involves factual findings or the exercise of administrative expertise, review by a court is not allowed.

My reasons for an affirmative application of the pragmatic and flexible approach are:

(1) Every effort to persuade the FTC to join these indispensable parties and thus afford them proper and reasonable notice and an effective hearing has failed. In this sense the ruling of the Commission is final.

(2) The Commission admits that extensive and valuable property and contract rights of the bottlers are involved.

(3) The rulings of the Commission relative to intervention are in my opinion inadequate and illusory. That the rights of those permitted to intervene are limited is apparent on the face of the order which appears at page A–230 of the Appendix. It will not do for the Hearing Examiner to make a statement that he had granted to the intervenors "the right of full participation." We can read, and the order does not provide for "full participation." Those pemitted to intervene do not have the right to make motions or argue orally as guaranteed to parties under FTC Rule § 3.41(c), 16 C.F.R. § 3.41 (1972). FTC rules only permit a party to appeal an initial decision of the Heading Examiner, FTC Rule § 3.52(a), 16 C.F.R. § 3.52(a) (1972) and, as noted by Judge Cannella, these intervenors have no right of judicial review. It is, I think, no answer to say that an Appellate Court will probably permit them, on motion, to intervene. In these days of congested calendars some Appellate Courts are not always so accommodating.

(4) PepsiCo's position on the indispensable parties point is a strong one. If the Commission adopts the "Metro Area Bottler Handicap" proposal of complaint counsel, PepsiCo's position on the indispensable parties point will become impregnable.[1] It is not

---

[1] The "Metro" provision goes much further than an order compelling PepsiCo to "cease and desist" from enforcement of certain features of the contracts with the bottlers. The "Metro" clause not only voids some of the contractual rights of the absent parties but imposes new obligations upon the parties to these contracts. Under the provision the larger bottlers now doing business in the 200 largest metro areas would be limited for ten years to selling in the metro area and forbidden to sell in reasonable to take the risk that the whole proceeding will ultimately turn out to be nugatory when this risk can be avoided by the simple expedient of making the bottlers parties. If this is done, all the cumbersome intervention procedures will be avoided.

(5) The lack of notice to the bottlers and the failure to provide them with an effective hearing raise constitutional questions. It is not the interest of justice that determination of these questions be postponed until the entire proceeding is concluded, especially as these questions are ripe for decision now. I see that my brothers of the majority readily dispose of this question of subject, as they disposed of the question of subject matter jurisdiction, by making an "assumption." In this instance they assume "that all the PepsiCo bottlers have received notice of this proceeding." They naturally cannot order the District Court to direct the FTC to modify its order and provide such notice, as they have voted to affirm Judge Cannella's order dismissing the case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. But the point cannot be swept under the rug in this cavalier fashion. The plain fact is that no formal notice of any kind has been given by the FTC to PepsiCo's 513 bottlers. It is hinted in the majority opinion that the complaint was not published in the Federal Register, see footnote [194] 5, and nothing in this record suggests that such publication was made. It is strange doctrine to me that constitutional requirements of notice [2] and a fair hearing are complied with if the persons entitled to notice are members of a trade association that has moved to intervene in the proceeding. One might just as well suggest that the proceedings have been reported in the newspapers which were probably or possibly read by the 513 PepsiCo bottlers. The affidavit of Robert J. Sisk filed in support of the motion to intervene by Pepsi-Cola Bottlers Association states that 512 of the 513 PepsiCo bottlers are members of the Association and it makes the gratuitous assertion that the Association "effectively represents the interests of all the Franchised Pepsi-Cola Bottlers in the United States." This means nothing. It is for the PepsiCo bottlers themselves to say who represents their interests, and, in some cases, these interests are adverse to one another. And how about PepsiCo bottler No. 513?

(6) At first I was inclined to suspect that the effort to have non-metro areas presently not serviced by large bottlers. The small bottlers in the non-metro areas could sell in the metro areas. Thus it is proposed that by agency action new contracts be created and imposed upon an entire industry, although the interested parties are not represented in the adjudicatory process.

---

[1] (Continued)

[2] See, as to basic notice doctrine required to meet the standards of due process, Mullane v. Central Hanover Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 94 L.Ed. 865 (1950).

the PepsiCo bottlers made parties and the bringing of this action were in the nature of dilatory maneuvers. But, in the light of the colloquy during the oral argument, and a study of the record as complete as the time would allow, I am now convinced that PepsiCo is doing everything it can to expedite the proper conduct of the FTC proceeding. This is no dilatory move, but a sincere attempt to make the FTC comply with the requirements of law in an orderly way, and to protect its own interests and those of the PepsiCo bottlers to whom it may well owe a moral duty of protection.

III

On the Merits the 513 PepsiCo Bottlers Should Be Brought in as Parties

I am still unable to understand why the FTC has taken such an adamant position against making the bottlers parties to this proceeding, unless it anticipates greater scope and control of the whole proceeding to restructure the soft drink industry if confusion reigns supreme. The equivocal manner in which the right of the bottlers to intervene has been granted; the complete failure to provide any form of notice to the separate bottlers or to afford them an effective hearing at which their substantial property and contractual rights may be determined in an orderly manner; and the insistence that, as the so-called right to intervene has been proffered, those who do not choose to come in will be bound by the final order in precisely the same manner and to the same extent as will be those who availed themselves of this so-called right to intervene —all these rulings obviously make for confusion. And, one may wonder, why? Unless there is something that does not meet the eye, it seems clear enough that giving reasonable notice and an effective opportunity to be heard to all interested parties would facilitate rather than hinder the prompt and efficient enforcement of the antitrust laws. Instead, we have all this weaving in and out of procedural niceties.

What puzzles me most is the insistence by my brothers of the majority and by the FTC that, in view of the rulings made by the Commission on the subject of intervention all those PepsiCo bottlers who do not choose to intervene will, nevertheless, be "bound" by the final decision of the FTC on the facts and on the law. Surely these absent PepsiCo bottlers will not be "bound" in the ordinary sense of the word, by the application of traditional rules of res judicata or collateral estoppel. This is probably another example of corner-cutting, as in the case of the assumption arguendo that the District Court had Subject matter jurisdiction, and the assumption that all the PepsiCo [195] bottlers had notice of the proceeding.[3] I say the record makes it plain that no formal notice whatever was given to the PepsiCo bottlers and that this important constitutional requirement of due process cannot be satisfied by mere divination or guesswork. Furthermore, I say the absent bottlers who may choose not to intervene will not be "bound." Chase National Bank v. City of Norwalk, 291 U.S. 431, 54 S.Ct. 475, 78 L.Ed. 894 (1934); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Foster, 247 U.S. 105, 38 S.Ct. 438, 62 L.Ed. 1006 (1918); New Orleans v. Warner, 175 U.S. 120, 20 S.Ct. 44, 44 L.Ed. 96 (1899); Burke v. Morphy, 109 F.2d 572 (2d Cir. 1940), cert. denied, 310 U.S. 635, 60 S.Ct. 1078, 84 L.Ed. 1404 (1940); McGhee v. United States, 437 F.2d 995, 194 Ct.Cl. 86 (1971).

Perhaps all that is meant by "bound" is the same argument advanced concerning the decision in National Licorice Co. v. NLRB, 309 U.S. 350, 60 S.Ct. 569, 84 L.Ed. 799 (1940), although this can scarcely be so because both in the majority opinion and in the FTC argument it is said that the absent parties will be bound because, whether they knew it or not, they had been proffered the right to intervene. No intervention whatever was involved in National Licorice.

So, I address myself now to the claim that does depend upon National Licorice, which claim, as I undersand it, is: that in the event the FTC decides that some part of PepsiCo's contract with its franchisees, the bottlers, is unlawful as a violation of the antitrust laws, no such bottlers could thereafter sue PepsiCo for violation of the terms of the contract, because the FTC was acting to enforce public as distinct from private rights. The difficulty with this argument is that it goes too far. There are numerous rights created by these contracts for the benefit of both PepsiCo and the bottlers. The fact that, after a federal Court of Appeals has enforced an FTC cease and desist order, other courts will not rule to the contrary, does not dispose of the issue under discussion. After final disposition of the case by the FTC, I think it will be open to individual bottlers, who are not made parties, to sue PepsiCo for the vindication of other rights inherent in the franchises and that, depending on the terms of the final order, the bottlers who had been joined as parties could not sue without being met by a defense of res judicata or collateral estoppel and a motion for summary judgment. It will, of course, be recalled that the Court in National Licorice specifically made the language of the opinion on which my brothers and the FTC rely inapplicable to rights of the individual employees not necessarily involved in the violation of the National Labor Relations Act.

---

[3] Even if it be assumed that the PepsiCo bottlers or most of them knew that a proceeding against PepsiCo was pending in the FTC, this would not suffice. For example, the Supreme Court has declared as violative of due process a New Jersey non-resident motorist statute lacking a "provision for communication to the proposed defendant, such as to create reasonable probability that he would be made aware of the bringing of the suit." (Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U.S. 13, 25, 48 S.Ct. 259, 262, 72 L.Ed. 446 (1928)). There the defendant actually received notice of the suit but the lack of a formal mechanism to insure the reasonable probability that he would receive notice of the pending suit, rendered the statutory scheme constitutionally defective. Thus, if this Court decides that the Commission must provide a method of notice best calculated to reach the bottlers in order to conform to due process, then the mere fact that most of the bottlers received some form of informal notice would not transform an unconstitutional procedure into a constitutionally permissible one.

There remains the contention that 513 bottlers are too many, especially as hundreds of others are involved in the proceedings against Crush International Limited, Dr. Pepper Co., Coca Cola Co., Seven Up Co., and National Industries Co. It is said that joining so many bottlers will make the proceeding "unmanageable." Back in the days of the Medes and the Persians this argument might have seemed plausible. But in a modern setting it has no merit whatever, [196] as appears to be recognized by my brothers of the majority. The advances made by judicial administration in recent years made it perfectly plain that the modest numbers here involved can readily be handled with justice to all. It seems unlikely that more than a few of the PepsiCo bottlers will take the trouble to hire lawyers and come in to defend their rights. Those who do come in, even in considerable numbers, can be formed into consolidated groups or otherwise directed in such fashion as to avoid repetition or confusion. In fact, as I have already said, making the PepsiCo bottlers parties to this proceeding will facilitate in every way the prompt and just disposition of the issues.

Accordingly, I would remand the case to the District Court with instructions to enjoin the FTC from further proceeding in its effort to restructure the soft drink industry until it had made the PepsiCo bottlers parties.

GOLDEN GRAIN MACARONI COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 71-1570. F.T.C. Docket 8737

(United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, December 20, 1972)

---

*Reported in 474 F. 2d 882 (1972), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 918 (1973). For case before the Commission, see 78 F.T.C. 63.

1. IF DEFENDANT UNDERSTOOD ISSUE AND WAS GIVEN OPPORTUNITY TO JUSTIFY CONDUCT, THERE WAS NO VIOLATION OF DUE PROCESS

   [883] Purpose of requirement of Administrative Procedure Act that persons entitled to notice of administrative hearing be informed of matters of fact and law asserted is satisfied and there is no due process violation if party proceeded against understood the issue and was afforded full opportunity to justify its conduct, but if issue was not litigated and party proceeded against was not given opportunity to defend himself, adverse finding on that issue by agency violated due process.

2. NO VIOLATION OF DUE PROCESS WHERE SPECIFIC PRACTICES AS WELL AS ALLEGED OVERALL SCHEME OF MONOPOLIZATION WERE LITIGATED

   Inasmuch as initial complaint charging monopolization and attempted monopolization under Sherman Act put defendant on notice that specific practices as well as alleged over-all scheme of monopolization were being challenged and issues concerning violation of Sherman Act and violation of Clayton Act proscription against acquisition where effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly were identical and were litigated, order compelling divestiture on finding of violation of Clayton Act did not violate due process on theory that original complaint gave no notice of reliance upon Clayton Act.

3. WHATEVER THE SEMANTIC DIFFERENCE BETWEEN MONOPOLIZATION AND TENDENCY TO CREATE A MONOPOLY, THE BASIC POLICIES OF THE SHERMAN ACT AND THE CLAYTON ACT ARE THE SAME

   Under both standards of section of Sherman Act proscribing monopolization and section of Clayton Act proscribing acquisitions where effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, the degree of market foreclosure is determined as of time of suit and principal factual questions concern relevant product and geographic market affected by merger or acquisition and degree of resulting foreclosure of that market; the basic policies of the two prohibitions are the same, whatever the semantic difference between monopolization and tendency to create a monopoly.

4. ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER MUST BE DENIED IN ABSENCE OF ELEMENT OF COMMERCE BEING LITIGATED WITH RESPECT TO THE SMALLEST COMPETITOR ACQUIRED

   Fact that defendant was not given opportunity to argue that two companies it acquired were not "in commerce," within Clayton Act proscription against acquisition of stock of corporation in commerce where effect may be substantially to lessen competition or may tend to create a monopoly, was immaterial for purposes of determining whether order based on violation of that section was proper, where evidence that the two companies were engaged in interstate commerce was overwhelming, but, in absence of element of commerce being litigated with respect to a third, the smallest competitor acquired, enforcement of order must be denied.

5. IN ABSENCE OF SHOWING THAT DEFENDANT WAS ONLY SUITABLE PURCHASER, DEFENDANT FAILED TO MAKE A LEGALLY SUFFICIENT RECORD ESTABLISHING THE FAILING-COMPANY DEFENSE

   Defendant corporation charged with violating prohibition of Clayton Act against acquisition where effect may be substantially to lessen competition or may tend to create a monopoly failed to make a legally sufficient record to establish the failing-company defense with [884] respect to acquisition of one competitor, in absence of showing that defendant was the only available purchaser.

6. MERE PROOF THAT MOST LOGICAL OF PURCHASERS OF ACQUIRED COMPANY DECLINED TO BUY IT IS NOT A DEFENSE THAT ACQUIRED COMPANY WAS A FAILING COMPANY

Where acquiring corporation is charged with violating Clayton Act prohibition against acquisition where effect may be substantially to lessen competition or may tend to create a monopoly and relies on defense that the company acquired was a failing company, mere proof that some or all of most logical purchasers of that company have declined to buy it is not enough to prove that the challenged purchaser was the only prospective purchaser, a requirement for the defense.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 472 F.2d 882.)

On petition to review and set aside, court held that order compelling divestiture on finding violation of Clayton Act did not violate due process on theory that original complaint gave no notice upon reliance upon that Act. Order enforced except for part of order requiring divestiture of Oregon company.

J.Paul Coie (argued), Douglas Beighle (argued), of Perkins, Coie, Stone, Olsen & Williams, Seattle, Wash., J. Wallace Adair, of Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D.C., for petitioner.

Gerald Harwood, Atty. (argued), Frederick H. Mayer, Montgomery Hyun, Attys., Harold J. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Comm., Washington, D.C., William L. Dwyer, Seattle, Wash., for respondent.

Before MOORE,* BROWNING and GOODWIN, Circuit Judges.

ALFRED T. GOODWIN, Circuit Judge:

Golden Grain Macaroni Company petitions for review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission directing Golden Grain to divest itself of all its interests in three other macaroni producers and requiring Golden Grain to refrain from futher acquisitions in the macaroni industry for a period of ten years.

Golden Grain is the largest seller of dry-paste food products in the Pacific Northwest. In 1957, Golden Grain entered the regional market in the Seattle area by the acquisition of Mission

---

* The Honorable Leonard P. Moore, Senior United States Circuit Judge, United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Macaroni. This acquisition is not challenged in this litigation, but it has historical significance.

Included in the assets acquired in 1957 from Mission Macaroni was 49 per cent of the stock of Porter-Scarpelli Macaroni Company, of Portland, Oregon. Control of Porter-Scarpelli has remained at all relevant times in the Scarpelli family.

In 1963, Golden Grain acquired control of Major Italian Foods, a Seattle macaroni manufacturer that by 1968 accounted for about 14 per cent of the sales in the Pacific Northwest market. Later, Golden Grain acquired all the stock of Oregon Macaroni Manufacturing Company. Oregon Macaroni operated a small plant accounting for about one per cent of the sales in the region. The extent of Oregon Macaroni's inter-state business was not established, but appeared to be minimal.

Divestiture proceedings were instituted by a complaint charging monopolization, and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. After lengthy litigation, the Commission decided that, whether or not Golden Grain had monopolized or attempted to monopolize the macaroni market in the relevant region, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Golden Grain's acquisition of substantial interests in three macaroni manufacturing companies violated the prohibition of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, against acquisitions where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or may tend to create a monopoly. The Commission's final order compels divestiture of all of Golden [885] Grain's interest in Major Italian Foods, Porter-Scarpelli, and Oregon Macaroni.

Golden Grain attacks this order on both due-process and substantive grounds. Golden Grain asserts that the original complaint "sounded" in Sherman Act monopoly and attempted monopoly, and gave no notice of reliance upon Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The substantive theory is that the acquisition of Major Italian Foods is exempted from antitrust liability because Major Italian was a "failing company."

The final paragraph of the FTC complaint charged as follows:

> The acts and practices of the respondents as herein alleged have had and do have the effect of hindering, lessening, restricting, restraining, destroying, and eliminating competition in the manufacture, distribution and sale of macaroni and related paste products; have had and do have a tendency to unduly hinder competition or to create and maintain in respondents a monopoly; have constituted an attempt to monopolize; have foreclosed markets and access to markets to competitors or potential competitors * * * and constitute unfair methods of competition * * * within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Elsewhere in the original complaint, both an over-all scheme of monopolization and various specific acts, including the acquisitions here in issue, were alleged and asserted to be unlawful. While the specific acts were said to be part of the over-all attempt to monopolize, the acts were also said to contravene Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45. No mention of Section 7 of the Clayton Act appears in the complaint.

During the course of the hearings, both Golden Grain and complaint counsel for the FTC appeared to assume that the sole issue was monopolization. Thus, in the Proposed Findings before the hearing examiner, complaint counsel included several findings relative to monopolization, but none on the question whether Golden Grain's acts were illegal in and of themselves. Similarly, Golden Grain's Proposed Findings tended to exonerate the specific acts alleged within the context of an over-all monopolization charge.

The hearing examiner found that Golden Grain had not monopolized or attempted to monopolize the dry-paste market in the Pacific Northwest. He did, however, find that Golden Grain's acquisition of control of Major Italian Foods had violated the prohibition of Section 7 of the Clayton Act against acquisition the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly," and therefore had violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The examiner did not make a similar finding with reference to the stock of Oregon Macaroni because Oregon Macaroni was so small that its acquisition made "little change" in the competitive structure of the market. Golden Grain's acquisition of 49% of the stock of Porter-Scarpelli was excused by the hearing examiner as within the "solely for investment" exception to Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

The Commission affirmed its examiner's order as to Major Italian Foods, but as to Porter-Scarpelli and Oregon Macaroni went further and declared both of these acquisitions also to be unlawful. The Commission based its decision on its conclusion that Section 7 of the Clayton Act proscribed all the challenged acquisitions, and it rejected the hearing examiner's reasons for excluding the two acquisitions from the scope of the order.

[1] Under the Administrative Procedure Act § 5(b), 5 U.S.C. § 554(b), persons entitled to notice of an administrative hearing must be informed of "the matters of fact and law asserted." However, the purpose of the Act is satisfied, and there is no due-process violation, if the party proceeded against "understood the issue" and "was afforded full opportunity" to justify its conduct. NLRB v. Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., [886] 304 U.S. 333, 350, 58 S.Ct. 904, 82 L.Ed. 1381 (1938) ; L. G. Balfour Co. v. FTC, 442 F.2d 1, 19, 21 (7th Cir. 1971) ; REA Trucking Co. v. NLRB, 439 F.2d 1065 (9th Cir. 1971) ; Tashof v. FTC, 141 U.S.App.D.C. 274, 437 F.2d 707 (1970) ; Swift & Co. v. United States, 393 F.2d 247, 5 A.L.R. Fed. 709 (7th Cir. 1968) ; J. B. Williams Co. v. FTC, 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967). On the other hand, if an issue was not litigated, and the party proceeded against was not given an opportunity to defend himself, an adverse finding on that issue by the agency does not violate due process. L. G. Balfour Co. v. FTC, 442, F.2d at 17; Rodale Press, Inc. v. FTC, 132 U.S.App.D.C. 317, 407 F.2d 1252 (1968) ; NLRB v. Majestic Weaving Co., 355 F.2d 854 (2d Cir. 1966) ; Northeastern Indiana Building and Construction Trades Council v. NLRB, 122 U.S.App.D.C. 220, 352 F.2d 696 (1965) ; NLRB v. Johnson, 332 F.2d 216 (6th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 951, 84 S.Ct. 968, 11 L.Ed.2d 971 (1964).

[2] In the present case the initial complaint, while hardly a model of clarity, put Golden Grain on notice that the specific practices as well as the alleged over-all scheme of monopolization were being challenged. Moreover, an examination of the proceedings subsequent to the complaint demonstrates that while there was some confusion as to the nature of the charge, all facts relevant to the alleged unlawful acts were fully litigated. Actual litigation is often referred to in support of a holding that a party was not prejudiced by initially inadequate pleadings. NLRB v. Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., supra; Bruhn's Freezer Meats v. United States Dept. of Agr., 438 F.2d 1332, 1342 (8th Cir. 1971) ; REA Trucking Co. v. NLRB, supra; Tashof v. FTC, supra.

[3] Before the examiner, complaint counsel attempted to prove that Golden Grain had monopolized or attempted to monopolize the macaroni business through a series of illegal acts, and Golden Grain attempted to rebut those charges by proving that each act was not illegal and did not have the effect of creating a monopoly. On Appeal before the Commission, the issue was whether Golden Grain's acquisitions substantially lessened competition or tended to create a monopoly. In this context, there is an obvious difference between the Sherman Act and Clayton Act standards. If Golden Grain had been deprived of all opportunity even to argue that it had not violated the more exacting standards of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, we would not hesitate to reverse. See Bendix Corp. v. FTC, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971).

But the facts at issue under the two standards can be essentially identical, and were identical in this case. Under both standards, the degree of market foreclosure is determined as of the time of suit. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (General Motors), 353 U.S. 586, 77 S.Ct. 872, 1 L.Ed.2d 1057 (1957). Under both standards the pricipal factual questions concern the relevant product and geographic market affected by the merger or acquisition and the degree of resulting foreclosure of that market. In the present case this identity of factual issues is compelling, because this proceeding was not brought under either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act as such, but under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Section 5 condemns "[u]nfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce * * *." A violation of Section 5 may be found where the "basic policies" of the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act are violated; an actual violation of the underlying statutes need not be found. FTC v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 321, 86 S.Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 587 (1966). Whatever the semantic difference between monopolization and tendency to create a monopoly, it is clear that the "basic policies" of these two prohibitions are the same.

Nor was Golden Grain deprived of an opportunity to present defenses to meet the full array of charges. Golden Grain raised and fully argued the "failing company" defense for its acquisition [887] of Major Italian Foods, a defense usually thought peculiar to Clayton Act § 7 violations. Although Golden Grain did not expressly argue that its 49% stock interest in Porter-Scarpelli fell within the "investment" exception to Clayton Act § 7, the precise facts that Golden Grain put forth as negating any monopolistic intent in its acquisition and retention of Porter-Scarpelli stock were relied on by the hearing examiner in his findings that the Porter-Scarpelli stock was held as an investment. Golden Grain has argued that its trial strategy was controlled by the pleadings, but we can find no substantive prejudice. The hearings went on for many months, and if an evidentiary stone was left unturned on the central issues it has not been brought to our attention.

[4] It is true that Golden Grain was never given a sufficient opportunity to argue that the companies it acquired were not "in commerce" within the meaning of Clayton Act § 7. As to two of the acquisitions, Major Italian Foods and Porter-Scarpelli, we hold this defect in the proceedings immaterial, for the evidence that these companies were engaged in interstate commerce was overwhelming. We cannot say the same, however, for Oregon

Macaroni, the smallest of the competitors acquired. As to Oregon Macaroni, we must deny enforcement of the Commission's order, because the element of commerce was never litigated.

Golden Grain next argues that the FTC had no jurisdiction to bring a Clayton Act § 7 action under Federal Trade Commission Act § 5, and that the FTC lost jurisdiction over the case when it dismissed the Sherman Act monopolization charges. This argument adds nothing to the due-process argument discussed above.

[5, 6] Golden Grain's final contention is that Major Italian Foods was a "failing company" within the meaning of International Shoe Co. v. FTC, 280 U.S. 291, 50 S.Ct. 89, 74 L.Ed. 431 (1930). This may be true, but despite its wide-ranging evidence on the point Golden Grain failed to make a legally sufficient record to establish the failing-company defense. In Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 138, 89 S.Ct. 927, 22 L.Ed.2d 148 (1969), the Supreme Court held that the burden was on the party claiming the failing-company defense to prove that he was the "only available purchaser." This heavy burden has not been met. Golden Grain did prove that other companies looked at, but decided not to buy, Major Italian Foods, but Golden Grain did not prove that the owners of Major Italian had made any affirmative attempt to seek out other purchasers. Merely proving that some or all of the most logical purchasers have declined to buy is not enough to prove that the challenged purchaser was the only prospective purchaser. United States v. Greater Buffalo Press, Inc., 402 U.S. 549, 91 S.Ct. 1692, 29 L.Ed.2d 170 (1971).

The Federal Trade Commission order is enforced except for that part of the order requiring divestiture of Oregon Macaroni, which is denied enforcement.

UNITED STATES v. BEATRICE FOODS COMPANY*

No. 4–70 Civ. 459—F.T.C. Docket 6653

(United States District Court, District of Minnesota, Fourth Division, December 26, 1972)

1. ILLEGAL ACQUISITION OF INTEREST IN DAIRY AND FAILURE OF TIMELY DIVESTITURE OF A THIRD DAIRY IN COMPLIANCE WITH F.T.C. ORDER WARRANTED $200 PER DAY PENALTIES ON EACH VIOLATION.

Two hundred dollars per day penalty was warranted for illegal ac-

---

Reported in 351 F. Supp. 969 (1972), 8th Cir., 493 F. 2d 1259 (1974), see p. 867 herein, cert. denied, 420 U.S. 961 (1975). For case before the Commission, see 68 F.T.C. 1003, modified 71 F.T.C. 797. See also p. 320 herein.

quisition by dairy products distributor and processor of interest in another dairy, and $200 per day penalty was warranted for failure timely to divest stock of third dairy in compliance with F.T.C. order, with penalty in first case to be imposed from date of acquisition to date of filing of complaint, and penalty in second case to be imposed for period during which defendant was in violation of order.

2. WHERE DIVESTITURE DID NOT SEEM TO WREAK IRREPARABLE HAVOC ON DEFENDANT, DISTRICT COURT WAS EMPOWERED TO ENTER DIVESTITURE ORDER TO UNDO VIOLATION OF F.T.C. ORDER

District Court was empowered to enter divestiture order to undo violation of F.T.C. order committed by dairy products processor and distributor in illegally acquiring interest in second dairy, where divestiture did not seem to wreak irreparable havoc on defendant and its subsidiaries and equitable consideration called for such relief.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 351 F.Supp. 969)

In penalty suit, Court held that $200 per day penalty was warranted for illegal acquisition of interest in another dairy company by a dairy products distributor and processor, with penalties to be imposed from the date of acquisition to date of filing of complaint. A second $200 per day penalty was found warranted for failure timely to divest stock of third dairy in compliance with FTC order, with penalty being imposed for the period in which defendant was in violation of the order. Order affirmed.

Robert G. Renner, U.S. Atty., by Neal J. Shapiro, Asst. U.S. Atty., together with Joseph J. Gercke, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson, by Ronald Butler, Chicago, Ill., for defendant.

ORDER FOR CIVIL PENALTIES AND DIVESTITURE

NEVILLE, District Judge.

This case has been before the court twice before. See United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 52 F.R.D. 14 (D.Minn. 1971). A detailed statement of the facts can be found in a later order of this court reported in United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 334 F.Supp. 104 (D.Minn.1972). There defendant was found guilty of violating a cease and desist and divestiture order of the Federal Trade Commission. Thereafter the court held a hearing on the question of penalties to be imposed.

Robert G. Renner, United States Attorney, by Neal J. Shapiro, Esq., Assistant United States Attorney, together with Joseph J. Gercke, Esq., Federal Trade Commission, appeared for the plaintiff; Winston, Strawn, Smith & [970] Patterson, Chicago, Illinois, by Ronald Butler, Esq., appeared for the defendant.

Defendant has requested an evidentiary hearing on the issue of penalties to be imposed to the end that it might have an opportunity to present evidence of its alleged good faith in taking the actions it did and which this court held to be violative of the Trade Commission order. This court has read the exhaustive briefs filed by both parties, is familiar with and has read portions of various depositions and does not believe that an evidentiary hearing is necessary or required or would be of any help to the court. In its order of June 15, 1972 the court ruled that under the circumstances of this case any claimed misunderstanding or misinterpretation of the meaning of language contained in the Trade Commission Order (which in its final form is the exact counterpart of an order of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit) could not be shown or asserted as a defense to its violation. The court did rule however it could consider evidence of defendant's claimed good faith on the issue of penalties to be imposed to weigh such against the government's contention of a willful and deliberate violation of the Order. The court has given consideration thereto.

The statutes involved, 15 U.S.C. § 21(l) and § 45(l) are much the same and read as follows:

> 15 U.S.C. § 45 (l)
>
> Any person who violates any order issued by the commission or board under subsection (b) of this section after such order has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Each separate violation of any such order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the commission or board each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense.
>
> 15 U.S.C. § 45 (l)
>
> Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission to cease and desist after it has become final, and while such order is in effect, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Each separate violation of such an order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense.

As to the Count I violation, illegal acquisition of an interest in Maple Island Dairy, the government pays $5,000 a day penalty from September 1, 1968 through the date of filing the complaint herein, October 23, 1970, a total of $3,910,000. As to Count II, failure timely to divest Valley Gold Dairy Co. stock, the government requests similar daily penalties from September 12, 1969 through January 3, 1970, a total of $565,000. The complaint alleges and there has been no denial thereof that defendant is "one of the largest manufacturers, processors and distributors of dairy products in the United States" and that its consolidated revenues for the fiscal year ending February 28, 1969 were in excess of One Billion, Three Million dollars. It is further alleged, though not completely substantiated, that by the acquisition of Maple Island Dairy it acquired an annual sales volume in excess of $1,000,000. The government argues that to impose but a nominal penalty would merely constitute a license fee for defendant's transgressions, contrary to Congressional intent that the penalties be sufficient to serve as a deterrent to further and other violations of the orders of the Federal Trade Commission. As to the failure to divest [971] charge, the court is willing to assume the applicability of the shorter period from November 15, 1969 to January 3, 1970, a total of some 49 days as the period during which defendant was in vioaltion of the Trade Commission Order. The court has some sympathy as a business proposition with defendant's difficulty in finding a ready market for a minority stock interest in a closed corporation, particularly where the principal stockholder of the corporation became deceased. The court also recognizes defendant did divest itself of its other properties as required and eventually of the Valley Gold stock, though some 49 days too late and beyond the last extension of time.

[1] The government's requests seem to the court to be excessive. The court is of the belief, particularly in view of the divestiture herein required, that a penalty of $156,400 or $200 per day for the violation as alleged in Count I of the complaint and $9,800, at the same daily rate, for the violation asserted in Count II of the complaint is appropriate, non-confiscatory and yet sufficient to command defendant's respect and attention and something substantially more than a mere license fee. The court cannot find defendant exculpated by its claimed good faith and believes the above penalties are warranted in the premises.

[2] The government further requests that this court enter a divestiture order to undo the results of the violation defendant committed by acquiring illegally an interest in Maple Island Dairy. The complaint herein was filed over two years ago and defendant meantime has continued to enjoy the acquired sales volume and such other benefits of the illegal acquisition as there might be.

The court believes it has the power and authority to enter such an order under its general equity powers. There are a number of cases, though not directly involving the same facts as in the case at bar, which augur for such a holding. See Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 66 S.Ct. 1086, 90 L.Ed. 1332 (1946); Mitchell v. Robert De Mario Jewelry, Inc., 361 U.S. 288, 80 S.Ct. 332, 4 L.Ed.2d 323 (1960); Shafer v. United States, 229 F.2d 124, 128 (4th Cir. 1956); United States v. Schine, 260 F.2d 552 (2d Cir. 1959); United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F.Supp. 383, 389 (S.D.N.Y.1966); contra Herbold Laboratory, Inc. v. United States, 413 F.2d 342 (9th Cir. 1969) (dicta). The statute above quoted and here applicable, though making no mention thereof, does not attempt to limit the exercise of the court's general equitable powers and if the court fails to grant equitable relief the illegal violation will continue unabated and the Federal Trade Commission's injunctive cease and desist order will be thwarted and become unenforceable, since the Federal Trade Commission in an instance such as here has no enforcement powers per se except through the courts. Congress could not have so intended.

An affidavit submitted by defendant states that after September 1, 1968 Maple Island Dairy terminated supplying dairy products to 26 locations in its so-called northern division. Defendant's subsidiary commenced supplying 19, but the other 7 outlets were closed. Of the original 19, 7 have switched to a competitor. Eight of the remaining 12 are independent distributors. Sales volume from the entire acquisition, which of course is not equivalent in any sense to profit, has dropped to under one-half million per year on the average. Under these circumstances, a divestiture would not seem to wreak irreparable havoc on defendant and its subsidiaries, and equitable considerations call for such relief.

On the basis of the above and on all of the files, records and proceedings herein,

It is ordered that the clerk of court shall enter judgment for civil penalties in favor of plaintiff and against defendant in the amount of $166,200, to be satisfied and paid within 60 days from date of this order by payment through the office of the clerk of this court to the Treasury of the United States.

[972] It is further ordered that within a period ending not later than September 1, 1973, defendant, its agents and subsidiaries shall divest themselves absolutely and outright in good faith of all rights, titles, interests, assets and facilities including the use thereof, directly or indirectly acquired by defendant or its agents and subsidiaries in the former so-called northern division or area of Maple Island Dairy as the result of, and arising out of, its arrangements, contracts, or agreements or those of defendant's agents and subsidiaries, with Maple Island Dairy or others. The divestiture shall be made with and subject to the approval of this court. A comprehensive plan therefor and containing a description of the means for the doing of such shall be submitted to the court with copy to the Federal Trade Commission within 60 days from date of this order. Any plan for divestiture shall be designated to protect the interests of financially affected third parties, consumers and the public. The court retains jurisdiction on noticed motion to modify this divestiture order in any such way as may be required or warranted in the premises.

Let judgment be entered accordingly.

STAR OFFICE SUPPLY CO., ET AL. v. F.T.C.*

No. 35,066. F.T.C. Docket 8749

(United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, September 28, 1971)

On petition for review of F.T.C. cease-and-desist order, Court affirmed Commission's order barring an office supply firm from selling its merchandise through use of misrepresentations.

Jacob P. Lefkowitz, New York, N.Y., and Abraham Glasser, Nantucket Island, Mass., for petitioners.

Richard G. Kleindienst, Atty. Gen., Dept. of Justice, Wash., D.C., and F.T.C., Wash., D.C., for respondent.

JUDGMENT

Star Office Supply Company and Henry Pinkwater having filed their petition to review an order issued by the Federal Trade Commission on April 16, 1970, in Docket No. 8749; and the matter having been heard by this Court on briefs and oral argument on September 14, 1971; and the Court having announced its decision that the Commission's order should be affirmed and enforced, it is now therefore Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed that the order be, and it hereby is, affirmed and enforced.

PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' SERVICE BUREAU, INC., ET AL. v. F.T.C., ET AL.†

Civ. A. No. 2532–71. F.T.C. Docket 8832

(United States District Court for the District of Columbia, February 16, 1972‡)

On cross-motion for summary judgment, court held that plaintiffs failed to establish a case for the issuance of a preliminary injunction.

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 73,867, at 91,631 (1972 Trade Cases). Cert. denied, 406 U.S. 918 (1972). For case before the Commission, see 77 F.T.C. 383.

This case was inadvertently omitted from 1971 Supplement of Statutes and Court Decisions.

†Not otherwise reported. On Dec. 19, 1972, Court of Appeals, District of Columbia issued a judgment in favor of the Commission.

‡This case was inadvertently omitted from 1972 Supplement of Statutes and Court Decisions.

Accordingly, plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction was denied and defendants' motion for summary judgment was granted.

Before GASCH, District Judge.

MEMORANDUM-ORDER

This matter came on for consideration on cross motions for summary judgment. Earlier, after hearing in open Court, the Court granted plaintiffs' application for a temporary restraining order to preserve the status quo until consideration could be given to the government's motion for summary judgment and opportunity afforded plaintiffs to file a similar motion. International Magazine Service of the Mid-Atlantic, Inc., has been permitted to intervene.

Plaintiffs seek to enjoin the Federal Trade Commission from proceeding against them in complaint 8832 contending that the complaint was brought in violation of recognized procedures under the Commission's own Rule 1.3(b). In substance, Rule 1.3(b) requires the Federal Trade Commission to give notice when it rescinds an advisory opinion and prevents the Commission from proceeding against a party relying upon the advisory opinion without first affording such party the right voluntarily to comply. Plaintiffs contend that by its Advisory Opinion of May 22, 1967, the Commission approved the "Selling Code for Paid-During-Service Periodical Subscription Agencies" (hereafter referred to as the Code) and therefore could not proceed against them without first complying with Rule 1.3(b). While it is conceded by the defendants that this procedure was not followed, they contend that it is inapposite because the Advisory Opinion addressed itself only to the antitrust aspects of the Code and never approved the practices outlined in the complaint. The government also maintains that the charges contained in the complaint are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Code.

The Court notes at the outset that of the fourteen allegations in the complaint, eight involve practices specifically prohibited by the Code and two which are not covered by the Code. Plaintiffs, therefore, cannot rely on the alleged approval of the Code by the Commission to preclude the agency from proceeding against them on these grounds. Accordingly, the remainder of this opinion will deal with the four allegations concerning practices approved by the Code.[1]

---

[1] These allegations, contained in paragraphs 4(a), 5(a), 6(a), 6(e), and 7, were the only allegations challenged by plaintiffs before the Commission. See, plaintiffs' Interlocutory Appeal From Order Denying Motion To Dismiss Complaint, p. 4, August 2, 1971. Charges contained in paragraphs 4(a) and 5(a) involve the same type of activity.

The statutory scheme for proceedings conducted pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 45 is that appeals from adverse orders of the Commission be taken directly to the United States Court of Appeals. Only in rare instances does this Court have jurisdiction to review Commission decisions. See, Elmo Division of Drive-X Co. v. Dixon, 348 F.2d 342 (D.C. Cir. 1965). Plaintiffs contend that such an exception is presented by the case at bar since the administrative complaint was issued in violation of the Commission's own rules. Elmo Division of Drive-X, supra, at 346.

The complete record before this Court reveals about as much evidence to indicate FTC approval of the Code's substantive provisions as it does to demonstrate that the Commission was merely passing on the antitrust aspects of the Code. In an analogous situation the Court of Appeals for this Circuit has stated: [2]

> The question for us, therefore, as it was for the District Court, is not whether plausible grounds can be advanced for each of the contending constructions, but whether the one espoused by the Secretary is beyond the bounds of reasonableness. If it is not, his view prevails, even though appellee's arguments are not without substance.

Plaintiffs do not dispute the aptness of this doctrine but respond by saying "[o]f course, the answer to this contention is that there is no reasonable basis for the Commission's present contentions." [3] This Court cannot agree. The Commission's interpretation of its own order while not conclusive, clearly has a rational basis. Certainly the FTC cannot abdicate its responsibility and authority to perform the duties entrusted to it by law. While voluntary cooperation is desirable, nevertheless, if the Commission finds a basis for concluding that the law has been violated by persons subject to its jurisdiction, it has the duty to proceed with its enforcement complaint. In short, plaintiffs have failed to establish a case for the issuance of a preliminary injunction.

Accordingly, the temporary restraining order heretofore granted by the Court will not be renewed and plaintiffs' application for preliminary injunction is denied. Defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted.

Order accordingly.

---

[2] Udall v. Oelschlaeger, 389 F. 2d 974, 976 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 392 U.S. 909 (1968).

[3] Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or in the alternative for Summary Judgment and in Support of Plaintiffs' Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment, p. 9.

COCA-COLA CO., COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO. (THOMAS), INC., COCA-COLA BOTTLING WORKS (THOMAS), INC., COCA-COLA BOTTLING WORKS 3RD, INC., ELBERTON COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO., RODDY MANUFACTURING CO., WESTMINSTER COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO., INC., COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO. OF KEENE, INC., ANN ARBOR COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO., SCIOTO COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO., AND TEXAS COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO. v. FTC.*

Civ. A. No. 16,484. F.T.C. Docket 8855.

(United States District Court, Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division, May 16, 1972)

In an action for injunctive and declaratory relief, Court held it had no jurisdiction to review an administrative decision of the Commission in denying plaintiffs' motion to dismiss the complaint for failure of the F.T.C. to join indispensable parties. There was no international implication or urgency, no substantial showing that the respondents' constitutional rights had been violated, no violation of an express statutory prohibition, or any delay on the part of the F.T.C.

Miller, Martin, Hitching, Tipton, Lenihan & Waterhouse, Chattanooga, Tenn., White & Case, New York, N.Y., King & Spalding, Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein, and Sutherland, Asbill & Brennen, Atlanta, Ga., for plaintiffs.

John W. Stokes, U.S. Atty., and Julian M. Longley, Jr., Asst. U.S. Atty., Atlanta, Ga., and Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, F.T.C., Wash., D.C., for defendant.

Before Freeman, District Judge.

ORDER

Freeman, D.J.: In this action for injunctive and declaratory relief, plaintiffs attack an interlocutory order of the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as FTC) entered in an adjudicative proceeding pending before the FTC. Plaintiffs are a soft drink manufacturer, The Coca-Cola Company, and ten bottling companies who package and distribute its products. Defendant is a regulatory agency of the United States—FTC. Plaintiffs assert that this court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question), 28 U.S.C. § 1337

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 73,998, at 92,156 (1972 Trade Cases). For F.T.C. interlocutory ruling, see 80 F.T.C. 1023.

This case was inadvertently omitted from 1972 Supplement of Statutes and Court Decisions.

(antitrust), 28 U.S.C. § 1361 (mandamus) and 28 U.S.C. § 1651 (All Writs Act).

Plaintiffs have moved for a preliminary injunction. Defendant has moved to dismiss the action. On May 3, 1972, this court heard argument on the above motions.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Plaintiff, Coca-Cola, is a Delaware corporation with its principal office and place of business in Atlanta, Georgia. Coca-Cola is engaged primarily in the business of manufacturing syrups and concentrates used by over nine hundred (900) contract bottlers in the preparation of soft drink products under its trademarks, including the trademark Coca-Cola. The bottlers, licensed by Coca-Cola to sell in certain geographical areas, mix the concentrate purchased from Coca-Cola, package it in bottles and resell the product. In addition to manufacturing and selling soft drink products, Coca-Cola also operates bottling plants in twenty-six (26) cities and sells soft drink products to retailers in those areas.

Plaintiffs, Coca-Cola Bottling Co. (Thomas), Inc.; Coca-Cola Bottling Works (Thomas), Inc.; and Coca-Cola Bottling Works 3rd, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as Thomas Companies), are Delaware corporations with their principal offices and places of business in Chattanooga, Tennessee. The Thomas Companies are parent bottlers who have operated for many years under contract with Coca-Cola whereby they purchase concentrate from Coca-Cola for resale to numerous bottlers which have obtained licenses from the Thomas Companies to bottle and resell Coca-Cola products within certain geographical territories.

The remaining plaintiffs (hereinafter referred to as FTC Intervenor Bottlers) are corporations organized, existing and having their principal offices and places of business as follows: Elberton Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Elberton, Georgia; Roddy Manufacturing Company, Knoxville, Tennessee; Westminster Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Inc., Westminster, Maryland; Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Keene, Inc., Keene, New Hampshire; Ann Arbor Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Ann Arbor, Michigan; The Scioto Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Circleville, Ohio; Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Abilene, Texas. The FTC Intervenor Bottlers are engaged in the processing and sale of Coca-Cola products in designated territories pursuant to bottler contracts.

Defendant, FTC, is an administrative agency of the United States charged with, among other things, the duty of investigating, issuing and prosecuting in its adjudicative proceedings alleged violations of the antitrust laws.

On July 15, 1971, the FTC issued an administrative complaint (Docket No. 8855) charging The Coca-Cola Company (hereinafter referred to as (Coca-Cola), Coca-Cola Bottling Co. (Thomas), Inc., Coca-Cola Bottling Works (Thomas), Inc. and Coca-Cola Bottling Works 3rd, Inc. with a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45).[1] Specifically, the Administrative complaint[2] charges that, in the course of their business, Coca-Cola and the Thomas Companies have entered into licenses with their bottler customers whereby the bottlers agree not to resell Coca-Cola products outside a designated geographical area, and that such license provisions constitute an unfair method of competition.

Coca-Cola and the Thomas Companies filed an answer admitting the material facts in the complaint, including the existence of the territorial restrictions; but they denied the alleged violation of law. The FTC Intervenor Bottlers applied for and were granted permission to intervene in the proceeding.

Plaintiffs filed motions to dismiss the administrative complaint in Docket 8855 for failure to join indispensable parties. In their motions, plaintiffs contended that all bottlers licensed to bottle and distribute Coca-Cola products are indispensable parties to the administrative adjudication and therefore must be joined. On March 23, 1972, the FTC denied plaintiffs' motions to dismiss.[3]

---

[1] Section 5(a) provides in part:

"(1) Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful.

* * * * * * *

"(6) The Commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevail persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."

[2] The FTC also issued administrative complaints involving seven (7) other soft drink manufacturers, alleging similar theories.

[3] Plaintiffs initially presented their motions to the hearing examiner who denied them on January 7, 1972. Plaintiffs sought review of the hearing examiner's order by filing an application for permission to file an interlocutory appeal under the FTC's Rules of Practice (16 C.F.R. § 3.23) or, in the alternative, to treat the motions as certified to the Commission by the hearing examiner pursuant to FTC's Rules of Practice (16 C.F.R. § 3.22). Since the Commission found that the hearing examiner did not have authority to add parties, it dealt with plaintiffs' motions under the latter Rule, stating that:

The Commission has made a distinction however, between those instances in which the motion to dismiss challenges the Commission's legal power to issue the complaint and those in which it seeks to probe the Commission's discretion or judgment on whether or not a proceeding would be in the public interest. It is only in the latter instance in which the examiner is considered to be without authority to rule. See, The Drive-X Company, Inc., Docket No. 8615, Order Denying Application for Leave To File Interlocutory Appeal, or in the Alternative for an Order Requiring Certification of Question, June 10, 1964. While it is clear that the present situation falls within the former, i.e., the category of cases challenging the Commission's legal authority to issue the complaint, and hence within the examiner's authority to decide, we have nevertheless determined that that question is so

Plaintiffs instituted the present action seeking: (1) a declaratory judgment decreeing that the bottlers of plaintiff Coca-Cola and plaintiff Thomas Companies are indispensable to the FTC proceeding challenging the contractual provisions and, the FTC having willfully failed to join them as parties, the complaint therein should be dismissed; and (2) an injunction enjoining the FTC from conducting any further proceedings in Docket 8855 as long as the bottlers are not joined as parties to said proceeding, and, failing that, requiring defendant to dismiss the complaint therein.

Plaintiffs base the requests for relief on the allegations that unless the FTC is enjoined it will proceed with the adjudication without all the bottlers being parties and should the FTC prevail therein with respect to its challenge to the exclusive territorial provisions of the bottlers' contracts:

(a) Plaintiffs Coca-Cola and the Thomas Companies would be subject to two inconsistent decrees, to wit: the decree of the United States District Court of Delaware [4] and the order of the Federal Trade Commission;

(b) The judicially declared property rights of the bottlers who are not parties, including the rights of said bottlers vis-a-vis other such bottlers, would be altered;

(c) All bottlers must have the opportunity to be heard further in other proceedings in defense of their property rights. As a result thereof, without the presence of the bottlers, Docket 8855 cannot result in effective relief of the kind sought by defendant Commission;

(d) Plaintiffs and the public would also be subject to multiple litigation and would be deprived of the right to a settlement of the dispute by wholes;

(e) The ultimate resolution of the matter will be inordinately delayed;

---

intertwined with the question of amending the complaint by the addition of parties that both should have been certified to the Commission. Order Ruling on Motions To Dismiss for Failure To Join Indispensable Parties, The Coca-Cola Company, et al., Docket No. 8855 (March 23, 1972), at 4.

[4] Without passing on the merits of this contention the court makes the following comments. In The Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. The Coca-Cola Co., 269 F. 796 (D. Del. 1920) the court considered the legality of a 1894 contract between Coca-Cola and a predecessor to the Thomas Companies. Under that contract, Coca-Cola, which previously had sold syrup only through soda fountains, licensed the distribution of soft drink in bottles and granted exclusive right to establish plants throughout a large part of the United States. In 1919, Coca-Cola and the bottling company had a disagreement concerning a price rise in the cost of syrup. Coca-Cola attempted to unilaterally terminate the contract. The bottling company sued for specific performance. Coca-Cola defended, inter alia, on the grounds that the terms of the contract violated federal antitrust laws. The court held that the contract was not terminable at the will of Coca-Cola. The court also held that the various restrictions in the contract were ancillary to the main purpose of the contract which was to develop a system of distributing the soft drink in bottles. Thus, the "territorial provision", whereby Coca-Cola agreed to "select [the bottling company] as its sole and exclusive customer and licensee for the purpose of bottling Coca-Cola in the territory heretofore acquired * * *" (269 F. at 802), was found to be reasonable. However, there is no mention in the case of any provision whereby the bottlers agree not to sell Coca-Cola products outside a certain territory which is the provision under attack in the present FTC proceeding Docket No. 8855. Thus, it would appear that unless such a provision can be inferred from the above quote, the legality of the "territorial provision" under attack in the FTC proceedings was not ruled upon by the Delaware Court.

(f) The proceeding would have to be dismissed or repeated with the bottlers as parties;

(g) Bottlers might be forced out of business.

Plaintiffs contend that a continuation of the proceedings in Docket No. 8855 without the presence of the bottlers as parties will deprive plaintiffs of their rights to due process of law and to basic fairness under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the Administrative Procedure Act.

Since defendant's motion to dismiss raises the issue of this court's jurisdiction to entertain the present action, the court will deal with it first.

JURISDICTION

Although plaintiffs contend that the present action is a suit for a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief to protect plaintiffs' fundamental rights and to prevent the exercise of engaging in a potentially futile trial, the court believes that it is more appropriately characterized as a collateral suit to review agency action which is procedural in nature. Thus, the court will treat this as an action seeking judicial review of an administrative decision.

Both plaintiffs and defendant concede that the FTC's order denying plaintiff's motion to dismiss is reviewable. Therefore, the questions for this court to determine are: first, when is the FTC's action reviewable; and second, by whom is it reviewable? The first question presents the issues of ripeness and exhaustion, while the second question presents the issue of the proper court—District Court or Court of Appeals. In determining the answers to these questions the court will look first to the statutory law and then to the case law.

STATUTORY LAW

Congress has delegated the administration of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq) (hereinafter referred to as the Act) to the FTC. That delegation gives the FTC jurisdiction to institute and conduct adjudicative proceedings whenever it has reason to believe that an unfair method of competition is being used and a proceeding would be in the public interest.[5] If, as a result of such adjudicative proceeding, the FTC finds that there has been an unfair method of competition practiced, it has the power to issue cease-and-desist orders.[6] Section 5(c) of the Act confers jurisdiction to review cease-

---

[5] 15 U.S.C. § 45 et seq. Docket 8855 is such a proceeding.

[6] Plaintiffs do not contest the FTC's authority to conduct adjudicative proceeding dealing with alleged unfair methods of competition. Neither do plaintiffs contest the FTC's authority to issue cease-and-desist orders to prevent such practices.

and-desist orders upon the courts of appeals.[7] That jurisdiction is made exclusive by Section 5(d).[8] The Act is silent as to any other type of judicial review. Since no cease-and-desist order has been entered, this court must look elsewhere.

Plaintiffs assert that the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq) makes such agency action reviewable at this time. The review provision of Section 10 of that Act provides in part:

> Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review. A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on the review of the final agency action. 5 U.S.C. § 704.

Before determining when the above section makes the FTC's denial of plaintiffs' motions to dismiss reviewable, it is necessary to characterize the denial of a motion to dismiss in an agency adjudication.

Since the agencies frequently refer to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to make procedural determinations in their proceedings, the court will use the federal judicial proceedings by way of analogy. In a proceeding before a federal district court the denial of a motion to dismiss is not a final order and therefore is not appealable. 2A MOORE'S FEDERAL PRACTICE, Section 12.14 at 2338. Thus, a denial of a motion to dismiss is interlocutory in character. Under the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, Rule 5(a), appeal of an interlocutory order may be had under certain circumstances. However, Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, Rule 20, excludes the application of Rule 5 interlocutory appeals from review or enforcement of agency orders. Thus, it would appear that Congress did not provide for any review of interlocutory agency orders in the Federal Rules.

Turning now to the review provisions of Section 10 of the Administrative Procedure Act, the first sentence addresses itself to agency action which is reviewable by statute or final in character. The court has determined that the Federal Trade Commission Act does not provide for review of the denial of a motion to dismiss and the court is not aware of any other statutory provision making such action reviewable. The court has characterized the FTC's action as interlocutory rather than final. Thus, the first sentence of Section 10 does not confer the power on this court to review the FTC's action. The second sentence of Section 10 provides for review of "preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action" on the review of final agency action. Since interlocutory is synonymous with intermediate, the Administrative Procedure Act provides for review of the FTC's denial of plaintiffs' motion to dismiss only upon review of cease-and-desist order entered by the FTC as a result of the adjudicative proceeding in Docket 8855. However, such review is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals. Thus, there is no statutory basis for this court's jurisdiction over the present action. Therefore, if this court has jurisdiction, then it must be conferred by case law.

---

[7] 15 U.S.C. § 45(c).
[8] 15 U.S.C. § 45(d).

CASE LAW

In view of the statutory prescription of judicial review of agency action directly in a court of appeals, district courts ordinarily lack jurisdiction to review agency action. Thus, where Congress has provided an adequate procedure for judicial review of administrative action, that procedure must be followed. Only in extraordinary cases will parties be allowed to deviate from this statutory course and seek injunctive relief from the district court, short-circuiting the administrative procedures. The court agrees with and adopts the reasons for the exhaustion doctrine as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Burger, while a circuit judge, in Wolf Corp. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 317 F.2d 139 (D.C. Cir. 1963):

> Judicial power to impose prior restraint is not called an extraordinary remedy without reason. Even as between private parties the ordinary remedy is legal action after injury. Prior restraint is granted only upon a strong showing and is subject to definite and well established limitations. Prior restraint against governmental action, regular on its face and under color of authority, is even more cautiously exerted. Still higher hurdles stand in the way of prior restraint against the processes of a regulatory body exercising quasi-judicial powers which can be judicially reviewed as a matter of right before they become final. In this third category the jurisdiction of the regulatory or administrative body is exercised within the framework of a statutory scheme in which it acts as an arm of Congress; moreover it has established patterns of procedure and acts in a context where courts have long acknowledged a considerable deference to the specialized experience and competence of such a body. To exert judicial power to stop processes of this third category, which can always be judicially reviewed when the story is fully told and recorded is an extraordinary step in the usual as well as the legally artful sense of that word. One who seeks our employment of such powers must make the strongest kind of showing; his jurisdictional "t's" must be crossed and the factual "i's" dotted.
>
> The reasons for this restrained attitude on our part are plain if we look at the whole panorama. When Congress vested broad powers in the Commission it was not unaware of possible risks of misuse or even abuse of those powers by administrators. But except in very unusual and limited circumstances Congress did not contemplate a grant of jurisdiction to the courts to prevent abuse or misuse of power by prior restraint of the exercise of the powers. Instead judicial review after full hearing was accorded. While this does not preclude judicial restraint in advance of the administrative process in all circumstances, such relief is to be very sparingly applied and is limited to cases where on its face the contemplated hearing or other administrative process, if consummated, would be set aside on review on procedural grounds. at 142–43.

There are however cases which recognize very narrow and extraordinary exceptions to the general rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies. Plaintiffs contend that the present action falls within the limited exceptions carved out of the exhaustion doctrine by the cases. Although most of the exceptions have been established in labor cases, the principles established are equally as applicable to actions before the FTC.

Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41 (1938) established that a district court did not have jurisdiction to enjoin the hearing of a case before, or to review any interlocutory order of, the National Labor Relations Board because Congress had vested the exclusive power of review in the Circuit Courts of Appeal and for the additional reason that " * * * no one is entitled to judicial relief for a supposed or threatened injury until the prescribed administrative remedy has been exhausted." Myers, supra, at 50. The Myers ruling has consistently been approved and the principle has become well established that a district court does not possess the power to police either the procedural or the substantive purity of a proceeding in progress before an agency. Bokat v. Tidewater Equipment Co., 363 F.2d 667 (5th Cir. 1966).

The Myers principle is, however, not without exceptions and case law has allowed district court interference in agency proceedings in a few narrowly circumscribed instances, all of which have been thought to be based upon "exceptional circumstances". Boire v. Miami Herald Publishment Company, 343 F.2d 17 (5th Cir. 1965).

The first exception is where the suit tenders a "public question particularly high in the scale of our national interest because of their international complexion." McCulloch v. Sociedad National de Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 17 (1963). There the court permitted review of an NLRB election order because of the international overtones involved in the Board's application of the National Labor Relations Act to foreign maritime crews. In the present case, there is no international implication or urgency as there was in Sociedad National. Thus, the present action does not fall within this exception.

A second exception to the rule of exhaustion was fashioned by the Second Circuit in Fay v. Douds, 172 F. 2d 720 (2d Cir. 1949). This exception allows a district court to assert jurisdiction where there has been a substantial showing that agency action has violated the constitutional rights of the complaining party. This exception has only limited application in the Fifth Circuit. See Boire v. Miami Herald Publishing Company, 343 F.2d 17, 21 at n. 7 (5th Cir. 1965). Plaintiffs may be attempting to invoke this exception by alleging that by failing to join all the Coca-Cola bottlers as indispensable parties the FTC is denying them due process and basic fairness. The court finds this proposition has no merit. Since a party to a judicial action before a federal district court could not be said to be denied due process by a court's denial of a motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties, the same must hold true for a party to an administrative action. See Frito-Lay v. Federal Trade Commission, 380 F.2d 8 (5th Cir. 1967).

A third exception was developed by the court in Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184 (1958). There the court permitted review of the NLRB's certification of a bargaining unit which included both professional and nonprofessional employees even though the professional employees had not consented to inclusion in the otherwise nonprofessional unit. This action was in direct defiance of an express provision of the National Labor Relations Act. The District Court, whose judgment was affirmed by the Second Circuit, held that the Board had acted in excess of its powers and set aside the Board's determination even though it was not a "final order". On appeal the Board contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In this extreme factual context the Supreme Court held that the District Court had original jurisdiction:

> This is not one to "review", in the sense of that term as used in the Act, a decision of the Board made within its jurisdiction. Rather, it is one to strike down an order of the Board made in excess of its delegated powers and contrary to a specific prohibition in the Act. * * * Plainly, this was an attempted exercise of powers that had been specifically withheld. It deprived the professional employees of a "right" assured to them by Congress. Surely, in these circumstances a Federal District Court has jurisdiction of an original suit to prevent deprivation of a right so given. 358 U.S. at 188, 89.

Leedom could easily have opened the doors to the Federal District Courts for numerous attacks on agency action. However the exception created by Leedom has remained very narrow. The narrowness of this exception was pointed out by the Fifth Circuit in United States v. Feaster, 410 F.2d 1354 (5th Cir. 1969):

> * * * Leedom v. Kyne represents only a narrow and rarely successfully invoked exception to the doctrine that exhaustion of administrative procedures is a condition precedent to federal court jurisdiction. Under this exception access to the courts is accorded only if the Mediation Board's determination is infused with error which is of a summa or magna quality as contraposed to decisions which are simply cum error. Only the egregious error melds the Board's decision into justiciability. Lesser malignancies thwart the jurisdiction of the courts. (cases cited) at 1368.

In the present action there is no statutory prohibition or provision of the Federal Trade Commission Act which the FTC is alleged to have violated. Even if on review by the Court of Appeals it was found that the FTC should have joined all the bottlers as indispensable parties, the FTC's failure to do so is not such an abuse by it that it is obvious on its face that it has acted incorrectly. Even if it was, the court does not believe that this is the kind of agency action protected against by the Leedom exception. Accordingly the court finds that the present action does not fall within this exception.

The fourth exception is recognized by the Fourth Circuit. In Deering-Milliken Inc. v. Johnston, 295 F.2d 856 (4th Cir. 1961), an action was brought pursuant to Section 10(e) of the Administrative Procedure Act [5 U.S.C. § 1009(e)] to compel agency action wrongfully withheld. The Court concluded that Section 6(a) of the Administrative Procedure Act [5 U.S.C. § 1005(a)] gave the complaining party a "specific statutory right" to have his hearing concluded with reasonable dispatch and that, as judicial review to prevent delay was adequate only through district court intervention, a district court was vested with the power to act. Delay on the part of the agency was considered implicitly to constitute exhaustion of administrative remedies. This exception has no application to the present case since there has been no delay on the part of the FTC.

The court has also considered the other cases relied on by plaintiffs such as: McKart v. United States, 395 U.S. 185 (1969); Skinner & Eddy Corp. v. United States, 249 U.S. 557 (1919); Jewel Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 432 F.2d 1155 (7th Cir. 1970); Davis v. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, 386 F.2d 429 (4th Circuit 1967); Wolf Corp. v. Securities Exchange Commission, 317 F.2d 139 (D.C. Cir. 1963); The Coca-Cola Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 342 F. Supp. 760 (N.D. Ga. 1972), Civil Action No. 15436; Lehigh Portland Cement Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 291 F. Supp. 628 (E. D. Va. 1968); Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 233 F. Supp. 660 (S.D. N.Y. 1964); Yanish v. Wixon, 81 F. Supp. 499 (N.D. Cal. 1948). None of these cases creates any new exception or broadens any of the above exceptions.

Thus, this court has been unable to find any case which has broadened the exhaustion doctrine to the point where the denial of a motion to dismiss for failure to join indispensable parties by an administrative agency can amount to the kind of agency action which will create jurisdiction in a Federal District Court to grant review or relief of any kind.

This court has been unable to find jurisdiction in either the statutory law or the case law to entertain the present action. Thus, the answers to the questions before the court as to when review of the FTC action is available and by whom the FTC's action is reviewable, are at the time any cease-and-desist order is reviewed and that review must be by the Court of Appeals.

Accordingly, defendant's motion to dismiss is hereby granted.

It Is So Ordered.

F.T.C. v. COLDWATER SEAFOOD CORP.*

No. M-18-304

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, August 8, 1972)

In a subpoena enforcement action, Court held invalid defendant's claim that certain financial information requested in a subpoena duces tecum was confidential. The Court also rejected defendant's suggestion that the F.T.C. should have followed the protective arrangements as set forth in FTC v. Crowther, 430 F.2d 510 (D.C. Cir 1970), 1970 Trade Cases ¶73,238.

Before Frankel, District Judge.

Memorandum

Frankel, D. J.: The respondent resists production of its profit and loss statements, balance sheets, and attendant information called for by Item 4 of the subpoena upon a claim of "confidentiality." The crux of this position lies in respondent's asserted character as a closely-held corporation. In brief exploration of this assertion, counsel for respondent was unable to say whether the information in question is available to the membership of the cooperative which wholly owns the respondent corporation.

Even apart from this possible defect in the position, the claim of confidentiality must fail. Of the total of 28 identical subpoenas duces tecum issued by the hearing examiner to various companies, 26 recipients have come forth with the requested information. No claim is made that the information is not relevant and material in the Commission's pending proceeding. No good reason whatever is suggested for its being withheld.

The Commission has fashioned a protective order for the benefit of this and other respondents. There is a suggestion by respondent in this court that the Commission ought preferably to have followed the protective arrangements of FTC v. Crowther, 430 F.2d 510 (D.C. Cir. 1970). The suggestion was never pressed with any clarity in the instant proceeding before the Commission and it comes with fatal tardiness here. There is also a contention that the protective order in this case has not been effective. This contention rests on somewhat ambiguous hearsay. Nevertheless, it is a matter of concern to the Commission and to this court. The Commission, through the United States Attorney, has represented here that the hearing examiner will proceed immediately to explore the claim of breach and to take remedial action if the claim is substantiated. The court assumes, therefore, that the examiner—and, if necessary, the Commission—will make an explicit finding, one way or the other, as to whether the protective arrangements have been violated. If there has been a violation, a remedial action should lie in the Commission's discretion, at least in the first instance. All have agreed before me that the respondent would be entitled to have review of such remedial action, if it deems itself aggrieved or insufficiently protected thereby.

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 74,115, at 92,654 (1972 Trade Cases).

This case was inadvertently omitted from 1972 Supplement of Statutes and Court Decisions.

Finally, the Commission is entitled to explore, through its examiner, the flat assertion by the respondent that it does not have, and has never kept, various records of a kind that would seem prima facie to be necessary or likely parts of such a corporation's papers.

In sum, the claim of confidentiality with respect to Item 4 is rejected. Respondent will appear before the hearing examiner to explore the non-existence of documents referred to just above. Unless the issue as to suitable measures for breach of the protective conditions is properly eligible for review, the respondent should proceed to comply with the subpoena in the respects herein discussed.

Settle an order on notice.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY, ET AL., v. PATSY T. MINK, ET AL.*

No. 71-909

(Supreme Court of the United States, January 22, 1973)

1. FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT PROVISION EXCLUDING SPECIFIC MATTERS REQUIRED BY EXECUTIVE ORDER TO BE KEPT SECRET IN INTEREST OF NATIONAL DEFENSE OR FOREIGN POLICY PRECLUDED COMPELLED DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS.

   [827] Where documents pertaining to proposed underground atomic explosion were classified "top secret" or "secret," pursuant to executive order, provision of Freedom of Information Act which excludes from the operation of the Act matters specifically required by executive order to be kept secret in interest of the national defense or foreign policy precluded compelled disclosure of the documents.

2. THE PRESIDENT MAY DELEGATE HIS AUTHORITY TO CLASSIFY DOCUMENTS FOR PURPOSES OF EXEMPTION FROM THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT.

   For purposes of exemption from the operation of the Freedom of Information Act of matters that are specifically required by executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy, the President may delegate his authority to classify documents.

---

*Reported in 410 U.S. 73, 93 S.Ct. 827 (1973). Although this case does not directly involve the Federal Trade Commission, it has been included in this publication because it contains the most definitive discussion to date of Section 552(b)(1) and, in particular, Section 552(b)(5) of the Freedom of Information Act of 1966.

3. Classification of Material Under Executive Order Is Sufficient To Protect Documents From Disclosure Under the Freedom of Information Act Exemption.

The Freedom of Information Act exempts matters specifically required by executive order to be kept secret and classification of material under executive order is sufficient to protect documents from disclosure.

4. The Freedom of Information Act Is Not Intended To Subject the Soundness of Executive Security Classification to Judicial Review.

The Freedom of Information Act is not intended to subject the soundness of executive security classification to judicial review at the insistence of any objecting citizen.

5. Freedom of Information Act Exemption Provision Does Not Authorize or Permit In Camera Inspection of Contested Document so That Court May Separate the Secret From the Nonsecret and Order Disclosure of the Nonsecret.

Provision of the Freedom of Information Act which exempts from its mandate matters which are specifically required by executive order to be kept secret in interest of the national defense or foreign policy does not authorize or permit in camera inspection of a contested document bearing a single classification so that the court may separate the secret from the supposedly nonsecret and order disclosure of the nonsecret.

6. Freedom of Information Act Entitles Public to All Inter-Agency or Intra-Agency Memoranda or Letters Discoverable in Litigation.

[828] The Freedom of Information Act entitles the public to all inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda or letters that a private party could discover in litigation with the federal agency.

7. Exemption Provision of Freedom of Information Act Relating to Memoranda and Letters Not Available by Law to Parties in Litigation With the Agency Makes Privileged From Inspection Confidential Intra-Agency Advisory Opinions.

Provision of the Freedom of Information Act which exempts from its mandate inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party in litigation with the agency makes confidential intra-agency advisory opinions privileged from inspection.

8. Courts Are Not Given the Option To Impose Alternative Sanctions—Short of Compelled Disclosure—in Actions Under Freedom of Information Act.

In actions under the Freedom of Information Act, courts are not given the option to impose alternative sanctions—short of compelled disclosure—such as striking a particular defense or dismissing the government's action.

9. The Privilege of Compelled Disclosure Attached to Intra-Governmental Memoranda Clearly Has Finite Limits.

The privilege of compelled disclosure that attaches to intra-governmental memoranda clearly has finite limits, even in civil litigation; in each case, the question is whether production of the contested document would be injurious to the consultative functions of government that the privilege of nondisclosure protects.

10. Memoranda Consisting of Compiled Factual Material Is Available for Discovery in Absence of Claim That Disclosure Would Jeopardize State Secrets.

In absence of claim that disclosure would jeopardize State secrets, memoranda consisting of only compiled factual material or purely factual material contained in deliberative memoranda and separable from its context would generally be available for discovery by private parties in litigation with the government.

11. FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT DOES NOT PERMIT WITHHOLDING OF FACTUAL MATERIAL OTHERWISE AVAILABLE ON DISCOVERY BECAUSE IT WAS PLACED IN MEMORANDUM WITH MATTERS OF LAW, POLICY OR OPINION.

Although the Freedom of Information Act does not require nondisclosure of manifestly private and confidential policy recommendations simply because the document containing them also happens to contain factual data, it does not permit the withholding of factual material otherwise available on discovery merely because it was placed in a memorandum with matters of law, policy or opinion.

12. EXEMPTION PROVISION CONTEMPLATES THAT THE PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO INTERNAL MEMORANDA WILL BE GOVERNED BY THE SAME FLEXIBLE, COMMON SENSE APPROACH THAT HAS LONG GOVERNED DISCOVERY OF DOCUMENTS INVOLVED IN LITIGATION.

Provision of Freedom of Information Act exempting inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party contemplates that the public's access to internal memoranda will be governed by the same flexible, common sense approach that has long governed private parties' discovery of such documents involved in litigation with government agencies.

13. ALTHOUGH IN SOME SITUATIONS IN CAMERA INSPECTION WILL BE NECESSARY AND APPROPRIATE, IT NEED NOT BE AUTOMATIC.

Although in some situations in which compelled disclosure of governmental agency memoranda is sought, in camera inspection will be necessary and appropriate, it need not be automatic; an agency should be given the opportunity, by means of detailed affidavits or oral testimony, to establish to the satisfaction of the district court that the documents sought fall clearly beyond the range of material that would be available to a private party in litigation with the agency.

14. IF AGENCY RESISTS DISCLOSURE, BURDEN OF PROOF IS ON THE AGENCY, AND IF AGENCY FAILS TO MEET ITS BURDEN WITHOUT IN CAMERA INSPECTION, COURT MAY ORDER IN CAMERA INSPECTION OF MATERIAL IN QUESTION.

Burden is on the agency resisting disclosure of intra-agency or inter-agency memoranda on ground it is beyond range of material available to a private party in litigation with the government and if it fails to meet its burden without in camera inspection, the district court may order in camera inspection of government memoranda in order to determine whether it might be disclosed.

15. A REPRESENTATIVE DOCUMENT OF THOSE SOUGHT MAY BE SELECTED FOR IN CAMERA INSPECTION GIVING THE AGENCY AN OPPORTUNITY TO DEMONSTRATE BY SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES, THAT PARTICULAR DOCUMENTS ARE WITHIN THE EXEMPTION.

Government agency may demonstrate, by surrounding circumstances, that particular documents are purely advisory, contain no separable, factual information which might be subject to disclosure and are within exemption of Freedom of Information Act for intra-[829]agency memoranda used in the decision-making process of the Executive Branch and a representative document of those sought may be selected for in camera inspection.

16. AGENCY MAY ATTEMPT TO SHOW THAT EXCISED PORTIONS CONSTITUTE BARE BONES OF MATTER PROTECTED BY EXEMPTION PORTION OF FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT.

    Agency may itself disclose the factual portions of the contested documents and attempt to show by circumstances that the excised portions constitute the bare bones of matter protected by the Freedom of Disclosure Act as being used in the decision-making processes.

17. IN CAMERA* INSPECTION OF ALL DOCUMENTS IS NOT A NECESSARY TOOL IN EVERY CASE IN WHICH GOVERNMENT CLAIMS EXEMPTION TO FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT.

    In camera inspection of all documents is not a necessary or inevitable tool in every case in which the government claims that disclosure is exempted by the Freedom of Information Act provision excluding inter-agency or intra-agency memoranda which is not available by law to a party in litigation with the agency.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 93 S.Ct. 827 (1973))

[830] Mr. Justice WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Freedom of Information Act of 1966, 5 U.S.C. § 552, provides that government agencies shall make available to the public a broad spectrum of information but exempts from its mandate certain specified categories of information, including matters that are "specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy," § 552(b) (1), or are "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." § 522(b) (5). It is the construction and scope of these exemptions that are at issue here.

I

[75] Respondents' lawsuit began with an article that appeared in a Washington, D.C., newspaper in late July 1971. The article indicated that the President had received conflicting recommendations on the advisability of the underground nuclear test scheduled for that coming fall and, in particular, noted that the "latest recommendations" were the product of "a departmental under-secretary committee named to investigate the controversy." Two days later, Congresswoman Patsy Mink, a respondent, sent a telegram to the President urgently requesting the "immediate release of the recommendations and reports by inter-departmental committee. * * *" When the request was denied, an action under the Freedom of Information Act was commenced by Congresswoman Mink and 32 of her colleagues in the House.[1]

---

[1] A separate action was brought to enjoin the test itself, Committee for Nuclear Responsibility, Inc. v. Seaborg (D.D.C., Civ. Action No. 1346–71). After adverse decisions below, plaintiffs in that case applied for an injunction in this Court. On November 6, 1971, we denied the application, Committee for Nuclear Responsibility, Inc. v. Schlesinger, 404 U.S. 917, 92 S.Ct. 242, 30 L.Ed.2d 191 and the test was conducted that same day.

It should be noted that in the District Court respondents stated that they "have exhausted their administrative remedies [and] * * * have complied with all applicable regulations." Petitioners did not contest those assertions.

Petitioners immediately moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the materials sought were specifically exempted from disclosure under subsections (b)(1) and (b)(5) of the Act.[2] In support of the motion, petitioners filed an affidavit of John N. Irwin, II, the Undersecretary [76] of State. Briefly, the affidavit states that Mr. Irwin was appointed by President Nixon as Chairman of an "Undersecretaries Committee," which was a part of the National Security Council system organized by the President "so that he could use it as an instrument for obtaining advice on important questions relating to our national security." The Committee was directed by the President in 1969 "to review the annual underground nuclear test program and to encompass within this review requests for authorization of specific scheduled tests." Results of the Committee's reviews were to be transmitted to the President "in time to allow him to give them full consideration before the scheduled events." In ¶ 5 of the affidavit, Mr. Irwin stated that pursuant to "the foregoing directions from the President," the Undersecretaries Committee had prepared and transmitted to the President a report on the proposed underground nuclear test known as "Cannikin," scheduled to take place at Amchitka Island, Alaska. The report was said to have consisted of a covering memorandum from Mr. Irwin, the report of the Undersecretaries Committee, five documents attached to that report and three additional letters separately sent [831] to Mr. Irwin.[3] Of the [77] total of 10 documents, one, an Environmental Impact Statement prepared by AEC, was publicly available and was not in dispute. Each of the other nine was claimed in the Irwin affidavit to have been

---

[2] Petitioners also moved for dismissal of the suit insofar as respondents sought disclosure of the documents in their official capacities as Members of Congress. The District Court granted this motion, but the Court of Appeals did not reach the issue. Accordingly, the issue is not before this Court.

[3] According to the Irwin affidavit, the report contained the following documents:

A. A covering memorandum from Mr. Irwin to the President, dated July 17, 1971. This memorandum is classified Top Secret pursuant to Executive Order 10501.

B. The Report of the Undersecretaries Committee. This report was also classified Top Secret. Attached to the report were additional documents:

1. A letter, classified Secret, from the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) to Mr. Irwin.

2. A report, classified Top Secret, from the Defense Program Review Committee, of which Dr. Henry Kissinger was the Chairman.

3. The environmental impact statement on the proposed Cannikin test, prepared by the AEC in 1971, pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act, 42 U.S.C. § 4332(C). This document had always been "publicly available" and a copy was attached to the Irwin affidavit.

4. A transcript of an oral briefing given by the AEC to the Committee. This document was classified Secret.

5. A memorandum from the Council on Environmental Quality to Mr. Irwin. This memorandum was separately unclassified.

C. In addition to the covering memorandum and the Committee's report (with attached documents), were three letters that had been transmitted to Mr. Irwin:

1. A letter from Mr. William Ruckelshaus, for the Environmental Protection Agency. This letter was classified Top Secret, but has now been declassified.

2. A letter from Mr. Russell Train, for the Council on Environmental Quality. Although the Irwin affidavit states that this letter was classified Top Secret, petitioners concede that it was so classified "only because it was to be attached to the Undersecretary's Report." Brief, at 6, n. 5.

3. A letter of Dr. Edward D. David, Jr., for the Office of Science and Technology. This letter is classified Top Secret.

> prepared and used solely for transmittal to the President as advice and recommendations and set forth the views and opinions of individuals and agencies preparing the documents so that the President might be fully apprised of varying viewpoints and have been used for no other purpose.

In addition, at least eight (by now reduced to six) of the nine remaining documents were said to involve highly sensitive matter vital to the national defense and foreign policy and were described as having been classified Top Secret and Secret pursuant to Executive Order 10501.[4]

[78] On the strength of this showing by petitioners, the District Court granted summary judgment in their favor on the grounds that each of the nine documents sought was exempted from compelled disclosure by §§ (b)(1) and (b)(5) of the Act. The Court of Appeals reversed, concluding that subsection (b)(1) of the Act permits the withholding of only the secret portions of those documents bearing a separate classification under Executive Order 10501: "If the nonsecret components [of such documents] are separable from the secret remainder and may be read separately without distortion of meaning, they too should be disclosed." 464 F.2d 742, 746. The court instructed the District Judge to examine the classified documents "looking toward their possible separation for purposes of disclosure or nondisclosure."

In addition, the Court of Appeals concluded that all nine contested documents fell within subsection (b)(5) of the Act, but construed that exemption as shielding only the "decisional processes" reflected in internal government memoranda, not "factual information" unless that [832] information is "inextricably intertwined with policymaking processes." The court then ordered the District Judge to examine the documents in camera (including, presumably, any "nonsecret components" of the six classified documents) to determine if "factual data" could be separated out and disclosed "without impinging on the policymaking decisional processes intended to be protected by this exemption." We granted certiorari, 405 U.S. 974, 92 S.Ct. 1196, 31 L.Ed.2d 247 and now reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

---

[4] These eight documents were also described as having been classified as "Restricted Data * * * pursuant to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. (42 U.S.C. §§ 2014(y), 2161 and 2162.)" Petitioners have not asserted that these provisions, standing alone, would justify withholding the documents in this case. But see 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3), relating to matters "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute."

II

[79] The Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552,[5] is a revision of § 3, the public disclosure section, of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 1002. Section 3 was generally recognized as falling far short of its disclosure goals and came to be looked upon more as a withholding statute than a disclosure statute. See S.Rep.No.813, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 5 (1965) (hereinafter, S.Rep.No.813); H.R.Rep.No. 1497, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., 5-6 (1966) U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1966, p. 2418 (hereinafter, H.Rep.No.1497). The section was plagued with vague phrases, such as that exempting from disclosure "any function of the United States requiring secrecy in the public interest." Moreover, even "matters of official record" were only to be made available to "persons properly and directly concerned" with the information. And the section provided no remedy for wrongful withholding of information. The provisions of the Freedom of Information Act stand in sharp relief against those of § 3. The Act eliminates the "properly and directly concerned" test of access, stating repeatedly that official information shall be made available "to the public," "for public inspection." Subsection (b) of the Act creates nine exemptions from compelled disclosures. These exemptions are explicitly made exclusive, 5 U.S.C. § 552(c), and are plainly intended to set up concrete, workable standards for determining whether particular material may be withheld or must be disclosed. Aggrieved citizens are given a speedy remedy in district courts, where "the court shall determine the matter de novo and the burden is on the agency to sustain its action." 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3). Noncompliance with court orders may be punished by contempt. Ibid.

[80] Without question, the Act is broadly conceived. It seeks to permit access to official information long shielded unnecessarily from public view and attempts to create a judicially enforceable public right to secure such information from possibly unwilling official hands. Subsection (b) is part of this scheme and represents the congressional determination of the types of information that the Executive Branch must have the option to keep confidential, if it so chooses. As the Senate Committee explained, it was not "an easy task to balance the opposing interests, but it is not an impossible one either. * * * Success lies in providing a workable formula which encompasses, balances, and protects all interests, yet places emphasis on the fullest responsible disclosure." S.Rep.No.813, at 3.[6]

---

[5] The Act was passed in 1966, 80 Stat. 250, and codified in its present form in 1967. 81 Stat. 54.

[833] It is in the context of the Act's attempt to provide a "workable formula" that "balances, and protects all interests," that the conflicting claims over the documents in this case must be considered.

A

[81] [1] Subsection (b)(1) of the Act exempts from forced disclosure "matters * * * specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy." According to the Irwin affidavit, the six documents for which Exemption 1 is now claimed were all duly classified Top Secret or Secret, pursuant to Executive Order 10501, 3 CFR 280 (Jan. 1, 1970). That order was promulgated under the authority of the President in 1953, 18 Fed. Reg. 7049, and, since that time, has served as the basis for the classification by the Executive Branch of information "which requires protection in the interests of national defense."[7] We do not believe that Exemption 1 permits compelled disclosure of documents, such as the six here, that were classified pursuant to this Executive Order. Nor does the Exemption permit in camera inspection of such documents to sift out so-called "non-secret components." Obviously, this test was not the only alternative available. But Congress chose to follow the Executive's determination in these matters and that choice must be honored.

[2] The language of Exemption 1 was chosen with care. According to the Senate Committee, "[t]he change of standard from 'in the pub-

---

[6] The Report states (ibid.):

"It is the purpose of the present bill * * * to establish a general philosophy of full agency disclosure unless information is exempted under clearly delineated statutory language * * *.

"At the same time that a broad philosophy of 'freedom of information' is enacted into law, it is necessary to protect certain equally important rights of privacy with respect to certain information in Government files, such as medical and personnel records. It is also necessary for the very operation of our Government to allow it to keep confidential certain material, such as the investigatory files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"It is not an easy task to balance the opposing interests, but it is not an impossible one either. It is not necessary to conclude that to protect one of the interests, the other must, of necessity, either be abrogated or substantialy subordinated. Success lies in providing a workable formula which encompasses, balances, and protects all interests, yet places emphasis on the fullest responsible disclosure."

See also H. Rep. No. 1497, at 6.

[7] Executive Order 10501 has been superseded, as of June 1, 1972, by Executive Order 11652, 37 Fed. Reg. 5209, which similarly provides for the classification of material "in the interest of national defense or foreign relations."

Portions of two documents for which Exemption 1 is claimed were ordered disclosed in connection with the action brought to enjoin the test (see n. 1, supra). Petitioners seek no relief with respect to any matters already disclosed.

lic interest' is made both to delimit more narrowly the exception and to give it a more precise definition. The phrase 'public interest' in Section 3(a) of the Administrative Procedure Act has been sub[82]-ject to conflicting interpretations, often colored by personal prejudices and predilections. It admits of no clear delineations." S. Rep. No. 813, at 8. The House Committee similarly pointed out that Exemption 1 "both limits the present vague phrase, 'in the public interest,' and gives the area of necessary secrecy a more precise definition." H. Rep. No. 1497, at 9, U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1966, p. 2426. Manifestly, Exemption 1 was intended to dispel uncertainty with respect to public access to material affecting "national defense or foreign policy." Rather than some vague standard, the test was to be simply whether the President has determined by Executive Order that particular documents are to be kept secret. The language of the Act itself is sufficiently clear in this respect, but the legislative history disposes of any possible argument that Congress intended the Freedom of Information Act to subject executive security classifications to judicial review at the insistence of anyone who might seek to question them. Thus the House Report stated with respect to subsection (b)(1) that "citizens both in and out of Government can agree to restrictions on categories of information which the President has determined must be kept secret to protect the national defense or to advance foreign policy, such as matters classified pursuant to Executive Order 10501." H. Rep. No. 1497, pp. 9–10, U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1966, p. 2427.[8] Similarly, [834] Representative [80] Moss, Chairman of the House Subcommittee that considered the bill, stated that the exemption "was intended to specifically recognize that Executive order [No. 10501]" and was drafted "in conformity with that Executive order." Hearings before a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Operations, "Federal Public Records Law," 89th Cong., 1st Sess. (March and April 1965), pp. 52, 105 (hereinafter, 1965 House Hearings). And a member of the committee, Representative Gallagher, stated that the legislation and the Committee Report make it "crystal clear that the bill in no way affects categories of information which the President * * * has determined must be classified to protect the national defense or to advance foreign policy. These areas of information most generally are classified under Executive Order No. 10501." 112 Cong. Rec. 13659.

---

[8] It is true, the House Report indicates that the President must determine that the exempted matter be kept secret. Clearly, however, Executive Order 10501 is based on presidential authority and specifically delegates that authority to "the departments, agencies, and other units of the executive branch as hereinafter specified." 3 CFR, at 281 (1970). One may disagree with the scope of the delegation or with how the delegated authority is exercised in particular cases, but the authority itself nevertheless remains the President's and it is his judgment that the first exemption was designed to respect.

[3] These same sources make untenable the argument that classification of material under Executive Order 10501 is somehow insufficient for Exemption 1 purposes, or that the exemption contemplates the issuance of orders, under some other authority, for each document the Executive may want protected from disclosure under the Act. Congress could certainly have provided that the Executive Branch adopt new procedures or it could have established its own procedures—subject only to whatever limitations the Executive privilege may be held to impose upon such congressional ordering. Cf. United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727 (1953). But Exemption 1 does neither. It states with the utmost directness that the Act exempts matters "specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret." Congress was well aware of the Order and obviously accepted determinations pursuant to that Order as qualifying for exempt status under § (b)(1). In this context it is patently unrealistic to [84] argue that the "Order has nothing to do with the first exemption." [9]

[4, 5] What has been said thus far makes wholly untenable any claim that the Act intended to subject the soundness of executive security classifications to judicial review at the insistence of any objecting citizen. It also negates the proposition that Exemption 1 authorizes or permits in camera inspection of a contested document bearing a single classification so that the court may separate the secret from the supposedly nonsecret and order disclosure of the latter. The Court of Appeals was thus in error. The Irwin affidavit stated that each of the six documents for which Exemption 1 is now claimed "are and have been classified" Top Secret and Secret "pursuant to Executive Order No. 10501" and as involving "highly sensitive matter that is vital to our national defense and foreign policy." The fact of those classifications and the documents' characterizations have never been disputed by respondents. Accordingly, upon such a showing and in such circumstances, petitioners had met their burden of demonstrating that the docu[835]ments were entitled to protection under Exemption 1 and the duty of the District Court under § 552(a)(3) was therefore at an end.[10]

---

[9] Respondents' Brief, at 18. Respondents note that the preamble of the new Executive Order 11652 (see n. 7, supra), specifies that material classified pursuant to its provisions "is expressly exempted from public disclosure by Section 552(b)(1) of Title 5, United States Code." Executive Order 10501 has no comparable recital, but only the sheerest ritualism would distinguish the effects of the two orders on any such basis. Indeed, respondents' apparent acceptance of the new order as a justifiable ground for resisting disclosure under Exemption 1 points to the absurdity of maintaining that Executive Order 10501 is irrelevant to the Act.

[10] This conclusion is not undermined by the new Executive Order 11652, which calls for the separation of documents into classified and unclassified portions, where practicable. 37 Fed. Reg., at 5212. On the contrary, that new order provides that the separating be done by the Executive, not the Judiciary, and, like its predecessor, permits declassification of material only in accordance with its procedures. More importantly, the very existence of [85] [6–10] Disclosure of the three documents conceded to be "unclassified" is resisted solely on the basis of Exemption 5 of the Act.[11] That Exemption was also invoked, alternatively, to support withholding the six documents for which Exemption 1 was claimed. It is beyond question that the Irwin affidavit, standing alone, is sufficient to establish that all of the documents involved in this litigation are "inter-agency or intra-agency" memoranda or "letters" that were used in the decisionmaking processes of the Executive Branch. By its terms, however, Exemption 5 creates an exemption for such documents only insofar as they "would not be available by law to a party * * * in litigation with the agency." This language clearly contemplates that the public is entitled to all such [86] memoranda or letters that a private party could discover in litigation with the agency. Drawing such a line between what may be withheld and what must be disclosed is not without difficulties. In many important respects, the rules governing discovery in such litigation have remained uncertain from the very beginnings of the Republic.[12] Moreover, at best the discovery rules can only be applied under Exemption 5 by way of rough analogies. For example, we do not know whether the Government is to be treated as though it were a prosecutor, a civil plaintiff, or a defendant.[13] Nor does the Act, by its terms, permit inquiry into particularized needs of the individual seeking the information, although such an inquiry would ordinarily be made of a private litigant. Still, the legislative history of Exemption 5 demonstrates that Congress intended to incorporate generally the recognized rule [836] that "confidential intra-agency advisory opinthe new order demonstrates that the Executive exercises a continuing responsibility for determining the need for secrecy in matters that affect national defense. Exemption 1 recognizes that responsibility by leaving to the Executive, under such orders as shall be developed, the decision of what may be disclosed and what must be kept secret.

B

---

[11] 5 U.S.C. § 552:

"(a) Each agency shall make available to the public information as follows:

* * * * * * *

"(b) This section does not apply to matters that are—

* * * * * * *

"(5) inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency."

The three documents are: the CEQ memorandum to Mr. Irwin, the Train letter, and the Ruckelshaus letter, which has now been declassified.

[12] See generally, 4 Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 26.61 (1972) and authorities collected (id., at ¶ 26.61 [1] n. 2); 8 Wigmore, Evidence §§ 2378, 2379 (McNaughton rev. 1961) (hereinafter Wigmore).

There were early disputes over the issue of Executive privilege. See Chief Justice Marshall's decisions in the trial of United States v. Burr (No. 14,692, 14,694), 25 Fed. Cas. pp. 30 and 187, 191–192 (CCD Va. 1807), discussed in 8 Wigmore, § 2371, at 739–741 (3d ed. 1940) and 4 Moore ¶ 26.61 [6.–4]. See also Wigmore § 2378, at 805 and n. 21.

[13] Different rules have been held to apply in each situation. See, e.g., United States v. Andolschek, 142 F. 2d 503, 506 (CA2 1944) (L. Hand, J.) (United States as prosecutor); Bank Line, Ltd. v. United States, 76 F. Supp. 801 (SDNY 1948) (United States as defendant). Moreover, in actions under the Freedom of Information Act, courts are not given the option to impose alternative sanctions—short of compelled disclosure—such as striking a particular defense or dismissing the Government's action.

ions * * * are privileged from inspection." Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. United States, 157 F. Supp. 939, 946, 141 Ct. [87] Cl. 38 (1958) (Mr. Justice Reed). As Mr. Justice Reed there stated:

> There is a public policy involved in this claim of privilege for this advisory opinion—the policy of open, frank discussion between subordinate and chief concerning administrative action.

The importance of this underlying policy was echoed again and again during legislative analysis and discussions of Exemption 5:

> It was pointed out in the comments of many of the agencies that it would be impossible to have any frank discussion of legal or policy matters in writing if all such writings were to be subjected to public scrutiny. It was argued, and with merit, that efficiency of Government would be greatly hampered if, with respect to legal and policy matters, all Government agencies were prematurely forced to "operate in a fishbowl." The committee is convinced of the merits of this general proposition, but it has attempted to delimit the exception as narrowly as consistent with efficient Government operation. S.Rep.No.813, at 9.

See also H.Rep.No.1497, at 10. But the privilege that has been held to attach to intragovernment memoranda clearly has finite limits, even in civil litigation. In each case, the question was whether production of the contested document would be "injurious to the consultative functions of government that the privilege of nondisclosure protects." Kaiser v. Aluminum & Chemical Corp., supra, at 946. Thus, in the absence of a claim that disclosure would jeopardize state secrets, see United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727 (1953), memoranda consisting only of compiled factual material [88] or purely factual material contained in deliberative memoranda and severable from its context would generally be available for discovery by private parties in litigation with the Government.[14] Moreover, in applying the privilege, courts often were required to examine the disputed documents in camera, in order to determine which should be turned over or withheld.[15] We must [89] assume, therefore, [837] that [14] See, e.g., Machin v. Zuckert, 114 U.S. App. D.C. 335, 316 F. 2d 336, cert. denied, 375 U.S. 896, 84 S. Ct. 192, 11 L. Ed. 2d 124 (1963) (Air Force Aircraft Accident Investigation Report); Boeing Airplane Co. v. Coggeshall, 108 U.S. App. D.C. 106, 280 F. 2d 654, 660–661 (1960) (Renegotiation Board documents); Olson Rug Co. v. NLRB, 291 F. 2d 655, 662 (CA7 1961) (no claim that NLRB documents are "exclusively policy recommendations"); Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. V. E. B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, 40 F.R.D. 318, 327 (DDC 1966), aff'd 128 U.S. App. D.C. 10, 384 F. 2d 979 (CADC) cert. denied, 389 U.S. 952, 88 S. Ct. 334, 19 L. Ed. 2d 361 (1967) (discovery denied because documents "wholly of opinions, recommendations and deliberations"); McFadden v. Arco Corp., 278 F. Supp. 57, 59–60 (MD Ala. 1967), and cases cited therein.

---

In United States v. Cotton Valley Operators Comm., 9 F.R.D. 719, 720 (WD La. 1949), aff'd by equally divided court, 339 U.S. 940, 70 S. Ct. 793, 94 L. Ed. 1356 (1950), the United States offered to file "an abstract of factual information" contained in the contested documents (FBI reports).

[15] See, e.g., Machin v. Zuckert, 114 U.S. App. D.C. 335, 316 F. 2d 336, 341, cert. denied, 375 U.S. 896, 84 S. Ct. 172, 11 L. Ed. 2d 124 (1963) (private tort action; discovery of Air Force Aircraft Accident Investigation Report); Boeing Airplane Co. v. Coggeshall, 108 U.S. App. D.C. 106, 280 F. 2d 654, 662 (1960) (excess profits tax redetermination); Olson Rug

Congress legislated against the backdrop of this case law, particularly since it expressly intended "to delimit the exception [5] as narrowly as consistent with efficient Government operation." S.Rep. No. 813, at 9. See H.Rep.No.1497, at 10. Virtually all of the courts that have thus far applied Exemption 5 have recognized that it requires different treatment for materials reflecting deliberative or policy-making processes on the one hand, and purely factual, investigative matters on the other.[16]

[11, 12] Nothing in the legislative history of Exemption 5 is contrary to such a construction. When the bill that ultimately became the Freedom of Information Act, [90] S. 1160, was introduced in the 89th Congress, it contained an exemption that excluded:

> intra-agency or inter-agency memorandums or letters dealing solely with matters of law or policy.[17]

This formulation was designed to permit "[a]ll factual material in Government records * * * to be made available to the public." S.Rep.

Co. v. NLRB, 291 F. 2d 655, 660, 662 (CA7 1961) (discovery for use in defense to contempt proceedings); O'Keefe v. Boeing Co., 38 F.R.D. 329, 336 (SDNY 1965) (private tort action; Air Force Investigation Reports); Rosee v. Board of Trade, 36 F.R.D. 684, 687–688 (ND Ill. 1965); United States v. Cotton Valley Operators Comm., 9 F.R.D. 719 (WD La. 1949), aff'd by equally divided court, 339 U.S. 940, 70 S. Ct. 793, 94 L. Ed. 1356 (1950) (civil antitrust suit). Cf. United States v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 25 F.R.D. 485, 492 (NJ 1960) (criminal antitrust prosecution). See Wigmore § 2379, at 812.

In Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., supra, where in camera inspection of the documents was refused because of plaintiff's failure to make a definite showing of necessity, 157 F. Supp., at 947, the "objective facts" contained in the disputed document were "otherwise available." Id., at 946.

[16] See, e.g., Soucie v. David, 145 U.S. App. D.C. 144, 448 F. 2d 1067 (1971); Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp. v. Renegotiation Bd., 138 U.S. App. D.C. 147, 425 F. 2d 578, 582 (1970); Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 138 U.S. App. D.C. 22, 424 F. 2d 935 (1970); International Paper Co. v. FPC, 438 F.2d 1349, 1358–1359 (CA2), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 827, 92 S.Ct. 61, 30 L.Ed.2d 56 (1971); General Services Admin. v. Benson, 415 F.2d 878 (CA9 1969) aff'g, 289 F. Supp. 590 (WD Wash. 1969); Long Island R. Co. v. United States, 318 F. Supp. 490, 499 n. 9 (EDNY 1970); Consumers Union v. Veterans Admin., 301 F. Supp. 796 (SDNY 1969), appeal dismissed as moot, 436 F.2d 1363 (CA2 1971); Olson v. Camp., 328 F. Supp. 728, 731 (ED Mich. 1970); Reliable Transfer Co. v. United States, 53 F.R.D. 24 (EDNY 1971).

The proposed Federal Rules of Evidence appear to recognize this construction of Exemption 5. Proposed Rule 509(a)(2)(A) defines "official information" to include "intragovernmental opinions or recommendations submitted for consideration in the performance of decisional or policymaking functions." Rule 509(c) further provides that "[i]n the case of privilege claimed for official information the court may require examination in camera of the information itself."

[17] Hearings before the Subcommittee of Administrative Practice and Procedure of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, on S. 1160, S. 1376, S. 1758, and S. 1879, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., at 7 (May 1965) (hereinafter 1965 Senate Hearings). This exemption had itself been broadened during its course through the Senate in the 88th Congress. The exemption originally applied only to internal memoranda "relating to the consideration and disposition of adjudicating and rulemaking matters." Section 3(c) of S. 1666, 88th Cong., 2d Sess. (1964), introduced in 110 Cong. Rec. 17086. That early formulation came under attack for not sufficiently protecting material dealing with general policy matters, not directly related to adjudication or rulemaking. See Hearings before the Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure of the Senate Judiciary Committee, on S. 1666 and S. 1663, 88th Cong., 1st Sess., at 202–203, 247 (Oct. 1963).

No. 1219, 88th Cong., 2d Sess. 7 (1964). (Emphasis in original.) The formulation was severely criticized, however, on the ground that it would permit compelled disclosure of an otherwise private document simply because the document did not deal "solely" with legal or policy matters. Documents dealing with mixed questions of fact, law and policy would inevitably, under the proposed exemption, become available to the public.[18] As a result of [838] this criticism, [91] Exemption 5 was changed to substantially its present form. But plainly the change cannot be read as suggesting that all factual material was to be rendered exempt from compelled disclosure. Congress sensibly discarded a wooden exemption that could have meant disclosure of manifestly private and confidential policy recommendations simply because the document containing them also happened to contain factual data. That decision should not be taken, however, to embrace an equally wooden exemption permitting the withholding of factual material otherwise available on discovery merely because it was placed in a memorandum with matters of law, policy or opinion. It appears to us that Exemption 5 contemplates that the public's access to internal memoranda will be governed by the same flexible, common sense approach that has long governed private parties' discovery of such documents involved in litigation with government agencies. And, as noted, that approach extended and continues to extend to the discovery of purely factual material appearing in those documents in a form that is severable without compromising the private remainder of the documents.

Petitioners further argue that although in camera inspection and disclosure of "low-level, routine, factual reports"[19] may be contemplated by Exemption 5, that type of document is not involved in this case. Rather, [92] it is argued, the documents here were submitted directly to the President by top-level government officials, involve matters of major significance, and contain, by their very nature, a blending of factual presentations and policy recommendations that are necessarily "inextricably intertwined with policymaking processes."

---

[18] See 1965 Senate Hearings, at 36, 94–95, 112–113, 205, 236–237, 244, 366–367, 382–383, 402–403, 406–407, 417, 437, 445–446, 450, 490. See 1965 House Hearings, at 27–28, 49, 208, 220, 223–224, 229–230, 245–246, 255–257. Examples of these many statements are: Federal Aviation Administration (1965 Senate Hearings, at 446):

"Few records would be entirely devoid of factual date, thus leaving papers on law and policy relatively unprotected. Staff working papers and reports prepared for use within the agency of the executive branch would not be protected by the proposed exemptions." Department of Commerce (1965 Senate Hearings, at 406):

"Under this provision, internal memorandums dealing with mixed questions of fact, law and policy could well become public information." (Emphasis in original.)

[19] Tr. of Oral Arg., at 23.

464 F.2d, at 746. For these reasons, the petitioners object both to disclosure of any portions of the documents and to in camera inspection by the District Court.

To some extent this argument was answered by the Court of Appeals, for its remand expressly directed the District Judge to disclose only such factual material that is "intertwined with policymaking processes" and that may safely be disclosed "without impinging on the policymaking decisional processes intended to be protected by this exemption." We have no reason to believe that, if petitioners' characterization of the documents is accurate, the District Judge would go beyond the limits of the remand and in any way compromise the confidentiality of deliberative information that is entitled to protection under Exemption 5.

[13–17] We believe, however, that the remand now ordered by the Court of Appeals is unnecessarily rigid. The Freedom of Information Act may be invoked by any member of "the public"—without a showing of need—to compel disclosure of confidential government documents. The unmistakable implication of the decision below is that any member of the public invoking the Act may require that otherwise confidential documents be brought forward and placed before the District Court for in camera inspection—no matter how little, if any, purely factual material may actually be contained therein. Exemption 5 mandates no such result. As was said in [839] Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., supra, at 947: "It seems * * * obvious [93] that the very purpose of the privilege, the encouragement of open expression of opinion as to governmental policy, is somewhat impaired by a requirement to submit the evidence even [in camera]." Plainly, in some situations, in camera inspection will be necessary and appropriate. But it need not be automatic. An agency should be given the opportunity, by means of detailed affidavits or oral testimony, to establish to the satisfaction of the District Court that the documents sought fall clearly beyond the range of material that would be available to a private party in litigation with the agency. The burden is, of course, on the agency resisting disclosure, 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3), and if it fails to meet its burden without in camera inspection, the District Court may order such inspection. But the agency may demonstrate, by surrounding circumstances, that particular documents are purely advisory and contain no separable, factual information. A representative document of those sought may be selected for in camera inspection. And, of course, the agency may itself disclose the factual portions of the contested documents and attempt to show, again by circumstances, that the excised portions constitute the bare bones of protected matter. In short, in camera inspection of all documents is not a necessary or inevitable tool in every case. Others are available. Cf. United States v. Reynolds, supra. In the present case, the petitioners proceeded on the theory that all of the nine documents were exempt from disclosure in their entirety under Exemption 5 by virtue of their use in the decisionmaking process. On remand, petitioners are entitled to attempt to demonstrate the propriety of withholding any documents, or portions [94] thereof, by means short of submitting them for in camera inspection.

The judgment is reversed and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Judgment reversed and case remanded.

Mr. Justice REHNQUIST took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Mr. Justice STEWART, concurring.

This case presents no constitutional claims, and no issues regarding the nature or scope of "executive privilege." It involves no effort to invoke judicial power to require any documents to be reclassified under the mandate of the new Executive Order 11652. The case before us involves only the meaning of two exemptive provisions of the so-called Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552.

My Brother DOUGLAS says that the Court makes a "shambles" of the announced purpose of that Act. But it is Congress, not the Court, that in § 552(b) (1) has ordained unquestioning deference to the Executive's use of the "secret" stamp. As the opinion of the Court demonstrates, the language of the exemption, confirmed by its legislative history, plainly withholds from disclosure "matters . . . specifically required by Executive Order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy." In short, once a federal court has determined that the Executive has imposed that requirement, it may go no further under the Act.

One would suppose that a nuclear test that engendered fierce controversy within the Executive Branch of our Government would be precisely the kind of event that should be opened to the fullest possible disclosure consistent with legitimate interests of national defense. Without such disclosure, factual information available to the concerned Executive agencies cannot be considered [95] by the people or evaluated by the Congress. And with the people and their representatives reduced to a state of ignorance, the democratic process is paralyzed.

[840] But the Court's opinion demonstrates that Congress has conspicuously failed to attack the problem that my Brother DOUGLAS discusses. Instead, it has built into the Freedom of Information Act an exemption that provides no means to question an Executive decision to stamp a document "secret," however cynical, myopic, or even corrupt that decision might have been.

The dissenting opinion of my Brother BRENNAN makes an admirably valiant effort to deflect the impact of this rigid exemption. His dissent focuses on the statutory requirement that "the court shall determine the matter de novo * * *." But the only "matter" to be determined de novo under § 552(b)(1) is whether in fact the President has required by Executive Order that the documents in question are to be kept secret. Under the Act as written, that is the end of a court's inquiry.*

As the Court points out, "Congress could certainly have provided that the Executive Branch adopt new procedures or it could have established its own procedures—subject only to whatever limitations the Executive privilege may be held to impose upon such congressional ordering." But in enacting § 552(b)(1) Congress chose, instead, to decree blind acceptance of Executive fiat.

Mr. Justice BRENNAN, with whom Mr. Justice MARSHALL joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

The Court holds today that the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552 (1970), authorizes the District [96] Court to make an in camera inspection of documents claimed to be exempt from public disclosure under Exemption 5 of the Act. In addition, the Court concludes that, as an exception to this rule, the Government may, in at least some instances, attempt to avoid in camera inspection through use of detailed affidavits or oral testimony. I concur in those aspects of the Court's opinion. In my view, however, those procedures should also govern matters for which Exemption 1 is claimed, and I therefore dissent from the Court's holding to the contrary. I find nothing whatever on the face of the statute or in its legislative history which distinguishes the two Exemptions in this respect, and the Court suggests none. Rather, I agree with my Brother DOUGLAS that the mandate of § 552(a)(3)—"the court shall determine the matter de novo and the burden is on the agency to sustain its action"—is the procedure that Congress prescribed for both Exemptions.

The Court holds that Exemption 1 immunizes from judicial scrutiny any document classified pursuant to Executive Order 10501, 3 CFR § 292 (Jan. 1, 1971).[1] In reaching this result, however, the Court

---

*Similarly rigid is § 552(b)(3), which forbids disclosure of materials that are "specifically exempted from disclosure by statute." Here, too, the only "matter" to be determined in a district court's de novo inquiry is the factual existence of such a statute, regardless of how unwise, self-protective or inadvertent the enactment might be.

[1] Executive Order 10501 was revoked on March 8, 1972, and replaced with Executive Order 11652, 37 Fed. Reg. 5209, which became effective June 1, 1972. See pp. 7–9, infra.

adopts a construction of Exemption 1 which is flatly inconsistent with the legislative history and, indeed, the unambiguous language of the Act itself.[2] In plain words, Exemption 1 exempts from disclosure only material "specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy." (Emphasis [97] added.) Executive Order 10501, however, which was promulgated 13 years before the passage of the Act, does not require that any specific docu-[841]ments be classified. Rather, the Executive Order simply delegates the right to classify to agency heads, who are empowered to classify information as Confidential, Secret, or Top Secret. Thus, the classification decision is left to the sole discretion of these agency heads. Moreover, in exercising this discretion, agency heads are not required to examine each document separately to determine the need for secrecy but, instead, may adopt blanket classifications, without regard to the content of any particular document. Thus, as §§ 3(b) and 3(c) of the Order make clear, matters for which there is no need for secrecy "in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy" may be indiscriminately classified in conjunction with those matters for which there is a genuine need for secrecy:

> 3(b) Physically Connected Documents. The classification of a file or group of physically connected documents shall be at least as high as that of the most highly classified document therein. Documents separated from the file or group shall be handled in accordance with their individual defense classification.
>
> 3(c) Multiple Classification. A document, product, or substance shall bear a classification at least as high as that of its highest classified component. The document, product, or substance shall bear only one over-all classification, notwithstanding that pages, paragraphs, sections, or components thereof bear different classifications.

Even the petitioners concede,[3] no doubt in response to the "specifically required" standard of § 552(b)(1) [98] and the "specifically stated" requirement of § 552(c),[4] that documents classified pursuant to

---

[2] "The policy of the Act requires that the * * * exemptions [be construed narrowly]." Soucie v. David, 145 U.S. App. D.C. 144, 157, 448 F.2d 1067, 1080 (1971). "A broad construction of the exemptions would be contrary to the express language of the Act." Wellford v. Hardin, 444 F.2d 21, 25 (CA4 1971).

[3] Petitioners' Brief for Certiorari, at 9, n. 4.

[4] Section 552(c) provides:

"This section does not authorize withholding of information or limit the availability of records to the public, except as specifically stated in this section. This section is not authority to withhold information from Congress."

The accompanying Senate Report emphasizes that § 552(c) places a heavy burden on the Government to justify nondisclosure:

"The purpose of [§ 552(c)] is to make it clear beyond a doubt that all materials of the Government are to be made available to the public by publication or otherwise unless explicitly allowed to be kept secret by one of the exemptions in [§ 552(b)]." S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 10 (1965) (emphasis added).

A commentator cogently argues that the "pull of the word 'specifically' [in § 552(c)] is

§ 3(b) of Executive Order 10501 cannot qualify under Exemption 1. Indeed, petitioners apparently accept the conclusion of the Court of Appeals that as to § 3(b):

> This court sees no basis for withholding on security grounds a document that, although separately unclassified, is regarded secret merely because it has been incorporated into a secret file. To the extent that our position in this respect is inconsistent with the above-quoted paragraph of Section 3 of Executive Order 10501, we deem it required by the terms and purpose of the [Freedom of Information Act], enacted subsequently to the Executive Order. 464 F.2d, at 745.

[99] Nevertheless, petitioners maintain that information classified pursuant to § 3(c) of the Order is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 1. The Court of Appeals rejected that contention, and in [842] my view, correctly. The Court of Appeals stated:

> The same reasoning applies to this provision as to the one dealing with physically-connected documents. Secrecy by association is not favored. If the non-secret components are separable from the secret remainder and may be read separately without distortion of meaning, they too should be disclosed. 464 F.2d, at 746.

Petitioners' argument, adopted by the Court, is that this construction of the Act imputes to Congress an intent to authorize judges independently to review the Executive's decision to classify documents in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy. That argument simply misconceives the holding of the Court of Appeals. Information classified pursuant to § 3(c), it must be emphasized, may receive the stamp of secrecy not because such secrecy is necessary to promote "the national defense or foreign policy," but simply because it constitutes a part of such other information which genuinely merits secrecy. Thus, to rectify this situation, the Court of Appeals ordered only that the District Court in camera determine "[i]f the non-secret components are separable from the secret remainder and may be read separately without distortion of meaning * * * ." The determination whether any components are in fact "non-secret" is left exclusively to the agency head representing the Executive Branch. The District Court is not authorized to declassify or to release information which the Executive, in its sound discretion, determines must be classified to "be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or [100] foreign policy." [5] The District Court's authority stops with the inquiry whether there are toward emphasis on [the] statutory language" of the nine stated exemptions. The "specifically stated" clause in § 552(c), he notes, "is often relevant in determining the proper interpretation of particular exemptions." K. C. Davis, Administrative Law § 3A.15, at 142 (1970 Supp.). See also Davis, The Information Act: A Preliminary Analysis, 34 U. Chi. L. Rev. 761 (1967).

---

For a detailed study of the Freedom of Information Act and its background, see Note, Comments on Proposed Amendments to § 3 of the Administrative Procedure Act: The Freedom of Information Bill, 40 Notre Dame Law. 417 (1965).

[5] See Developments in the Law—The National Security Interest and Civil Liberties, 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1130, 1224–1225 (1972).

components of the documents which would not have been independently classified as secret. If the District Court finds, on in camera inspection, that there are such components, and that they can be read separately without distortion of meaning, the District Court may order their release. The District Court's authority to make that determination is unambiguously stated in § 552(a)(3): "the [district] court shall determine the matter de novo and the burden is on the agency to sustain its action." The Court's contrary holding is in flat defiance of that congressional mandate.[6]

Indeed, only the Court of Appeals' construction is consistent with the congressional plan in enacting the Freedom of Information Act. We have the word of both Houses of Congress that the de novo proceeding requirement was enacted expressly "in order that the ultimate decision as to the propriety of the agency's action is made by the court and prevent it from becoming meaningless judicial sanctioning of agency discretion." S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. 8 (1965) (hereinafter cited as S.Rep. No. 813); H.R.Rep.No.1497, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 9 (1966) U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1966, p. 2418 (hereinafter cited as H.Rep.No.1497). What was granted, and purposely so, was a broad grant [101] to the District Court of "authority whenever it considers such action equitable and appropriate to enjoin the agency from withholding its records and to order the production of agency records improperly withheld." H.Rep. [843] No.1497, at 9, U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1966, p. 2426. And to underscore its meaning Congress rejected the traditional rule of deference to administrative determinations by "[p]lacing the burden of proof upon the agency" to justify the withholding. S.Rep.No.813, at 8; H.Rep.No.1497, at 9. The Court's rejection of the Court of Appeals' construction is inexplicable in the face of this overwhelming evidence of the congressional design.

The Court's reliance on isolated references to Executive Order 10501 in the congressional proceedings is erroneous and misleading. The Court points to a single passing reference to the Order in the House Report, which even a superficial reading reveals to be merely suggestive of the kinds of information that the Executive Branch might classify. Nothing whatever in the Report even remotely implies that the Order was to be recognized as immunizing from public disclosure the entire file of documents merely because one or even a single paragraph of one has been stamped secret. The Court also calls to its support some comments out of context of Congressmen Moss and Gallagher on the House floor. But on their face, these comments do no more than confirm that Exemption 1 was written with awareness of the existence of Executive Order 10501. Certainly, whatever the significance that may be attached to debating points in construing a statute,[7] these comments hardly support the Court's conclusion that a classification pursuant to Executive Order 10501, without more, immunizes an entire document from disclosure under Exemption 1.

---

[6] "[G]iven the requirement that a file or document is generally classified at the highest level of classification of any information enclosed, it will often be the case that a classified file will contain information that could be released separately. Because it is not 'specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret,' such information is not privileged under the Information Act. To insure that an overall classification is not being used to protect unprivileged papers, a reviewing court should inspect the documents sought by a litigant." Developments in the Law—The National Security Interest and Civil Liberties, 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1130, 1223 (1972).

[102] Executive Order 10501 was promulgated more than a decade before the Freedom of Information Act was debated in Congress. Yet no reference to the Order can be found in either the language of the Act or the Senate Report. Under these circumstances, it would seem odd, to say the least, to attribute to Congress an intent to incorporate "without reference" Executive Order 10501 into Exemption 1. Indeed, petitioners' concession that "physically connected documents," classified under § 3(b) of the Order, are not immune from judicial inspection serves only to reinforce the conclusion that the mere fact of classification under § 3(c) cannot immunize the identical documents from judicial scrutiny.

The Court's rejection of the Court of Appeals' construction of Exemption 1 is particularly insupportable in light of the cogent confirmation of its soundness supplied by the Executive itself. In direct response to the Act, Order 10501 has been revoked and replaced by Order 11652 which expressly requires classification of documents in the manner the Court of Appeals required the District Court to attempt in camera. The Order, which was issued on March 8, 1972, and became effective on June 1, 1972, 37 Fed.Reg. 5209 (Mar. 10, 1972), explicitly attributes its form to the Executive's desire to accommodate its procedures to the objectives of the Freedom of Information Act:

> The interests of the United States and its citizens are best served by making information regarding the affairs of Government readily available to the public. This concept of an informed citizenry is reflected in the Freedom of Information Act and in the current public information policies of the executive branch.

Moreover, in his statement accompanying the promulgation of the new Order, the President stated: "The Executive order I have signed today is based upon * * * [103] a reexamination of the rationale underlying the Freedom of Information Act." 8 Presidential Documents 542 (Mar. 13, 1972).

---

[7] See Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 71 S.Ct. 745, 95 L.Ed. 1035 (1951) (Jackson, J., concurring) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).

The new Order recites that "some official information and material * * * bears directly on the effectiveness of our national defense and the conduct of [844] our foreign relations" and that "[t]his official information or material, referred to as classified information or material, * * * is expressly exempted from public disclosure by Section 552(b)(1) of [the Freedom of Information Act]." (Emphasis added.) Thus, the Executive clearly recognized that Exemption 1 applies only to matter specifically classified "in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy." And in an effort to comply with the Act's mandate that genuinely secret matters be carefully separated from the nonsecret components, § 4(A) of the new Order provides:

> Documents in General * * *. Each classified document shall * * * to the extent practicable, be so marked as to indicate which portions are classified, at what level, and which portions are not classified in order to facilitate excerpting and other use.

The President emphasized this requirement in his statement:

> A major course of unnecessary classification under the old Executive order was the practical impossibility of discerning which portions of a classified document actually required classification. Incorporation of any material from a classified paper into another document usually resulted in the classification of the new document, and innocuous portions of neither paper could be released. 8 Presidential Documents 544 (Mar. 13, 1972) (emphasis added).

It is of course true, as the Court observes, that the Order "provides that the separating be done by the Ex[104]ecutive, not the Judiciary * * *." Ante, 835, n. 10. But that fact lends no support to a construction of Exemption 1 precluding judicial inspection to enforce the congressional purpose to effect release of nonsecret components separable from the secret remainder. Rather, the requirement of judicial inspection made explicit in § 552(a)(3) is the keystone of the congressional plan, expressly deemed "essential in order that the ultimate decision as to the propriety of the agency's action is made by the court and prevent it from becoming meaningless judicial sanctioning of agency discretion." S.Rep.No.813, at 8; H.Rep.No.1497, at 9. It could not be more clear, therefore, that Congress sought to make certain that the ordinary principle of judicial deference to agency discretion was discarded under this Act. The Executive was not to be allowed "to file an affidavit stating [the] conclusion [that documents are exempt] and by so doing foreclose any other determination of the fact." Cowles Communications, Inc. v. Department of Justice, 325 F. Supp. 726, 727 (ND Cal. 1971). Accord, Frankel v. SEC, 336 F. Supp. 675, 677, n. 4 (SDNY 1971), rev'd on other grounds, 460 F.2d 813 (CA2 1972);

Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. HUD, 343 F. Supp. 1176, 1180 (ED Pa. 1972).[8]

[105] [845] The Court's interpretation of Exemption 1 as a complete bar to judicial inspection of matters claimed by the Executive to fall within it wholly frustrates the objective of the Freedom of Information Act. That interpretation makes a nullity of the Act's requirement of de novo judicial review. The judicial role becomes "meaningless judicial sanctioning of agency discretion," S.Rep.No. 813, at 8; H.Rep.No.1497, at 9, the very result Congress sought to prevent by incorporating the de novo requirement.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, dissenting.

The starting point of a decision usually indicates the result. My starting point is what I believe to be the philosophy of Congress expressed in the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552.

Henry Steele Commager, our noted historian, recently wrote:

> The generation that made the nation thought secrecy in government one of the instruments of Old World tyranny and committed itself to the principle that a democracy cannot function unless the people are permitted to know what their government is up to. Now almost everything that the Pentagon and the CIA do is shrouded in secrecy. Not only are the American people not permitted to know what they are up to but even the Congress and, one suspects, the President [witness the "unauthorized" bombing of the North last fall and winter] are kept in darkness. The New York Review of Books, Oct. 5, 1972, p. 7.

[106] Two days after we granted certiorari in the case on March 6, 1972, the President revoked the old Executive Order 10501 and substituted a new one, Executive Order 11652, dated March 8, 1972, and effective June 1, 1972. The new Order states in its first paragraph that "The interests of the United States and its citizens are best served by making information regarding the affairs of Government readily available to the public. This concept of an informed citizenry is reflected in the Freedom of Information Act and in the current public information policies of the executives branch."

---

[8] In support of their claim that Executive Order 10501 automatically and without judicial review activates the exemption of § 552(b)(1), petitioners rely upon Epstein v. Resor, 421 F.2d 930 (9 Cir., 1970). Rather, Epstein confirms the Court of Appeals interpretation of the Act. The Epstein court refused a request to review in camera documents classified pursuant to Executive Order 10501, but only because the Government, at the plaintiff's request, had begun a current review of the documents on "a paper-by-paper basis." Moreover, in response to the argument that petitioners advance here—namely, that the mere classification of a document precludes judicial review—Epstein states:

"[I]n view of the legislative purpose to make it easier for private citizens to secure Government information, it seems most unlikely that [the Act] was intended to foreclose an (a)(3) judicial review of the circumstances of the exemption. Rather it would seem that [subsection] (b) was intended to specify the basis for withholding under (a)(3) and that judicial review de novo with the burden of proof on the agency should be had as to whether the conditions of exemption in truth exist." 421 F.2d, at 932–933.

While "classified information of material" as used in the Order is exempted from public disclosure, § 4 of the Order states that each classified document shall "to the extent practicable be so marked as to indicate which portions are classified, at what level, and which portions are not classified in order to facilitate excerpting and other use." § 4(A). And it goes on to say "Material containing references to classified materials, which references do not reveal classified information regarding the affairs of Ibid.

The Freedom of Information Act does not clash with the Executive Order. Indeed the new Executive Order precisely meshes with the Act and with the construction given it by the Court of Appeals. Section 552(a)(3) of the Act gives the District Court "jurisdiction to enjoin the agency from withholding agency records and to order the production of any agency records improperly withheld from the complainant." Section 552(a)(3) goes on to prescribe the procedure to be employed by the District Court. It says "the court shall determine the matter de novo and the burden is on the agency to sustain its action."

The Act and the Executive Order read together mean at the very minimum that the District Court has power [107] to direct the agency in question to go through the suppressed document and make the portion-by-portion classification to facilitate the excerpting as required by the Executive Order. Section 552(a)(3) means also that the District Court may in its discretion collaborate with the agency to make certain that the congressional policy of disclosure is effectuated.

[846] The Court of Appeals, in an exceedingly responsible opinion, directed the District Court to proceed as follows:

> (1) where material is separately unclassified but nonetheless under the umbrella of a "secret" file, the District Court should make sure that it is disclosed under the Act. This seems clear from § 552(b)(1) which states "This section does not apply to matters that are; (1) specifically required by Executive Order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy." Unless the unclassified appendage to a "secret" file falls under some other exception in § 552(b) it seems clear that it must be disclosed. The only other exception under which refuge is now sought is (b)(5) which reads that the section does not apply to "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency."

This exemption was described in the House Report as covering "any internal memorandums which would routinely be disclosed to a private party through the discovery process in litigation with the agency." H.R. Rep. No. 1497, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 10, U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1966, p. 2428. It is clear from the legislative history that while opinions and staff advice are exempt, factual matters are not. H. Rep., supra, at 10; S. Rep. No. 813, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 9. And the courts have uniformly agreed on that construction of the Act. See Soucie v. David, 448 F.2d 1067; Grumman Aircraft Eng. Corp. v. Renegotiating Bd., [108] 425 F.2d 578; Long Island R. Co. v. United States, 318 F. Supp. 490; Consumers Union v. Veterans Adm. 301 F. Supp. 796.

Facts and opinions may, as the Court of Appeals noted, be "inextricably intertwined with policy making processes" in some cases. In such an event, secrecy prevails. Yet where facts and opinions can be separated, the Act allows the full light of publicity to be placed on the facts.

Section 552(c) seems to seal the case against the government when it says "This section does not authorize withholding of information or limit the availability of records to the public, except as specifically stated in this section." Disclosure, rather than secrecy, is the rule, save for the specific exceptions in subsection (b).

The Government seeks to escape from the Act by making the Government stamp of "Top Secret" or "Secret" a barrier to the performance of the District Court's functions under § 552(a)(3) of the Act. The majority makes the stamp sacrosanct, thereby immunizing stamped documents from judicial scrutiny, whether or not factual information contained in the document is in fact colorably related to interests of the national defense or foreign policy. Yet anyone who has ever been in the Executive Branch knows how convenient the "Top Secret" or "Secret" stamp is, how easy it is to use, and how it covers perhaps for decades the footprints of a nervous bureaucrat or a wary executive.

I repeat what I said in Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606, 641–642, 92 S. Ct. 2614, 2633, 2634, 33 L.Ed.2d 583 (dissenting opinion):

> * * * as has been revealed by such exposes as the Pentagon Papers, the My Lai massacres, the Gulf of Tonkin "incident," and the Bay of Pigs invasion, the Government usually suppresses damaging news but highlights favorable news. In this filtering process the secrecy stamp is the officials' tool of suppression and it has been used to withhold infor[109]mation which in "99½%" of the cases would present no danger to national security. To refuse to publish "classified" reports would at times relegate a publisher to distributing only the press releases of Government or remaining silent; if it printed only the press releases or "leaks" it would become an [847] arm of officialdom, not its critic. Rather, in my view, when a publisher obtains a classified document he should be free to print it without fear of retribution, unless it contains material directly bearing on future, sensitive planning of the Government.

The Government looks aghast at a federal judge even looking at the secret files and deals with disdain the prospect of responsible judicial action in the area. It suggests that judges have no business declassifying "secrets," that judges are not familiar with the stuff with which these "Top Secret" or "Secret" documents deal.

This is to misconceive and distort the judicial function under § 552 (a) (3) of the Act. The Court of Appeals never dreamed that the trial judge would reclassify documents. His first task would be to determine whether nonsecret material was a mere appendage to a "secret" or "top secret" file. His second task would be to determine whether under normal discovery procedures contained in Rule 26 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, factual material in these "secret" or "top secret" material is detached from the "secret" and would therefore be available to litigants confronting the agency in ordinary lawsuits.

Unless the District Court can do those things, the much advertised Freedom of Information Act is on its way to becoming a shambles.[1] Unless federal courts can be [110] trusted, the Executive will hold complete sway and by ipse dixit make even the time of day "top secret." Certainly, the decision today will upset the "workable formula," at the heart of the legislative scheme, "which encompasses, balances, and protects all interests, yet places emphasis on the fullest possible disclosure." S.Rep.No.813, supra, at 3. The Executive Branch now has carte blanche to insulate information from public scrutiny whether or not that information bears any discernible relation to the interests sought to be protected by subsection (b) (1) of the Act. We should remember the words of Madison:

> A popular government without popular information or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue [111] to a farce or a tragedy or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance: And a people who mean to be their own Governors, must arm themselves with the power knowledge gives.[2]

I would affirm the judgment below.

---

[1] My Brother STEWART, with all deference, helps make a shambles of the Act by reading § 552(b)(1) as swallowing all the other eight exceptions. While § 552(b)(1) exempts matters "specifically required by the Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of the national defense or foreign policy," § 4 of the Executive Order, as I have noted, contemplates that not all portions of a document classified as "secret" are necessarily "secret," for the order contemplates "excerpting" of some material. Refereeing what may properly be excerpted is part of the judicial task. This is made obvious by § 552(b)(5) which keeps secret "inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency." The bureaucrat who uses the "secret" stamp obviously does not have the final say as to what "memorandums or letters" would be available by law under the Fifth exception, for § 552(a)(3) gives the District Court authority, where agency records are alleged to be "improperly withheld" to "determine the matter de novo," the "burden" being on the agency "to sustain its action." Hence § 552(b)(5), behind which the executive agency seeks refuge here, establishes a policy which is served by the fact-opinion distinction long established in federal discovery. The question is whether a private party would routinely be entitled to disclosure through discovery of some or all of the material sought to be excerpted. When the Court answers that no such inquiry can be made under § 552(b)(1), it makes a shambles of the disclosure mechanism which Congress tried to create. To make obvious the interplay of the nine exceptions listed in § 552(b), as well as § 552(c), I have attached them as an Appendix to this dissent.

[2] Letter to W. T. Barry, Aug. 4, 1822, IX The Writings of James Madison (Hunt ed. 1910) 103.

APPENDIX

[848] Sec. 552(b) and (c) of the Freedom of Information Act reads as follows:

(b) This section does not apply to matters that are—

(1) specifically required by Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy;

(2) related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency;

(3) specifically exempted from disclosure by statute;

(4) trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential;

(5) inter-agency or intra-agency memorandums or letters which would not be available by law to a party other than an agency in litigation with the agency;

(6) personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;

(7) investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes except to the extent available by law to a party other than an agency;

(8) contained in or related to examination, operating, or condition reports prepared by, on behalf of, or for the use of an agency responsible for the regulation or supervision of financial institutions; or [112] (9) geological and geophysical information and data, including maps, concerning wells.

(c) This section does not authorize withholding of information or limit the availability of records to the public, except as specifically stated in this section. This section is not authority to withhold information from Congress.

UNITED STATES v. J. B. WILLIAMS COMPANY, INC., ET AL.*

No. 70 Civ. 1589 F.T.C. Docket 8547

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, January 22, 1973)

1. CONTROL OF FALSE OR MISLEADING ADVERTISING OF DRUGS TO SHIELD CONSUMER IS ONE OBJECT OF STATUTES PROVIDING FOR IMPOSITION OF PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF F.T.C. CEASE AND DESIST ORDER.

> [521] One of objects of statutes providing for imposition of penalty for violation of FTC cease and desist order proscribing false advertisement, by mail or in commerce, for purpose of inducing purchase of drugs and providing for Commission's certification of facts to Attorney General is to control false or misleading advertising of drugs so as to shield typical consumer against deception and misinformation resulting from dissemination of such advertising and to give him opportunity to make an intelligent choice about drug products.

---

*Reported in 354 F. Supp. 521 (1973). For Opinion of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, see p. 938 herein. For case before Commission, see 68 F.T.C. 481; modified 72 F.T.C. 865.

2. CURTAILMENT OF UNFAIR COMPETITION IS A BASIC POLICY OF F.T.C. ACT.

Basic policy of Federal Trade Commission Act is to curtail unfair competition.

3. CIVIL PENALTY RECOVERY LANGUAGE IN STATUTE DOES NOT ESTABLISH THAT STATUTORY PROVISION IS NONCRIMINAL IN ACTION BUT THAT PROVISION WAS NOT INTENDED TO BE PUNITIVE.

That statute itself specifically provides that fines imposed under it are a civil penalty to be recovered in a civil action does not conclusively establish that statutory provision is noncriminal in action, but furnishes strong evidence that provision was not intended to be punitive.

4. STATUTORY PROVISION FOR CIVIL PENALTY DOES NOT COME INTO PLAY ONLY ON A FINDING OF SCIENTER.

Statutory provision for civil penalties for violations of FTC cease and desist order does not come into play only on a finding of scienter.

5. STATUTORY MAXIMUM PENALTY OF $5,000 FOR EACH VIOLATION IS NOT EXCESSIVE.

Statutory maximum penalty of $5,000 for each violation of FTC cease and desist order is not excessive.

6. ALTHOUGH ABSENCE OF EFFECTS AS A RESULT OF A SANCTION ESTABLISHES STATUTE IS NON-CRIMINAL IN NATURE, INVERSE OF SUCH PROPOSITION IS NOT TRUE.

Though, generally, absence of affirmative disability and of deterrent effects as a result of a sanction establishes that statute is noncriminal in nature, inverse of such proposition is not true.

7. SIXTH AMENDMENT RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL DID NOT APPLY TO SUIT BY U.S. TO RECOVER CIVIL PENALTIES FOR ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF F.T.C. CEASE AND DESIST ORDER.

Sixth Amendment right to jury trial did not apply to suit by United States to recover civil penalties for alleged violations of FTC cease and desist order, notwithstanding contention that action was inherently criminal in nature in that $1,000,000 in penalties was sought and though sanction statutorily prescribed [522] might involve affirmative disability or restraint and might serve incidental function of deterrence and retribution.

8. JURY TRIAL IS NOT CONSTITUTIONALLY REQUIRED IN CIVIL CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS.

Though serious criminal contempts must be tried to a jury, jury trial is not constitutionally required in civil contempt proceedings.

9. NATURE OF CIVIL CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS MAY BE COMPENSATORY OF COERCIVE.

Civil contempt proceedings may be compensatory or coercive in nature.

10. ATTRIBUTE OF LIABILITY TO A CIVIL CONTEMPT PENALTY NOT REQUIRING THAT VIOLATION OF COURT ORDER BE WILLFUL EQUALLY APPLICABLE TO PENALTY SUITS FOR VIOLATION OF FTC CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS.

Liability to a civil contempt penalty does not require that violation of a court order be willful, and such attribute is equally applicable to action for civil penalties for violation of FTC cease and desist order.

11. ATTRIBUTE OF CIVIL CONTEMPT PROCEEDING NOT OPENING TO RECONSIDERATION THE FACTUAL OR LEGAL BASIS OF THE UNDERLYING COURT ORDER EQUALLY APPLICABLE TO PENALTY SUITS FOR VIOLATION OF FTC CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS.

Civil contempt proceeding does not open to reconsideration the factual or legal basis of the underlying court order, and such attribute is equally applicable to actions for civil penalties for violation of FTC cease and desist order.

12. VINDICATION OF AUTHORITY OF U.S. COURTS IS PURPOSE OF STATUTE PROVIDING THAT U.S. COURTS HAVE AUTHORITY TO PUNISH DISOBEDIENCE OR RESISTANCE TO THEIR LAWFUL ORDERS.

Purpose of statute providing that United States courts have authority to punish disobedience or resistance to their lawful orders is to vindicate authority of United States courts.

13. PRODUCT ASSERTEDLY TO BE USED FOR PREVENTION OF IRON DEFICIENCY ANEMIA WAS A "DRUG" WITHIN THE STATUTORY DEFINITION OF "DRUG," AND AS SUCH WAS PROPER SUBJECT OF FTC CEASE AND DESIST ORDER.

Product assertedly to be used for prevention of iron deficiency anemia was a "drug" within statute providing that, for purposes of Federal Trade Commission Act provisions proscribing dissemination by mail or in commerce of false advertisements likely to produce purchase of drugs, "drug" means articles intended for use in prevention of disease in man; thus, such product was proper subject of FTC cease and desist order.

14. WHERE IRON WAS ONLY NUTRITIVE PROPERTY ADVERTISED IN ONE PRODUCT AND WAS THE MOST SIGNIFICANT NUTRITIVE PROPERTY ADVERTISED IN ANOTHER, THE PRODUCTS POSSESSED A "SUBSTANTIALLY SIMILAR PROPERTY" WITHIN THE ORDER AND PROHIBITION OF FTC ORDER APPLIES.

Where iron was only nutritive property of product advertised as "DAILY IRON SUPPLEMENT FOR WOMEN" and was most significant nutritive property of product advertised as "HIGH POTENCY IRON AND VITAMIN TONIC" and where FTC cease and desist order was designed to prohibit representations by defendants with respect to benefits to be derived from iron contained in such tonic, supplement and tonic possessed "substantially similar property" within such order, which applied to advertisements of tonic and to advertisements of any other preparation possessing substantially similar properties.

15. QUESTION OF LAW FOR COURT TO DETERMINE WAS INTERPRETATION OF F.T.C. CEASE AND DESIST ORDER DESIGNED TO PROHIBIT REPRESENTATION WITH RESPECT TO BENEFIT DERIVED FROM SPECIFIC PRODUCT AND PRODUCTS POSSESSING SUBSTANTIALLY SIMILAR PROPERTIES.

Interpretation of FTC cease and desist order which was designed to prohibit representation by defendants with respect to benefit to be derived from specific product and products possessing substantially similar properties was question of law for court to determine.

16. DEFENDANTS COULD NOT RELITIGATE ISSUE IN ACTION BY U.S. TO RECOVER CIVIL PENALTIES AGAINST SUCH DEFENDANTS FOR ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF ORDER WHERE ANOTHER CIRCUIT HAD DECIDED THAT MODIFIED ORDER WAS NOT VAGUE.

Where another circuit had, in upholding FTC cease and desist order with modifications on appeal, necessarily decided that modified order was not vague and fairly apprised defendants as to that which was expected of them, defendants could not relitigate such issue in action by United States to recover civil penalties against such defendants for alleged violations of order.

17. EVIDENCE BEFORE COURT WAS SUFFICIENT TO PERMIT COURT TO MAKE CORRECT INTERPRETATION OF ORDER.

[523] Evidence before court in action by United States to recover civil penalties for alleged violations of FTC cease and desist order, was sufficient to permit court to make correct interpretation of order.

18. NO VIOLATION OF DEFENDANTS' RIGHT TO DUE PROCESS WHEN GOVERNMENT IMPOSES PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF F.T.C. ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST PRIOR TO NOTICE BY AGENCY THAT DEFENDANTS' CONDUCT DEEMED IN VIOLATION OF THE ORDER.

Government could impose penalties with respect to alleged violations of FTC cease and desist order even if violations preceded any notice to defendants by Commission that such conduct was deemed in violation of order; and such would not violate defendants' right to due process.

19. SEVENTH AMENDMENT RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL DOES NOT EXTEND TO ACTIONS FOR CIVIL CONTEMPT.

Seventh Amendment right to jury trial does not extend to actions for civil contempt.

20. IT WAS FOR COURT TO DETERMINE AS MATTER OF LAW WHETHER ORAL AND/OR VISUAL CONTENT OF CHALLENGED ADVERTISEMENT WAS WITHIN SCOPE OF PROVISIONS IN THE ORDER.

In action by United States to recover civil penalties for alleged violations of FTC cease and desist order, once Commission established that order was in effect and that a particular advertisement, which allegedly violated order, had been disseminated, it was for court to determine as matter of law whether oral and/or visual content of challenged advertisement was within scope of provisions of the order.

21. F.T.C. ACT IS DESIGNED TO PROTECT CONSUMING PUBLIC AND BUSINESS COMMUNITY FROM FALSE ADVERTISING.

Federal Trade Commission Act is designed to protect consuming public and business community from false advertising.

22. INTERPRETATION OF WRITTEN CONTRACT IS A MATTER OF LAW FOR THE COURT.

Interpretation of written contract is a matter of law for the court.

23. QUESTION AS TO REPRESENTATIONS MADE IN DEFENDANT'S ADVERTISEMENTS WAS FOR COURT TO DETERMINE.

Though views of FTC were relevant in determining meaning of FTC cease and desist order, question, in action for civil penalties for violations of orders, as to representations made in defendant's advertisements was for court to determine on basis of content of advertisements.

24. DISSEMINATION OF ADVERTISEMENTS CONTAINING CERTAIN REPRESENTATIONS AS TO "BLOOD-BUILDING POWER" OF PRODUCT VIOLATED PORTIONS OF F.T.C. ORDER.

Dissemination of advertisements all of which claimed that product carried "blood-building power to every part of your body" and that it "builds iron power in your blood fast" and some of which showed transformation of "tired blood" into "untired" blood as result of use of product violated portion of FTC order, which enjoined dissemination of any advertisement representing that purported "HIGH POTENCY IRON AND VITAMIN TONIC" or any similar preparation would be beneficial in treatment or relief or tiredness symptoms unless advertisement contained expressed disclosures, and violated other comparable portions of order.

25. Dissemination of Advertisements Containing Certain Representations to Effect That Product "Builds Iron Power Fast" Violated Portions of F.T.C. Order.

Dissemination of advertisements, all of which contained statements to effect that product "builds iron power fast" and some of which showed transformation of "iron-poor blood cells * * * pale, few in number, badly shaped," i.e. "tired blood," into "iron-rich red blood" with "more blood cells * * * better shaped * * * rich in iron," i.e. healthy, "untired" blood, as a result of use of certain product, violated portion of FTC order which enjoined dissemination of advertisement representing that tiredness, loss of strength, rundown feeling, nervousness or irritability were generally reliable indications of iron deficiency or iron deficiency anemia.

26. Dissemination of Advertisement Containing Certain Representations That Product Carried Its High Potency Iron Throughout Body Violated FTC Order.

Dissemination of advertisement, in which it was stated that product carried its high potency iron throughout body and which depicted person with iron-poor blood as having been transformed from "sad" to "glad" state as result of taking such product, and dissemination of similar advertisements violated portions of FTC order prohibiting dissemination of [524] any advertisement which created impression that tired feeling was caused by iron deficiency or which linked tired symptoms with iron deficiency anemia.

27. Dissemination of Advertisement Stating That Product Built Iron Power in Blood and Depicted "Sad" to "Glad" Transformation of Person Taking Such Product Violated Portions of F.T.C. Order.

Dissemination of advertisement, in which it was stated that product built iron power in blood and which depicted "sad" to "glad" transformation of person who took product after she discovered that she had iron-poor blood, and dissemination of similar advertisement violated portions of FTC order prohibiting dissemination of any advertisement which created impression that tired feeling was caused by iron deficiency or which linked tiredness symptoms with iron deficiency anemia.

28. Dissemination of Advertisements Depicting "Vital Look" Purported to Use of "Feminine Iron Tablet" Violated Portions of FTC Order.

Dissemination of advertisements, which showed closeup of "tired mother" and contained statement "You see, some women even risk becoming anemic and tired," and which depicted "vital look" of user of purported "FEMININE IRON TABLET," violated portions of FTC order prohibiting dissemination of any advertising which created impression that tired feeling was caused by iron deficiency or which linked tiredness symptoms with iron deficiency anemia, notwithstanding assertion that sole theme of advertisement was prevention.

29. STATUTORY REQUIREMENT FOR CERTIFICATION OF FACTS OF VIOLATION OF FTC ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST DOES NOT REQUIRE CERTIFICATION OR RECOMMENDATION AS TO AMOUNT OF PENALTIES TO BE SOUGHT.

Statute which requires that FTC certify facts which give it reason to believe that any corporation is liable for a penalty for violation of Commission cease and desist order does not require certification or recommendation by FTC to Attorney General as to amount of penalties which should be sought.

30. ATTORNEY GENERAL'S DUTY TO BRING APPROPRIATE PROCEEDINGS BASED ON FACTS CERTIFIED TO HIM NOT ALTERED BY DRAFT OF COMPLAINT SEEKING $500,000 IN PENALTIES OR LACK OF SUGGESTION THAT PROCEEDINGS SEEKING $1,000,000 IN PENALTIES WOULD NOT BE APPROPRIATE.

That letter of certification of FTC was accompanied by a "draft of complaint" which only sought a total of $500,000 in penalties for alleged violations of Commission cease and desist order did not alter duty of Attorney General to bring appropriate proceedings based on facts certified to him and did not suggest that proceedings seeking $1,000,000 in penalties would not be appropriate.

31. FTC CERTIFICATION OF FACTS WARRANTING ONLY $500,000 IN FINES WOULD NOT CREATE A JURISDICTIONAL BAR TO AWARD OF GREATER PENALTIES.

Even if FTC certified to Attorney General that facts of case only warranted imposition of total fine of $500,000 for violation of Commission cease and desist order, such would not have created jurisdictional bar to award of greater penalties.

32. EVEN IF DEFENDANT CORPORATIONS WERE NOT DE FACTO SEPARATE, SUCH WOULD NOT PRECLUDE IMPOSITION OF PENALTIES AGAINST EACH CORPORATION FOR SAME VIOLATIONS.

Even if defendant corporations which were subject to FTC cease and desist order, were not de facto separate, such did not preclude imposition of penalties against each corporation with respect to same violations.

33. WHERE FTC ORDER HAD BEEN ENFORCED BY ANOTHER CIRCUIT, VALIDITY OF ORDER WAS NOT REVIEWABLE IN GOVERNMENT'S ACTION FOR CIVIL PENALTIES.

Where FTC cease and desist order had been enforced against defendants by another circuit, validity or order was not reviewable in government's action against such defendants for civil penalties for alleged violations of order.

34. STATUTORY PENALTY COULD BE INVOKED MORE THAN ONCE FOR DISSEMINATION OF EACH COMMERCIAL IN VIOLATION OF FTC ORDER.

Statutory penalty could be invoked more than once for dissemination of each commercial in violation of FTC order prohibiting dissemination of certain advertisement.

35. WHERE GOVERNMENT'S CLAIM WAS NOT THAT DEFENDANTS HAD FAILED OR NEGLECTED TO DO SOMETHING BUT THAT THEY DID SPECIFIC PROHIBITED ACTS, PROVISO THAT "EACH DAY OF CONTINUATION OF SUCH FAILURE OR NEGLECT SHALL BE DEEMED A SEPARATE OFFENSE" WAS NOT APPLICABLE.

Proviso that "each day of continuation of such failure or neglect shall be deeemd a separate offense" was not applicable, in action by Government for civil penalties for alleged violations of FTC cease and desist order where government's claim was not that defendants had failed or neglected to do something but rather that defendants did specific acts which were prohibited by order.

36. PURPOSE OF PROVISO REGARDING OFFENSES BEING DEEMED SEPARATE OFFENSES FOR EACH DAY OF CONTINUANCE IS TO ASSURE FINES OF MORE THAN $5,000.

[525] Purpose of statutory proviso that "each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense" is to assure that individuals or corporations who fail to do some act which they are specifically required to do by FTC may be fined more than $5,000.

37. FINANCIAL ABILITY TO PAY PENALTIES, DEGREE OF HARM CAUSED BY VIOLATIONS, AND WHETHER DEFENDANTS HAVE ACTED IN GOOD FAITH OR BAD ARE FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PENALTIES TO BE ASSESSED.

Factors to be considered in determining the amount of penalties to be assessed for violation of FTC cease and desist order are financial ability of denfendants to pay penalties demanded, degree of harm which defendants may have cause by their violations and whether defendants have acted in good or bad faith in violating order.

38. COURT WOULD ENTERTAIN APPLICATION TO PAY PENALTIES IN INSTALLMENTS WITH INTERESTS ON SHOWING OF NECESSITY WHERE DEFENDANT MIGHT HAVE DIFFICULTY PAYING ASSESSED FINES IN LUMP SUM.

Where it appeared that a defendant in action by Government for civil penalties for alleged violations of FTC cease and desist order might have difficulty in paying assessed fines in a lump sum, court would entertain any application by such defendant to pay penalties over period of years, in installments with interest, on a showing of necessity therefor.

39. ADVERTISING REACHING VAST AUDIENCE AT GREAT EXPENSE MAY BE ASSUMED TO CAUSE SIGNIFICANT MONETARY HARM TO PUBLIC AND SHOULD BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN DETERMINING PENALTY.

If advertising, which has been conducted in violation of FTC cease and desist order, has reached vast audience at great expense, it may be assumed that such advertising has caused significant monetary harm to public, and such should be taken into account in determining penalty to be invoked.

40. TOTAL LACK OF GOOD FAITH, WILLFUL VIOLATIONS, AND RECKLESS DISREGARD OF CEASE AND DESIST ORDER PROVISIONS PERTAINING TO DISSEMINATION OF CERTAIN ADVERTISING, WOULD IMPOSE MAXIMUM PENALTY OF $5,000 AGAINST DEFENDANT HAVING FINANCIAL ABILITY TO PAY FOR EACH VIOLATION AND A $4,000 PENALTY FOR EACH VIOLATION AGAINST DEFENDANT HAVING DIFFICULTY IN PAYING PENALTIES ASSESSED.

Where violations of cease and desist order related to dissemination of unlawful advertisements over network television and where there was total lack of good faith with respect to violations pertaining to dissemination of certain advertisements and, if not willful violations of order, at least reckless disregard of its provisions, maximum penalty of $5,000 would be imposed against defendant, which had financial ability to pay maximum penalties sought, for each violation involving such advertisements and penalty of $4,000 for each such violation would be imposed against defendant which might have had difficulty in paying, in a lump sum, penalties assessed.

41. FAILURE OF RESPONDENTS TO OBTAIN FTC ADVICE ON ADVERTISEMENTS PRIOR TO DISSEMINATION AND CONTINUED DISSEMINATION AFTER SUBMISSION OF SAME AS PART OF COMPLIANCE REPORT WITHOUT AWAITING ADVICE BY FTC ESTABLISHES BAD FAITH AND AMOUNTS TO GROSS NEGLIGENCE BORDERING ON RECKLESSNESS. PENALITY OF $4,000 ASSESSED AGAINST DEFENDANT FINANCIALLY ABLE TO PAY IN LUMP SUM, AND $3,000 AGAINST DEFENDANT UNABLE TO PAY IN LUMP SUM WITH RESPECT TO EACH VIOLATION.

Where violations of FTC cease and desist order related to dissemination of unlawful advertisements over network television and where defendants did not submit certain advertisements to FTC prior to their dissemination in violation of order, despite fact that defendants' employees were aware that advertisements might violate order, penalty of $4,000 would be imposed against defendant, which had financial ability to pay maximum penalties sought, for each violation involving such advertisements and penalty of $3,000 for each such violation would be imposed against defendant which might have difficulty in paying, in a lump sum, the penalties assessed.

42. DISSEMINATION OF CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS AFTER ADVICE BY APPROPRIATE FTC DIVISION THAT SAID ADVERTISEMENTS WERE COVERED BY THE ORDER CONSTITUTES WILLFUL DISREGARD OF FTC ORDER; AND COURT IMPOSED MAXIMUM PENALTY OF $5,000 AGAINST DEFENDANT ABLE TO PAY IN LUMP SUM, AND $4,000 AGAINST DEFENDANT UNABLE TO PAY IN LUMP SUM WITH RESPECT TO EACH VIOLATION.

Where violations of FTC cease and desist order related to dissemination of unlawful advertisement over network television and where defendants, in violation of order, had disseminated certain advertisements over one month after they were advised that appropriate division of FTC considered product advertisement to be covered by order, maximum penalty of $5,000 would be imposed against defendant, which had financial ability to pay maximum penalties sought, for each violation involving such advertisements and penalty of $4,000 for each such violation would be imposed against defendant which might have difficulty [526] in paying, in a lump sum, the penalties assessed.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 354 F. Supp. 521)

On motion for summary judgment, court held that Sixth Amendment right to jury trial did not apply to action involving $1,000,000 in civil penalties and, inter alia, that dissemination of advertisements depicting persons with iron-poor blood as having been transformed from "sad" to "glad" state as result of taking defendants' product and dissemination of similar advertisements violated portions of prior FTC cease and desist order.

Motion granted.

Whitney North Seymour, Jr., U.S. Atty., by Patricia M. Hynes, Asst. U.S. Atty., New York City, Janet D. Saxon, Bureau of Consumer Protection, F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for plaintiff.

Hughes, Hubbard & Reed, by Powell Pierpoint, New York City, Covington & Burling, by James H. McGlothlin, John Vanderstar, Washington, D.C., Henry E. Schultz, New York City, for defendants.

MOTLEY, District Judge.

OPINION ON MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

This action was instituted against defendants to recover civil penalties for alleged violation of a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) cease and desist order. Federal Trade Commission Act (F.T.C. Act), Section 5(l), 15 U.S.C. § 45(l).

The order, which was enforced by the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit with modifications, see J. B. Williams Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 F. 2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967), reads in pertinent part as follows:

> IT IS ORDERED that respondents, The J. B. Williams Company, Inc., a corporation, and Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., a corporation, * * * directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the offering for sale, or distribution of the preparation designated Geritol Liquid or the preparation designated Geritol Tablets, or any other preparation of substantially similar composition or possessing substantially similar properties, under whatever name or names sold, do forthwith cease and desist from:
>
> 1. Disseminating or causing to be disseminated by means of the United States mails or by any means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, any advertisement
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> (b) which represents directly or by implication that the preparation is a generally effective remedy for tiredness, loss of strength, rundown feeling, nervousness or irritability;
>
> (c) which represents directly or by implication that the preparation is an effective remedy for tiredness, loss of strength, rundown feeling, nervousness or irritability in more than a small minority of persons experiencing such symptoms;
>
> (d) which represents directly or by implication that the use of such preparation will be beneficial in the treatment or relief of tiredness, loss of strength, run-down feeling, nervousness or irritability, unless such advertisement expressly limits the claim of effectiveness of the preparation to those persons whose symptoms are due to an existing deficiency of one or more of the vitamins contained in the preparation, or to an existing deficiency of iron or to iron deficiency anemia, and further, unless the advertisement also discloses clearly and conspicuously that: (1) in the great majority of persons who experience such symptoms, these symptoms are not caused by a deficiency of one or more of the vitamins contained in the preparation or by iron deficiency or iron deficiency anemia; and (2) for such persons the preparation will be of no benefit;
>
> (e) which represents directly or by implication that tiredness, loss of strength, run-down feeling, nervousness or irritability are generally reliable indications of iron deficiency or iron deficiency anemia;
>
> * * * * * * *

[527] In Matter of J. B. Williams Company, Inc., Federal Trade Commission Docket No. 8547, November 24, 1967. (Modified order to cease and desist.)

This order became final by operation of law on December 24, 1967, 15 U.S.C. § 45(i), and has remained in effect since that date. The validity of the order is not subject to question in this action. See Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 54, 68 S.Ct. 822, 92 L.Ed. 1196 (1948); Piuma v. United States, 126 F.2d 601, 603 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 317 U.S. 637, 63 S.Ct. 28, 87 L.Ed. 513 (1942); United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F.Supp. 383, 388 (S.D.N.Y. 1966); United States v. Vitasafe Corporation, 212 F.Supp. 397, 398 (S.D.N.Y. 1962); cf. Parke, Austin & Lipscombe, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F.2d 437, 442 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 753, 65 S.Ct. 86, 89 L.Ed. 603 (1944).

The alleged violations of the order consist of the dissemination by defendants of eleven different television advertisements on a total of 100 separate occasions. The United States seeks the maximum penalty of $5000 for each violation, as prescribed by Section 5(l), of the F.T.C. Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(l), or a total of $500,000 in penalties against each defendant.

Before initiation of the instant suit by the United States, the facts which gave rise to it were properly certified by the FTC to the Attorney General of the United States, as required by Section 16 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 56[1]

The United States now moves for summary judgment. For the reasons set forth below, the motion is granted.

I. Propriety of the Motion for Summary Judgment

A. Defendants Do Not Have the Right to Trial by Jury

At the outset, the court must consider defendants' claim that summary judgment would be improper in this action because "the Sixth Amendment requires a jury trial in this case." Defendants' Memorandum 32. To support this argument defendants cite the Supreme Court decision in Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 88 S.Ct. 1477, 20 L.Ed.2d 522 (1968), which held that serious criminal contempts must be tried to a jury. Defendants argue that the instant action, seeking penalties of $1,000,000, is "inherently criminal in nature" and "so similar to a criminal contempt proceeding, [that] defendants must be extended exactly the same right to a jury trial as they would have enjoyed had the Commission sought to impose the identical fines in a criminal contempt proceeding." Defendants' Memorandum 32, 34–35.

---

[1] Defendants' contention regarding the scope of the certification is discussed infra, at pp. 544–546 [pp. 512–516 herein].

Plaintiff simply responds in its reply brief that "this action, as well as all prior civil penalty actions involving violations of Federal Trade Commission orders to cease and desist, is clearly civil in nature." Reply Memorandum 14. Plaintiff also points out that no court has ever held that a civil penalty action involving violations of a FTC order was criminal rather than civil in nature.

The court does not believe that defendants' contention can be dismissed so easily. However, the court reads two lines of Supreme Court cases as clearly establishing that the Sixth Amendment right to jury trial does not apply to suits brought by the United States pursuant to Section 5(l).

The first line of cases culminating in Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 83 S.Ct. 554, 9 L.Ed.2d 644 (1963), considers the question of whether a sanction imposed by a particular legislative enactment is penal or regulatory in character. The Court in Kennedy set forth the revelant criteria for answering this question in a specific case. Absent conclusive evidence of congressional intent as to the penal nature of a statute, the Court noted, in dictum, that "[various] [528] factors must be considered in relation to the statute on its face."

> Whether the sanction involves an affirmative disability or restraint, whether it has historically been regarded as a punishment, whether it comes into play only on a finding of scienter, whether its operation will promote the traditional aims of punishment—retribution and deterrence, whether the behavior to which it applies is already a crime, whether an alternative purpose to which it may rationally be connected is assignable for it, and whether it appears excessive in relation to the alternative purpose assigned are all relevant to the inquiry * * *. Kennedy, supra, 372 U.S. at 168–169, 83 S.Ct. at 567.

[1,2] On their face the stautory provisions under which this action has been brought, Sections 5(l), 12 and 16 of the F.T.C. Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45, 52 and 56, are regulatory in character. There is no doubt that, taken together, one of their objects is to control false or misleading advertising of drugs in order to shield the typical consumer against deception and misinformation resulting from dissemination of such advertising and to give him an opportunity to make an intelligent choice about drug products. See, e.g., J. B. Williams, supra, 381 F.2d at 890; Federal Trade Commission v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 317 F.2d 669, 674 (2d Cir. 1963). In this way, too, the provisions promote the basic policy of the F.T.C. Act of curtailing unfair competition. See, e.g., Federal Trade Commission v. Texaco, 393 U.S. 223, 225–226, 89 S.Ct. 429, 21 L.Ed.2d 394 (1968). In the regulatory scheme, the civil penalty provision of Section 5(l) serves the distinct function of compelling compliance with FTC cease and desist orders which have been issued to protect the consuming public and the business community in the manner just described. See United States v. St. Regis Paper Company, 355 F.2d 688, 692–695 (2d Cir. 1966).[2]

[3] Section 5(l) itself specifically provides that the fines imposed are a "civil penalty" to be recovered in a "civil action". While this characterization by Congress does not conclusively establish that the statutory provision is non-criminal in nature, see United States v. Constantine, 296 U.S. 287, 294, 56 S.Ct. 223, 80 L.Ed. 233 (1935), cf. Kennedy, supra, 372 U.S. at 163–184, 83 S.Ct. 554, it does furnish very strong evidence that Congress did not intend the provision to be punitive. Indeed, when Congress wished to make the dissemination of certain types of false advertising a criminal offense, it did exactly that. See 15 U.S.C. § 54(a). See also 15 U.S.C. § 50. A comparison of Section 12 with Section 14(a) of the F.T.C. Act strongly suggests that Congress viewed the sanction in Section 5(l) of the Act, as applied to the dissemination of false advertising, to be regulatory rather than penal in character. See also St. Regis Paper, supra, 355 F.2d at 692–699. (Held: Certification of facts by FTC to Attorney General pursuant to Section 16 of the Act is jurisdictional prerequisite to civil penalty suit under Section 5(l) of the Act.)

Furthermore, since here "the source of legislative concern can be thought to be the activity * * * from which the individual [or corporation] is barred," i.e. the dissemination of false advertising, the sanction imposed "is not punishment even though it may bear harshly upon one affected." Flemming v. Nestor, 363 U.S. 603, 614, 80 S.Ct. 1367, 1374, 4 L.Ed.2d 1435 (1960). See id. at 616 and 616 n. 9, 80 S.Ct. 1367, approved in dictum in Kennedy, supra, 372 U.S. at 169 n. 28, 83 S.Ct. 554. The sanction prescribed by Section 5(l) remains an integral part of the regulatory scheme and is not punishment in the criminal law sense, even though its imposition may have severe effects on violators of FTC cease and desist orders. Cf. Fleming, supra, 363 U.S. at 616 and 616 n. 9, 80 S.Ct. 1367.

[529] [4] Moreover, the civil penalty provision does not come into play only on a finding of scienter. See United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F. Supp. 383, 388 (S.D.N.Y.1966) and cases cited therein; cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Company, 291 U.S. 67, 81, 54 S.Ct. 315, 78 L.Ed. 655 (1934). Nor is dissemination of the challenged advertisements punishable as a crime either under the F.T.C. Act or any other act of Congress.

[5] Finally, Section 5(l) has not historically been regarded as a punishment, as evidenced by the fact that not a single decision which has been brought to the attention of the court has even hinted that

---

[2] The Court of Appeals noted that there was "little explanation or elaboration in [congressional] hearings or debates" about the section. 355 F.2d at 692.

the provision is penal in character. Cf. St. Regis Paper, supra, 355 F.2d at 694 ("* * * the 'Federal Trade Commission Act is not a revenue-raising or penal measure.'") See also Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Company, 343 U.S. 470, 72 S.Ct. 800, 96 L.Ed. 1081 (1952) ("Orders of the Federal Trade Commission are not intended to impose criminal punishment * * *, but to prevent illegal practices in the future." At 473, 72 S.Ct. at 803); United States v. Vitasafe Corporation, 234 F. Supp. 710 (S.D.N.Y.1964), aff'd per curiam, 352 F. 2d 62 (2d Cir. 1965). Nor can the court say that the penalty provided in Section 5(l) is in any sense excessive in relation to the clear prophylactic purpose of the statute.

[6] On the other hand, the court does think that the sanction prescribed by Section 5(l) may involve an affirmative disability or restraint [3] and may serve the incidental function of deterrence and retribution, once a cease and desist order takes effect. However, these factors are far outweighed by the significance of the other factors discussed above, particularly when all the factors are viewed in relation to the statute on its face. Moreover, although the absence of an affirmative disability and of deterrent effects as a result of a sanction generally establishes its non-criminal nature, see Flemming, supra, 363 U.S. at 617, 80 S.Ct. 1367, the inverse of this proposition is not true. See Rex Trailer Company v. United States, 350 U.S. 148, 76 S.Ct. 219, 100 L.Ed. 149 (1956) and arguments of counsel in that case at 100 L.Ed. 150–152. Cf. pages 529–530 infra.

[7] Therefore, applying the Kennedy criteria set forth above to the face of the statute, the court holds that the statutory provisions in question can only be interpreted as regulatory in nature and that the Sixth Amendment right to trial by jury is not applicable to defendants in this action.

[8] This conclusion is buttressed by a second line of Supreme Court cases which consider the distinction between proceedings for civil contempt and those for criminal contempt. While serious criminal contempts must be tried to a jury, see Bloom v. Illinois, supra, the Supreme Court has held that a jury trial is not constitutionally required in civil contempt proceedings. See Shillitani v. United States, 384 U.S. 364, 365, 371, 86 S.Ct. 1531, 16 L.Ed.2d 622 (1966).

Defendants argue that the instant action should be likened to a criminal contempt proceeding, both because of "the enormous size of the fines sought" and "because plaintiff is seeking to recover a penalty, not compensatory damages." Defendants' Memorandum 33. (Emphasis in original.) The argument is untenable. Indeed precedents in both the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals for this circuit convince the court that the instant action is so analogous to a civil contempt proceeding that no jury trial can or should be required here.

---

[3] The court is doubtful that Section 5(l) does involve an affirmative disability or restraint within the meaning of Flemming, supra, 363 U.S. at 617, 80 S.Ct. 1367.

[9] First, defendants' contention ignores the fact that civil contempt proceedings may be compensatory or coercive in nature. See Shillitani, supra, at 368–371, 86 S.Ct. 1531; Backo v. Local 281, United Brotherhood of Carpenters [530] and Joiners of America, 438 F.2d 176, 182 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 858, 92 S.Ct. 110, 30 L.Ed.2d 99 (1971). The statutory provision underlying the present action, Section 5(l) of the F.T.C. Act, is coercive in the same way that the conditional imprisonment imposed in Shillitani was coercive. It serves the same coercive function as does the liability to a fine for violating an injunction.

In each case, the question to be asked is: what does the sanction seek to accomplish? See Shillitani, supra, 384 U.S. at 370, 86 S.Ct. 1531. Where the sanction seeks to compel the person subject to it to do what he is legally required to do, the sanction is neither punitive nor criminal, but simply remedial in purpose. The penalty prescribed by Section 5(l) in the context of this action is "intended to be remedial by coercing the defendant[s] to do what [they have] refused to do," i.e. to cease and desist from disseminating advertisements of a type which the Commission has found to be misleading. See Penfield Company of California v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 330 U.S. 585, 590, 67 S.Ct. 918, 91 L.Ed. 1117 (1947); Gompers v. Bucks Store & Range Company, 221 U.S. 418, 442, 31 S.Ct. 492, 55 L.Ed. 797 (1911). Cf. L. G. Balfour Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 442 F.2d 1, 24 (7th Cir. 1971).

Second, defendants' contention that the size of the fines sought in this action turns the action into a criminal proceeding is erroneous. The Supreme Court has upheld the power of courts to imprison witnesses who refuse to testify before a grand jury under a civil contempt order, even though the imprisonment may continue for a lengthy period and may depend upon "fortuitous circumstances, such as the life of the grand jury and when a witness appears." Shillitani, supra, 384 U.S. at 371–372, 86 S.Ct. 1531 at 1536. Similarly, the imposition of a fine of $5000 for each separate violation of a FTC cease and desist order while it is in effect remains a civil penalty, so long as it was within the power of the violator to have abided by the order and thereby to have avoided the sanction. See Shillitani, supra, 368–370, 86 S.Ct. 1531. See also 8A J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 42.02 [2] (2d Ed. 1972).

[10, 11] In other respects as well, Section 5(l) resembles a civil contempt sanction. Liability to a civil contempt penalty does not require that violation of a court order be wilful. See McComb v. Jack- sonville Paper Company, 336 U.S. 187, 191, 69 S.Ct. 497, 93 L.Ed. 599 (1947); National Labor Relations Board v. Local 282, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, 428 F.2d 994, 1001 (2d Cir. 1970). Nor does a civil contempt proceeding open to reconsideration the factual or legal basis of the underlying court order. See Maggio v. Zeitz, 333 U.S. 56, 69, 68 S.Ct. 401, 92 L.Ed. 476 (1948). These attributes of a civil contempt proceeding apply equally to actions under Section 5(l). See pages 527 and 529 supra.

[12] Finally, defendants' argument that the FTC could have petitioned the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to bring criminal contempt proceedings against defendants for precisely the same alleged violations and asking for the same fines as are involved here (Defendants' Memorandum 33–34) is of no avail to defendants. Indeed, it simply points up the fact that Congress intended Section 5(l) to provide a non-criminal means for the FTC to enforce valid cease and desist orders. The statutory provision bolsters the regulatory goals of the entire Federal Trade Commission Act. In contrast, a criminal contempt proceeding to enforce a Commission order would have to be brought under the United States Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C. § 401, which is designed to vindicate the authority of the courts of the United States, a purpose wholly separate from that of the regulatory statute. See, e.g., Cheff v. Schnackenberg, 384 U.S. 373, 377–378, 86 S.Ct. 1523, 16 L.Ed.2d 629 (1966); United States v. Schine, 266 [531] F.2d 552, 557 (2d Cir. 1958), cert denied, 358 U.S. 934, 79 S.Ct. 318, 3 L.Ed.2d 306 (1959); 8A J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 42.02 [2] (2d Ed.1972). Furthermore, the same conduct can amount to both civil and criminal contempt. See United States v. United Mine Workers, 330 U.S. 258, 298–299, 67 S.Ct. 677, 91 L.Ed. 884 (1947); Gompers, supra, 221 U.S. at 441–442, 31 S.Ct. 492; 5 J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 38.33 [1] (2d Ed. 1971). Therefore, the observation of defendants does not support its claim that this action has the character of a criminal proceeding.

B. FemIron

[13] FemIron is another iron preparation sold by defendant J. B. Williams Company. Counts ten and eleven of the complaint relate to the dissemination by defendants of FemIron advertisements. In their answer to the complaint, defendants deny that FemIron is a drug preparation within the meaning of Section 15 of the F.T.C. Act. Moreover, defendants contend that whether FemIron is covered by the FTC order presents a genuine issue of fact which cannot be determined on this motion for summary judgment. Both contentions are rejected.

Section 15(c) of the F.T.C. Act states that the term "drug" means, inter alia, "articles intended for use in the * * * prevention of disease in man * * *." 15 U.S.C. § 55(c) (2). In paragraphs 46 and 50 of their answer, defendants aver that "FemIron is a product for the prevention of * * * iron deficiency anemia." Consequently, it is clear that FemIron is a "drug" and that FemIron advertisements are a proper subject of the FTC order. See 15 U.S.C. § 52.

[14] The FTC order applies by its terms not only to advertisements of Geritol Liquid or Geritol Tablets, but also to advertisements of "any other preparation * * * possessing substantially similar properties, under whatever name or names sold." Defendants argue that FemIron does not possess properties substantially similar to those of Geritol. They support this argument with numerous affidavits of recognized experts in the fields of iron deficiency anemia and nutrition. Thus, defendants assert, there is a dispute as to this substantial issue of fact and the motion for summary judgment, at least as to counts ten and eleven, should not be granted. See Defendants' Memorandum 47–48.

The court rejects this argument for two reasons. First, it is undisputed that both Geritol and FemIron are iron preparations. They are also both indicated for use as a dietary supplement. The Geritol Tablet label states that it is "A HIGH POTENCY IRON AND VITAMIN TONIC" and that it may be used "As a dietary supplement: One (1) tablet daily." See, e.g., Beutler Affidavit, Exhibit B, submitted by defendants. The FemIron label indicates that it is a "DAILY IRON SUPPLEMENT FOR WOMEN * * * DIRECTIONS: One tablet every day with any meal." Id. The labels in themselves establish that the preparations possess substantially similar properties within the meaning of the FTC order.

Second, the FTC order was designed to prohibit representations by defendants with respect to the benefit to be derived from the iron contained in Geritol. The phrase "possessing substantially similar properties" must be interpreted in this light. It is undisputed that FemIron contains only one nutritive ingredient, iron, and that it is less effective than Geritol, which contains more iron per tablet as well as seven vitamins. Therefore, FemIron's single chemical property is the very same property which distinguishes Geritol from other drug preparations and for which Geritol is advertised. In this sense, FemIron possesses properties substantially similar to those of Geritol. Indeed, FemIron's only nutritive property is identical to the most significant nutritive property of a Geritol tablet or a tablespoon of Geritol Liquid.

The thrust of all the expert affidavits submitted by defendants is that FemIron and Geritol differ in their properties, because FemIron contains less iron than does Geritol and is, therefore, less effective [532] when taken as directed as a remedy for iron deficiency anemia. These observations are undoubtedly correct. However, it is disingenuous for defendants to argue that FemIron is exempt from the order because it is a less effective preparation than Geritol. To the extent that the representations prohibited by the order with respect to Geritol are deceptive, they are also deceptive with respect to FemIron. The court concludes that the dissemination of FemIron advertising is covered by the FTC order.

C. No Other Genuine Issues of Fact Remains to be Tried

Defendants contend that this is not a proper case for summary judgment because there are material issues of fact in dispute, including:

1) The proper interpretation of the FTC order;

2) Whether defendants had been given notice and a reasonable opportunity to discontinue the challenged advertisements; and

3) The meaning of each of the advertisements challenged in the complaint. Memorandum 24. See id. at 24–32, 36–46, 49–64. The court will consider each of these contentions in succession.

1. Meaning of the Order

[15, 16] Interpretation of the FTC order is undoubtedly a question of law for the court to determine. In upholding the order with modifications on appeal, the Sixth Circuit necessarily decided that the modified order here in issue was not vague and fairly apprised defendants of what was expected of them. See J. B. Williams, supra, 381 F.2d at 891. Defendants cannot relitigate that issue in this action. See Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Company, 334 U.S. 37, 54, 68 S.Ct. 822, 92 L.Ed. 1196 (1948).

[17] On the other hand, correct interpretation of the order requires the court to consider not only its plain language, but relevant proceedings before the FTC and the Sixth Circuit's decision as well. The court finds that the undisputed documentary evidence now before the court is more than sufficient to enable it to fully perform this task.[4]

2. Notice to Defendants of Alleged Violations

[18] The court disagrees with defendants' assertion that "it is settled that the Government may not impose penalties under 15 U.S.C. § 45(l) with respect to alleged violations of orders where these violations preceded Commission notice that the conduct was deemed in violation of the order." Defendants' Memorandum 58–59. Such notice is neither required by the statutory scheme nor by the Commission's rules and procedures. The only procedural step required by the F.T.C. Act before institution of a Section 5(l) suit is the certification of facts relating to the alleged violation to the Attorney General. See Section 16, 15 U.S.C. § 56. A blanket rule requiring prior notice by the Commission of alleged violations of its orders has absolutely no statutory basis whatever. See generally Government Reply Memorandum 27–39.

---

[4] Furthermore, the issues presented by defendants as to the meaning of the order, Memorandum 36–45, are apparently not in dispute. See Government Reply Memorandum 3–4.

If defendants intend by this assertion to claim a violation of their right to due process in this case, the claim is rejected. The record shows that the FTC informed defendants that the advertisements contained in their first compliance report were in violation of the order. The Commission took the unusual step of permitting defendants to file a second compliance report. The Commission informed defendants in June, 1969, on the basis of this report, that they were still not in compliance with the order. When, after this notice and after 17 months since the order became final, defendants proceeded to disseminate the advertisements challenged here without prior approval by the Commission, defendants [533] acted at their own peril.[5] Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 394, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965). If defendants' argument were accepted, it would reduce Section 5(l) to meaninglessness.

3. Representations in the Advertisements

[19, 20] Defendants also oppose the motion for summary judgment on the ground that there are genuine issues of material fact as to what representations are made in the challenged advertisements and whether these representations are prohibited by the FTC order. Defendants argue that these factual questions must be submitted to a jury[6] and cite three court decisions in support of their argument.[7]

---

[5] Indeed, defendants did have notice that the Commission considered six of the challenged advertisements in violation of the order. See Part III D, infra (discussion of counts 1–4, 8 and 9.)

[6] The court doubts whether defendants can demand a jury trial as a matter of right pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. Rule 38(b). The action is in the nature of a civil contempt proceeding. See pp. 529–530 supra. The Seventh Amendment right to jury trial does not extend to actions for civil contempt. See 5 J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 38.33[2]–[3] (2d Ed. 1971); cf. Shillitani, supra. Nor has Congress provided for trial by jury as of right in Section 5(l) actions.

In any case, the court need not reach this question, since the court holds infra that no dispute of material fact remains to be resolved.

[7] Defendants cite United States v. Fire Safety Devices, Civ. No. 13254 (D.Md. 1962) (no written opinion); United States v. Hindman, 179 F.Supp. 926 (D.N.J.1960); and United States v. Americana Corporation, Civ.No.10858 (D.Md.1960) (no written opinion).

Fire Safety and Americana do not support defendants' contention because they involved the factual question of what oral representations were made by employees of the companies being sued. See Defendants' Memorandum 29n.1; Vanderstar Affidavit, Exhibits D and E;

Plaintiff responds to this argument by citing seven cases where "courts in similar situations have held that no issue of fact is presented when the question before them is whether an advertisement falls within the prohibition of a cease and desist order and have disposed of these cases by summary judgment." [8]

Only one of the cases cited by the parties actually considered the precise issue [534] presented here. See notes 7 and 8 supra. That case is United States v. Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Company, 178 F. Supp. 723 (E.D.Pa.1959), aff'd 288 F. 2d 257 (3d Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 821, 82 S.Ct. 38, 7 L. Ed. 2d 26 (1961).

In Vulcanized Rubber, the defendant was ordered by the FTC to cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication, by any advertisement or labeling that combs which it manufactured were "rubber" or "hard rubber" or were "made of 'rubber'" or "made of 'hard rubber,'" unless such combs were in fact made of vulcanized hard rubber. After the order became final, the defendant labeled its combs "rubber-resin." The United States brought suit under Section 5(l) of the F.T.C. Act and moved for summary judgment. The defendant's argument that the marking "rubber-resin" was not a "misrepresentation * * * to the purchasers thereof that the same are, in fact, made of 'rubber' or 'hard rubber'" was rejected by the District Court and the court granted summary judgment. 178 F. Supp. at 726.

The Third Circuit panel affirmed this decision stating that "since there was no issue of fact presented, the district court properly disposed of the case on summary judgment" 288 F. 2d at 258 n. 2. The court then ruled that "the labeling of the combs as being made of Hynes Affidavit, Exhibits D and E. Here, in contrast, the actual advertisements sued upon are before the court and their dissemination is undisputed.

---

The Hindman decision is not authoritative, for it was subsequently criticized by the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in United States v. Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Company, 288 F.2d 257, 258n.2 (3d Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 821, 82 S.Ct. 38, 7 L.Ed.2d 26 (1961). See note 10 infra.

[8] Reply Memorandum 5. See United States v. Vulcanized Rubber & Plastics Company, supra; Piuma v. United States, 126 F.2d 601 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 317 U.S. 637, 63 S.Ct. 28, 87 L.Ed. 513 (1942); United States v. Smith Fencer Corporation, 312 F.Supp. 666 (E.D. Mich.1970); United States v. Sav-Cote Chemical Laboratories, Inc. CCH 1971 Trade Cases ¶ 73,439 (D.N.J.1969); United States v. Bogolub, Civil No. 67–C–1138 (N.D.Ill.1967) (no written opinion); United States v. Winters, No. 66–195 Civ.T. (M.D.Fla. 1966) (no written opinion); United States v. Modell, Civ. No. 127–366 (S.D.N.Y.1960).

In all of these cases, with the exception perhaps of Vulcanized Rubber, it was obvious that the representations made in the advertisements were in direct conflict with the FTC order at issue. For example, in Piuma, the FTC order prohibited the appellant from representing among other things that a particular product "is a gland tonic" or "constitutes a remedy for glands." The challenged advertisements contained the following language: "Money-Back Gland Tablet Calls for Trial . . . its purpose is to help stimulate all the glands to healthy activity." 126 F.2d at 602–603. As for the Bogolub and Winters cases, in which there were no written opinions, the court has based its conclusion on the papers filed in those actions. See Hynes Affidavit, Exhibits A and B. The significance of Modell is impossible to ascertain from the information provided by the parties. See Defendants' Memorandum 29n.2; Government Reply Memorandum 6; Hynes Affidavit, Exhibit C.

rubber-resin falls within the proscription of the Order."[9] 288 F. 2d at 259.

This court holds that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the advertisements here challenged violate the provisions of the FTC order.

There is no dispute as to what words were used or what was shown in the challenged advertisements. The FTC order prohibited any direct representation as well as any implication that a product covered by the order "is a generally effective remedy for tiredness, loss of strength, run-down feeling, nervousness or irritability." Paragraph 1(b). The court has read the television scripts and has viewed the films which were televised. From the oral and visual content of the advertisements, the court has determined that the implicit representations made in the advertisements fall within the scope of the prohibitions in the FTC order. See Part II of this opinion.

Defendants attempt to support their contention that a factual dispute exists as to the representations made in the advertisements with the affidavits of so-called expert witnesses. These affiants state that the advertisements do not impress them as violative of the order and that viewers would not be so impressed. See Defendants' Memorandum 54–55 and the affidavits cited therein. However, the question for this court is not whether the challenged advertisements tend to mislead or deceive the viewing public.[10] The sole issue before the court is whether the advertisements fall within the prohibitions of the valid FTC order which became effective on December 24, 1967. The Sixth Circuit has already determined that, if they do, they violate Section 12 of the F.T.C. Act because they are false within the meaning of Section 15 of that Act.

[21] The court's conclusion has a sound basis in policy. The F.T.C. Act is designed to protect the consuming public and the business community from false advertising. To effectuate this goal, the statute invests the FTC with broad authority to investigate advertising practices, see Section 6, 15 U.S.C. § 46, and to prohibit such advertising

---

[9] Defendants here contend that the basis of the Third Circuit holding in Vulcanized Rubber was that the change in labeling from "rubber" to "rubber-resin" was not a material change. Therefore, defendants argue, no issue of fact was presented as to the representation made by the challenged labels and summary judgment was appropriate in that case. Defendants apparently attempt to distinguish the instant case by asserting that the representations contained in the challenged advertisements are materially different from those prohibited by the outstanding FTC order, since none of them contains a direct reference to tiredness or the other symtoms mentioned in the order.

The advertisements challenged in counts 10 and 11 do make direct reference to tiredness but defendants contend that they comply with the order for other reasons. See p. 544 infra.

[10] In Vulcanized Rubber, supra, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit stated: "* * * the holding [in Hindman, supra] was erroneous, since the sole issue before the court was whether or not the labeling practice was within the proscription of the order and not whether the labeling practice was deceptive." 288 F. 2d at 258 n. 2.

as the Commission determines is false by the issuance of appropriate cease and desist orders, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45(b), 52(b) and 55. A primary sanction for compelling compliance with such orders, once they become final, is Section 5(l) of the Act.

Thus, the statutory framework contemplates that, upon a well-grounded finding of deceptiveness in a company's advertising practices, the Commission will have the power to prevent the continuation or recurrence of such practices by the company. The orders in themselves place the company on notice of what types of advertising violate the statute. It would vitiate the very purpose of the statute to require the Commission, after a valid cease and desist order has gone into effect, to establish in respect to each subsequent advertisement disseminated by the company that it is false or deceptive.

[22] Once the Commission establishes that a cease and desist order is in effect and that a particular advertisement has been disseminated which allegedly violates that order, it is for the court to determine as a matter of law whether the oral and/or visual content of the challenged advertisement falls within the scope of the prohibitions in the order.[11]

II. Merits of the Action

In reaching the merits of this action, the court must consider each challenged advertisement in relation to the specific injunctions in the FTC order. First, the court will consider paragraphs 1(b), 1(c) and 1(d) of the order.

The three paragraphs prohibit very similar types of representations concerning the effect of Geritol or FemIron on tiredness, loss of strength, run-down feeling, nervousness or irritability, which for brevity may be described as the "tiredness symptoms." The parties appear to agree that if an advertisement violates paragraph 1(d), it will violate paragraphs 1(b) and 1(c) as well. Likewise, it is suggested that any advertisement which is not prohibited by paragraph 1(d) will also comply with the two other paragraphs: See Defendants' Memorandum 11; Government Memorandum 27–33.

This approach is sensible. Paragraph 1(d) enjoins the dissemination of any advertisement "which represents directly or by implication that the use of [Geritol or any similar preparation, e.g. FemIron,] will be beneficial in the treatment or relief of [any of the tiredness symptoms,]" unless the advertisement contains certain express disclosures. This prohibition is comparable if not identical, to the injunction in paragraph 1(b) against representing that the preparation is "a generally effective remedy" for any of the tiredness symptoms and to the paragraph 1(c) injunction against representing that the preparation is "an effective remedy [for any of the tiredness symptoms] in more than a small minority of persons experiencing such symptoms."

---

[11] The issue is analogous to the interpretation of a writing in a contract action. Interpretation of the written contract is considered to be a matter of law for the court. See 4 Williston on Contracts § 616, particularly at pp. 648–49 (3d Ed. 1961). See, e.g., West, Weir & Bartel, Inc. v. Mary Carter Paint Company, 25 N.Y.2d 535, 307 N.Y.S.2d 449, 452, 255 N.E.2d 709 (1969).

It is undisputed that the challenged advertisements do not contain the disclosures set out in paragraph 1(d). Therefore, any advertisement will violate that paragraph, if, but only if, it represents directly or by implication that the preparation advertised will be beneficial in the treatment or relief of any of the tiredness sysmptoms. This test can also be used to determine whether the same advertisement complies with or violates paragraphs 1(b) and 1(c) of the order.

The only other portion of the order which the United States claims has been violated by the challenged advertisements is paragraph 1(e). That paragraph prohibits defendants from disseminating any advertisement "which represents directly or by implication that tiredness, loss of strength, run-down feeling, nervousness or irritability are generally reliable indications of iron deficiency or iron deficiency anemia."

The basic thrust of paragraphs 1(b)-1(e) of the FTC order is to prohibit the dissemination of any advertisement which "creates the impression that [a] tired feeling is caused by something [i.e. iron deficiency] which Geritol can cure" or which links "common, nonspecific symptoms [i.e. any of the tiredness symptoms] with iron deficiency anemia." J. B. Williams, supra, 381 F.2d at 889, 890.

Before testing the challenged advertisements against these injunctions in the order, it is appropriate to note some comments of the Supreme Court in Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 393, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965), since they are relevant to several of the arguments made by defendants with respect to the commercials at issue here:

> If [defendants] in their * * * commercials attempt to come as close to the line of misrepresentation as the Commission's order permits, they may without specifically intending to do so cross into the area proscribed by this order. However, it does not seem "unfair to require that one who deliberately goes perilously close to an area of proscribed conduct shall take the risk that he may cross the line." Boyce Motor Lines, Inc. v. United States, 342 U.S. 337 [340, 72 S.Ct. 329, 331, 96 L.Ed. 367] [1952]. 380 U.S. at 393, 85 S.Ct. at 1047.

A. Counts One through Four

The first advertisement to be considered is entitled "Blood Cells" (#G-218-40, TV Script, Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc.) and was disseminated by defendants on June 16, 1969. This dissemination is the basis for count one of the complaint. The television script reads as follows:

1. MS ON TED MACK IN LIBRARY. STANDING NEXT TO LIGHT BOX. HE FLIPS SWITCH, LIGHTING UP LEFT HALF OF SHADOW BOX TO SHOW BAD BLOOD CELLS AND TITLE: "IRON-POOR BLOOD BEFORE GERITOL."	1. MACK: (O.C.): Hello, I'm Ted Mack. Your bloodstream has been called your lifeline. Look! You could have iron-poor blood cells like these * * * pale, few in number, badly shaped.
2. DISSOLVE TO FILM CLIP OF "POOR" & "RICH" CELLS. IN THIS SEQUENCE WE WILL USE OUR FILM OF THE BLOOD CELLS FRAMES 2 AND 3.	2. If that's so, take Geritol to build more blood cells * * * better shaped * * * rich in iron * * * like these.
3. CUT BACK TO SHOW MACK STANDING BY LIGHT BOX. HOLDS UP BOTTLE OF TABLETS.	3. There's no finer, more effective way to build iron-rich, red blood than with Geritol.
4. [537] CUT TO TWO BOTTLES. BACK TO MACK.	4. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its blood-building power to every part of your body.
5. TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER."	5. Just 2 Geritol tablets or two tablespoons of Geritol liquid contain twice the iron in a pound of calf's liver.
6. CUT TO BOTTLES SHOT. TITLE: BUILDS IRON POWER FAST.	6. Take Geritol. It builds iron power in your blood fast! Geritol really works!

[23, 24] The United States contends that the phrases "iron power" and "blood-building power," as used in this commercial, suggest that Geritol will have an effect upon tiredness, that it will increase a person's strength, and that it will overcome the feeling of being rundown.[12] Memorandum 29. Defendants reply that the advertisement makes no symptomatic claims at all, that it simply shows the actual effects of Geritol on iron-poor blood cells and states that Geritol will relieve iron deficiency, and that the word "power" refers solely to the strength of the preparation. Defendants' Memorandum 55.

---

[12] The government asks the court "to give weight to the Commission's finding that the commercials containing the word 'power' violated the order, keeping in mind the Commission's experience in this area * * *." Memorandum 30. The court declines this invitation. While the Commission's views are relevant to determining the meaning of the order, the question of what representations are made in the advertisements is for the court to determine on the basis of their content. See pages 532, 534–535 supra.

The court holds that dissemination of the advertisement violated paragraph 1(d) of the order and, therefore, violated paragraphs 1(b) and 1(c) as well. The representations that Geritol carries "blood-building power to every part of your body" and that it "builds iron power in your blood fast" clearly imply that a person who takes Geritol will have more power after taking it than he had before. To say that Geritol builds power in your blood is the effective equivalent of saying that Geritol builds power in you. Just as the advertising term "tired blood" was used by defendants to signify the condition of a tired person, see Government Exhibit 1, at 106 (FTC Exhibit 9A appended to FTC opinion, Docket No. 8547, September 28, 1965), so "power in your blood" signifies your condition as a powerful or energetic person. Clearly, the claim in the advertisement that Geritol gives a person power or additional power is a representation by implication that Geritol will be beneficial in the treatment or relief of tiredness, loss of strength, and run-down feeling.

This implied representation is strengthened by the transformation in the advertisement of "iron-poor blood cells * * * pale, few in number, badly shaped," i.e. "tired-blood," into "iron-rich red blood" with "more blood cells * * * better shaped * * * rich in iron," i.e. healthy, "untired" blood, as a result of the use of Geritol. While the advertisement only speaks of the transformation of a person's blood cells, the advertisement strongly implies that the same transformation from paleness, weakness and deformity to red-bloodedness, strength and shapeliness will take place in the person himself.

[25] The court further holds that dissemination of the advertisement violated paragraph 1(e) of the order. It has already been shown that the advertisement represents by implication that [538] Geritol will relieve tiredness. The way in which the advertisement claims Geritol will do this is by furnishing iron to a person's body. In this way, the advertisement represents that a person who is tired needs iron; otherwise, Geritol could not be beneficial as claimed in the advertisement. A person who needs iron has an iron deficiency. Thus, it is seen that the advertisement represents by implication that tiredness results from an iron deficiency or, in medical terms, that the tiredness symptoms are generally reliable indications of iron deficiency. This is the type of representation which paragraph 1(e) specifically prohibits.

Counts two through four of the complaint relate to the dissemination by defendants of three different advertisements. The television scripts for these advertisements are reproduced in the Appendix to this opinion as Scripts 1, 2, and 3, respectively.

Each of these three advertisements contains statements by Ted Mack, the announcer, and a concluding title "Builds Iron Power Fast" or "Builds Iron Power in Your Blood," which are substantially identical to those contained in the "Blood Cells" script discussed above. For the reasons set forth in the court's analysis of that advertisement, the court holds that dissemination of these three advertisements also violated paragraphs 1(b), 1(c), 1(d) and 1(e) of the FTC order.[13]

B. Counts Five through Seven

[26] The three advertisements challenged in counts 5–7 are entitled "Vacation" and have substantially identical scripts. The "Vacation" television script sued upon in count five (Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #G–556–40) reads as follows:

1. A MAN AND A WIFE ARE FILLING A STATION WAGON WITH VACATION GEAR. WIFE LOOKS SAD BUT NOT TIRED.	1. HUSBAND: Honey, we're going on vacation. Why do you look so sad? WIFE: I found out I have iron-poor blood.
2. WIPE TO TED MACK IN LIBRARY.	2. MACK: (O.C.): If you have iron poor blood, don't be sad * * * be glad for GERITOL.
3. HOLDS UP BOTTLE OF GERITOL TABLETS.	3. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its high potency iron throughout your whole body.
4. CUT TO ECU TABLET BOTTLE. TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER" UNDERCUT: "PLUS 7 VITAMINS."	4. Just two Geritol tablets contain twice the iron in a pound of calf's liver * * * plus 7 vitamins for nutrition.
5. DISS TO MAN AND WIFE COMING INTO THE HOUSE AFTER THEIR TRIP. WOMAN IS SMILING. SUPER: "WEEKS LATER."	5. HUSBAND: It's good to see you smile again. WIFE: Thanks to the Geritol I've been taking.
6. [539] BACK TO TED MACK.	6. MACK: Check with your doctor, and if iron-poor blood is your problem * * *
7. CUT TO PRODUCT SHOT. SUPER: "BUILDS HIGH POTENCY IRON IN YOUR BLOOD." BULLET: "AMERICA'S NO. 1 TONIC."	7. * * * don't be sad * * * be glad for Geritol. Geritol builds high potency iron in your blood. Try it!

The scripts of the two other "Vacation" advertisements are reproduced in the Appendix, Scripts 4 and 5.

---

[13] The advertisement challenged in count 4 does not refer to the transformation of pale, iron-poor blood into iron-rich, red blood. Nevertheless, the advertisement violates the order because of the "power" representation.

The court holds that dissemination of these advertisements by defendants violated the FTC order. More specifically, the court holds that the visual impression created by the transformation of the woman in the advertisements from a "sad" to a "glad" state, combined with the references to "high potency iron," represents by implication that the use of Geritol will be beneficial in the treatment or relief of one or more of the tiredness symptoms.

Defendants argue that the "contrast between 'sad' and 'glad' emotions was selected because these are basic human emotions and thus provide human interest." Memorandum 57. Furthermore, defendants assert that "the actresses who portrayed the women who took Geritol were selected specifically to project sadness, and defendants made every effort to assure that sadness, and not tiredness, was projected." Id. at 56.

However this may be, the difficulty of carrying out the "sad/glad" theme and, at the same time, complying with the FTC order is manifest in the affidavit of Donald Blauhut, who was in charge of producing the commercials:

> A great deal of time, money and worry went into assuring that the women's faces in the so-called sad/glad series of commercials * * * projected sadness but not tiredness. Blauhut Affidavit 1, submitted by defendants.

See also Eichler Affidavit 2–3, submitted by defendants: "* * * a great deal of time and money were devoted to obtaining expressions on the subjects which carried the message of sadness but did not carry the message of tiredness. I ran many versions of the commercials to make sure the expressions were not those depicting tiredness."

The court has viewed these commercials carefully and believes that the "sad/glad" contrast in the advertisements may be easily perceived as a contrast between feeling weak and run-down and feeling lively. The wife, who looks dreary and perhaps run-down in her "sad" state at the beginning of the advertisement, looks energetic when she gives a broad smile at the end of the advertisements. There is no question but that the change in her feelings is the result of Geritol:

> "Husband: It's good to see you smile again.
> Wife: Thanks to the Geritol I've been taking."

Defendants contend that the wife is sad at the beginning of the advertisements, not because she is tired or run-down, but because she has learned that she has iron-poor blood. However, this explanation of the advertisements cannot offset the visual impression just noted. Moreover, the visual impression is strengthened by what must be the common-sense response of many viewers to the advertisements—that the wife is not sad only because of the knowledge that she has iron-poor blood, but because of the effects that this condition has had and is having on her. In this way, the "sad/glad" contrast produces a "tired/energetic" motif when the wife smiles at the end of the commercials.

[540] Her smile may convey to viewers her happiness that she no longer has iron-poor blood, but it definitely conveys something else as well. It shows her in good spirits and makes her look stronger and healthier. The implication is that she was sad not simply because she had iron-poor blood, but because she was feeling run-down as a result of that fact. Now she is smiling not simply because she has iron-rich blood, but because she feels better as a consequence. Thanks to Geritol.

The phrases, "Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its high potency iron throughout your whole body" and "Geritol builds high potency iron in your blood" reinforce this implied representation. The phrases are very similar to the phrases, "Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its blood-building power to every part of your body," and Geritol "builds iron power in your blood fast," which were used in the "Blood Cells" advertisement discussed supra, at 537–538.[14] "Potency" among other things means "power."[15] While the court agrees with defendants that "high potency iron" does refer literally to the iron content in Geritol, this does not alter the fact that the phrases utilized in the advertisements convey the implicit message that Geritol brings power to the person who takes it.

The court concludes that the dissemination of the "Vacation" advertisements violated paragraphs 1(b), 1(c), 1(d) and 1(e) of the FTC order.

C. Counts Eight and Nine

[27] In counts eight and nine of the complaint, the United States claims that dissemination on various dates of two virtually identical advertisements, entitled "Two Women," violated the FTC order. The television script (Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc. #G–552–40) of the advertisement sued upon in count eight reads as follows:

1. OPEN ON FIRST WOMAN WHO QUESTIONS THE CAMERA.	1. SCOTTIE BLOCK: What are you so sad about?
2. CUT TO SECOND WOMAN WITH SAD EXPRESSION WHO ANSWERS THE CAMERA.	2. LOIS SMITH: I found out I have iron-poor blood.
3. PULL BACK TO TWO-SHOT. IN BACKGROUND WE SEE KITCHEN WITH COUNTER, CABINET, SINK AND WINDOW.	3. SCOTTIE BLOCK: So, then it's time * * *

---

[14] See also Government Exhibit 3 (Second Compliance Report of defendants) at 28–33, 35–54. The advertisements contained therein included substantially the following: "Geritol-iron works in your bloodstream carrying strength through your body."

[15] Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1775 (1963): "potency * * * 1: the quality or state of being potent: a: FORCE, POWER, AUTHORITY * * *."

4. FIRST WOMAN PICKS UP AND UNCAPS BOTTLE OF GERITOL TABLETS.	4. * * * you found out about Geritol!
5. [541] CUT TO CLOSEUP OF GERITOL TABLET BOTTLE, IN FIRST WOMAN'S HAND, AS SHE POURS FROM IT TWO TABLETS INTO HAND OF SECOND WOMAN.	5. Geritol can change your iron-poor blood into iron-rich blood. Here. I'll start you off.
6. CUT TO CLOSEUP OF SECOND WOMAN.	6. LOIS SMITH: Geritol really works?
7. PULL BACK TO TWO-SHOT AS FIRST WOMAN NOW POURS WATER FROM TAP INTO GLASS.	7. SCOTTIE BLOCK: Course it really works.
8. CUT TO CLOSEUP OF HANDS OF SECOND WOMAN WITH TABLETS AND BOTTLE. SUPER: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER."	8. Those two tablets contain twice the iron in a pound of calf's liver.
9. MOVE IN ON SECOND WOMAN AS SHE SWALLOWS THE TWO GERITOL TABLETS WITH WATER, WHICH FIRST WOMAN HANDS HER.	9. Like they say * * * Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast, carrying its blood-building power throughout your body.
10. SHIMMER DISS. TO SECOND WOMAN HAPPILY EXAMINING DRESSES ON RACK IN DEPT. STORE. SHE HAPPENS TO LOOK UP SMILING AS SHE NOTICES FIRST WOMAN APPROACH. SUPER: "WEEKS LATER".	10. LOIS SMITH: Hello! SCOTTIE BLOCK: Well! First time I've seen you smile in weeks!
11. CUT TO CLOSEUP OF SECOND WOMAN, STILL SMILING.	11. LOIS SMITH: Thanks for telling me about Geritol!
12. CUT TO GERITOL TABLET AND LIQUID BOTTLES AND PACKAGES. SUPER: "BUILDS IRON POWER IN YOUR BLOOD".	12. ANNCR (V.O.): Iron-poor blood? Be glad for Geritol! It builds iron power in your blood! Try it.

The script of the advertisement challenged in count nine is reproduced in the Appendix, Script 6.

The court holds that dissemination of these advertisements violated paragraphs 1(b), 1(c), 1(d) and 1(e) of the FTC order. For one thing, the use of the word "power" in these commercials constituted an implied representation prohibited by those four paragraphs. See pages 537–538 supra. Secondly, the "sad/glad" contrast creates the same visual impression as that produced by the "Vacation" advertisements, discussed supra, and, in conjunction with the references to "high potency" and "power," violates the injunctions of those paragraphs. See pages 538–540 supra.

D. Counts Ten and Eleven

[28] These counts relate to the dissemination by defendants of two different advertisements for FemIron. The script of the first of these, entitled "Fem Is for Women" (Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #FEM–31–30–REV.), reads as follows:

1. OPEN ON TCU OF THE LETTERS "FEM" IN FEMIRON LOCO.	1. ANNCR (V.O.): Fem is for women.
2. CUT TO WORD "IRON" IN FEMIRON LOCO.	2. Iron is for women.
3. SHOT WIDENS TO BECOME FULL PKG OF FEMIRON. WORD "NEW" OVER IT. (IF IT IS POSSIBLE, WE SHOULD INCLUDE BOTH THE LARGE 60'S AND THE STRETCH PACK OF 30'S.)	3. Femiron is the new all iron tablet for women, to help you * * *
4. DISS TO GIANT FEMIRON PKG. WITH MAN & WOMAN RIDING OUT OF IT ON A TANDUM BIKE.	4. * * * prevent a shortage of iron.
5. CAMERA MOVES IN FOR TIGHTER SHOT.	5. A medical journal reports that * * *
6. CAMERA PANS WITH BIKE. THEY PASS A MOTHER ON A BENCH, SMALL CHILDREN PLAYING.	6. * * * many healthy young women have little or no iron reserves.
7. CU OF TIRED MOTHER. FREEZE FRAME ON HER EXPRESSION.	7. You see, some women even risk becoming anemic and tired.
8. DISS TO CU OF WOMAN'S HAND HOLDING FEMIRON TABLET TWIXT FINGERS. SUPER: "NEW!" SUPER: "FEMIRON" LOCO.	8. One Femiron tablet a day gives you iron * * * all iron * * *
9. DISS TO CU OF PROFILE SHOT OF WOMAN. SHE TAKES TABLET WITH WATER.	9. * * * to maintain the supply you need * * *
10. DISS TO COUPLE LEANING BIKE AGAINST TREE. SHOT SHOULD FAVOR WOMAN.	10. * * * to prevent iron shortage.
11. FREEZE FRAME ON HER EXPRESSION. SHE IS LAUGHING. VITAL LOOK.	11. Get new FemIron * * *

12. DISS TO CU OF LARGE BOX OF 60'S AND STRETCH PACK OF 30'S. SUPER TITLE: "THE VERY VERY FEMININE IRON TABLET"	12. * * * the very, very feminine iron tablet.

---

[543] The advertisement sued upon in count 11 is entitled "Ever Since Eve" and its script reads as follows:

---

1. OPEN ON PAN SHOT DOWN TREE. YOUNG COUPLE AT BASE OF TREE ON A PICNIC.	1. ANNCR (V.O.): Ever since Eve * * *
2. YOUNG MAN PULLS GIRL TO HER FEET. PUTS ARM AROUND HER SHOULDER AND THEY WALK OFF.	2. * * * women have faced the problem of preventing a shortage of iron.
3. PAN WITH COUPLE. MOVE INTO CLOSE SHOT FAVORING GIRL.	3. A leading medical journal reports that many healthy young women have little or no iron reserves.
4. COUPLE PASSES A MOTHER WITH SMALL CHILDREN. LOSE COUPLE. PUSH INTO SEE TIRED MOTHER WITH CHILDREN CAUSING A FUSS AND IRRITATING MOTHER. FREEZE FRAME ON MOTHER'S EXPRESSION.	4. You see, some women even risk becoming anemic and tired.
5. SLOW DISSOLVE TO: ECU A PAN SHOT FEMIRON LETTERS ON BOX. THEN * * *	5. Take just one FEMIRON tablet every day.
6. DISS TO CU. WOMAN'S HAND REMOVES TABLETS FROM BOX.	6. FEMIRON gives you iron * * * all iron * * *
7. DISS TO NEGATIVE PROFILE SHOT WOMAN TAKING TABLET.	7. * * * to maintain the supply you need to prevent iron shortage * * *
8. DISS TO GIRL FROM OPENING. SHE LEANS AGAINST TREE. BOY CLOSE TO HER. PUSH IN TO CU OF HER LAUGHING, VITAL LOOK. FREEZE FRAME ON HER EXPRESSION.	8. Get FEMIRON * * * the very, very * * *
9. DISS TO CU OF BOX SUPER: "THE VERY, VERY FEMININE ALL IRON TABLET."	9. * * * feminine all iron tablet.

The court holds that dissemination of each of these advertisements violated paragraphs 1(b), 1(c), 1(d) and 1(e) of the FTC order. The court has already held that FemIron advertisements are subject to the order. See pages 531–532 supra. Having viewed these advertisements, the court finds that the closeup of the "tired mother" and the statement, "You see, some women even risk becoming anemic and tired," especially when juxtaposed against the "vital look" of the FemIron user, represent by implication that the use of FemIron will be beneficial in the treatment or relief of the tiredness symptoms. For this reason, paragraphs 1(b), 1(c) and 1(d) of the order were violated. Paragraph 1(e) of the order was violated as well for the reasons stated at page 537 supra.

Defendants argue that "the sole theme of the FemIron commercials was prevention." Memorandum 58. This argument is simply irrelevant, since the Government does not allege that either of the commercials violated the order because a prevention claim is made. See Government Reply Memorandum 3.

Defendants further contend that "the tired, older woman briefly portrayed in the commercial[s] was shown solely to emphasize the condition which might occur if preventive steps were not taken at a younger age." Memorandum 58. According to a Parkson employee, "the ad was not designed to appeal to older women who might already have become iron deficient." Handman Affidavit 1. See also Lurie Affidavit 1–2.

This contention is rejected by the court. The advertisements directly represent that women risk becoming anemic and tired from a shortage of iron. The clear implication is that tiredness is a generally reliable indication of iron deficiency or iron deficiency anemia. This implicaton, which violates paragraph 1 (e), is in no way muted by the prevention claim.

Furthermore, viewers are told that FemIron will supply iron to women who take it and will thereby prevent iron shortage. It is frivolous to argue that the only claim which is thus made is that FemIron will supply iron for the purpose of preventing iron deficiency. It is obvious that FemIron will also provide iron to any woman who takes it, even if she already has an iron shortage. In this way, the advertisements represent that FemIron will overcome an already existing iron deficiency. The advertisements strongly suggest that tired viewers, and especially tired elderly women, are probably tired because they have an existing iron deficiency. Consequently, the advertisements unmistakably represent by implication that the use of FemIron will not only prevent tiredness, but will be beneficial in the relief of tiredness as well. The message conveyed is that a tired woman who takes FemIron will soon have a "vital look." This latter representation transgresses the prohibitions of paragraphs 1(b), 1(c) and 1(d) of the FTC order.

III. Penalties

The final question for the court is whether the Government's demand for the imposition of the maximum penalty of $5000 for each of the 100 violations as to each defendant is justified under all of the facts and circumstances of this case.

Defendants raise three issues with respect to the imposition of penalties in this action. The facts relevant to the determination of these issues are undisputed and, consequently, the court can dispose of them on this motion for summary judgment. After considering these issues, the court will discuss the undisputed factual basis and the reasoning behind the award of penalties which the court has assessed.

A. Jurisdiction of the Court

[29] Defendants challenge the jurisdiction of the court to impose the total amount of penalties which the United States has demanded in its complaint. Defendants argue that no more than $500,000 in penalties may be imposed in this action. The United States has demanded judgment against each defendant in the sum of $500,000 plus interest and costs, totaling more than $1,000,000. The basis of defendants' argument is the Court of Appeals decision in United States v. St. Regis Paper Company, 355 F.2d 688 (2d Cir. 1966), which held that satisfaction of the requirements of Section 16 of the F.T.C. Act [16] is a jurisdic-[545]tional prerequisite to the commencement of a civil penalty suit by the Attorney General under Section 5(l) of the Act. See 355 F.2d at 699.

The FTC did certify the facts underlying defendants' liability in this action to the Attorney General, as required by Section 16, and defendants do not challenge the certification as such. See Pierpoint Affidavit, Exhibit A; Government Exhibit 5; Defendants' Memorandum 65. However, defendants claim that the certification by the FTC was limited by the "draft of [a] complaint alleging violations of the Commission's order and seeking $500,000 in penalties" which accompanied the certification notice. See Pierpoint Affidavit, Exhibit A, at p. 4 and Exhibit B. Defendants contend that, since the Commission "specified" that $500,000 in penalties should be sought in this action, the court lacks jurisdiction to impose penalties in a greater amount. Defendants' Memorandum 66.

---

[16] F.T.C. Act, Section 16, 15 U.S.C. § 56: "Whenever the Federal Trade Commission has reason to believe that any person, partnership, or corporation is liable to a penalty under section 54 of this title or under subsection (1) of section 45 of this title, it shall certify the facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of such section or subsection."

The argument is based on a misreading both of Section 16 and of the FTC certification notice. Section 16 only requires that the FTC "certify the facts" which give it "reason to believe that any * * * corporation is liable to a penalty" under Section 5(l) of the F.T.C. Act. (Emphasis supplied.) Section 16 has absolutely nothing to say about either a certification, or even a recommendation, by the FTC to the Attorney General as to the amount of penalties which should be sought in the Section 5(l) action. Since the statute does not require that any certification be made in regard to penalties, it can hardly be argued that such a certification, even were it present here, constituted a jurisdictional bar to awarding greater penalties which were demanded by the United States in its complaint. The St. Regis decision, supra, did not add any jurisdictional requirements to the statute; it merely insisted that the requirement that there be a certification of facts, as specifically prescribed in Section 16, be satisfied before the Attorney General can bring a Section 5(l) suit.

Moreover, Section 16 states that it is the "duty" of the Attorney General "to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement" of Section 5(l). It cannot be argued that the instant action is not an appropriate proceeding for the enforcement of Section 5(l), for it seeks no more than the maximum penalty authorized by that section. St. Regis does not militate against this conclusion. Indeed, in St. Regis the Second Circuit panel noted:

> In Section 16, * * * Congress prescribed the circumstances under which civil penalty actions for violations of Commission orders shall be commenced and the officer of the United States who shall prosecute them and in Section 5(l) it prescribed the amount of the penalty * * *. 355 F.2d at 694–695. (Emphasis supplied.)

The circumstances under which this action was brought conformed to Section 16 and, consequently, there can be no challenge to the decision of the Attorney General to prosecute the action for the full amount of the penalty prescribed by Section 5(l).

[30] Furthermore, the certification by the FTC in no way instructed the Attorney General to limit the relief sought to $500,000 in toto. The certification stated:

> Pursuant to the provisions of Section 16 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission hereby certifies the facts of violation of its order to cease and desist in its Docket 8547.
>
> The Commission in so certifying the facts states that it has reason to believe that the J. B. Williams Company, Inc., and Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc. are liable for penalties under Section 5(l) of the Federal Trade Commission Act and therefore recommends that appropriate proceedings be instituted for recovery of civil penalties as prescribed in said section.

Pierpoint Affidavit, Exhibit A, page 1 (Letter from the FTC to the Honorable [546] John N. Mitchell, Attorney General of the United States, dated November 28, 1969.) (Emphasis supplied.)

The fact that this letter of certification was accompanied by a "draft of complaint" which only sought a total of $500,000 in penalties did not alter the duty of the Attorney General to bring appropriate proceedings based on the facts which were certified to him nor did it suggest that proceedings seeking $1,000,000 in penalties would not be appropriate. The most that can be said about the inclusion of the "draft" with the letter was that it was intended to facilitate the Attorney General's task.

[31] Finally, even were the court to find that the FTC did certify to the Attorney General that the facts of this case only warranted imposition of a total fine of $500,000, this finding would still not create a jurisdictional bar to the award of greater penalties under the rationale of the St. Regis decision. Not one of the policy arguments which were enumerated by the Court of Appeals in St. Regis supports defendants' contention on this point.[17]

The court concludes that it has jurisdiction to award the total amount of penalties demanded by the United States in its complaint.

B. The Status of Defendant Parkson

[32] Defendants point out "that Parkson was at all relevant times an affiliate of Williams under common stockholder control (even the percentage shareholding of each stockholder was identical), with identical boards of directors." Memorandum 72. Defendants argue that, since "the corporations are not de facto separate," [18] the court can-

---

[17] The Court of Appeals noted the following pitfalls of a "system of dual surveillance and enforcement of FTC orders" (355 F.2d at 695, 697, 698) which would result from allowing the Attorney General to sue under Section 5(l) without prior certification by the FTC:

(1) such a system "would necessarily involve the possibility of conflicting interpretations of [FTC] orders" (at 695);

(2) "such a system could result in stultifying the Commission's implementation of its policies" (at 695);

(3) the Attorney General's "office is simply not equipped or designed to intelligently police the Commission's orders" (at 697);

(4) "the value of the Commission's practices and rules designed to promote voluntary compliance and avoid the rigors of litigation would be greatly impaired" (at 697);

(5) the system "would unjustly hamper those subject to orders by creating uncertainty and doubt as to what course of action to follow" (at 697);

(6) it would create "the possibility that unnecessary time and money will be expended in litigation by those subject to Commission's orders and the public" (at 698); and

(7) it "would in all probability jeopardize the Commission's vitally important consent order procedure" (at 698).

[18] However, defendants admit that Parkson "maintained its separate corporate status solely to preserve its entitlement to the regular advertising agency commission in dealing with the various media." Memorandum 72. In other words, Parkson was not an inactive corporation and it did carry on substantial business for profit.

not impose penalties against each corporation with respect to the same violations of the FTC order. Memorandum 71. It is contended that such an award in this action would constitute "multiple penalties" and would be contrary to the intent of the statute which limits the penalty to $5000 for "each violation" of an FTC order.

The fallacy of defendants' argument is that Section 5(l) specifically provides that "any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission to cease and desist after it has become final, and while such order is in effect" is liable to "a civil penalty of not more than $5000 for each violation." (Emphasis supplied.) Both defendants are subject to the FTC order sued upon here. If both of them have violated the order, they are each liable to the maximum penalty for each of their violations.

[547] [33] In effect, defendants are asking the court to review the validity of the FTC order which was enforced by the Sixth Circuit in J. B. Williams, supra. The Sixth Circuit enforced the order against both defendants and that decision is not reviewable here.[19] See page 527 supra. Consequently, since each defendant was subject to the order and violated it, each defendant is liable up to the maximum penalty for each violation which has been proved by the United States.

C. The Number of Violations for which Defendants Are Liable

[34] The second sentence of Section 5(l) provides:

> Each separate violation of [a final FTC] order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of a violation through continuing failure or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense.

In this action, the United States has sued each defendant for 100 distinct and separate violations of the FTC order. The violations involve the dissemination by defendants of the eleven advertisements, discussed supra, on 70 different days between June and October, 1969 and on 100 separate network television programs.

Defendants contend that "the penalty imposed by the statute can be invoked only once for the dissemination of each commercial." Memorandum 76. Under this construction of Section 5(l), each defendant would only be liable to a maximum penalty of $55,000, i.e. $5000 for each of the eleven advertisements.

The contention is without merit. First, the order makes clear that it is the dissemination of an illegal advertisement which violates the order, not the advertisement itself. Second, defendants have been unable to cite any court decision which supports their proposition,

---

[19] Of course, defendant Parkson could have challenged the propriety of subjecting it to the order, by raising this issue on the appeal of the order. See, e.g., Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 392 F.2d 921, 927–929 (6th Cir. 1968.)

whereas numerous decisions support the government's position. See, e.g., United States v. Wilson Chemical Company, Inc., CCH 1962 Trade Cases ¶70,478 (W.D.Pa. 1962), aff'd per curiam, 319 F.2d 133 (3d Cir. 1963); Vulcanized Rubber, supra, 288 F.2d 257; Piuma v. United States, 126 F.2d 601, 603 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 317 U.S. 637, 63 S.Ct. 28, 87 L.Ed. 513 (1942); United States v. Home Diathermy Company, Inc., CCH 1960 Trade Cases ¶69,601 (S.D.N.Y. 1959). Finally, defendants' contention runs counter to the express purpose of Section 5(l) which seeks to penalize the violation of FTC orders as a means of protecting the public. Harm results each time the same deceptive advertisement reaches consumers and the harm is cumulative.

[35, 36] For these same reasons, the court also rejects defendants' contention that "it seems clear on the face of the statute that the maximum penalty is $5000 for any day on which the order was violated." Memorandum 78. Defendants cannot invoke the "continuing failure or neglect" proviso in Section 5(l) and argue that "each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense," for the proviso is not applicable here. The claim of the United States is not that defendants failed or neglected to do somethng which the FTC ordered them to do, but rather that they did specific acts which were prohibited by the FTC order. As the statute states, "each separate violation of [a final FTC] order shall be a separate offense." The purpose of the "continuing failure or neglect" proviso is to assure that individuals or corporations who fail to do some act which they are specifically required to do by the FTC may be fined more than $5000. Without the proviso, the failure to act might be considered a single violation of the order, subject only to $5000 penalty, al[548] though the violation continued for a substantial period of time. The proviso cannot be relied upon by defendants to limit their liability in this action.[20]

D. The Amount of Penalties

Defendants have requested a factual hearing on the question of the amount of penalties to be assessed against them. The court held a hearing on January 2, 1973, at which the Government was instructed to submit information establishing the ability of defendants to pay the penalties demanded in this action. The court believes that the information necessary to assess appropriate penalties is now before the court. Therefore, a further hearing on the issue of penalties would serve no useful purpose.

---

[20] In any event, were the proviso applicable, defendants would be liable to a maximum penalty of $610,000 each for the disseminations sued upon here since they continued for 122 days from June 2, 1969 until October 1, 1969.

[37] In determining the amount of penalties to be assessed against defendants, the court thinks that the factors to be considered are their financial ability to pay the penalties demanded, the degree of harm which defendants may have caused by disseminating the challenged advertisements,[21] and their good or bad faith in disseminating these advertisements in violation of the FTC order.[22]

The court believes it appropriate to consider the financial ability of defendants to pay the penalties demanded by the Government in Section 5(l) actions. While imposition of maximum penalties against a large corporation may amount to little more than a slap on the wrist, the same penalties may throw a small enterprise out of business. The severity of the sanction imposed necessarily depends on the ability of each particular defendant to pay whatever fines are assessed.

Consequently, the court held the hearing on January 2, 1973 to consider this issue, despite the fact that it had not previously been raised by the parties. At the hearing, it was stipulated that defendant J. B. Williams would have the financial capacity to pay the maximum penalties sought here assuming that the court were to assess such penalties. [Transcript 5–6]

As for defendant Parkson, however, its counsel represented to the court that Parkson has a net worth of less than $500,000 and could not pay the maximum penalties sought against it. Defendant Parkson has submitted an affidavit by Jerome Cossman, Senior Vice President and chief financial officer of both J. B. Williams and Parkson, dated January 5, 1973, which states that in Mr. Cossman's opinion Parkson could not pay a $500,000 judgment. Attached to the affidavit is a Parkson financial statement dated June 30, 1971. (Parkson has not been separately audited since then, according to Cossman.) The financial statement indicates that Parkson's net income for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1971 was $11,903 and that its retained earnings as of that date were $398,731.

The Government argues that the true financial condition of Parkson is reflected in the amount of advertising business that it does, rather than in its financial accounts. The reason for this is that Parkson, which was an affiliate of J. B. Williams in 1969 and is now its wholly-owned subsidiary, does nearly all of its business with its parent corporation. Consequently, Parkson's earnings can be easily controlled by its parent through the terms of their contractual arrangements. Indeed, the Cossman Affidavit states:

---

[21] See United States v. Karns, CCH 1963 Trade Cases ¶ 70,950, at pp. 78,776–77 (S.D.N.Y. 1963); Wilson Chemical Company, supra.

[22] See United States v. Beatrice Foods Company, 52 F.R.D. 14, 18 (D.Minn. 1971); United States v. Beatrice Foods Co., 322 F.Supp. 139, 141 (D.Minn.1971); United States v. H. M. Prince Textiles, Inc., 262 F. Supp. 383, 389 (S.D.N.Y. 1966); Home Diathermy, supra.

> Parkson's financial arrangement with Williams provides for a monthly [549] service fee which is sufficient to reimburse Parkson for its expenses of operation and provide a modest profit of approximately $10,000 per year. [Affidavit, dated January 5, 1973, at paragraph 5.] (Emphasis added.)

While these contractual arrangements are to be respected, the court believes that the actual financial condition of Parkson is not accurately reflected by these arrangements or by Parkson's financial statement, but rather by Parkson's considerable business operations. The Government has produced a letter from Broadcast Advertisers Reports, Inc. (BAR)[23] which includes an estimate of J. B. Williams' expenditures on network television advertising during the past four years. BAR estimates that J. B. Williams spent far in excess of $10,000,000 per year during this period on network television advertising alone.[24] Geritol advertising materials included in Government Exhibits 1 and 2 make it clear that J. B. Williams has advertised extensively in other media as well.

Parkson handles all of this advertising business. See Cossman Affidavit, dated January 5, 1973, at 2; Rosenhaus Affidavit 1. Parkson's financial statement of June 30, 1971 indicates that its accounts receivable on that date were $1,114,133, reflecting the "monthly budgeted amount" of its media advertising costs which were billed directly to its clients. See Cossman Affidavit paragraph 6 and Financial Statement, note 1. In view of Parkson's substantial business operations, the court cannot say that the imposition of the maximum penalties demanded by the Government against Parkson, if they are otherwise warranted, would necessarily constitute an impossible financial burden on the company or would be unreasonable.

---

[23] Hynes Affidavit, Exhibit A, dated January 2, 1973 (Letter from David W. Thurston, Executive Vice President of Broadcast Advertisers Reports, Inc. to Patricia M. Hynes, dated December 27, 1972). The letter states that Broadcast Advertisers Reports, Inc. [BAR] is "the broadcast industry's independent source of network television commercial activity and estimated expenditures. BAR monitors every broadcast minute during the year of the ABC, CBS and NBC television networks. * * * Each week, working with the networks, BAR also develops a total time and talent price for each program, from which average commercial minute costs are derived. These costs are applied to each brand monitored in each program. Obviously, average costs are just that. On any given program, some advertisers may be actually paying less than the average, others more."

[24] Parkson has not disputed the accuracy of these estimates. BAR's estimate of expenditures in network television for J. B. Williams and selected brands for the years 1969 through the first ten months of 1972 were as follows:

Year	J. B. Williams Co.	Geritol Liquid	Geritol Tablets	FemIron Iron Tablets
1969	$26,302,500	$1,649,500	$5,402,200	$2,524,000
1970	22,467,800	1,882,700	5,709,200	1,699,200
1971	17,815,200	2,830,100	4,545,400	1,201,200
10 mos. 1972	*16,339,900	3,710,500	3,776,100	1,104,000

*For 1972, BAR noted, J. B. Williams' brands are listed under Nabisco as the parent company; the figure shown here is the total of the former J. B. Williams brands.

[38] On the other hand, Parkson is a smaller company than J. B. Williams and, therefore, even though the defendants share equal responsibility for the violations found here, the court will make some downward adjustment in the penalties to be assessed against Parkson. The court also realizes that Parkson may have great difficulty in paying the fines assessed in this action in a lump sum. Consequently, the court will entertain an [550] application by that defendant to pay the penalties over a period of years, in installments with interest, upon a showing of necessity therefor.

[39] In assessing the penalties in Section 5(l) actions, the degree of harm potentially having resulted from the violations charged against defendants should also be given some weight. In a sense, Section 5(l) serves the function in deceptive advertising cases of compensating the public for the monetary losses incurred by those individuals who were induced to purchase a product by the deceptive advertising sued upon. However, in such cases, it is difficult to ascertain the amount of money actually wasted by deceived consumers and it is far beyond the competence of the court to make an accurate determination in this regard. Nevertheless, where it is established that unlawful advertising has reached a vast audience at great expense, the court may assume that it has caused significant monetary harm to the public and should take this into account.[25]

[40] In this action, every violation charged in the complaint relates to the dissemination of an unlawful advertisement over network television to what the court recognizes must have been a very large audience.[26] Each Geritol advertisement was directed at the entire viewing audience, while each FemIron advertisement was directed at the entire female audience. There is a high probability that the advertisements induced substantial numbers of viewers to buy the preparations advertised, although the preparations would be of no benefit to them.

The extent of the deception thus caused is indicated by the following findings of the FTC which accompanied the issuance of the original order to cease and desist:

---

[25] See Wilson Chemical Company, supra, CCH 1962 Trade Cases ¶ 70,478, at pp. 76,957–58. In United States v. Vitasafe Corp., 234 F.Supp. 710 (S.D.N.Y.1964), aff'd per curiam, 352 F.2d 62 (2d Cir. 1965), Judge Weinfeld imposed $18,000 in penalties for nine violations of an FTC order. Each violation related to conduct which only affected a single individual and where the harm to him or her was apparently minimal. The court did note, however, the "widespread violations" by defendant of the FTC order. 234 F.Supp. at 716.

[26] For example, the disseminations charged in count 4 were made during the following network programs: June 11—ABC News (7:00–7:30 P.M.); June 12—NBC, "Dragnet" (9:30–10:00 P.M.); June 16—ABC, W. Sonnett (8:30–9:30 P.M.); June 18—NBC, "The Virginian" (7:30–9:00 P.M.); and June 19—NBC, "Ironside" (8:30–9:30 P.M.). The disseminations relating to count 7 were as follows: August 21 and August 28—CBS, "The Prisoner" (8:00–9:00 P.M.); September 2—CBS, "Walter Cronkite News" (7:00–7:30 P.M.); and September 3—CBS, "Beverly Hillbillies" (9:00–9:30 P.M.). This sample is entirely typical of the other disseminations sued upon in the complaint. See Government Exhibit 2, at 98–116 (Schedule from April 1, 1969 through September 18, 1969 of Geritol television advertising submitted to the FTC by letter from J. B. Williams, dated September 29, 1969.)

> * * * As we have found, respondents advertising is directed to the entire population of whom less than 10% have iron deficiency. * * * Most of this group who experience tiredness do not do so as a result of their deficienc[y] since mild cases produce no symptoms. The inescapable conclusion is that *the number of people in the total population who are tired because of iron * * * deficiency is infinitesimally small.* Unless, therefore, this small group of people, or a majority of them, are the only ones in the entire population who experience tiredness symptoms, respondents' argument must fail. [Respondents argued that there was no valid basis on the record for concluding that in only a small minority of persons is tiredness due to a deficiency of iron.]
>
> The overwhelming weight of the evidence is to the contrary. As we have previously found, the testimony of medical experts * * * establishes that the tiredness symptoms are common manifestations of almost any disease or disorder, and that the commonest causes of tiredness are neurosis and anxiety * * *.
>
> Contrary to respondents' contentions, we conclude that the charge in the complaint that Geritol will benefit only a small minority of persons with tiredness symptoms, is supported by substantial evidence in this record.
>
> Government Exhibit 1, at 96–97. (In the Matter of The J. B. Williams Company, FTC Docket No. 8547, Opinion of the Commission, dated September 28, 1965.) (Emphasis supplied.)

The Sixth Circuit held, on appeal, that there was substantial evidence to support the conclusions of the Commission in this regard. See J. B. Williams, supra, 381 F.2d at 889–890.

Therefore, consideration of the degree of harm potentially caused by defendants' violations of the order does not warrant any mitigation of the penalties to be assessed against defendants.

Finally, the court must consider the good or bad faith of defendants in disseminating the unlawful advertisements in this case. This factor is most important to the proper assessment of penalties, since the purpose of Section 5(l) is to coerce compliance with FTC orders. If a violation of a FTC order is merely the result of mistake, inadvertence, or even ordinary negligence, there is little reason for imposing a substantial penalty.[27] On the other hand, where a corporation wilfully violates an FTC order or acts with reckless disregard of the injunctions in the order, there is every reason to impose a penalty at or near the maximum prescribed. This is the treatment which the corporation must expect, for having been ordered to cease and desist from illegal practices, the corporation well knows the consequences of continuing those practices and should not be allowed to retain the profits derived thereby. Moreover, this is the most effective means of preventing others subject to FTC orders from flouting their proscriptions.

---

[27] The claim of inadvertence or negligence was raised and rejected in Vitasafe Corp., supra note 25, 234 F.Supp. at 712.

In evaluating the good or bad faith of defendants, the court takes particular note of their failure to demonstrate any serious intent to comply with the FTC order during the first year and a half in which it was in effect. For example, over a year after the order became final, defendants included in their Second Report of Compliance to the Commission five sets of advertisements which represented that: "For iron-poor, tired blood, try Geritol." Government Exhibit 3, at 27–33, 35–54 (FTC Docket No. 8547, filed January 31, 1969.) The only other advertisements submitted in the report contained the "power" representation discussed supra. Four of these are the targets of counts 1–4 of the instant action. Id. at 23–26, 34 (Exhibit AA of Second Report of Compliance.)

Defendants' effort to establish in their proof and arguments that it was difficult for them to understand the terms of the order is not well taken, for the meaning of the order is hardly abstruse. Defendents' argument as to "Williams' strenuous efforts to put itself in compliance with the Modified Order" (Memorandum 81) is likewise specious. To comply with the order, all that was required was the use of advertisements which did not make the forbidden representations or which included the disclosures prescribed in paragraph 1(d) of the order. Such a task did not demand substantial modification of defendants' business operations and should positively have been achieved in less than six months, to say nothing of the seventeenth-month period which the FTC allowed. Cf. Government Exhibit 4, Dissenting Statement of Commissioner Elman (FTC News Release dated June 25, 1969.)

Thus, the background of the instant action is the history of defendants' efforts to accomplish precisely what the order forbids without incurring any penalty for doing so. Nothing contained in [552] the affidavits to Mr. Rosenhaus, principal stockholder and chief executive officer of defendants in 1969, or of Mr. McGlothlin, counsel to defendants in 1969, detracts in the slightest from this conclusion.[28]

With this background in mind, the court turns to considering the good or bad faith of defendants in disseminating the challenged advertisements in the period of June–October, 1969, 17–20 months after the order became final.

---

[28] Indeed, the attitude of Mr. Rosenhaus toward compliance with the FTC order is well reflected in his affidavit:

> On June 9, 1969, a representative of Williams received a letter from the Commission, * * * stating "The Commission is of the view that the AA commercials will comply with the order if all references to 'power' are deleted."
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Within a short time, much less than 30 days after the Commission's letter, the AA commercials were completely discontinued, and * * * new commercials were in use.

Of course, if defendants intended to comply with the order, they could have discontinued the commercials immediately. See Pisani Deposition; Affidavits of Laffey and McCullough, submitted by the government.

The court has held that dissemination of the advertisements sued upon in counts 1–4 and 8–9 violated the FTC order primarily because of the use of the word "power" in the context of the advertisements. Each such dissemination, which constituted a separate violation of the order, as discussed above, occurred between June 2, 1969 and June 20, 1969.

It is undisputed that the following events took place prior to June 2, 1969. On January 31, 1969, defendants submitted their Second Report of Compliance to the FTC. Exhibit AA of the Report included the scripts of the advertisements here challenged in counts 1–4. Government Exhibit 3, at 23–26, 34. On May 8, 1969, a letter was sent to defendants' counsel from the head of the FTC's Division of Compliance. The letter stated:

> I have been instructed to contact you and inform you that the Commission would be favorably disposed to accepting as compliance with its order to cease and desist * * * the continued use of the AA advertisements only with deletion from them of all references to "power". Government Exhibit 2, at 1. (Emphasis supplied.)

By letter dated May 15, 1969, Mr. McGlothlin wrote the Commission on behalf of defendants as follows:

> Respondents agree to remove the word "power" from the advertisements designated in the last Compliance Report as "AA", without conceding that the use of that word was in violation of the Order. Government Exhibit 2, at 2. See also id. at 21.

It is clear that the FTC's advisory instructions were entirely reasonable, since the court has independently found that the use of the word "power" did violate the Order. At the least, the advice thus given to defendants put them on explicit notice of the FTC's views with respect to the "power" representation and should have received close attention by defendants. If defendants disagreed with the FTC's position, they had the option of appealing the determination under 5 U.S.C. §§ 701–706, see Rettinger v. Federal Trade Commission, 392 F. 2d 454, 457 (2d Cir. 1968), or perhaps seeking a declaratory judgment.

Instead, defendants persisted in disseminating the challenged advertisements containing the word "power" after receipt of the advisory instructions on May 8, 1969 and even after receipt of a formal notice of the FTC's position on June 9, 1969. See Rosenhaus Affidavit 9. These disseminations continued until June 20, 1969. The recited facts reveal a total lack of good faith with respect to the dissemination of these advertisements and, if not willful violations of the order, at least reckless disregard of its prohibitions. The violations were only slightly less egregious than if defendants had disseminated the very advertisements relied upon by the FTC when it originally issued the order.

[553] Therefore, the court finds it appropriate to impose the maximum penalty against J. B. Williams as to each of the violations charged in counts 1–4 and 8–9. For the reasons stated at page 549 supra, the court imposes a lesser penalty of $4,000 per violation against defendant Parkson.

[41] As for counts 5–7, defendants did not submit the challenged advertisements to the FTC for advice prior to their dissemination,[29] despite the fact that defendants' own employees were well aware of the possibility that the advertisements might violate the outstanding order. See p. 539 supra. After including the scripts in their Third Report of Compliance, which was submitted to the FTC on July 2, 1969, defendants continued to disseminate these advertisements without awaiting advice by the Commission as to their acceptability.

These facts establish defendants' bad faith with regard to these violations. Defendants' conduct amounted to gross negligence and bordered on recklessness. The court assesses a penalty of $4,000 against J. B. Williams and $3,000 against defendant Parkson with respect to each violation charged in counts 5–7.

[42] Counts 10 and 11 involve dissemination of the FemIron advertisements. Defendants did not submit any FemIron advertising to the FTC for its consideration until they were requested to do so by letter from an FTC attorney, dated July 7, 1969. Government Exhibit 2, at 53–54. Defendants were notified soon thereafter that: "The Division of Scientific Opinions [of the FTC] is of the opinion that FemIron and Geritol have substantially similar properties." Government Exhibit 2, at 56 (Letter from Ms. Saxon, FTC Attorney, dated July 16, 1969.)

The two FemIron advertisements sued upon make specific reference to tiredness and show a close-up of a "tired mother." See pages 542–544 supra. They were disseminated in September, 1969 and on October 1, 1969, over one month after defendants were advised that the appropriate division of the FTC considered FemIron to be covered by the order.[30]

The court concludes that the violations charged in counts 10 and 11 were in willful disregard of the FTC order. The maximum penalty will be imposed against J. B. Williams as to each of these violations and $4,000 per violation against defendant Parkson.

---

[29] See Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 394, 394 n. 22, 85 S.Ct. 1035, 1047, 13 L.Ed.2d 904 (1965):

If * * * a situation arises in which respondents are sincerely unable to determine whether a proposed course of action would violate the present order, they can, by complying with the Commission's rules, oblige the Commission to give them definitive advice as to whether their proposed action, if pursued, would constitute compliance with the order.

[30] In a letter dated September 3, 1969, the Commission officially notified defendants that FemIron "is subject to the order." Government Exhibit 2, at 64.

IV. Judgment

The court will issue an order requiring defendants to forfeit and pay to the United States the following civil penalties for the reasons set forth in this opinion:

	J. B. Williams	Parkson
Count 1	$5,000	$4,000
Count 2	20,000	16,000
Count 3	30,000	24,000
Count 4	25,000	20,000
Count 5	40,000	30,000
Count 6	120,000	90,000
Count 7	16,000	12,000
Count 8	30,000	24,000
Count 9	15,000	12,000
Count 10	90,000	72,000
Count 11	65,000	52,000

Total penalties assessed against J. B. Williams equal $456,000. Total penalties against Parkson equal $356,000.

As the court has indicated supra, it will entertain an application by defendant Parkson to pay the penalties in installments, with interest, upon a showing of necessity therefor.

APPENDIX A

Script 1

Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #G–218–30, reads as follows:

1. MS ON TED MACK IN LIBRARY STANDING NEXT TO LIGHT BOX.	1. MACK (O.C.): Your bloodstream has been called your lifeline. Look! You could have iron-poor blood cells like these * * *
2. HE FLIPS SWITCH, LIGHTING UP LEFT HALF OF SHADOW BOX TO SHOW BAD BLOOD CELLS AND TITLE: "IRON-POOR BLOOD BEFORE GERITOL"	2. pale, few in number, badly shaped.
3. DISSOLVE TO FILM CLIP OF "POOR" & "RICH" CELLS. IN THIS SEQUENCE WE WILL USE OUR FILM OF THE BLOOD CELLS FRAMES 2 & 3.	3. If that's so, take Geritol to build more blood cells * * * better shaped * * * rich in iron.
4. CUT TO ECU OF TWO BOTTLES & ZOOM BACK.	4. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its blood-building power to every part of your body.
5. CUT TO INSERT OF TABLET JAR IN MACK'S HAND. SUPER TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER".	5. Just two Geritol tablets contain twice the iron in a pound of calf's liver.

6. CUT TO MACK. DOLLY BACK TO REVEAL BOTH BOTTLES. TITLE: "BUILDS IRON POWER FAST" LOGO IN CIRCLE: AMERICA'S NUMBER ONE TONIC.	6. Take Geritol to build iron power in your blood fast!

APPENDIX B

Script 2

Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #G–219–40, reads as follows:

1. OPEN ON ECU OF TED MACK IN LIBRARY SETTING.	1. MACK: Hello, I'm Ted Mack. Have you ever asked yourself * * *
2. DISS TO WOMAN WHO LOOKS QUESTIONINGLY AT CAMERA. SHE IS NOT TIRED.	2. WOMAN (O.C.): "Can iron-poor blood happen to me?"
3. DISS TO CU MACK.	3. MACK: Check with your doctor. The answer may be yes. Especially if you're a woman.
4. HE HOLDS UP TABLET BOTTLE.	4. You may need iron * * * to change pale, iron-poor blood into iron-rich, red blood.
5. MACK HOLDS UP TABLET BOTTLE. ECU ON BOTTLE.	5. There's no finer, more effective iron tonic in the whole world than Geritol.
6. CONTINUE ON MACK AS HE TALKS.	6. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its blood-building power to every part of your body.
7. CUT TO ECU OF TABLET AND LIQUID BOTTLES. TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER".	7. Just two Geritol tablets or two tablespoons of Geritol liquid contains twice the iron in a whole pound of calf's liver.
8. CUT BACK TO MACK, MOVE BACK TO REVEAL BOTH BOTTLES UP FRONT. TITLE: "BUILDS IRON POWER IN YOUR BLOOD".	8. Get Geritol America's number one tonic * * * it builds iron power in your blood. Geritol really works!

APPENDIX C

Script 3

Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #G–219–30, reads as follows:

1. OPEN ON ECU OF TED MACK IN LIBRARY SETTING.	1. MACK: Have you ever asked yourself—
2. DISS TO WOMAN WHO LOOKS QUESTIONINGLY AT CAMERA. SHE IS NOT TIRED.	2. WOMAN (O.C.): "Can Iron-poor blood happen to me?"
3. DISS TO CU MACK.	3. MACK: Check with your doctor. The answer may be yes—especially if you're a woman.

4. HE HOLDS UP TABLET BOTTLE.	4. You may need iron.
5. MACK HOLDS UP TABLET BOTTLE. ECU ON BOTTLE.	5. There's no finer, more effective iron tonic in the world than Geritol.
6. CONTINUE ON MACK AS HE TALKS.	6. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its blood-building power to every part of your body.
7. CUT TO ECU OF TABLET BOTTLE. TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER."	7. Just two Geritol tablets contain twice the iron in a pound of calf's liver.
8. CUT BACK TO MACK. MOVE BACK TO REVEAL BOTH BOTTLES UP FRONT. TITLE: "BUILDS IRON POWER IN YOUR BLOOD."	8. Take Geritol, America's Number One Tonic—it builds iron power in your blood. Geritol really works!

APPENDIX D

Script 4

Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #G–556–30, reads as follows:

1. A MAN AND A WIFE ARE FILLING A STATION WAGON WITH VACATION GEAR, WIFE LOOKS SAD BUT NOT TIRED.	1. HUSBAND: Honey, we're going on vacation. Why do you look so sad? WIFE: I found out I have iron-poor blood.
2. WIFE TO TED MACK.	2. MACK: (O.C.): If you have iron-poor blood, don't be sad * * * be glad for GERITOL!
3. CUT TO ECU OF GERITOL TABLETS TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER."	3. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast carrying its high potency iron throughout your whole body.
4. DISSOLVE TO MAN AND WIFE COMING INTO THE HOUSE AFTER THEIR TRIP. WOMAN IS SMILING. SUPER: "WEEKS LATER."	4. HUSBAND: It's good to see you smile again. WIFE: Thanks to the Geritol I've been taking.
5. BACK TO MACK.	5. MACK: Check with your doctor. If you have iron-poor blood don't be sad * * * be glad for GERITOL!
6. CUT TO PRODUCT SHOT. SUPER: "BUILDS HIGH POTENCY IRON IN YOUR BLOOD." BULLET: "AMERICA'S NO. 1 TONIC."	6. It builds high potency iron in your blood. Try it!

APPENDIX E

Script 5

Parkson Advertising agency, Inc., #G–556–40–ALT, reads as follows:

1. A MAN AND A WIFE ARE FILLING A STATION WAGON WITH VACATION GEAR. WIFE LOOKS SAD BUT NOT TIRED.	1. HUSBAND: Debby, we're going on vacation. Why do you look so sad? WIFE: I found out I have iron-poor blood.
2. WIPE TO TED MACK IN LIBRARY.	2. MACK (O.C.): If you have iron-poor blood, don't be sad * * * be glad for GERITOL!
3. HOLDS UP BOTTLE OF GERITOL TABLETS. (LEFT HAND).	3. Geritol is the high potency iron tonic that carries blood-building iron throughout your whole body.
4. CUT TO ECU TABLET BOTTLE. TITLE: "TWICE THE IRON IN A POUND OF CALF'S LIVER." UNDERCUT "PLUS 7 VITAMINS."	4. Just two Geritol tablets contain twice the iron in a pound of calf's liver * * * plus 7 vitamins for nutrition.
5. DISS. TO MAN AND WIFE COMING INTO THE HOUSE AFTER THEIR TRIP. WOMAN IS SMILING SUPER: "WEEKS LATER."	5. HUSBAND: It's good to see you smile again. WIFE: Thanks to the Geritol I've been taking.
6. BACK TO TED MACK.	6. MACK: Check with your doctor, and if iron poor blood is your problem * * *
7. CUT TO PRODUCT SHOT. SUPER: "CHANGES IRON-POOR BLOOD INTO IRON-RICH BLOOD."	7. * * * don't be sad * * * be glad for Geritol. High potency Geritol changes iron-poor blood into iron-rich blood.

APPENDIX F

Script 6

Parkson Advertising Agency, Inc., #G–552–30, reads as follows:

1. OPEN ON FIRST WOMAN, WHO QUESTIONS THE CAMERA:	1. SCOTTIE BLOCK: What are you so sad about?
2. CUT TO SECOND WOMAN WITH SAD EXPRESSION WHO ANSWERS THE CAMERA:	2. LOIS SMITH: I found out I have iron-poor blood.
3. PULL BACK TO TWO-SHOT. IN BACKGROUND WE SEE KITCHEN COUNTER, CABINET, SINK AND WINDOW.	3. SCOTTIE BLOCK: Then it's time * * *

4. FIRST WOMAN PICKS UP AND UNCAPS BOTTLE OF GERITOL TABLETS.	4. * * * you found out about Geritol!
5. CUT TO CLOSEUP OF GERITOL TABLET BOTTLE. IN FIRST WOMAN'S HAND AS SHE POURS FROM IT TWO TABLETS INTO HAND OF SECOND WOMAN.	5. Geritol can change your iron-poor blood into iron-rich blood. I'll start you off.
6. CUT TO CLOSEUP OF SECOND WOMAN.	6. LOIS SMITH: Geritol really works?
7. PULL BACK TO TWO-SHOT AS FIRST WOMAN NOW POURS WATER FROM TAP INTO GLASS.	7. SCOTTIE BLOCK: Of course.
8. CUT TO ECU TABLET PACKAGE.	8. Geritol-iron enters your bloodstream fast * * *
9. MOVE IN ON SECOND WOMAN AS SHE SWALLOWS THE TWO GERITOL TABLETS WITH WATER, WHICH FIRST WOMAN HANDS HER.	9. * * * carrying its blood-building high potency iron throughout your body.
10. SHIMMER DISS. TO SECOND WOMAN HAPPILY EXAMINING DRESSES ON RACK IN DEPT. STORE. SHE HAPPENS TO LOOK UP SMILING AS SHE NOTICES FIRST WOMAN APPROACH. SUPER: "WEEKS LATER".	10. LOIS SMITH: Hello. SCOTTIE BLOCK: You're smiling.
11. CUT TO CLOSEUP OF SECOND WOMAN, STILL SMILING.	11. SCOTTIE BLOCK: Thanks to Geritol!
12. CUT TO GERITOL TABLET AND LIQUID BOTTLES AND PACKAGES SUPER: "BUILDS IRON POWER IN YOUR BLOOD".	12. ANNCR: (V.O.): Iron-poor blood? Be glad for Geritol. Builds high potency in your blood. Try it.

PAPERCRAFT CORPORATION v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 71–1681. F.T.C. Docket 8779

(United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, January 25, 1973)

1. If Other Reasonable Means of Developing Necessary Industry Data Are Available, a Large Number of Subpoenas Duces Tecum Should Not Be Issued in FTC Proceeding Involving Clayton Act Issues.

---

*Reported in 472 F.2d 927 (1973). For case before Commission, see 78 F.T.C. 1352; modified 79 F.T.C. 420; further modified 82 F.T.C. 1781.

[927] A large number of subpoenas duces tecum should not be issued in a Federal Trade Commission proceeding involving Clayton Act issues, if other reasonable means of developing necessary industry data are available, because service of many subpoenas, and the processing of the responses, would inevitably tend to delay the proceedings and might unnecessarily require the disclosure of confidential data.

2. BY FAILING TO PRAY FOR LESSER ALTERNATIVE IN EVENT THAT EXAMINER FOUND WHOLESALE REQUEST EXCESSIVE, PETITIONER WAS FORECLOSED FROM CONTENDING BEFORE APPELLATE COURT THAT EXAMINER SHOULD HAVE ORDERED SOMETHING LESS.

Petitioner, which in Federal Trade Commission proceeding failed to pray in alternative for a lesser number of subpoenas in event that examiner might consider its wholesale request excessive, was foreclosed from contending before the court of appeals that something less should have been ordered by the examiner.

3. F.T.C. MAY REQUIRE A SHOWING OF NEED BEFORE ISSUING 551 SUBPOENAS DUCES TECUM.

The Federal Trade Commission may properly require a showing of need before it will issue 551 subpoenas duces tecum for purpose of establishing precise contours of relevant market in a Clayton Act case.

4. UNLESS BASIS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION IS ADEQUATELY EXPLAINED, COURTS CANNOT PROPERLY PERFORM REVIEWING FUNCTIONS.

Courts cannot properly perform their reviewing function unless basis for administrative action is adequately explained.

5. NOVEL PROVISIONS WHICH CREATE ARTIFICIAL MARKET BARRIERS SHOULD NOT BE ACCEPTED AS ROUTINE SINCE PURPOSE OF CLAYTON ACT IS TO PRESERVE COMPETITION.

Since purpose of Clayton Act is to preserve competition, novel provisions which create artificial market barriers should not be accepted as routine without careful analysis.

6. DEFERENCE SHOULD BE ACCORDED TO EXPERTISE OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY, BUT WHEN IT SELECTS AS A REMEDY AN UNTRIED AND BLUNT INSTRUMENT WHICH WILL CAUSE IMPAIRMENT OF STATUTORY OBJECTIVES, COURT OF APPEALS REQUIRES A MORE CAREFUL EXPOSITION OF ITS JUSTIFICATION BEFORE SANCTION AS A REMEDIAL TOOL.

Deference should be accorded to expertise of administrative agency, particularly in fashioning of appropriate remedies; but when it selects an untried and blunt instrument which will certainly cause some impairment of statutory objectives, the Court of Appeals requires a more careful exposition of its justification before the court will sanction it as a proper remedial tool.

7. TO THE EXTENT THAT F.T.C. DIVESTURE ORDER RESTRAINED DIVESTING BUSINESS FROM SELLING TO CUSTOMER OF DIVESTED BUSINESS, THE DIVESTITURE ORDER WAS IMPROPER WHERE FINDINGS INDICATED THAT DIVESTED BUSINESS WAS FULLY CAPABLE OF SURVIVAL AS A VIABLE COMPETITOR.

Federal Trade Commission's divestiture order, to extent that it restrained divesting business from selling to customers of divested business for three-year period, was improper, where findings indicated that divested business was fully capable of survival as a viable com[928]petitor without this special protective provision and did not remotely suggest that divested business' ability to survive was dependent on such a provision.

(Syllabus with substituted captions was taken from 472 F. 2d 927)

Court held that F.T.C. may require showing of need before issuing 551 subpoenas duces tecum regarding Clayton Act case and further, that F.T.C.'s divestiture order was improper where findings indicated that divested business was fully capable of survival as a viable competitor without special protective provision. Modified and affirmed.

Abe Fortas, Richard M. Schmidt, Jr., David J. McKean, Washington, D.C., and Irwin I. Zatz, Chicago, Ill., for petitioner.

Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Karl H. Buschmann, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Before KILEY and STEVENS, Circuit Judges and KILKENNY, *Senior Circuit Judge.

STEVENS, Circuit Judge.

Papercraft Corporation petitions for review of a Federal Trade Commission order directing divestiture of assets acquired from CPS Industries, Inc., pursuant to an exchange of shares in December, 1967. The petition does not challenge the conclusion that the acquisition violated § 7 of the Clayton Act.[1] Papercraft contends: (1) that the Hearing Examiner's refusal to subpoena sales data from 551 companies allegedly engaged in the relevant line of commerce deprived it of a fair hearing, and (2) that the Commission abused its authority by restraining Papercraft from selling to customers of CPS for a three-year period.

I.

Prior to the acquisition, Papercraft and CPS were leading firms in the gift wrap industry. The term "gift wrap," though somewhat vague, encompasses wrapping paper and foil, ribbons, and various related items such as gift boxes and bows. CPS, an older firm, sold primarily high quality specialized merchandise; Papercraft, a younger and more aggressive company, concentrated on promotion of less expensive lines. Before the Commission, Papercraft argued (a) that CPS was a failing company, cf. International Shoe Co. v. F.T.C., 280 U.S. 291, 299–303, 50 S.Ct. 89, 74 L.Ed. 431; (b) that since CPS and Papercraft sold largely in different submarkets, they were not in substantial competition with each other, cf. International Shoe, supra at 295–299, 50 S.Ct. 89; and (c) that if Papercraft's request for 551 subpoenas had been granted, it might have proved that the relevant market was as much as twice as large as indicated by the evidence presented by complaint counsel. Only the third argument is pressed on appeal; there is no claim that the information sought by the requested subpoenas was relevant to the other two defenses.

---

* Senior Circuit Judge John F. Kilkenny of the Ninth Circuit sitting by designation.

[1] 38 Stat. 731, as amended in 1950 by 64 Stat. 1125; 15 U.S.C. § 18.

Papercraft made two requests, the first listing 230 companies believed to be sellers of gift wrap paper and ribbons; each requested subpoena called for documents showing the company's total shipments of gift wrapping paper and ribbon during the year 1967. The second request was for 321 subpoenas duces tecum seeking comparable data from companies believed to be in the gift box business.

The two requests were opposed for a variety of reasons, some of which were plainly insufficient. Thus, for example, complaint counsel contended that the requests were untimely,[2] and the hearing [929] examiner rejected the subpoena request directed to gift box companies on the ground that gift boxes were not part of the relevant product market.[3]

Papercraft did not seek an interlocutory appeal to the full Commission from the Examiner's order denying the application for subpoenas. The issue was therefore first presented to the full Commission as one of the contentions urged on appeal from the examiner's initial decision after the evidentiary record had been completed. In its opinion the Commission set forth reasons, which we consider adequate, for refusing to disturb the hearing examiner's rejection of the subpoena requests.

[1] The Commission first held that subpoenas duces tecum should not be issued to 550 companies if other reasonable means of developing

---

[2] Papercraft had initially moved the Commission to invoke the investigatory authority conferred by § 6(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. 15 U.S.C. § 46(b). The Hearing Examiner certified the motion to the full Commission, recommending denial on the ground that Papercraft had failed to demonstrate that equally probative evidence could not be obtained without a § 6(b) survey. The Commission accepted the Examiner's recommendation. Thereafter Papercraft sought an injunction in the district court to compel the Commission to obtain § 6(b) reports before the administrative hearings commenced. See Papercraft Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 307 F.Supp. 1401 (W.D.Pa.1970). The denial of that relief was followed by a request during the presentation of complaint counsel's case in chief for the issuance of Commission subpoenas; the Hearing Examiner deferred ruling on that request until the close of complaint counsel's case. In the circumstances, even though we recognize that subpoenas could have been requested at an earlier date, we cannot accept the argument that Papercraft's request was not timely. On the other hand, we find no merit in Papercraft's argument that the Commission's opposition to the § 6(b) motion partially on the ground that subpoenas provided one alternative means of obtaining appropriate information should foreclose their opposition to the particular request for 551 subpoenas which was ultimately denied.

[3] Contrary to the opinion of the Hearing Examiner, the Commission concluded that gift boxes were within the relevant product market. It also found, however, that they were relatively insignificant in quantity and that their exclusion did not affect the Examiner's overall assessment of the competitive impact of the merger.

necessary industry data are available.[4] We agree with this holding because the service of so many subpoenas, and the processing of the responses, would inevitably tend to delay the proceedings and might unnecessarily require the disclosure of confidential data. Cf. F.T.C. v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 305–306, 44 S.Ct. 336, 68 L.Ed. 696.

The Commission opinion identified various sources of industry data which the Commission found to be reasonably reliable.[5] Since it does not appear that Papercraft made any serious attempt to develop additional evidence from such sources, or to demonstrate that they were substantially inaccurate,[6] it did not satisfy the Commission's requirement for the issuance of such a large group of subpoenas.

[2] Papercraft argues, however, that the Commission's analysis, though it might justify denial of a wholesale request for 551 subpoenas, does not justify the denial of a more limited number which might have demonstrated error in aspects of the prima facie case. This argument is valid. Papercraft, however, cannot properly complain of denial of a request that it never made. Its failure to pray in the alternative for a lesser number of subpoenas in the event— which certainly was not unforeseeable—that the examiner might consider the wholesale request excessive, forecloses its contention here that something less should have been ordered by the [930] examiner.[7] Cf. F.T.C. v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 307, 44 S.Ct. 336, 68 L.Ed. 696.

[3] Much of the argument before us related to the reliability of complaint counsel's evidence defining the size of the relevant market and the respective shares represented by Papercraft and CPS prior to the acquisition. Our holding is not predicated on the theory, which seems to underlie much of the Commission's argument, that its prima facie evidence was so convincing that it is inconceivable that any mate-

---

[4] "The issuance of orders requiring special written reports, or of subpoenas duces tecum, to 550 companies should obviously be undertaken only if there is no other reasonable way to develop the necessary industry data." A. 369.

[5] These sources included census figures, known sales volumes for leading companies, trade association information, and estimates by experienced executives. The Commission found that the conclusion to be derived from these sources defined a total gift wrap market "in the general range of $150 million," and found nothing in the record to impeach that overall assessment.

[6] Indeed, Papercraft did not even call its own chief executive whose market estimate of $177,000,000 had been quoted in a trade publication.

[7] "The Commission, in the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum, * * * is authorized to deny the application in its entirety if it is 'too sweeping in its terms to be regarded as reasonable.' Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 76, 77, 26 S.Ct. 370, 380, 50 L.Ed. 652, * * *; Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 306, 44 S.Ct. 336, 68 L.Ed. 696. * * * Under such circumstances a demand for the whole is not warranted, even though some part of the papers asked for may be relevant." E. B. Muller & Co. v. F.T.C., 142 F.2d 511, 520 (6th Cir. 1944). While Muller dealt with the issuance of a single subpoena, and the subpoenaed party agreed to make a lesser production, we think the logic is applicable by analogy. The F.T.C. may deny the request in its entirety if the request is too broad in numbers to be regarded as reasonable.

rial contradiction could have been developed in respondent's case. On the contrary, we merely hold that the Commission may properly require a showing of need, which Papercraft failed to make in this case, before it will issue 551 subpoenas duces tecum for the purpose of establishing the precise contours of the relevant market in a § 7 case.[8] Papercraft failed to make an adequate demonstration of the need for its exceptional request.

II.

In his discussion of the remedy, the hearing examiner concluded: "Effective competition can be restored only by reestablishing CPS as a full-time company in the production and sale of gift wrap products, as it was prior to its acquisition.[9] He rejected Papercraft's proposal that divestiture be limited to the CPS product lines which were directly competitive with Papercraft products. His recommended order directed complete divestiture within six months, [931] required prior approval by the Commission of the plan or agreement of divestiture, and prohibited future acquisitions by Papercraft without the Commission's approval for a ten-year period. Papercraft does not object to these aspects of the order. However, the remedial order also provided in paragraph IX that Papercraft could not sell any decorative gift wrap products to certain customers or former customers of CPS for a period of three years from the date of divestiture. It is that paragraph, as modified by the Commission, which Papercraft challenges here.

As recommended by the hearing examiner, paragraph IX would have prohibited Papercraft from selling to any former customer of CPS unless Papercraft had made sales to that account prior to December 27, 1967, the acquisition date.[10] The Commission initially adopted paragraph IX in this form without any comment on the need or justification for such a provision.

---

[8] Other than by seeking to use the compulsory process of the Commission, Papercraft made no attempt to prove its allegation that the relevant market was $300,000,000 and presented nothing to contradict complaint counsel's extensive evidence tending to prove that the market was approximately $150,000,000. Papercraft did not offer affirmative evidence in an effort to show that a more reliable and detailed survey of the relevant market was necessary; consequently, no showing of prejudice has been made. See N.L.R.B. v. Seine and Line Fisherman's Union, 374 F.2d 974, 981–982 (9th Cir. 1967).

The underlying considerations here are similar to those identified by Judge Learned Hand in N.L.R.B. v. Blackstone Mfg. Co., 123 F.2d 633, 635 (2d Cir. 1941):

> "In the case at bar the respondent's only statement of 'the nature of the facts to be proved' was that it wished 'to cross-examine them' (the signers of the cards) 'as to the authenticity of their signatures and as to the present status of any of the alleged authorizations contained on the cards'. This demand the Board might indeed have been obliged to grant, if the respondent had examined the cards and compared them with signatures in its possession, or if it had proved that it had no means of comparison. But it refused even to look at the cards, alleging that it might later be charged with discrimination, a position clearly inconsistent with a desire to cross-examine the signers. The employees were presumably within its reach without subpoena anyway, and the request had every mark of being what the Board declared that it was. While we should indeed be jealous of any denial of process to an employer, the Board is not powerless to prevent itself from being put upon by frivolous and dilatory demands."

A persuasive showing of need as a prerequisite to the wholesale issuance of subpoenas does not offend due process or the Administrative Procedure Act.

[9] A. 325.

Papercraft then filed a petition for reconsideration or reopening, contending that paragraph IX was unprecedented, unsupported by findings or evidence, and would restrain rather than restore competition. The petition pointed out that the CPS business had been operated separately since the acquisition and that the CPS product lines and marketing practices had been preserved. The record indicates that CPS sales and profits had increased materially under Papercraft ownership.

The Commission modified paragraph IX by limiting the prohibition to accounts "which at any time during the two (2) years preceding December 27, 1967, and until divestiture is effected hereunder" had been sold any gift wrap by CPS.[11] The order contained no other comment on paragraph IX.

[4, 5] Paragraph IX is by no means a standard remedial provision. Other divestiture orders have included special provisions designed to insure the survival of the divested business, but in each such instance the supporting findings demonstrated the need for a special protective provision.[12] Such find[932]ings are essential for two important reasons: courts cannot properly perform their reviewing function unless the basis for administrative action is adequately explained. S.E.C.

---

[10] In its recommended form, paragraph IX provided:

"IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that for a period of three (3) years from the date of divestiture The Papercraft Corporation is prohibited from selling any decorative gift wrap products to any customer account which at any time has been sold any decorative gift wrap products by CPS Industries, Inc., unless such customer account was sold such decorative gift wrap products by The Papercraft Corporation prior to December 27, 1967." A. 328–329.

[11] The order entered on September 9, 1971, provided, in part:

"IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Paragraph IX of the Commission's final order of June 30, 1971, be, and it hereby is, modified to read as follows:

"IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that for a period of three (3) years from the date of divestiture the Papercraft Corporation is prohibited from selling any decorative giftwrap products to any direct customer account of CPS Industries, Inc., which at any time during the two (2) years preceding December 27, 1967, and until divestiture is effected hereunder, has been sold any decorative giftwrap products by CPS Industries, Inc., unless such customer account was sold such decorative giftwrap products by the Papercraft Corporation prior to December 27, 1967.

"IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that respondent's Petition for Reconsideration be, and it hereby is, otherwise denied; * * *." A. 400.

[12] In Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 92 S.Ct. 1142, 31 L.Ed.2d 492, even though Autolite's precarious post-divestment position was not attributable to Ford's acquisition, the findings clearly supported the conclusion that it might not survive unless Ford was prohibited from making an independent entry into the market and required, in effect, to subsidize it for a limited period of time. (See 405 U.S. at 582–583, 92 S.Ct. 1142, opinion of Chief Justice Burger.) The position of Ford in the sparkplug market is wholly dissimilar to the position of Papercraft in the gift wrap business, and there are no findings in this record indicating that CPS's post-divestment position will be precarious or that paragraph IX would forestall any significant threat to survival.

In L. G. Balfour Co. v. F.T.C., 442 F.2d 21 (7th Cir. 1971), exceptional relief was supported by findings describing an unusual history of predatory behavior in a market which had been dominated by one firm for many years. The order was designed to resurrect competition in a monopolistic market, see 442 F.2d at 23, not, as in this case, to preserve the position of the largest firm in a market containing at least a score of significant competitors.

v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 84, 63 S.Ct. 454, 87 L.Ed. 626; F.T.C. v. Crowther, 139 U.S.App.DC. 137, 430 F.2d 510, 514 (1970); and since the purpose of the statute is to preserve competition, novel provisions which create artificial market barriers should not be accepted as routine without careful analysis.

Unquestionably, a wholesome purpose may be served by a limited restraint on competition in certain situations.[13] Conceivably, no buyer would purchase the CPS business without the protection afforded by the former owner's covenant not to compete for certain accounts, in certain areas, or in certain product lines for a limited period of time.[14] However, neither Commission counsel nor the findings suggest any such justification for paragraph IX. Instead, taking a position somewhat inconsistent with the Commission's rejection of the defense that CPS was a "failing company" at the time of acquisition, Commission counsel argue that paragraph IX was included "so that CPS can reestablish itself as a viable competitor in the marketplace." [15]

The findings indicate, however, that CPS is fully capable of survival as a "viable competitor" without paragraph IX; certainly they do not remotely suggest that the company's ability to survive is dependent on such a provision.

The findings describe CPS as the largest as well as the oldest significant firm in the industry. They do indicate that CPS suffered losses in 1964 and 1965 as a result of non-recurring costs associated with the relocation of its major plant, and in 1967 as the result of the post-acquisition accounting determination that the value of its inventory should be "written down." The findings also recognize that CPS had a management problem during the mid and late 1960s. They conclude, however, that with proper executive leadership, pretax earnings of $1,900,000 on sales of $19,000,000 could be anticipated.

The Papercraft executives provided CPS with effective management, and, accordingly, CPS has prospered since the acquisition. Upon divestiture, presumably, the key executives would remain with Papercraft, and the new owner of CPS would face the problem of providing effective new leadership for the company. Nothing in the findings or the evidence suggests that competent executive talent is unavailable, or that potential new executives' willingness to join CPS is somehow dependent on the existence of a limited protection against competition from Papercraft. Paragraph IX cannot be rationalized as a solution for the CPS management problem.[16]

---

[13] See, e.g., Mitchel v. Reynolds, 24 Eng. Rep. 347 (K.B. 1711).

[14] Presumably the precise form of a permissible covenant not to compete, along with other elements of the bargain, would be subject to negotiation between Papercraft and any prospective purchaser of the divested asset. The form of such a covenant would, of course, be subject to Commission approval under paragraph IX of the order.

[15] Brief for respondent, p. 41.

[16] If the company is indeed doomed because its management is inadequate, paragraph IX certainly will not enable it to survive.

If the management problem is put to one side, there is nothing in the findings to suggest that CPS will be less able to maintain its position as market leader than if the acquisition had never taken [933] place. Indeed, the evidence implies that CPS will be a stronger company following divestiture than it was in 1967. As in the past, it will face competition from about 20 significant producers and many more small concerns, but the Commission has failed to demonstrate that its survival may depend on the imposition of special restraints against just one of those rivals.

The restriction imposed on Papercraft by paragraph IX is not "narrowly drawn," as appellate counsel for the Commission contend. As already noted, Papercraft is a relatively young company, many of whose lines are not competitive with any products sold by CPS. Under paragraph IX, Papercraft could not even sell noncompetitive items to a new customer who had made a single purchase from CPS at some time after December 9, 1965. The restriction would apply even if CPS had received no business from the account since 1966. Moreover, even if such an account had been obtained by Papercraft in 1968 and regularly supplied thereafter with items not handled by CPS, the customer would be required to go elsewhere for such merchandise. In such a case, the restraint would harm the customer and Papercraft, be of no benefit to CPS, and provide a gratuitous competitive advantage to other companies seeking that business.

Perhaps the posited case is purely theoretical, or so improbable as to be insignificant in a fair overall assessment of the impact of the order on the competitive market. Our problem is that we simply cannot tell from the findings, or the portions of the record discussed in the argument, whether the adverse impact on competition which paragraph IX will certainly produce is outweighed by the risk that the market leader will suddenly collapse without this interim protection.

[6, 7] We are conscious of the deference to be accorded to the expertise of the administrative agency, particularly in the fashioning of appropriate remedies.[17] But when it selects an untried and blunt instrument which will certainly cause some impairment of statutory objectives, we require a more careful exposition of its justification before we will sanction it as a proper remedial tool. The Commission failed to make an adequate demonstration of the need for its exceptional remedy.

The order will be modified by the deletion of paragraph IX. As so modified, it is Affirmed.

---

[17] F.T.C. v. Mandel Bros., Inc., 359 U.S. 385, 392–393, 79 S.Ct. 818, 3 L.Ed.2d 893; F.T.C. v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 428, 77 S.Ct. 502, 1 L.Ed.2d 438; F.T.C. v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 473, 72 S.Ct. 800, 96 L.Ed. 1081.

ACTION ON SAFETY AND HEALTH, ET AL. v. F.T.C.*

Civ. A. No. 49–73. FTC File No. 99–142.

(United States District Court for the District of Columbia, January 29, 1973)

Suit seeking increased public participation in F.T.C. consent order negotiations dismissed on grounds that court lacked jurisdiction over subject matter. F.T.C.'s grant or denial of intervention is entirely discretional and not judicially reviewable. Plaintiffs did not show that important constitutional rights had been denied.

Peter H. Meyers, Washington, D.C., for plaintiffs.

Robert Rankin, Washington, D.C., for defendant.

Before RICHEY, District Judge.

ORDER

This cause having come on for hearing on plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order, and upon consideration of the said motion, the suggestion of dismissal made by the United States Attorney pursuant to Rule 12(h)(3), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, of the complaint and exhibits and memoranda filed in support thereof, of the entire record herein, and of arguments of counsel made in open Court, and it appearing to the Court that it lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof, for the reason that a grant or denial of intervention in Commission non-adjudicative consent negotiations is entirely discretionary with the Commission and is not judicially reviewable; and that no showing has been made that defendant has clearly violated an important constitutional or statutory right of plaintiffs since the Commission's consent order procedure, 16 C.F.R. §§ 2.31–.35, affords plaintiffs ample and meaningful opportunity to comment on executed consent agreements prior to final acceptance or rejection of such agreements by the Commission, it is by the Court this 29th day of January, 1973:

Ordered that the suggestion of the United States Attorney be, and it hereby is, adopted by the Court; and it is further

Ordered that the complaint herein be, and it hereby is, dismissed; and it is further Ordered that plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order be, and it hereby is, denied.

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 74,336, at 93,579 (1973–1 Trade Cases), Affirmed: April 17, 1974, D.C. Cir., p. 922 herein.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY v. F.T.C., ET AL.*

AND

F.T.C. v. J. K. JAMIESON, ET AL.*

Civ. A. Nos. 774–72; 1204–72. F.T.C. File No. 99–126.

(United States District Court for the District of Columbia, February 7, 1973)

Before Bryant, District Judge.

Order

The Court having by order dated January 8, 1973, ordered that these two cases be consolidated, and

This matter having come before the Court on defendants' motion in Civil Action No. 774–72 to dismiss the complaint or, in the alternative, for summary judgment in that action, and on the petition of the Federal Trade Commission in Civil Action No. 1204–72 invoking the aid of this Court, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 49, in requiring respondent Standard Oil Company, by respondent J. K. Jamieson, to comply with an administrative subpoena duces tecum issued by petitioner, and

The Court having considered defendants' motion to dismiss or, in the alternative, for summary judgment, the complaint, exhibits and other papers of record in Civil Action No. 774–72, and the verified petition and other papers of record in Civil Action No. 1204–72, and the Court having heard oral argument in open court on January 31, 1973, it is hereby Ordered, That the complaint in Civil Action No. 774–72 be and the same is dismissed for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, and it is further

Ordered, That the relief requested by petitioner in Civil Action No. 1204–72, be, and hereby is, granted, and it is further Ordered, That respondent Standard Oil Company, by respondent J. K. Jamieson, be, and hereby is, commanded to appear before a duly designated representative of petitioner, at Room 553, Federal Trade Commission Building, 6th Street & Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., at a time and on a date to be designated by petitioner upon not less than five days notice, and then and there to testify and produce the books, papers and documents requested in a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Commission on October 5, 1971, a copy of which is appended to the petition of the Federal Trade Commission in Civil Action No. 1204–72 as Exhibit 1, and it is Further ordered, That a certified copy of this Order be served forthwith upon respondents J. K. Jamieson and Standard Oil Company by the United States Marshal.

---

*Not otherwise reported.

N. C. FREED COMPANY, INC., ET AL. v. BOARD OF GOVERNORS of the FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM, ET AL.*

No. 49, Docket 72–1381. F.T.C. File 99–90

(United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, February 1, 1973)

1. Assurance of a Meaningful Disclosure of Credit Terms So That Consumer Will Be Able To Compare More Readily Credit Terms Available to Him Is the Avowed Purpose of the Truth in Lending Act.

[1210] Avowed purpose of the Truth in Lending Act is to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that consumer will be able to compare more readily credit terms available to him and avoid uninformed use of credit.

2. Consumer Credit Protection Act Is Remedial in Nature and Must Be Construed in Liberal Fashion.

Consumer Credit Protection Act is remedial in nature and its terms must be construed in liberal fashion.

3. A Contract Will Be Deemed To Include in Its Terms All Rights Conferred Upon Parties by the Laws of the State in Which Contract Is Executed.

A contract will be deemed to include in its terms all rights conferred upon parties by the laws of the state in which the contract is executed.

4. Implicit in a Contract To Renovate, Remodel or Repair a House Is a Provision That Lien Will Attach To Secure Payment for Work and Material.

Since a contract to renovate, remodel or repair a house imports that work will be done by mechanics and artisans and that materials will be furnished in connection with that work, implicit in contract is a provision that lien will attach to secure payment for work and materials, and statutory provisions for mechanic's and materialmen's liens must be taken as part of contract.

5. It Was the Intent of Congress To Establish a National Policy of Protecting Consumers Whose Residences May Be Jeopardized by Section 125(a) of the Truth in Lending Act.

[1211] Congress intended by Section 125(a) of the Truth in Lending Act to establish a national policy of protecting consumers whose residences may be jeopardized by operation of all types of security interests acquired by creditors in the home-improvement industry, and the goal was to provide uniform protection throughout the nation, irrespective of vagaries among states' lien laws.

6. Regulation of Federal Reserve Board Permitting Consumer To Rescind a Credit Transaction Within Three Days From Date of Its Execution Was Not an Improper Extension of the Statute and Was Valid.

Statutory liens are included in term "security interest" within statute permitting consumer to rescind home improvement contract within three days from date of its execution in any credit transaction wherein a security interest "is retained or acquired" in consumer's residence; thus, regulation of Federal Reserve Board permitting consumer to rescind a credit transaction within three days from date of its execution where a security interest "is or will be retained or acquired" by a creditor in consumer's home was not an improper extension of statute and was valid.

---

*Reported in 473 F.2d (1973). Cert. denied: Oct. 9, 1973, 414 U.S. 827, 94 S.Ct. 48.

7. FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD'S CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE PURSUANT TO WHICH IT PROMULGATED REGULATION WAS ENTITLED TO DEFERENCE IN ACTION CHALLENGING VALIDITY OF THE REGULATION.

Federal Reserve Board's construction of statute pursuant to which it promulgated regulation was entitled to deference in action challenging validity of the regulation.

8. LETTER WRITTEN ONE YEAR AFTER ENACTMENT OF ACT BY SPONSOR OF THE ACT DID NOT CONSTITUTE PART OF LEGISLATIVE HISTORY AND WAS ENTITLED TO NO WEIGHT IN DETERMINING LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

Letter written one year after enactment of act by sponsor of the act did not constitute part of legislative history and was entitled to no weight in determining legislative intent.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 473 F.2d 1210)

Court held that statutory liens are not excluded from operation of statute permitting consumer to rescind home improvement contract within three days of its execution in any credit transaction where a security interest "is retained or acquired" and, therefore, Federal Reserve Board did not exceed its authority under the statute in defining "security interest" to include statutory liens.

Thomas J. Press, Atty., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C. (L. Patrick Gray, III, Asst. Atty. Gen., H. Kenneth Schroeder, Jr., U.S. Atty., Alan S. Rosenthal, Atty., Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C. of counsel), for defendants-appellants.

Joseph J. Lyman, Washington, D.C., for plaintiffs-appellees.

Brief of amicus curiae in support of defendants-appellants filed by Mark E. Budnitz, Atty., the National Consumer Law Center, Inc., Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts.

Before MOORE, HAYS and MULLIGAN, Circuit Judges.

MOORE, Circuit Judge:

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (the Board) and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) appeal from a judgment and order of the United States District Court for the Western District of New York declaring invalid a regulation promulgated by the Board pursuant to the Truth-in-Lending Act, which comprises Title I of the Consumer Credit Protection Act[1] (the Act). The action for declaratory judgment and injunction was brought below by appellees N. C. Freed Company, Inc., and International Roofing Corp., two corporations in the home improvement industry organized under the laws of the State of New York, pursuant to the Declaratory Judgment Act

---

[1] 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq.

(28 U.S.C. § 2201) and the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. §§ 701–706).[2] Appellees sought, and the district court granted, a two-part order (1) declaring invalid 12 CFR § 226.9(a),[3] which was designed to implement [1212] Section 125(a) of the Act,[4] on the ground that the Board exceeded its Congressionally conferred authority in overextending the reach of said Section; and (2) enjoining the FTC and all other federal agencies from enforcing the regulation.

I.

The relevant facts are not disputed by the parties. The business of the appellees is derived almost entirely from credit transactions with homeowners wishing to have improvements made on their homes. The usual business procedure followed by the appellees involves salesmen who call upon the homeowner in an effort to secure contracts for the performance of home repair work. The contracts ordinarily provide that the appellees will perform the work on the homeowner's premises for an agreed price, on credit terms. At the time the contract is executed the homeowner-obligor is not required to execute a (second) mortgage, deed of trust, or other indenture on his residence as a condition for the extension of credit. He is, however, required to sign an unsecured promissory note to the contractor's (appellees') order, for the contract price of the work. Typically, the promissory note is then negotiated or assigned by appellees to a bank or other financial institution. By operation of law in many states such a promissory note spawns various statutory liens, such as mechanic's, materialmen's, artisan's, and similar type liens, on the consumer's home at the time the work is commenced.[5]

---

[2] The appellees' standing to challenge the regulation in question was conceded. See Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 139–140, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967); Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 99, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 20 L.Ed.2d 947 (1968); and Barlow v. Collins, 397 U.S. 159, 166–167, 90 S.Ct. 832, 25 L.Ed. 2d 192 (1970).

[3] 12 CFR § 226.9(a) provides:

(a) General rule. Except as otherwise provided in this section, in the case of any credit transaction in which a security interest is or will be retained or acquired in any real property which is used or is expected to be used as the principal residence of the customer, the customer shall have the right to rescind that transaction until midnight of the third business day, following the date of consummation of that transaction or the date of delivery of the disclosures required under this section and all other material disclosures required under this part, whichever is later, by notifying the creditor by mail, telegram or other writing of his intention to do so. Notification by mail shall be considered given at the time mailed; notification by telegram shall be considered given at the time filed for transmission; and notification by other writing shall be considered given at the time delivered to the creditor's designated place of business. (footnote omitted, emphasis added.)

"Security interest" is defined in 12 CFR § 226.2(z) as follows:

(z) "Security interest" and "security" mean any interest in property which secures payment or performance of an obligation. The terms include, but are not limited to, security interests under the Uniform Commercial Code, real property mortgages, deeds of trust, and other consensual or confessed liens whether or not recorded, mechanic's, materialmen's, artisan's, and other similar liens, vendor's liens in both real and personal property, the interest of a seller in a contract for the sale of real poperty, any lien on property arising by operation of law, and any interest in a lease when used to secure payment or performance of an obligation.

[4] 15 U.S.C. § 1635(a). This section provides:

(a) Disclosure of obligor's right to rescind.

Except as otherwise provided in this section, in the case of any consumer credit transaction in which a security interest is retained or acquired in any real property which is used or is expected to be used as the residence of the person to whom credit is extended, the obligor shall have the right to rescind the transaction until midnight of the third business day following the consummation of the transaction or the delivery of the disclosures required under this section and all other material disclosures required under this part, whichever is later by notifying the creditor, in accordance with regulations of the Board, of his intention to do so. The creditor shall clearly and conspicuously disclose, in accordance with regulations of the Board, to any obligor in a transaction subject to this section the rights of the obligor under this section. The creditor shall also provide, in accordance with regulations of the Board, an adequate opportunity to the obligor to exercise his right to rescind any transaction subject to this section. (emphasis added.)

Section 125(a) of the Act requires that a creditor (e.g., appellees or a financial [1213] institution) furnish the consumer with a notice of the right to rescind the home improvement contract within three days from the date of its execution in any credit transaction [6] wherein a security interest is retained or acquired in the consumer's residence. Pursuant to Section 105 of the Act,[7] which directs the Federal Reserve Board to "prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of [Section 125]", the Board promulgated the challenged regulation, which provides that a consumer shall have the right to rescind a credit transaction within three days from the date of its execution where a security interest is or will be retained or acquired by a creditor in the consumer's home.[8] The present controversy centers upon the verb tense difference between the language of Section 125(a), "is retained or acquired," and that of the regulation, "is or will be retained or acquired." The appellees argued successfully below that the Board has improperly extended the reach of Section 125(a) to cover non-consensual or statutory liens arising in futuro, and that Congress had intended that the right of rescission prescribed by the Section would pertain only to second mortgages or other consensual liens given by the homeowner at the time the contract is executed. On cross-motions for summary judgment the district court entered judgment for appellees, concluding that the regulation exceeded the Board's authority and was thus unlawful:

---

[5] See e.g., N.Y. Lien Law § 3 (McKinney's Consol. Laws, c. 33, 1966).

[6] Under § 125(a) and the applicable regulations a "consumer credit" transaction is one for which a finance charge (see 12 CFR § 226.2) is or may be imposed or which, pursuant to an agreement, is or may be payable in more than four installments. It is not disputed by the parties herein that the appellees engage in consumer credit transactions within this definition.

[7] 15 U.S.C. § 1604. This section provides, in relevant part:

> The Board shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this subchapter. These regulations may contain such classifications, differentiations, or other provisions, and may provide for such adjustments and exceptions for any class of transactions, as in the judgment of the Board are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this subchapter, to prevent circumvention or evasion thereof, or to facilitate compliance therewith.

[8] See note 3 supra.

> That much of the regulation pertaining to security interests that will be retained or acquired is beyond the Board's power and is an invalid implementation of Section 125(a).
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The plain fact is that Congress in enacting Section 125(a) made rescindable only those contracts which acquired a security interest through a mortgage, deed of trust, or other consensual type lien, and did not include liens which might arise in the future by operation of law.[9] (emphasis added).

The Federal Reserve Board and the FTC on appeal argue that the challenged regulation is both necessary and proper to effectuate the purposes of the Truth-in-Lending Act, and that, in seeking to protect unwitting consumer-homeowners from home improvement frauds, Congress did not intend to restrict protection provided by the Act solely to consensual liens, such as second mortgages, but intended to include all liens resulting from a consumer credit transaction. The narrow issue we must here decide is whether the Federal Reserve Board exceeded its authority by including statutory liens within the rescission provision of the Truth-in-Lending Act. Our close reading of the legislative history leads us to agree with the position taken by appellants Federal Reserve Board and Federal Trade Commission and, accordingly, we reverse the judgment below.[10]

II.

[1214] [1, 2] The avowed purpose of the Consumer Credit Protection Act, enacted in 1968 after eight years of Congressional consideration, was to "assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that the consumer will be able to compare more readily the various credit terms available to him and avoid the uninformed use of credit."[11] The Act is remedial in nature, designed to remedy what Congressional hearings revealed to be unscrupulous and predatory creditor practices throughout the nation.[12] Since the statute is remedial in nature, its terms must be construed in liberal fashion if the underlying Congressional purpose is to be effectuated. See Peyton v. Rowe, 391 U.S. 54, 64–65, 88 S.Ct. 1549, 20 L.Ed.2d 426 (1968); Tcherepnin v. Knight, 389 U.S. 332, 336, 88 S.Ct. 548, 19 L.Ed.2d 564 (1967).

---

[9] N. C. Freed Company, Inc., and International Roofing Corp. v. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and Federal Trade Commission, Civil No. 1970–43 (W.D.N.Y., filed Sept. 29, 1971) at 6, 7–8.

[10] We note that the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals has recently ruled on the precise issue raised in this appeal. We concur with the conclusions reached by Judge Robb in Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corp. v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System, 464 F.2d 838 (D.C.Cir. 1972).

[11] 15 U.S.C. § 1601. For discussion of the historical background of consumer credit regulation, see Jordan and Warren, A Proposed Uniform Code for Consumer Credit, 8 B.C.Ind. & Com.L.Rev. 441, 441–49 (1967).

In Tcherepnin the Supreme Court held that the term "securities", for purposes of the Securities Exchange Act, should be construed broadly because of the remedial nature of that statue, legislation designed to protect investors through the requirement of full disclosure by issuers of securities. The Court stated that in defining "security" under the Exchange Act (as we must determine the proper scope of "security interest" under the Truth-in-Lending Act), "form should be disregarded for substance and the emphasis should be on economic reality." (Id.) See also Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 196 U.S. 1, 14–18, 25 S.Ct 158, 49 L.Ed. 363 (1904); FTC v. Mandel Bros., Inc., 359 U.S. 385, 388–389, 79 S.Ct. 818, 822, 3 L.Ed.2d 893 (1959) ("We deal with remedial legislation of a regulatory nature where our task is to fit, if possible, all-parts into an harmonious whole."

One "economic reality" of the home improvement industry is that, in work such as that performed by the appellees, second mortgages and statutory liens are used extensively to secure payment of home improvement contracts that are ordinarily "insecure" business ventures.[13] Our reading of the legislative history demonstrates that although Congress was concerned in Section 125(a) primarily with abuses flowing from creditor use of second mortgages as a security device, it was equally concerned with abuses stemming from use of other types of liens:

> [A]nother provision of the bill is also vitally important. That is the Cahill amendment, or rather a series of amendments in the House, to strike at home improvement racketeers who trick home owners, particularly the poor, into signing contracts at exorbitant rates, which turn out to be liens on the family residences. Any credit transaction which involves a security [1215] interest in property must be clearly explained to the consumer as involving a mortgage or lien; any such transaction involving the consumer's residence—other than

---

[12] Prior to passage of the Act the extent of home improvement frauds was staggering, with costs to consumers, according to the National Better Business Bureau report for 1965, totalling somewhere between $500 million and $1 billion annually. Hearings on S.J.Res. 130, S. 3065 and S. 3066 Before the Senate Commerce Committee, 90th Cong., 2d Sess., ser. 90–64, at 75 (1968), in Unfair Practices in the Home Improvement Industry and Amendments to the FTC Act (1968) [hereinafter cited as Hearings on S.J. 130].

During Congressional debate it was noted that:

> [M]isrepresentations are made directly to the borrower by the mortgage discount lender or a broker who offers to arrange home improvement repairs or consolidation of all homeowner's debts into "one easy monthly payment." * * * [I]n many cases [the homeowner] is never informed nor aware that his home is being made subject to a mortgage. 114 Cong.Rec. pt. 2, 1611 (1968) (remarks of Representative Cahill).

[13] Hearings on S.J.Res. 130, supra, at 10, 43, 70, 241–42.

> in a purchase-money first mortgage for the acquisition of the home—carries a 3-day cancellation right.[14] (emphasis added.)

The typical home improvement contract is procured, usually under pressure conditions, by a prime contractor (such as the appellees) who frequently possesses little or no capital of its own; the actual work is often done by various subcontractors.[15] When the promissory note signed by the homeowner is assigned or negotiated to a financial institution, which can then assert holder-in-due-course status gainst him,[16] his premises become vulnerable not only to the statutory liens available to the prime contractor, but also to the various mechanic's and materialmen's liens of the subcontractors, as well as to the secured position of the holder-in-due-course financial institution. Thus, if the homeowner should default in payment to the prime contractor, the latter could levy on the home to obtain payment, that is, unless the contractor has waived its statutory liens. But even though the prime contractor may waive its liens in the contract, it usually cannot waive statutory liens arising in favor of subcontractors,[17] so that if the prime contractor fails to pay its subcontractors the latter can also levy on the home to collect payment.[18] Conceivably, then, in many states even if the homeowner has already paid the prime contractor, in order to protect his home from subcontractor statutory liens, he may also have to pay the subcontractors, thus paying twice for the same work.

[3–5] The appellees recognize the existence of this problem but they argue, and the district court agreed, that, because Section 125(a) speaks of a mortgage or lien that is retained or acquired, liens arising in the future by operation of state law were meant to be excluded since they are not "retained or acquired" at the time the contract is executed by the parties. This argument, however, flies in the face of established authority that a contract will be deemed to include in its terms all rights conferred upon the parties by the laws of the state in which the contract is executed. See Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 4 Wall. (71 U.S.) 535, 550, 18 L.Ed. 403 (1866), where the Supreme Court early held that "the laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract, and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms." Hence statutory liens do not, as the district court ruled, arise only in the future; they may be retained or acquired at the time the credit transaction is executed. In some states mechanic's liens relate back to, and attach, as of the time of the original contract.[19] In numerous states mechanic's liens relate back to, and attach, as of the time work on the home is [1216] commenced or materials are furnished.[20] It is clear to us that in Section 125(a) Congress intended to establish a national policy of protecting consumers whose residences are jeopardized by operation of all types of security interests acquired by creditors in the home improvement industry, and that the goal was to provide uniform protection throughout the nation, irrespective of the vagaries among the states' lien laws.[21] Because of the various differences among the states in the treatment of statutory liens, and the opportunities for evasion of Section 125(a) which these differences make possible, consumers can be effectively protected only if all statutory liens are included within the regulatory ambit of that Section. With an awareness of the multifarious pitfalls created by statutory liens, through which a homeowner may unwittingly lose one of his most precious posssessions, his home, it would be most incongruous for us to construe Section 125(a) in the manner urged by the appellees: that is, that Congress intended the statute to require disclosure and three-day right of rescission as to some, but not all, of the various security interests created by a home improvement contract. We think that the only way in which the Act's objective of "meaningful disclosure" of credit terms may be achieved is if the various statutory liens are included and treated uniformly under the Truth-in-Lending Act; this Congress intended through the operation of Section 125(a), and this the

---

[14] 114 Cong.Rec., pt. 11, 14388 (1968) (remarks of Representative Sullivan). Representative Patman, summarizing the Conference Report accompanying the bill, stated concerning § 125(a):

> This section, passed by the House, deals primarily with mortgage transactions where unwanted home improvements are sold to homeowners by sharp or fraudulent operators. Id. at 14384 (emphasis added).

[15] Hearings on S.J.Res. 130, supra, at 75, 104, 171. See also, Note, Mechanics' Liens and Surety Bonds in the Building Trades, 68 Yale L.J. 138, 138–39 (1958).

[16] See generally, Comment, Judicial and Statutory Limitations on the Rights of a "Holder in Due Course" in Consumer Transactions, 11 B.C.Ind. & Com.L.Rev. 90 (1969).

[17] The laws with respect to waiver of statutory liens vary among the states. See Annot., 76 A.L.R.2d 1087 (1961).

[18] Hearings on S.J. Res. 130, supra, at 42–43, 241–42.

---

[19] See e.g., Ill.Ann.Stat., c. 82 § 1 (Supp. 1972); Me.Rev.Stat.,Ann., tit. 10, c. 603 § 3251 (Supp. 1972–73).

[20] See Annot., Osborne, Mortgages, § 214 at 397–98 (2d ed. 1970); 3 Powell, The Law of Real Property, ch. 38 ¶ 488, at 758.15–758.17 (1967). In some states an assignment of the right to a mechanic's lien may be made at the time the contract is executed, even though the lien has not been filed by the assignor, and even though the work has not yet commenced. See e.g., Colo.Rev.Stat. § 86–3–17 (1963).

Congressional hearings also revealed an unsavory practice of contractors and subcontractors known as "spiking the job," through which statutory liens are immediately invoked to the advantage of the contractors and subcontractors, and the disadvantage of the homeowner. In this practice, the creditor (contractor or subcontractor) goes to the consumer's home within hours after the contract is signed and makes a token performance of work or furnishing materials. The creditor pressures the homeowner into the belief that the contract is now nonrescindable because work has commenced; then he leaves and no further work is done on the contract for perhaps weeks or months. Hearings on S.J. 130, supra, at 10. 18. 44. 105.

[21] For discussion regarding the substantial lack of uniformity among state lien laws, see Osborne, Mortgages, § 214 at 394–95 (2d ed. 1970); 3 Powell, The Law of Real Property, ch. 38, ¶ 484, at 730–736 (1967).

Federal Reserve Board recognized in 12 CFR 226.9(a). Carving statutory liens out of the protection provided by Section 125(a) would not only render impossible such uniformity among the states, it would defeat the goal of providing "meaningful" disclosure to the consumer. We refuse to perform such a surgical procedure.

Ruling on this precise issue in Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corp. v. Board of Governors of Federal Reserve System, 464 F.2d 838 (D.C.Cir. 1972), the District of Columbia Circuit has, we think, correctly determined the question:

> We think it a reasonable construction of the statute that Congress intended to require disclosure of all the consequences flowing from the signing of a home improvement contract, including not only the consequences spelled out in the contract, but also those necessarily inherent therein. Any other construction would expose the homeowner to hidden and perhaps fatal traps; it would lead to precisely the kind of imposition that Congress intended to prevent. Viewed in this light we think the challenged regulation is entirely consistent with the legislative purpose and is a reasonable and proper device for carrying it out. 464 F.2d at 842.

III.

[1217] [6–8] We conclude that, in ruling that the right of rescission provided by Section 125(a) applies only to cases in which the creditor retains or acquires a consensual lien, or second mortgage, the district court relied on a too technical and narrow construction which eviscerates the statute, and which renders consumers susceptible to the very abuses Congress sought to prevent. We hold that the Federal Reserve Board did not exceed its authority in defining "security interest" to include statutory liens, and in interpreting the right of rescission provided in Section 125(a) as extending to such statutory liens. The challenged regulation constitutes a clarification, and not an improper extension, of the statute and it therefore does not exceed the bounds of the mandate given the Board by Congress.[22] Since the regulation is clearly consistent with the legislative purpose,[23] it may not be overturned. Phelps Dodge Corp. v. NLRB, 313 U.S. 177, 194, 61 S.Ct. 845, 85 L.Ed. 1271 (1941). And since the regulation constitutes a contemporaneous construction of a statute by the agency charged by Congress with the administration of the Act, the Board's construction is entitled to deference, Udall v. Tallman, 380 U.S. 1, 16, 85 S.Ct. 792, 13 L.Ed.2d 616 (1965); Gardner and North Roofing and Siding Corp., supra, 464 F.2d at 842. Appellees' position on appeal, relying as it does on a hypertechnical construction of the language in Section 125(a), would enable disreputable firms to act in an underhanded manner. We fail to see how the three-day right of rescission provided in Section 125(a), as implemented in 12 CFR § 226.9(a) can cause harm to reputable business firms.

---

[22] See note 7, supra.

[23] The appellees place great reliance on a letter dated June 16, 1969, from Congressman Cahill, a sponsor of the Act written one year after enactment, to support a contrary view of legislative intent. The letter does not constitute part of legislative history and is entitled to no weight in this Court. See National School of Aeronautics, Inc. v. United States, 142 F. Supp. 933, 938, 135 Ct.Cl. 343 (1956):

> No member of a legislature, outside the legislature, is empowered to speak with authority for the body. If he may testify voluntarily, other members of his legislative body with different views or different recollections may be summoned to give their differing versions. The debate, which, so far as the lawmaking body is concerned, should have been ended by the enactment of the statute, would be transferred to the court, with disturbing possibilities of embarrassment and friction.

Accordingly, we reverse the judgment below.

ZALE CORPORATION AND CORRIGAN-REPUBLIC, INC. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 71–2633. F.T.C. Docket 8810

(United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, February 13, 1973)

1. Order of F.T.C. Requiring Parent and Subsidiary Corporations To Cease and Desist From Future Violations of Regulation Z Was Not Inappropriate by Reason of Parent's Statement That Offending Retail Installment Contract Had Been Remedied.

[1318] Order of Federal Trade Commission requiring parent and subsidiary corporations to cease and desist from future violations of regulation Z promulgated pursuant to Truth in Lending Act was not inappropriate by reason of parent's statement that offending retail installment contract had been remedied to comply with regulation Z, where Commission found still other violations, such as new contract's notice provision, and certain admitted violations involved incorrect amounts or rates in actual transactions rather than in use of terminology or disclosure sequence which was preprinted on contract, and whether or not practices had actually been abandoned could only be determined through subsequent enforcement procedures.

2. Parent Corporation Was Properly Held Accountable for Its Own and Its Subsidiary's Violations of Regulation Z Where Source of Majority of Violations Originated With Parent Corporation.

Parent corporation was properly held accountable for its own and its subsidiary's violations of regulation Z promulgated pursuant to Truth in Lending Act, where source of majority of violations was retail installment contract prepared by parent and distributed by it to its subsidiary and division stores alike, accountability for use of contract was with parent, advertising done was in parent's name vis-a-vis names of specific stores, and organization denied recognition of separate corporate structure employed.

---

*Reported in 473 F.2d 1317 (1973). For case before Commission, see 78 F.T.C. 1195. Rehearing denied: March 9, 1973.

3. Order of F.T.C. Was Not Overly Broad in its Prohibition Against Violation of Sections of Regulation Assertedly Not Violated.

Order of Federal Trade Commission requiring parent and subsidiary corporations to cease and desist from violations of regulation Z promulgated pursuant to Truth in Lending Act was not overly broad in its prohibition against violation of sections of regulation assertedly not violated, where each section referred to in order corresponded to a significant violation found by Commission and supported by record.

4. Order of F.T.C. Was Due To Be Sustained Unless Unreasonable in Consideration of Violations Found.

Order of Federal Trade Commission requiring petitioners to cease and desist from violations of Truth in Lending Act was due to be sustained unless unreasonable in consideration of violations found.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, was taken from 473 F.2d 1317)

On petition for review, court held that parent corporation was properly held accountable for its own and its subsidiary's violations of Regulation Z under the Truth in Lending Act; that injunction against future violations was not inappropriate; and that cease and desist order was not overly broad. Petition for review denied.

Sam G. Winstead, Jack Pew, Jr., Dallas, Texas, for petitioners.

Ronald M. Dietrich, Gen. Counsel, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Robert E. Duncan, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Before GEWIN, COLEMAN and INGRAHAM, Circuit Judges.

INGRAHAM, Circuit Judge:

[1319] The issues on this petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission, requiring the petitioners to cease and desist from violations of Regulation Z[1] promulgated under the Truth in Leading Act,[2] are (1) Whether the parent corporation shall be held

---

[1] 12 C.F.R. 226.1, et seq.

[2] Title I of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (the Truth in Lending Act) provides in part:

Sec. 105 "The Board [of Governors of the Federal Reserve System] shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this title. These regulations may contain such classifications, differentiations, or other provisions, and may provide for such adjustments and exceptions for any class of transactions, as in the judgment of the Board are necessary or proper to effectuate the purposes of this title, to revent circumvention or evasion thereof, or to facilitate compliance therewith" 82 Stat. 148 (1968), 15 U.S.C. § 1604 (1970).

Sec. 108(c) "Except to the extent that enforcement of the requirements imposed under this title is specifically committed to some other Government agency under subsection (a) of this section, the Federal Trade Commission shall enforce such requirements. For the accountable for its own and its subsidiary's violations of the Regulation; (2) whether an injunction against future violations of the Regulation is appropriate where the parent corporation has conceded the violation but asserts their non-recurring nature; and (3) whether the cease and desist order entered in this case was overly broad in its prohibition of violating sections of the Regulation assertedly not violated.

Petitioners are the Zale Corporation and its owned or controlled subsidiaries (the Zale Corporate Enterprise). Zale itself is a combination operating and holding company, and as a holding company controls a network of 1056 wholly owned subsidiaries, including the subsidiary, Corrigan-Republic, Inc. The Corporate Enterprise engages in a nationwide business of selling retail jewelry and other merchandise, generating a large volume of consumer credit transactions.[3]

The consumer credit transactions of the Zale Corporate Enterprise were the subject of FTC's inquiry. Specifically, the Commission attacked the Enterprise's uniform retail installment contract as used in the subject period, July 1, 1969 to December 31, 1969. Zale has conceded this form's violation of Regulation Z in thirteen particulars by failing to:

1. Properly disclose the "dollar finance charge per $100 of unpaid balance;"

2. properly disclose the term "finance charge" more conspicuously than other required terminology;

3. exclude the amount of the "finance charge" in the computation of the "amount financed;"

4. properly disclose the term "finance charge" in proper meaningful sequence;

5. properly include the charge for credit life insurance in the term "amount financed."

6. disclose the amount of the "dollars finance charge per year per $100 of unpaid balance" with an accuracy to the nearest quarter of one percent; purpose of the exercise by the Federal Trade Commission of its functions and powers under the Federal Trade Commission Act, a violation of any requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act. All of the functions and powers of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act are available to the Commission to enforce compliance by any person with the requirements imposed under this title, irrespective of whether that person is engaged in commerce or meets any other jurisdictional tests in the Federal Trade Commission Act" 82 Stat. 150 (1968), 15 U.S.C. § 1607(c), (1970).

---

The enforcement provision relates to Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1).

[3] For fiscal 1970 aggregate net sales of Zale Corporation and its subsidiaries were $384,172,196, 33% of which involved extension of consumer credit.

7. [1320] use the term "cash downpayment" when the downpayment was in money;

8. properly use the term "unpaid balance of cash price;"

9. treat an existing consumer obligation as a new transaction when the obligation was increased;

10. clearly identify the property in which a security interest was retained;

11. accurately identify the method used for computing any charge that is deducted from the amount of any rebate of unearned finance charge;

12. include the proscribed notice when required disclosures are made on both sides of the document; and

13. make the required disclosures on the reverse side of the contract in the necessary clear, conspicuous and meaningful sequence.

[1] Zale, however, contends that the offending form has been remedied to comply with the Regulation. The Commission disagrees, finding still other violations such as the new form's notice provision. See 12 C.F.R. 226.6(a). Additionally, it should be noted that certain of the admitted violations involve incorrect amounts or rates in the actual transactions rather than in the use of terminology or disclosure sequence which is preprinted on those forms. Whether or not such practices have actually been abandoned can only be determined through subsequent enforcement procedures. Hence, while respecting the good corporate name of the Zale Enterprise, there is no valid assurance that if Zale were free of the Commission's restraint it would not continue its former course. Compare Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. FTC, 258 F. 307 (7th Cir., 1919), and Clinton Watch Co. v. FTC, 291 F.2d 838 (7th Cir., 1961). "Courts properly leave to the Commission's non-abusive discretion the question whether the public interest require the protection of an order in cases where unlawful practices have been discontinued." Cotherman v. FTC, 417 F.2d 587, 594 (5th Cir., 1969). Zale's statement that it has amended its form and no longer will violate the Act was unpersuasive before the Commission and is insufficient to convince us that the Commission abused its discretion in entering a cease and desist order.

> Even though Sullivan and Cotherman promised never to re-enter the lending business, the Commission is not bound "simply by the promise[s] of the petitioner[s]". C. Howard Hunt Pen Co. v. FTC, 3 Cir. 1952, 197 F.2d 273, 281; see Eugene Dietzgen Co. v. FTC, 7 Cir. 1944, 142 F.2d 321, 330–331; Stanley Laboratories Inc. v. FTC, 9 Cir. 1943, 183 F.2d 388, 390. A promise to go and sin no more is merely one of the circumstances that the Commission should consider in determining how the public interest in stopping the deceptive practices can best be accomplished. On the record as a whole we cannot say that the Commission abused its discretion in issuing the cease and desist order against Cotherman and Sullivan.

Cotherman v. FTC, supra.

Zales next questions the scope of the Commission's order and the Commission's power to look at the parent Zales for all violations occurring in the daily use of the credit forms in the Enterprise—to Zales the latter vests review in the district court.

[2] We conclude that the FTC appropriately entered its decree against the Zale Enterprise due to the presence in the record of the following factors:

1. The source of the majority of violations is the form prepared by the parent Zale and distributed by it to its subsidiary and division stores alike.
2. Accountability for the use of the form lies with the parent Zale.
3. The advertising done is in the Enterprise named vis-a-vis the names of specific stores.
4. The Enterprise organization denies recognition of the separate corporate infra structure employed.

[1321] The following facts supported by this record are borrowed from the government's brief:

> The parent Zale Corporation and its subsidiaries have consistently maintained common or overlapping officers and directors. A meeting of all the directors and officers of Zale and its 1,056 subsidiaries would consist of only forty-one individuals. Of these, thirty-two are directors or officers of the Zale Corporation, and of these thirty-two individuals, thirteen are directors or officers in one or more subsidiaries. Thus, there are only nine individuals holding positions as officers or directors in the 1,056 subsidiaries who are not also officers or directors of the parent Zale.
>
> The following table shows the overlapping of directors and officers of the parent and its subsidiaries:

Name	Zale Corporation	Zale's Divisions except Butler Shoe Division	Zale's Butler Shoe Division
Ben A. Lipshy	President, Director.	President, Director.	Director and President of one corporation.
Donald Zale	Exec. Vice President, Director.	Director	Director of one corporation.
Leo Fields	Group Vice President, Director.	Director or officer or both.	Director of one corporation.
John P. Dickens	Vice President, General Counsel.	Vice President or Asst. Secretary or both.	Vice President and Asst. Secretary of one corporation.
Lew Zale	Group Vice President, Director.	Director or Vice President for all except subsidiaries in three divisions.	Vice President of one corporation.
Esir Wyll	Secretary	Secretary	Secretary of one corporation.
Clarence Feuer	Vice President	----------------	Vice President of 193 corporations.
Sidney Flanzbaum	Vice President	----------------	President of 54 corporations.
Shearn Robinsky	Treasurer	Treasurer	Treasurer of one corporation.
Marvin Rubin	Senior Vice President.	Vice President Zale Store Division only.	--------------------
I. D. Shapiro	Vice President, Director.	----------------	President of 193 corporations, Director of 247 corporations, Vice President of 54 corporations.
Albert Greenfield	Senior Vice President.	----------------	Director, Vice President in 247 corporations.
George Heard	Vice President, Director.	----------------	Director in 247 corporations, Secretary-Treasurer in 247 corporations, Vice President in one corporation.

Thus the integrated operation interlocking directorate and unified advertising strongly militate for finding the Enterprise to be the appropriate subject for the Commission's order and for application of the exceptions to recognition of separate corporate entities where to do so frustrates a statutory policy. NL [1322] RB v. Deena Artware, Inc., 361 U.S. 398, 80 S.Ct. 441, 4 L.Ed.2d 400 (1960); Anderson v. Abbott, 321 U.S. 349, 64 S.Ct. 531, 88 L.Ed. 793 (1943); P. F. Collier & Son Corp. v. FTC, 427 F.2d 261 (6th Cir., 1970), cert. den. 400 U.S. 926, 91 S.Ct. 188, 27 L.Ed.2d 186; Delaware Watch Co. v. FTC, 332 F.2d 745 (2nd Cir., 1964). As then Judge Cardozo said in Berkey v. Third Ave. Ry. Co., 244 N.Y. 84, 95, 155 N.E. 58, 61 (1926):

> Liability of the parent has never been adjudged when the subsidiary has maintained so consistently and in so many ways as here the separate organization that is the mark of a separate existence, and when the implication of a contract for unity of operation would be the implication of a contract for the commission of a crime.
>
> The whole problem of the relation between parent and subsidiary corporations is one that is still enveloped in the mists of metaphor. Metaphors in law are to be narrowly watched, for starting as devices to liberate thought, they end often by enslaving it. We say at times that the corporate entity will be ignored when the parent corporation operates a business through a subsidiary which is characterized as an 'alias' or a 'dummy.' All this is well enough if the picturesqueness of the epithets does not lead us to forget that the essential term to be defined is the act of operation. Dominion may be so complete, interference so obtrusive, that by the general rules of agency the parent will be a principal and the subsidiary an agent. Where control is less than this, we are remitted to the tests of honesty and justice. Ballantine, Parent and Subsidiary Corporations, 14 Cal.Law Review, 12, 18, 19, 20. The logical consistency of a juridical conception will indeed be sacrificed at times, when the sacrifice is essential to the end that some accepted public policy may be defended or upheld. This is so, for illustration, though agency in any proper sense is lacking, where the attempted separation between parent and subsidiary will work a fraud upon the law. * * * At such times unity is ascribed to parts which, at least for many purposes, retain an independent life, for the reason that only thus can we overcome a perversion of the privilege to do business in a corporate form. We find in the case at hand neither agency on the one hand, nor, on the other, abuse to be corrected by the implication of a merger. On the contrary, merger might beget more abuses than it stifled. Statutes carefully framed for the protection, not merely of creditors, but of all who travel upon railroads, forbid the confusion of liabilities by extending operation over one route to operation on another. In such circumstances, we thwart the public policy of the state instead of defending or upholding it, when we ignore the separation between subsidiary and parent and treat the two as one.

Compare Berger v. Columbia Broadcasting Systems, Inc., 453 F.2d 991 (5th Cir., 1972). See, generally, Cary on Corporations (4th ed. 1969).

The Commission did not err in considering Zale an enterprise and drafting its order accordingly. Cf. NLRB v. Condenser Corp., 128 F.2d 67 (3rd Cir., 1942); accord, NLRB v. Concrete Haulers, 212 F.2d 477 (5th Cir., 1954). See Carter Products, Inc. v. FTC, 323 F.2d 523 (5th Cir., 1963), and Cotherman, supra.

[3] Nor did the Commission err in the scope of its order. Each section referred to in its order corresponds to a significant violation found by the Commission and supported by the record.[4]

[4] The Commission's order is not the blanket order condemned in Grand [1323] Union Co. v. FTC, 300 F.2d 92 (2nd Cir., 1962), nor does it forever restrain Zale from engaging in lawful activity, Cotherman v. FTC, supra, and is due to be sustained unless unreasonable in consideration of the violations found. FTC v. Mandel Bros., 359 U.S. 385, 79 S. Ct. 818, 3 L.Ed.2d 893 (1958); Jacob Siegel Co. v. FTC, 327 U.S. 608, 66 S.Ct. 758, 90 L.Ed. 888 (1959).

We cannot say that the Commission's order was not reasonably related to the demonstrated violations of the Act, nor can we say that the Commission abused the wide discretion that it has in a choice of remedy deemed adequate to cope with the unlawful practices found in this record.

The petition for review is denied.

COCA-COLA COMPANY, ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 72-2270. F.T.C. Docket 8855

(United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, February 15, 1973)

1. SINCE THE GENERAL RULE IS THAT ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNALS ARE IMMUNE FROM INTERLOCUTORY REVIEW AND SINCE AGENCY HAD NOT EXCEEDED ITS JURISDICTION, JUDICIAL REVIEW OF F.T.C.'S INTERLOCUTORY RULING WOULD BE PREMATURE.

---

[4] The FTC in its order stated:

"The order proposed by the examiner is not, as respondents suggest, a broad undifferentiated order simply prohibiting respondents from violating the statute or the regulation irrespective of whether the particular provision applies to the type of business in which respondents are engaged. Rather, the examiner's order is carefully limited to those full sections of the implementing regulation that regulate the specific kinds of practices to be engaged. The order prohibitions are carefully tailored to exclude any section of this regulation which bears no relationship to the practices of Zale Corporation and its network of subsidiaries.[9]"

"[9] The examiners order includes within its prohibitions three full sections of Regulation Z. These sections embrace the practices in which respondents admittedly engaged and in which there were admitted violations. These sections also cover the types of practices in which respondents' activities are concentrated. For example, Section 226.7 governs the specific disclosure requirements for credit other than open end. The retail installment contract of the Zale Store Division owned by the Zale Corporation falls directly under this section. Section 226.8 governs the specific disclosure requirements for open end credit. The periodic statement of Corrigan-Republic which was used throughout the Fine Jeweler's Guild Division, owned by the Zale Corporation falls under this section. Section 226.6 sets out the general disclosure requirements of type, size, and placement that ties into the other two sections."

*Reported in 475 F.2d 299 (1973); Cert. denied, Oct. 9, 1973, 414 U.S. 877, 94 S.Ct. 121. Decision of the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division, is reported in 342 F. Supp. 670 (1972), p. 276 herein.

[300] Judicial review of Federal Trade Commission's interlocutory ruling, in connection with its administrative proceeding against soft drink manufacturer and bottlers for alleged antitrust violations, denying the affirmative defense of failure to join indispensable party would be premature, since, inter alia, the general rule is that administrative tribunals are immune from interlocutory review of procedural rulings and since, in respect to the most widely recognized exception, it could not be said that the Commission had exercised authority in excess of its jurisdiction or otherwise acted in a manner clearly at odds with the specific language of a statute.

2. ABSENT AN EXPLICIT REQUIREMENT, PROCEDURE FOR REVIEW PRESCRIBED BY STATUTE OUGHT TO BE DEEMED EXCLUSIVE.

Procedure for review prescribed by statute ought to be deemed exclusive absent an explicit requirement.

3. CLASS OF CASE WHERE AGENCY HAS EXERCISED AUTHORITY IN EXCESS OF JURISDICTION OR IN A MANNER AT ODDS WITH SPECIFIC LANGUAGE OF A STATUTE IS MOST WIDELY RECOGNIZED EXCEPTION TO RULE AGAINST JUDICIAL CONSIDERATION OF INTERLOCUTORY RULING.

Most widely recognized exception to the general rule against judicial consideration of interlocutory agency rulings is the class of cases where an agency has exercised authority in excess of its jurisdiction or otherwise acted in a manner that is clearly at odds with the specific language of a statute.

4. FACT THAT AN ATTACK IS VOICED IN CONCLUSORY LANGUAGE OF DENIAL OF DUE PROCESS DOES NOT WARRANT STOPPING ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY, ALTHOUGH ASSERTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT NOT TRANSPARENTLY FRIVOLOUS GIVES DISTRICT COURT JURISDICTION TO HEAR ATTACK ON INTERLOCUTORY ORDER.

Although an assertion of constitutional right not transparently frivolous gives the district court jurisdiction to hear an attack on an interlocutory agency order, the fact that the attack is voiced in conclusory language of a denial of due process and like constitutional rights does not warrant stopping an administrative agency in its tracks.

5. DISTRICT COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO INQUIRE INTO PRELIMINARY QUESTION OF APPROPRIATENESS OF JUDICIAL VINDICATION OF ALLEGED RIGHTS WHEN PARTIES BRING SUIT IN DISTRICT COURT ALLEGING DEPRIVATION BY ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY.

When parties bring suit in district court alleging the deprivation by an administrative agency of specific constitutional or statutory rights, the district court has jurisdiction to inquire into the preliminary question of whether judicial vindication of the alleged rights is appropriate in a given procedural setting and, if so, whether such rights have been infringed and how they ought to be redressed.

6. UNTIL ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS ARE AT AN END, A CONTENTION OF RES JUDICATA IS NOT COGNIZABLE BY COURTS.

A contention of res judicata is not cognizable by courts until administrative proceedings are at an end.

7. THE "RIGHT" TO BE FREE FROM DEFENDING A MULTIPLICITY OF LAWSUITS IS AN EQUITABLE PRINCIPLE RATHER THAN A STATUTORY OR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT.

The "right" to be free from defending a multiplicity of lawsuits is not a statutory right, nor a constitutional right and, in certain contexts, not a right at all but an equitable principle properly looked to by an equity court only after it has satisfied itself that it has the power and responsibility to do equity.

8. UNLESS NECESSARY TO VINDICATE UNAMBIGUOUS STATUTORY OR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT, EXTRAORDINARY REMEDY OF JUDICIAL INTERVENTION IN AGENCY PROCEEDINGS STILL IN PROGRESS IS UNAVAILABLE.

Extraordinary remedy of judicial intervention in agency proceedings still in progress is unavailable unless necessary to vindicate an unambiguous statutory or constitutional right, and only when this condition is satisfied will a court look to the general body of equitable jurisprudence and other appropriate sources for the purpose of fashioning relief.

9. WHEREVER AGENCY RULING DIFFERS FROM AN EQUITABLE MAXIM, JUDICIAL INTERVENTION TO "CORRECT" INTERLOCUTORY RULING IS NOT AVAILABLE.

[301] Judicial intervention to "correct" an interlocutory agency ruling is not available wherever an agency ruling differs from some equitable maxim.

10. IMMUNITY FROM INTERLOCUTORY REVIEW OF PROCEDURAL RULINGS SHOULD ATTACH TO ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNALS.

Administrative tribunals ought to be immune from interlocutory review of procedural rulings.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 475 F. 2d 299)

Since the general rule is that administrative tribunals are immune from interlocutory review of procedural rulings and since the Commission could not be said to have exceeded its jurisdiction, court held that judicial review of Commission's interlocutory ruling would be premature. Affirmed.

Charles Gowen, Atlanta, Ga., Edward Wolfe, Mario Diaz-Cruz, Thomas Kiernan, New York City, for Coca-Cola Co.

Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein, Emmet J. Bondurant, Atlanta, Ga., Gordon Spivak, New York City, for Coca-Cola-Thomas, 3rd.

Randolph W. Thrower, William M. Hames, Atlanta, Ga., Elberton Coca-Cola Bottling Co.

John W. Stokes, Jr., U.S. Atty., Julian M. Longley, Jr., Asst. U.S. Atty., Atlanta, Ga., Ronald M. Dietrich, James P. Timony, Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Wash., D.C., for defendant-appellee.

Before JOHN R. BROWN, Chief Judge, INGRAHAM, Circuit Judge, and MCRAE, District Judge.

WILLIAM A. MCRAE, JR., District Judge: *

The litigation from which this appeal arises is peripheral to proceedings that the Federal Trade Commission, defendant-appellee, (FTC) initiated on July 15, 1971, against The Coca-Cola Company, Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Inc., Coca-Cola Bottling Works, Inc., and Coca-Cola Bottling Works 3rd, Inc., plaintiffs-appellants (The Companies). The FTC brought these administrative proceedings (Docket No. 8855) pursuant to its authority and responsibility "to prevent * * * corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce * * *" 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(6). The FTC has alleged principally that territorial restraints incident to sales and trademark licensing by The Companies constitute an antitrust violation. The merits of this contention, which the FTC has made the basis of complaints against seven similar enterprises,[1] are not at issue here.

In Docket No. 8855, The Companies set up as an affirmative defense the failure to join as indispensable parties each of the seven hundred ninety-two individual bottling companies with whom The Companies have contractual relationships or, alternatively, the failure to join representative bottling companies sufficient to protect mutually antagonistic interests of relevant subclasses of bottling companies.[2] Thereafter, the FTC permitted seven bottling companies [3] in their individual capacities to intervene in Docket No. 8855, and these Bottlers-Intervenors adopted the position of The Companies on the indispensable party issue.

On January 7, 1972, the hearing examiner denied the motions to dismiss. [302] Seeking intra-agency reconsideration of the hearing examiner's adverse decision on the indispensable parties question, The Companies and the Bottlers-Intervenors asked for and obtained de novo review by the Commission. After a hearing, the Commission, also, denied the motions to dismiss in Docket No. 8855 on March 23, 1972.

[1] On April 18, 1972, The Companies and the Bottlers-Intervenors filed their complaint in the Northern District of Georgia seeking a declaratory judgment on the indispensable parties question and asking that the FTC be enjoined from proceeding further unless there was

---

*Judge McRae prepared the above opinion before his death January 27, 1973.

[1] The six other manufacturers of soft drink syrups are Dr. Pepper, Cott, Crush, Royal Crown Cola, Pepsi Cola and The Seven-Up Company. The same contentions plaintiffs make here were unsuccessfully pressed by The Seven-Up Company in The Seven-Up Company v. Goodhope et al., 349 F. Supp. 551 (E.D.Mo., Sept. 12, 1972) and by Pepsi Co., Inc., in Pepsi Co., Inc., v. Federal Trade Commission et al., 343 F. Supp. 396 (S.D.N.Y.1972), aff'd Nos. 72–1911, 72–1912, 472 F.2d 179 (2 Cir. 1972) (Medina J., dissenting).

[2] At oral argument, counsel for appellants suggested that at least three classes of bottlers should be represented: "true metropolitan," "quasi-metropolitan" and "non-metropolitan."

[3] Appellants Elberton Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Roddy Manufacturing Company, Westminister Coca-Cola Bottling Company, Inc., Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Keene, Inc., Ann Arbor Coca-Cola Bottling Company, The Scioto Coca-Cola Bottling Company, and Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Company (hereinafter Bottlers-Intervenors).

joinder of the parties adjudged indispensable. The District Court, 342 F. Supp. 670, granted FTC's motion to dismiss and denied relief. We affirm that disposition of the case. The Court below did not reach the merits of the controversy about the indispensability of the contract bottlers or appropriate class representatives, nor do we. We agree that judicial resolution of that question at this juncture would be premature.

In Frito-Lay, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 380 F.2d 8 (5th Cir. 1967), this Court declined to disturb the decision of the District Court not to interfere in the ongoing Commission proceeding even though the plaintiff there alleged that "the administrative proceeding was outside of the jurisdiction of the Commission." Id. at 9. Plaintiffs in the present case allege nothing that comes so close as the allegations in Frito-Lay, Inc., to fitting within the tightly circumscribed exceptions to "the long-settled rule of judicial administration that no one is entitled to judicial relief for a supposed or threatened injury until the prescribed administrative remedy has been exhausted." Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 50–51, 58 S.Ct. 459, 463, 82 L.Ed. 638 (1938).

[2] The Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 41 et seq., contemplates judicial review only of "an order of the Commission to cease and desist," 15 U.S.C. § 45(c), and then only "in the court of appeals of the United States." Id. This scheme is fully consonant with the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq.[4] The Supreme Court has said, moreover, that where Congress "has enacted a specific statutory scheme for obtaining review, * * * the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies * * * requires that the statutory mode of review be adhered to notwithstanding the absence of an express statutory command of exclusiveness." Whitney Nat'l Bank v. Bank of New Orleans, 379 U.S. 411, 422, 85 S.Ct. 551, 558, 13 L.Ed.2d 386 (1965). If a procedure for review prescribed by statute ought to be deemed exclusive absent an explicit requirement, there can be little doubt in the present case that the mandatory provision of the Federal Trade Commission Act that "the jurisdiction of the court of appeals * * * shall be exclusive," 15 U.S.C. § 45(d) means what it says. This is not to suggest, however, that a different disposition of this case would have been warranted if the plaintiffs had come directly to this Court. Texaco, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 301 F.2d 662 (1962).

---

[4] Agency action made reviewable by statute and final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court are subject to judicial review. A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on the review of the final agency action. Except as otherwise expressly required by statute, agency action otherwise final is final for the purposes of this section whether or not there has been presented or determined an application for a declaratory order, for any form of reconsideration, or, unless the agency otherwise requires by rule and provides that the action meanwhile is inoperative, for an appeal to superior agency authority.

The present case is not one raising "questions particularly high in the scale of our national interest because of their international complexion," McCulloch v. Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 17, 83 S.Ct. 671, 675, 9 L.Ed.2d 547 (1963) [303] and, therefore, affording "a uniquely compelling justification for prompt judicial resolution," id., of a controversy normally left to an agency for initial disposition. Nor is the present case one in which the imposition of criminal sanctions turns on the procedural niceties of administrative law. See, e.g., Gutknecht v. United States, 396 U.S. 295, 90 S.Ct. 506, 24 L.Ed.2d 532 (1969); United States v. Davila, 429 F.2d 481 (5th Cir. 1970).

[3] The most widely recognized exception to the general rule against judicial consideration of interlocutory agency rulings is the class of cases where an agency has exercised authority in excess of its jurisdiction or otherwise acted in a manner that is clearly at odds with the specific language of a statute. The leading case of this kind is Leedom v. Kyne, 358 U.S. 184, 79 S.Ct. 180, 3 L.Ed.2d 210 (1958). In Kyne, the National Labor Relations Board had grouped professionals with non-professionals in the same bargaining unit without a vote of the professionals, in defiance of an express statutory prohibition. Since this "was an attempted exercise of power that had been specifically withheld," at 189, 79 S.Ct. at 184, it was properly enjoined by the District Court. The rule that only "a plain contravention of a statutory mandate" justifies district court intervention before termination of election procedures in labor cases has been followed in this Circuit, Boire v. Miami Herald Publishing Co., 343 F.2d 17, 24 (1965), and an analogous rule has been applied to Federal Trade Commission proceedings. Federal Trade Commission v. J. Weingarten, Inc., 336 F.2d 687 (5th Cir. 1964).[5] The rule that agency action "contrary to a specific mandate of * * * [an] Act [of Congress]" Templeton, supra at 1069, is remedial judicially before administrative proceedings are at an end has been applied in the context of other agencies, notably in selective service cases, see, e.g., Oestereich v. Selective Service Board, 393 U.S. 233, 89 S.Ct. 414, 21 L.Ed.2d 402 (1968); Breen v. Selective Service Board, 396 U.S. 460, 90 S.Ct. 661, 24 L.Ed.2d 653 (1970). What is as clear as this exception to the general requirement of exhaustion of administrative remedies, however, is that plaintiffs in the present case do not fit within it.

[4, 5] The remaining "exception" to the requirement that courts await final agency action before reviewing disputes engendered by the conduct of administrative proceedings "has," as the learned trial judge

---

[5] The decision in Templeton v. Dixie Color Printing Co., 444 F.2d 1064 (5th Cir. 1971) stands for the proposition that the question of the propriety of district court action does not turn on whether clear statutory language requires action to be taken or to be forborne.

observed, "only limited application in the Fifth Circuit," citing Boire v. Miami Herald Publishing Co., 343 F.2d 17, 21 n. 7 (5th Cir. 1965). Although by now it is probably a correct statement of the law even in our own circuit that an "assertion of constitutional right * * * not transparently frivolous * * * [gives] the District Court jurisdiction" to hear an attack on an interlocutory agency order, Fay v. Douds, 172 F.2d 720 (2nd Cir. 1949) (L. Hand); Contra, Volney Felt Mills, Inc. v. Le Bus, 196 F.2d 497 (5th Cir. 1952), the "fact that the attack is voiced in conclusory language of a denial of due process and like constitutional rights does not warrant stopping * * * [an administrative agency] in its tracks." Bokat v. Tidewater Equipment Co., 363 F.2d 667, 672 (5th Cir. 1966). When, as in the present case, parties bring suit in District Court alleging the deprivation of specific constitutional rights or, indeed, specific statutory rights, Leedom v. Kyne, supra, the District Court has jurisdiction to inquire into the preliminary question of whether judicial vindication of the alleged rights is appropriate in a given procedural setting, and if so, whether such rights have been infringed and how they ought to be redressed.

[6] In the present case, the plaintiffs specifically complain that, if the proceed[304]ings before the Commission continue and FTC prevails, The Companies will be subject to two inconsistent decrees, viz., the apprehended Commission order and a consent decree entered by a District Court in The Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. The Coca-Cola Co., 269 F. 796 (D.Del. 1920). A contention of res judicata is not cognizable by courts until administrative proceedings are at an end, SEC v. Otis & Co., 338 U.S. 843, 70 S.Ct. 89, 94 L.Ed. 516 (1949), and we intimate no view as to the merits of this contention. The plaintiffs go further, projecting the outline of disarray and disaster sketched by the technical res judicata argument by conjuring up the vision of The Companies defending some 800 lawsuits simultaneously. This formidable problem, plaintiffs argue, might be avoided by the expedient of making all potential litigants parties to the Commission proceeding.[6]

[7-9] The "right" to be free from defending a multiplicity of lawsuits is not a statutory right, not a constitutional right and, in the context of the present case, not a right at all but an equitable principle properly looked to by an equity court only after it has satisfied itself that it has the power and responsibility to do equity. The extraordinary remedy of judicial intervention in agency proceedings still in progress

---

[6] Like the majority in Pepsi Co. Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission et al. Nos. 72-1911, 72-1912, 472 F.2d 179 (2nd Cir. 1972), we are "astonished" at the "proposition that a court would hold one person liable to another for doing something within the United States which a federal administrative agency, acting within its jurisdiction, has found to be necessary for the enforcement of a federal regulatory statute."

is unavailable unless necessary to vindicate an unambiguous statutory or constitutional right, and only when this condition is satisfied will a court look to the general body of equitable jurisprudence and other appropriate sources for the purpose of fashioning relief. To adopt the plaintiffs' position, on the other hand, would be to make the rule that judicial intervention to "correct" an interlocutory agency ruling is available wherever an agency ruling differed from some equitable maxim.

In part, plaintiffs' argument is grounded not on a right unequivocally vested in them by statute but on asserted constitutional rights of third parties, namely the non-joined bottlers' respective rights to due process. It is always refreshing when giant corporations evince solicitous regard for others' rights—and we have learned to expect refreshment from The Coca-Cola Company—but it is no occasion for judicial review of interlocutory agency decisions. As to the plaintiffs' own right in this regard, we have little to add to Judge Friendly's scholarly discussion in Pepsi Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission et al., Nos. 72–1911, 72–1912, 2nd Cir.1972, 472 F. 2d 179. See, e.g. United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 87 S.Ct. 1856, 18 L.Ed.2d 1249 (1967).

[10] The plaintiffs are asking that a procedural, "case-handling" decision be overturned in media res to require joinder "with the concomitant complication and clutter of the hearing." L. Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 444 (1965). If trial courts are insulated from this kind of interference, see 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a), certainly administrative tribunals ought to be and, indeed, they generally have been immune from interlocutory review of procedural rulings. E.g., Texaco, Inc. v. Federal Power Commission, 117 U.S.App.D.C. 268, 329 F.2d 223 (1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 941, 84 S.Ct. 346, 11 L.Ed.2d 272 (1964); Chicago Automobile Trade Association v. Madden, 328 F.2d 766, 769 (7th Cir.) cert. denied, 377 U.S. 979, 84 S.Ct. 1885, 12 L.Ed.2d 747 (1964). If plaintiffs eventually prevail on review of the final order and it is necessary to begin anew with Commission proceedings, it will not be the first time events have taken that course. See Riss & Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 907, 71 S.Ct. 620, 95 L.Ed. 1345 (1951). For the time [305] being plaintiffs "must, as all others similarly situated must, wait with such fortitude and patience as * * * [they] can muster." Volney Felt Mills, Inc. v. Le Bus, 196 F.2d 497, 498 (5th Cir. 1952).

Affirmed.

ASH GROVE CEMENT CO. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, ET AL.*

Civ. Action No. 1298–71. F.T.C. Docket 8785

(United States District Court, District of Columbia, February 22, 1973)

On motion by defendants for judgment on pleadings or in the alternative for summary judgment, court held that respondent in an antimerger case did not show the requisite irreparable injury, and injunction to prevent F.T.C. hearings from being held prior to F.T.C. production of requested documents was denied. F.T.C. was ordered, by the court, to describe with particularity each document for which exemptions under the Freedom of Information Act were claimed. Chronological minutes of Commission meetings, held confidential per se by the Commission, were ordered to be treated as other documents claimed to be exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act when F.T.C.'s claim of confidentiality was rejected.

David J. McKean, Wash., D.C., for plaintiff.

Arnold T. Aikens, Wash., D.C., for defendants.

MEMORANDUM ORDER

RICHEY, D. J.: This case, which has come before the Court on defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, or in the alternative, for summary judgment, raises numerous questions.

(1) The complaint in this action includes prayers to enjoin and declare illegal Federal Trade Commission hearings that might proceed prior to defendants' complete production of documents in this case. The first question before the Court is whether defendants' motion in this case should be granted insofar as it relates to these prayers. The Court feels this part of the motion should be granted. It is axiomatic that to obtain an injunction plaintiff must show irreparable injury. Plaintiff has not adequately made such a showing under any of the traditional tests. See Bannercraft Clothing Co., Inc. v. Renegotiation Bd., No. 24,685 (D. C. Cir. July 6, 1972). Moreover, the Clayton Act antitrust proceedings, out of which this case grows, differ substantially from the Renegotiation Act proceedings analyzed in Bannercraft. Section 7 Clayton Act proceedings do not involve "informed negotiation" between parties, as the term was used in Bannercraft, supra (slip opinion, at 19). Nor are agency determinations of the Federal Trade

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶74,374 at 93,724 (1973–2 Trade Cases). For case before the Commission, see 85 F.T.C. 1123. See also, pp. 250, 796, 815 herein.

Commission subject to a series of de novo review. Hence, the case is distinguishable from Bannercrafts, in which issuance of preliminary injunctions was affirmed.

(2) The next question is whether allegations in the complaint relating to the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Administrative Procedure Act, the Fifth Amendment, and the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act should be dismissed as abandoned by plaintiff. The Court does not reach the question of abandonment since it finds it has no jurisdiction to entertain claims at law other than those brought under the Freedom of Information Act. Sterling Drug, Inc. v. FTC, U.S. App. D.C. at—, 450 F. 2d 698, 710–12 (D.C. Cir. 1971); Frito-Lay, Inc. v. FTC, 380 F. 2d 8 (5th Cir. 1967). Cf. Nader v. Volpe, No. 72–1118 (D.C. Cir. July 17, 1972).

(3) The Court determines that defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings or summary judgment will be denied in all respects except those heretofore discussed. The Court finds that plaintiff's request for those documents contained in Appendix A to the Tobin affidavit, defendants' exhibit 12, is now moot, since these documents have been made available to plaintiff.

(4) The list of identifiable documents presently unavailable to plaintiff "together with a statement as to why each such document was withheld" is purportedly contained in the 25 page Appendix B to the Tobin affidavit. Defendants assert they have already explained "in detail" in the Tobin affidavit why the documents listed in Appendix B are exempt. Yet the affidavit itself, to the extent it refers to specific documents, simply states in conclusory language that the documents are exempt because they fall within certain exemption sections of the Freedom of Information Act or other law. The Appendix B description of the documents themselves is not much more helpful. Ultimately the Commission bears the burden of proving an exemption with respect to each specific document. Before the Court takes further action in the case, including in camera inspection, defendants must insure that each alleged 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(4) document is described with particularity. For example, are "interview reports" claimed to be exempt because they contain secret processes or customer lists? What is the age of the information contained in the various documents, and did a party providing the information request that it be kept confidential? What does "sales information" include? Where sales, production and profit figures are sought, are they broken down by brand name or otherwise, so that disclosure would prove particularly injurious to plaintiff's competitors? Cf. United States v. Lever Bros. Co., 193 F. Supp. 254, 257 (S.D.N.Y. 1961). Where documents are allegedly exempt pursuant to 5 U.S.C.

§ 552(b)(3) (specific exemption from disclosure by statute), which statute is invoked for which document and why is such statute applicable? In addition, to simplify the Court's ultimate task, the Court orders defendants to carefully review each 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(3) and (4) document and disclose to plaintiff those portions, if any, which defendants feel may be voluntarily revealed upon defendants' own deletion.

Defendants are requested, but not ordered, to attempt a similar review, deletion and disclosure with respect to the remaining documents, including those listed as inter- or intra-agency memoranda and investigatory files, 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(5) and (b)(7), respectively.

If they so desire, defendants are free to explain, for example, why no portions of the alleged § 552(b)(5) inter- or intra-agency documents contain (a) memoranda already revealed as the basis for agency rulings; see American Mail Line, Ltd. v. Gulick, 133 U.S. App. D.C. 382, 411 F.2d 696 (1969), (b) "purely factual reports and scientific studies," Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 138 U.S. App. D.C. 22, 26, 424 F.2d 935, 939, cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970), or (c) private transmittals of binding agency opinions and interpretations constituting "secret law." See Sterling Drug, Inc. v. FTC, U.S. App. D.C.—, 450 F.2d 698, 708 (1971).

(5) Defendants are ordered to produce Commission Minutes that have been requested and not made public or made available to plaintiff. Since defendants have nowhere indicated the Minutes are exempted from disclosure, we hold that they have conceded that disclosure is proper.

SECOND MEMORANDUM ORDER

Richey, D. J.: In the companion case hereto, Missouri Portland Cement Company v. Federal Trade Commission, et al., CA 474–71 (D.D.C.), the Honorable Judge June L. Green issued a Memorandum Order, on August 16, 1972, requiring these defendants to disclose to plaintiff Missouri Portland those Federal Trade Commission minutes requested by plaintiff which defendants had not indicated were exempt. Plaintiff herein, Ash Grove Cement Company, subsequently, at the September 7, 1972 calendar call, requested the entry of a similar Order. Pursuant to the Court's suggestion, Ash Grove filed a Motion for that purpose on September 14, 1972 and on September 29, 1972 defendants filed an Opposition to which they attached (A) an alternative proposed Order and (B) a copy of a Motion filed in Missouri Portland case for Reconsideration or Clarification of Judge Green's Memorandum Order. Ash Grove filed a Reply to defendants' Opposition on October 6, 1972.

In November, 1972, defendants and Missouri Portland requested leave to supplement the record in the Missouri Portland case, subsequently did so, and on December 15, 1972, Judge Green filed a second Memorandum Order requiring defendants to "treat chronological minutes in the same manner as the Court ordered they are to treat other purported 5 U.S.C. Section 552(b)(5) documents." Missouri Portland Cement Company v. Federal Trade Commission, CA 474–71, Memorandum Order, filed December 15, 1972 at 2. Defendants were further ordered to comply with Judge Green's two Memorandum Orders by January 15, 1973. Ibid. at 7.

In their Opposition filed herein, defendants characterize plaintiff's September 14, 1972 Motion as an "ostensible attempt to take advantage of an inadvertent misconstruction of the matter in the companion suit, Missouri Portland." Opposition at 7. It is apparent however, that with the exception of Paragraph 9(f) of the Complaint, the same documents are requested of the same defendants in each lawsuit. The same issues and objections have been raised in both lawsuits and this Court will impose no insuperable or unjust burden on defendants by now requiring them to do what they have already been required to do in the companion Missouri Portland case. Assuming that defendants have now meaningfully complied with the two Memorandum Orders issued by Judge Green, the only imposition attendant to the entry of similar orders herein will be the copying of documents already filed or submitted, in camera, in the Missouri Portland case.

Since defendants have attached to their September 29, 1972 Opposition a copy of their Motion to Reconsider or Clarify the April 16, 1972 Memorandum Order issued by Judge Green, this Court will additionally construe defendants' Opposition as a Motion to Reconsider or Clarify the Order proposed by plaintiff's September 14, 1972 Motion should it be entered by the Court. The Court having decided to enter herein the Order attached to Ash Grove's September 14, 1972 Motion, it now considers Attachment B to defendants' Opposition as a Motion to Reconsider or Clarify that Order.

I

There are two types of Commission minutes.

A

Chronological minutes are:

> * * * accounts of the Commission's executive meetings and conferences * * * the deliberations of the Commission such as exchange of opinions between individual Commissioners, their recommendations, motions, discussions, and statements. They also contain staff recommendations and involve pending cases, internal reorganization procedures, personnel actions, policy determinations and generally reflect the Commission's decision making process. Secretary Tobin's affidavit, ¶ 6, at 3, Attachment B to Defendants' Opposition.

Such minutes, printed in bound volumes, are not contained in the Commission's files, but are kept in the custody of the Secretary. They are generally not available to the Commission's Staff. Id. Defendants assert they had not heretofore claimed exemption for the minutes because they "did not consider [them] to be the object of plaintiff's request * * *.", Attachment B, Defendants' Memorandum at 2. Moreover, defendants now assert that the chronological minutes "reflect without exception the Commission's decision making process, as well as the internal communications between individual Commissioners" and are "confidential per se." Id. They ask that the Court "relieve defendants from producing any chronological minutes of the Commission", Id. at 3, and ground their claim of exemption on 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), Attachment B, Proposed Order, at 1. In the companion Missouri Portland case, these defendants further stated that "[p]laintiff has not challenged the confidentiality of the Commission's 'chronological minutes' ". Missouri Portland Cement Co. v. FTC, CA 474–71, Defendants' Reply, at 2. However, the plaintiff herein, both in its September 14, 1972 Motion for Entry of Memorandum Order and in its October 6, 1972 Reply to Defendants' Opposition, has requested inter alia, that the Court require the immediate production of all Commission minutes including those outlined in Paragraph 6 of the Tobin affidavit. Paragraph 6 of the Tobin affidavit refers to the chronological minutes. Since plaintiff does, therefore, insist on disclosure of chronological minutes, the Court concludes (1) that the broad language of the complaint was in fact intended to encompass such minutes, and (2) that plaintiff does not concede the minutes are confidential.*

When a request for disclosure of information is made and defendant is an agency subject to the Freedom of Information Act, the ordinary procedure is for the Court to inspect the documents in camera. E.g., Fisher v. Renegotiation Bd., No. 24,685 (D.C. Cir. November 10, 1972); Sterling Drug Inc. v. FTC, 146 U.S. App. D.C. 237, 450 F.2d 698 (1971); Soucie v. David, 145 U.S. App. D.C. 144, 448 F.2d 1067 (1971); Bristol-Myers Co. v. FTC, 138 U.S. App. D.C. 22, 424 F.2d 935, cert. denied, 400 U.S. 824 (1970); Ackerly v. Ley, 137 U.S.

---

*Any doubt as to plaintiff's position on the confidentiality of chronological minutes of the Commission has been laid to rest by plaintiff's October 6, 1972 Reply at 9–11.

App. D.C. 133, 420 F.2d 1336 (1969). Accordingly, defendants will treat chronological minutes in the same manner as the Court has ordered they are to treat other purported 5 U.S.C § 552(b)(5) documents. See Memorandum Order of February 22, 1973. The Court understands defendants' position that chronological minutes are even more confidential than other minutes of the Commission. At the same time, where, as here, a defendant asserts an exemption pursuant to 5 US.C. § 552(b)(5), the United States Court of Appeals has warned that "* * * courts must beware of the 'inevitable temptation of a governmental litigant to give [this exemption] an expansive interpretation in relation to the particular records in issue * * *' ", 145 U.S. App. D.C. 144, 155, 448 F.2d 1067, 1078 (1971), quoting 137 U.S. App. D.C. 133, 138, 420 F.2d 1336, 1341 (1969).

Finally, the Court notes that it appears defendants do not intend to raise the Constitutional defense of executive privilege. This case does not involve national security or foreign affairs. Although defendants have cited a case dealing with the privilege—Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. V. E. B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, 40 F.R.D. 318 (D.D.C. 1966), aff'd sub nom., V. E. B. Carl Zeiss, Jena v. Clark, 128 U.S. App. D.C. 10, 384 F.2d 979, cert. denied, 389 U.S. 952 (1967)—they have not specifically and formally raised the defense, as required. United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1 (1952). If defendants do intend to raise the privilege, they must do so within 10 days of the filing of the Memorandum Order. Assertion of the defense does not preclude in camera inspection. 145 U.S. App. 144, 148–49, 448 F.2d 1067, 1071–72 (1971).

B

The word "minutes" is also used to describe various memoranda printed in blue mimeographed lettering. Tobin affidavit, at 2–3. Defendants did originally claim exemptions for such "minutes", howsoever, they were actually denominated. Since plaintiff disputes defendants' claimed exemptions for such minutes, defendants will treat the documents in the same manner as the Court on February 22, 1973 ordered they are to treat other purported 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5) documents.

II

Defendants shall comply with the directives of this and the First February 22, 1973 Memorandum Orders within 30 days of the date of filing of this Memorandum Order.

GENERAL FOODS CORP. v. F.T.C.*

Civ. A. No. K-1-73-CA. F.T.C. Docket 8883.

(United States District Court, Western District of Michigan, Southern Division, February 22, 1973)

In an action requesting preliminary injunction, court held that there was an insufficient showing of irreparable injury to plaintiff and denied the motion. However, the court granted leave to plaintiff to reapply at such time as irreparable injury can be shown.

Before ENGEL, District Judge.

OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff General Foods Corporation has filed its complaint seeking to enjoin the Federal Trade Commission from proceeding further against it in the administrative action entitled "In the Matter of KELLOGG COMPANY, a corporation, GENERAL MILLS, INC., a corporation, GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION, a corporation; and THE QUAKER OATS COMPANY, a corporation" Docket 8883, now pending before the Federal Trade Commission. Plaintiff claims in this action that the procedures utilized by the Commission violate its right to due process of law.

On January 2, 1973, the court issued an order to the defendant Commission to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue pending trial on the merits of the action. The show cause order was noticed for February 16, but adjourned by the court to February 22, 1973 at which time hearing thereon was had.

Since the issuance of the original order, the defendant has filed herein its motion to dismiss these proceedings pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). Hearing on the latter motion was had in conjunction with the application for injunctive relief. The motion to dismiss is taken under advisement on the basis of the record and briefs now before the court.

With regard to the application for preliminary injunctive relief, the court on consideration of the record before it, determines that there is an insufficient showing of irreparable injury to the plaintiff to warrant the granting of such relief at this time.

The immediate concern of the plaintiff is that without such preliminary injunctive relief, complaint counsel in the Trade Commission action may be authorized or directed by the adimnistrative law judge therein to deliver over to the other respondents certain evidence which General Foods has delivered to complaint counsel during the pretrial proceedings in that case.

---

*Not otherwise reported. See also, p. 768 herein.

Defendant has filed herein a duly certified copy of an order entered by the administrative law judge concerning the confidential treatment of certain documents. This order prohibits complaint counsel from making any disclosure of such documents at least until certain procedures therein are followed, which procedures will in any event afford counsel for plaintiff here ample time to re-apply to this court for relief as to any specific document or evidence which may be sought to be disclosed under that order. On the basis of the record presently before the court, the allegations as to such irreparable harm are general and conclusory in nature and the court is unable to ascertain what documents or what information specifically may be involved, the disclosure of which is claimed to cause irreparable injury. Therefore, the application for preliminary injunctive relief is denied with leave granted, however, to re-apply at such time as such irreparable injury can be specifically shown.

It is so ordered.

SKYLARK ORIGINALS, INC., ET AL. v. F.T.C.*

No. 72-1370. F.T.C. Docket 8771.

(United States Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, February 27, 1973)

On petition for review of F.T.C. cease-and-desist order, Court (per ALDISERT, J.), entered a Judgment Order denying plaintiffs' petition. On April 4, 1973, Court granted Commission's Motion to Correct Judgment, thereby specifically denying plaintiffs' petition for review and enforcing the Commission's order to cease-and-desist in its entirety.

F.T.C. v. WILLIAM J. BRAMMAN, JR., (MISSOURI PORTLAND CEMENT COMPANY) and RALPH BOTSFORD (BOTSFORD READY-MIX COMPANY)

Civ. A. Nos. 19,681-4, 19,682-4. F.T.C. Docket 8785.

(United States District Court, Western District of Missouri, Western Division, March 2, 1973)

Court held that it was arbitrary for F.T.C. to insist that subpoenaed parties give up their right to limited protective orders covering subpoenaed materials because they had sought full Mississippi safeguards from Commission. Since F.T.C.'s reasons for denial of Mississippi treatment were sufficiently articulated and the materials were such that the F.T.C. would have ordinarily granted a protective order, Court granted limited protective orders covering local and nationwide Portland cement shipment data and ownership information, ready-mix sales, purchasing, price, and cost data and ownership information.

---

*Reported in 474 F.2d 1340. For case before the Commission, see 80 F.T.C. 337.

Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 74,431, at 93,928 (1973-1 Trade Cases). For case before the Commission, see Ash Grove Cement Co., 85 F.T.C. 1123. See also p. 250 herein.

James P. Timony, Office of Gen. Counsel, F.T.C., Washington, D.C., for petitioners.

Ray S. Bolze, of Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Washington, D.C., for respondents.

Before HUNTER, District Judge.

FINDINGS, OPINION AND ORDER

HUNTER, Judge: In these two consolidated actions, the petitioner, Federal Trade Commission, an administrative agency of the United States, seeks the aid of this Court pursuant to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 49, to require respondents, William J. Bramman, Jr., vice president and secretary, Missouri Portland Cement Company, and Ralph Botsford, president of Botsford Ready Mix Company, to appear before a hearing examiner of the Federal Trade Commission and there to testify and produce records and documents in accordance with subpoenas duces tecum issued by petitioner in an adjudicative proceeding before the Commission titled In the Matter of Ash Grove Cement Company, Docket #8785, in which Ash Grove is charged with violations of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The Commission has the duty under Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 21, to enforce the provisions of Section 7 of that Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and is directed by Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, to prohibit unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. It is empowered by Section 3 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 43 to prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States, and by Section 9 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 49, to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence at any designated place of hearing.

BACKGROUND OF THE LITIGATION

The instant action emerges out of the administrative proceeding against Ash Grove Cement Company in which the Commission, by its complaint issued on July 8, 1969, has challenged under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, the acquisition by a cement manufacturer, Ash Grove, of three cement consumers in the Kansas City market.

In defense of that proceeding, Ash Grove, has obtained subpoenas against 27 companies including Missouri Portland Cement Company and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Botsford Ready Mix Company. Of the 27 companies, only Missouri Portland and Botsford have resisted the subpoenas.[1]

Respondents do not question the relevancy, materiality or reasonableness of the specifications contained in the subpoenas, but they do claim they are entitled to a Mississippi River type of protective order and treatment as to all material they return in response to the subpoenas. They base this claim on their assertion that the data called for is highly sensitive, nonpublic business data of the type and circumstance that will cause injury if it falls into the hands of the competitors.

The Federal Trade Commission vigorously resists giving such a type of protective order, urging that to do so "would effectively halt, or greatly impede enforcement of Section 7 of the Clayton Act."

HISTORY OF THE SUBPOENAS

Following the issuance of the Commission's complaint in the proceeding styled "In the Matter of Ash Grove Cement Company". Docket No. 8785, a duly appointed and qualified hearing examiner was designated to take testimony and receive evidence in that proceeding and to perform all other duties authorized by law. In connection with that proceeding and at the request of counsel for Ash Grove, the hearing examiner on August 5, 1970, exercising the powers vested in him by statute and the Commission's published rules, issued a subpoena duces tecum requiring respondents at the instance of Ash Grove to appear, testify and produce specified records before the hearing examiner at a prehearing conference at the offices of the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, D.C. on August 21, 1970.

Botsford and Missouri Portland appeared and agreed to comply with certain specifications of the subpoenas, but filed a motion to quash, or, in the alternative, for Mississippi River treatment of the other specifications, which they alleged called for highly sensitive and confidential information.

---

[1] The specifications of the subpoenas were approximately identical for each of the two classes of subpoenaed parties, cement companies and ready mix companies. Four of these companies were granted, at their request, protective orders which were short of Mississippi River treatment and are apparently currently satisfied. See, U.S. v. Aluminum Company of America, 193 F. Supp. 249 (N.D.N.Y. 1960).

On October 15, 1970, the hearing examiner denied in both alternatives the motion to quash the subpoena or to accord Mississippi River treatment to the movants' disclosures. Botsford and Missouri Portland appealed from the order of the examiner to the Commission, and on November 19, 1970, the Commission issued an order remanding the matter to the examiner for further consideration. In an opinion accompanying that order, the Commission explained that the examiner in determining that it was unnecessary to apply the rule of the Mississippi River case had failed to follow the decision in Federal Trade Commission v. Crowther, 430 F. 2d 510 (D.C. Cir. 1970).

The Crowther case held, as explained by the Commission, that where a subpoena specification sought similar information, that before refusing to apply the Mississippi River principle, the hearing examiner should identify and articulate his reasons for such refusal.

The Commission stated that the hearing examiner had not clearly and explicitly set forth the circumstances present which rendered Mississippi River treatment unnecessary, and remanded for this purpose.

By an order filed December 7, 1970, the hearing examiner required that Mississippi River treatment be accorded to Specification 6 of the Botsford subpoena and to Specification 2 of the Missouri Portland subpoena, both pertaining apparently to "quasi merger" information—that is, information about financial relationships between those two companies and their customers. The examiner denied such treatment to the other specifications of the subpoenas.

Missouri Portland, Botsford, and Ash Grove appealed the examiner's order of December 7, 1970, to the Commission. The Commission in an order dated March 2, 1971, denied the appeals.

Following the denial of these appeals, the hearing examiner, by order dated March 22, 1971, set a prehearing conference for April 2, 1971, to select an accounting firm for purposes of Mississippi River treatment of the information requested by those specifications to which such treatment had been accorded.[2] In his order the hearing examiner noted that any further submission as to the necessity for and the suitability of Mississippi River treatment of other specifications of the subpoena would be considered at such conference.

At the prehearing conference of April 2, 1971, Botsford and Missouri Portland refused to produce any documents. Specifically, Missouri Portland refused to produce documents in response to Subpoena Specifications 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 on the ground that Mississippi River treatment should be extended to each of those specifications, in addition to Specification 2.

---

[2] Specifically, Botsford Specification No. 6 and Missouri Portland Specification No. 2.

Botsford refused to produce any documents in response to Subpoena Specifications 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9 and 10 on the same ground as Missouri Portland had refused.

On April 7, 1971, Ash Grove filed a motion with the examiner stating that Missouri Portland and Botsford had failed to comply with their respective subpoenas and requested that their noncompliance be certified to the Commission for enforcement proceedings pursuant to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

By order dated April 21, 1971, the hearing examiner denied as to Botsford, Mississippi River treatment to Specifications 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 9 and 10, and to Missouri Portland, Specifications 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of their respective subpoenas. The examiner certified the matter to the Commission with the recommendation that enforcement of the subpoena be sought. The Commission with the consent of the Attorney General of the United States, then commenced with the instant enforcement proceeding.

The case came on for trial in the District Court on February 11, 1972. At the trial, respondents agreed to produce all material called for in Specifications 5(a), 5(b), and 6 of the Missouri Portland subpoena and Specifications 9 and 10 of the Botsford subpoena, all without confidential treatment.

QUESTION TO BE DECIDED

The only defense raised by respondents to the enforcement of the subpoena duces tecum is that the information called for is so highly confidential and injurious if obtained by competitors that only Mississippi River treatment will adequately protect respondents from injurious disclosure.[3] Inherently at the heart of this asserted defense is that petitioner, the Federal Trade Commission, has failed to sufficiently articulate its ground and reasons for withholding Mississippi River treatment to certain of the alleged confidential business data called for in the subpoenas and that, hence, its order must be deemed to be arbitrary and capricious.[4]

---

[3] It is well settled that there is no absolute privilege for confidential information, and such information may be revealed if the public interest, proper dispatch of business or the ends of justice require it. See, F. C. C. v. Schreiber, 381 U.S. 279, 299 (1965); F. T. C. v. Tuttle 244 F. 2d 605, 609 (2 Cir. 1957), cert. den. 354 U. S. 925; 4 Moore, Federal Practice, § 26.22(3) (2nd Ed. 1970).

[4] Respondents are not blameless. They merely nakedly asserted without use of affidavit or testimony that they would be competitively injured. Respondents' concern is that they are not parties to the administrative proceeding, yet are being asked to disclose what they think is per se sensitive information. Cf. F. C. C. v. Schreiber, 381 U. S. 279, 295–296, 298–299 (1965); U. S. v. American Optical Co. 39 F. R. D. 580, 586 (N. D. Cal. 1966). There is no doubt but that the Commission is entitled to obtain and use all this data. See, cases cited above in this footnote. The only question involved is whether the Commission arbitrarily deviated from one of its settled norms concerning the type of protective order.

APPLICABLE LAW

It is settled law that a regulatory agency is not bound to deal with all cases at all times as it has dealt with some that seem comparable. Federal Communications Commission v. W. O. K. O., 329 U.S. 223, 67 S. Ct. 213, 19 L. Ed. 204 (1946). Further, the doctrine of stare decisis is not as rigidly applied in the field of administrative law as in other legal fields. Even so, it is the duty of the Courts to review for possible arbitrary or capricious conduct and particularly where the Commission has not adequately explained its departure from prior norms and has not sufficiently explained the legal basis of its decision. See Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U. S. C., Section 706; Secretary of Agriculture v. United States, 347 U.S. 645, 652–653, 74 S. Ct. 826, 831, 98 L. Ed. 1015 (1954).

And as set out in Federal Trade Commission v. Crowther 430 F. 2d 510 (1970), l.c. 514: "The question immediately before us is not whether the Commission could properly abandon the Mississippi formula so lately devised and utilized by it, in a set of circumstances closely comparable to the one at hand, but whether the Commission has sufficiently identified and articulated its reasons for doing so." [5]

EXAMINER AND COMMISSION ACTION AFTER COMMENCEMENT OF THE DISTRICT COURT SUIT

Although the instant action commenced on September 3, 1971, respondents on September 29, 1971, went back to the Commission and filed with the hearing examiner a motion for a limited protective order to some of the specifications of the subpoenas. The hearing examiner, on October 12, 1971, in an order titled "Order Granting In Part and Denying In Part Motion For Protective Order" accorded respondents, as to some of the still outstanding specifications, a somewhat typical protective order tailored to the circumstances involved but less than Mississippi River treatment. (This report is attached to this opinion.) However, on October 13, 1971, the Commission vacated the October 12, 1971, hearing examiner's report on the basis that it was made after the Commission had filed the instant suit in this Court and, hence, would interfere with and delay this, the District Court proceeding. Respondents, through their briefs, have informed this Court that they are and have been for some time willing to provide certain data, without Mississippi River treatment as they earlier desired, "but with some protection." Respondents say "We still are not seeking Mississippi River as to these select specifications and will provide the data if a simple protective order is entered—which the examiner has already done prior to reversal by the Commission. As to the highly sensitive data, we continue to demand Mississippi River treatment." The referred to data which respondents are willing to produce on the basis of a "simple protective order" is (1) Missouri Portland Re 4 and 7 of its subpoena; and (2) Botsford Re 3, 9 and 10 and that part of 2 covering sales information of its subpoena.

---

[5] The Crowther decision also stated, l.c. 516: "What remains essentially unexplained is why the Mississippi approach, with its certain protection against individual attribution, is now thought by the Commission to be inadequate or contrary to the public interest. We do not intimate that the Commission could under no circumstances properly arrive at such a conclusion in the course of a balancing process, but it is not enough to explain the Commission's changed feeling by merely asserting that it has struck a new balance. Rationality in administrative adjudication requires something more than that."

FINDINGS AND RULINGS RE THE QUESTIONED SUBPOENA SPECIFICATIONS

Re: Missouri Portland

Specification 4(a) of the Missouri Portland subpoena requests for the years 1967 and 1968, shipment in barrels from each cement plant to consumers located in the Kansas City area. Specification 4(a) is one of the specifications which Missouri Portland has advised in its briefs to this Court that it will be satisfied with "a simple protective order" and that it is no longer insisting on Mississippi River treatment as to this particular specification.

It is evident from the record before this Court that the data called for is data concerning years which at no prior time has been provided to the FTC or otherwise made public. It is a sensitive type data from the standpoint of it falling into the hands of competitors of Missouri Portland. Missouri Portland deems it to be current, and hence erroneously deemed noncurrent data by the Commission. Cf., United States v. Lever Bros. Co., 193 F. Supp. 254, 257 (S.D.N.Y. 1961).

It is clear that the Commission refused when the matter was before it to consider any lesser type of protective order than Mississippi River treatment on the basis that the Commission believed that this was the only type of order which respondent Missouri Portland was insisting upon; and that, hence, Missouri Portland was not entitled to have any lesser type of protective order considered by the examiner or the Commission. Otherwise stated, the Commission took the view that Missouri Portland was entitled to "all or none", and, as it did not find a basis for granting Mississippi River treatment, it refused to consider the granting of any other type of protective order.

It is also reasonably clear from the record before this Court that in view of the sensitive nature of this fairly recent data the Commission, if it had considered on the merits a lesser type of protective order than Mississippi River treatment, would have given Specification 4(a) the kind of protective order actually given it by the hearing examiner in his order of October 12, 1971. (A copy of that order is attached to this opinion.)

From the entire record this Court finds that respondent Missouri Portland is entitled to that type of order, and the Commission and examiner are directed to enter such an order.[6]

While the Commission in its brief in this Court urges that respondents' failed to raise this issue (a request for lesser than Mississippi River treatment) before it, they are precluded from judicial review of that question, citing such cases as Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Commission, 355 U.S. 411, 413, 414 (1958) and American Life and Accident Insurance Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 225 F.2d 289 (8th Circuit, 1958) cert. denied 358 U.S. 875, it is implicit in all parties' treatment of the question that at least tacitly and impliedly respondents were urging for the most protection they believed they were entitled to under the law and their urging necessarily encompassed, if they were entitled to less under the law, a lesser protective order than Mississippi River treatment. To hold respondents to an "all or none" status is unrealistic and arbitrary.

Specification 4(b) of the Missouri Portland subpoena asks for the years 1967 and 1968 for each plant which shipped Portland cement into the Kansas City area, total shipments in barrels of Portland cement into each State of the United States. Again, the Commission urges since this kind of data for such earlier years has been supplied on other occasions to the Federal Trade Commission without assertion of confidentiality it is entitled to none for the years 1967 and 1968. Respondents again urge that although they may on some occasions in the past have given the Commission some "old" data, that is not "to be construed they consider all such data no matter how recent, as being of a public nature." As with Specification 4(a) Missouri Portland's most recent position with this Court is that they will be satisfied with a simple protective order of the type which the examiner entered in his order of October 12, 1971.

From the record before it, this Court finds that the data requested in 4(b) is confidential type data of a sensitive nature and in accordance with the usual practice of the Commission but for the Commission's arbitrary position that Missouri Portland had forfeited its right to any lesser consideration by insisting on Mississippi River treatment would have granted a protective order of the type granted by the examiner on October 12, 1971.

---

[6] To refuse on the basis that a respondent by insisting on Mississippi River treatment forfeits or waives any consideration of a lesser type of protection is patently arbitrary. It is noteworthy that in its remand order of November 19, 1970, by the Commission to the hearing examiner the Commission directed as follows: "If the examiner believes that the circumstances of this case are distinguishable from the circumstances in Mississippi River, but that Missouri Portland and Botsford should, nevertheless, receive some form of limited protection, then he should issue an appropriate protective order, one that may be 'restrictive' upon respondents' access than the Missouri River form of protection."

This Court further finds that Missouri Portland with regard to Specification 4(b) of its subpoena is entitled to that type of a protective order and the Commission and examiner are directed to issue one.

As earlier noted, with respect to Specifications 5(a), 5(b), and Specification 6 of the Missouri Portland subpoena, Missouri Portland has agreed to provide the data without any form of confidential treatment.

Specification 7 of the Missouri Portland subpoena, calls, for the years 1964 through 1966, the total barrels of Portland cement into each State of the United States for any plant shipping into the Kansas City area. Missouri Portland no longer insists upon Mississippi River treatment of the data requested by Specification 7. Again, it states that it will be satisfied if a simple protective order is entered.

From the record before it, this Court finds that although this type of data of some prior years has received some publicity in the past, the particular data now sought under Specification 7 is sufficiently current and of a type to be considered as sensitive and entitled to consideration of confidentiality. But for the Commission's arbitrary refusal to consider any lesser type of protective order than Mississippi River treatment simply because that was the type of order being urged, it is reasonably clear that the material called for because of its sensitive nature would have been given a protective order of the kind granted by the examiner in his October 12, 1971 order to Missouri Portland subpoena Specifications Number 7. The Court further finds that Missouri Portland is entitled to the issuance of that type of order and directs the Commission and its examiner to issue it.

Specification 8 of the Missouri Portland subpoena requests for the period 1961 through June 30, 1970, for ownership information (a) either of Missouri Portland by another company, (b) or by Missouri Portland of another company, (c) or by a person or firm which not only owns more than 10 percent of the stock or assets of Missouri Portland, but also owns more than 10 percent of the stock or assets of another company. While the evidence at the trial indicates that where the reporting requirements of the Federal Government of the merger notification programs were applicable, Missouri Portland has supplied such program requirement data, it is clear that the present request exceeds such merger notification reporting requirements. A review of the articulated basis of the examiner and Commission for the refusal of Mississippi River treatment confidentiality to the material requested in Specification 8 of the Missouri Portland subpoena convinces that such articulation, while no model, does meet the minimum standards described in Federal Trade Commission v. Crowther, supra. Although respondent Missouri Portland is still urging that it is entitled to Mississippi River treatment as to this specification, it is the Court's finding that denial of it by the Commission and its examiner is neither arbitrary nor insufficiently articulated. However, it is also clear that but for the Commission's arbitrary refusal to consider any lesser type of confidential treatment than Mississippi River it would have granted this requested data the same type of protective order that the examiner set out in his October 12, 1971, order titled "Order Granting In Part and Denying In Part Motion for Protective Order," for Specifications Numbers 4 and 7 of the Missouri Portland subpoena.

It is the Court's finding that under the circumstances Missouri Portland is entitled to that type of protective order with regard to the material requested in Specification 8 of its subpoena and the Commission and examiner are directed to make such an order.

Re: Botsford

Specification 2 of the Botsford subpoena requests for the years 1961 through 1968 the net profit and amount, in dollars, of ready-mix concrete sold. Botsford in its brief has advised this Court that with regard to its sales information only, it will be satisfied if a simple protective order is entered.

Evidence at the trial on behalf of petitioner indicates that for the years 1964 through 1968 Specification 2 type material has already received prior publicity. The trial examiner and the Commission refused to give Mississippi River treatment to the Specification 2 material and also under the "all or none" arbitrary approach, refused to consider giving any lesser confidential treatment to this material. Upon review of the articulated reasons of the examiner, in effect adopted by the Commission, this Court is satisfied that, again, although no model, the articulation is sufficient to meet the minimum standards of Crowther. However, it is evident from the record before this Court that the data is of the type that ordinarily receives confidential handling by the Commission, and that but for its arbitrary refusal to consider any less than the demanded Mississippi River treatment, it would have received that type of a protective order given to this type of information by the examiner in his October 12, 1971, order. The Commission and examiner are hereby directed to enter such a protective order as to all material requested in Botsford's subpoena Specification 2.

Specification 3 of the Botsford subpoena calls for the amount of Portland cement in barrels purchased by Botsford during the years 1967 and 1968 by each supplier. With reference to this specification Botsford has advised that it will be satisfied if a simple protective order is entered.

From the record before this Court, it is this Court's finding that although much of this type of data concerning some earlier years has been provided by Botsford to the Federal Trade Commission, the material is of a sensitive type that ordinarily would receive some confidential type treatment. Again but for the Commission's "all or none" arbitrary position, it would have considered a lesser type, and it is this Court's finding that upon the record before it, that the Commission would have under such circumstances granted a protective order of the type which the examiner gave to this material in his October 12, 1971 order. The Commission and examiner are directed to enter that type of order regarding Specification 3.

Specification 4 of the Botsford subpoena requests for the years 1961 through 1968 for the annual delivered price of a cubic yard of ready-mix concrete. The specification instructs that this data be ascertained by dividing the total number of cubic yards of ready-mix concrete sold in a particular year into the total amount of money received from the sale of ready-mix concrete in that year, less all discounts. The record before this Court demonstrates that this type of data, or data from which this data could possibly be ascertained, for some past years, has been supplied to the Federal Trade Commission in connection with other matters. However, some of the years requested are new and obviously involve sensitive type data. The examiner's and Commission's grounds and reasons distinguishing this requested data from that which was in several other cases given Mississippi River treatment is deemed to be sufficient. See, Federal Trade Commission v. Crowther, supra. However, but for the earlier discussed arbitrary refusal of the Commission and examiner to consider any lesser type of protective order, it is the Court's finding that this data would undoubtedly have received the same type protective order, tailored to the circumstances, as the examiner granted to other material such as Botsford's subpoena Specifications Numbers 2 and 3 in his October 12, 1971 order. Upon the record this Court deems it established that Botsford is entitled to the described type of protective order and the Commission and examiner are directed to issue one regarding Specification 4.

Specification 5 of the Botsford subpoena calls for the period 1961 through June 30, 1971, for ownership information (a) either of Botsford by another company, (b) or by Botsford of another company, (c) or by a corporation, partnership or natural person which owns more than ten percent of the stock or assets of Botsford, and also more than 10 percent of the stock or assets of any other company.

As discussed earlier in this opinion in connection with the same type of request of Missouri Portland, although the evidence indicates that some ownership information concerning Botsford has been given to the Federal Trade Commission on earlier occasions, that information apparently related at most only to the information called for in Specification 5(a) and 5(b) and not to 5(c). Additionally, it is not as current nor as broad as the information presently sought. It was data made available to the Securities and Exchange Commission re special reports calling essentially for information on mergers and acquisitions in the ready-mix and concrete product and aggregate product area, and did not cover other matters such as internal expansions.

The examiner and Commission in denying Mississippi River treatment have endeavored to distinguish this and the other requested data from that type that they have on occasion in the past accorded to others. Particularly do they stress that in such past circumstances Mississippi River treatment was granted only in "quasi-merger" situations.

While the requested data is similar to "quasi merger" data, it is broader, and obviously would be difficult to use in the pending proceeding if overly granted confidential treatment. Certainly it would be very difficult to show or prepare against a showing of the size and nature of the market in question in the administrative proceeding. This Court is convinced in the light of the reasoning of the examiner and the Commission that, as they found, Mississippi River treatment is not needed for adequate protection against competitors. Again, while no model, this Court deems the grounds and reasons given by the Commission and the examiner for their denial of Mississippi River treatment to it to be sufficiently articulated. However, it is obviously sensitive type data, and for the reasons expressed throughout this opinion concerning the Commission's arbitrary stand that respondents by demanding Mississippi River treatment waive any right to a consideration of a lesser type of treatment, it would have received a protective order of the type granted by the examiner in his October 12, 1971 order concerning Specifications 2 and 3 of the Botsford subpoena.

The Court deems that respondents are entitled to that type of a confidential order and directs the Commission and examiner to grant it regarding Specification 5.

Specification 7(a) of the Botsford subpoena requests for the years 1961 through 1968, the average annual cost of a cubic yard of delivered ready-mix concrete. The specification instructs that this data be ascertained by dividing the total cost of all materials, services, and overhead, excluding administrative overhead related to the manufacturer, delivery and sale of ready-mix concrete by Botsford in a given year, by the total number of cubic yards of ready-mix concrete sold by Botsford in that year. As related earlier in this opinion with regard to a similar type request concerning Missouri Portland, in some past years portions of the elements of the requested data has been supplied by Botsford to the Federal Trade Commission and has been given some publicity. Even so, the 7(a) request is broader than and covers periods beyond those earlier ones and does require the providing of sensitive material which Botsford does not want to be needlessly spread to its competitors. On the record before it this Court finds that the hearing examiner and the Commission sufficiently set out their grounds and reasons for refusing Mississippi River treatment to the 7(a) specification request, albeit, not in a model form. However, as stated in connection with the similar request concerning Missouri Portland, this Court finds from the record that but for the arbitrary refusal of the Commission and examiner to consider any lesser type of order, that Botsford would have been granted one of the same type and nature, specifically tailored to this particular data, as given to other admittedly confidential data by the examiner in his October 12, 1971 order, such as that given Botsford subpoena Specifications Numbers 2 and 3. The Commission and the examiner are directed to grant such an order regarding the 7(a) request.

Botsford subpoena Specification 7(b) calls for the years 1961 through 1968 for the annual delivered price, per barrel, of Portland cement for each supplier. The specification instructs that this data be ascertained by dividing the total amount of money paid by Botsford for Portland cement, less any discount received in connection with the purchase of such Portland cement, by the total number of barrels of Portland cement purchased by the company in any given year. Petitioner claims the evidence on its behalf indicated that this data to a substantial extent had been supplied by Botsford to the Commission for the years 1961–1966, both inclusive, and has been given some publicity in two earlier administrative hearings. However, Botsford's evidence elicited on cross-examination demonstrated that "you have half of the picture in the public record, namely, Botsford's purchase by supplier of Portland cement in barrels for the years 1961 through 1966. The financial part you do not have."

Again, on the entire record this Court finds that the hearing examiner and Commissioner adequately stated grounds for denying Mississippi River treatment, albeit, again certainly no model. The statement is sufficient under the teachings of Crowther, supra. However, it was arbitrary to refuse to consider any lesser type of protective order and based on the record made it is clear that but for such arbitrary action, respondents would have received and are now entitled to receive the same type of protective order as given by the examiner in his October 12, 1971 order concerning other admittedly sensitive, nonpublic materials such as to give to Botsford subpoena Specification Numbers 2 and 3. The Commission and examiner are directed to issue that type of order.

With respect to Specifications 9 and 10 of the Botsford subpoena, Botsford has agreed to provide that data without any form of confidential treatment.

ORDER

As soon as the Commission has accomplished the issuing of the confidentiality orders directed in this opinion, respondents and each of them are directed to meet with the hearing examiner for the purpose of amending the subpoenas to show a new date and time and, of course, a place for the production of the named specification books, papers and documents in compliance with the subpoenas.

This Court retains jurisdiction of this cause for the purpose of issuance of any further orders or the taking of any further action necessary to the carrying out of the orders contained in this opinion and the production of the books, papers and documents required to be produced by the subpoenas duces tecum in the light of this opinion, and for enforcement of the subopenas.

It Is So Ordered.

UNITED STATES v. SWINGLINE, INC.*

No. 71-C-1236. F.T.C. Docket 8759.

(United States District Court, Eastern District of New York, March 8, 1973)

On motions for summary judgment in civil penalty proceeding, the court has discretion on whether to grant a motion for partial summary judgment under the provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; makes a finding that determination of liability would not likely result in agreement on amount of penalty; and denies both sides summary judgment. Failure of an antimerger respondent to present an eligible company and proposed contract to the F.T.C. by the date specified in the divestiture order did not entitle the government to a partial summary judgment on civil penalty liability.

---

*Not reported in Federal Reporter. Reported in Trade Reg. Rep. ¶74,435, at 93,958 (1973 Trade Cases). For further ruling by the district court, see p. 827 herein. For case before the Commission, see 76 F.T.C. 407.

Robert A. Morse, U.S. Atty., by Henry A. Brachtl, Asst. U.S. Atty., of counsel, for plaintiff.

Chadbourne, Parke, Whiteside & Wolff, by Daniel O'Neill, of counsel, for defendant.

Before JUDD, District Judge.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JUDD, J.: Two motions have been argued before the court. The United States asks partial summary judgment, to determine that defendant is liable for penalties for violation of a final order of the Federal Trade Commission. 15 U.S.C. §§ 21(1), 45(1). Defendant has cross-moved for summary judgment in its favor.

An order of the Federal Trade Commission dated October 9, 1969 directed defendant to divest itself of certain assets previously acquired from Spotnails, Inc. and Speedfast, Inc. relating to the production, distribution, and sale of heavy duty portable industrial pneumatic nailers and staplers. The order also required defendant to present to the Federal Trade Commission by December 16, 1970 a financially sound and eligible company and a contract between defendant and the eligible company, meeting certain specified conditions and subject to the approval of the Commission. Defendant did not in fact present such an eligible company and contract to the Commission until September 3, 1971.

This action was brought to enforce statutory penalties in the sum of not more than $5,000 per day for defendant's delay in complying with the Commission order.

In opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on liability, and in support of its own motion, defendant has submitted a series of affidavits and five volumes of documents which it asserts show its good faith effort to comply with the Commission order, the impossibility of complying with it within the specified time, and certain other defenses.

The government did not have adequate time after the notice of cross-motion was served on February 26, 1973 to determine the extent to which the defendant's documentary material and affidavits are subject to factual dispute, but it asserts that they are irrelevant to the issue of violation of the F.T.C. order.

Even if the government's motion for partial summary judgment were granted, the court would still have to consider all this material at a trial of the issues relating to the amount of penalty.

Trial of the case is not remote, but has been scheduled for April 16, 1973.

While a party may move under F. R. Civ. P. 56(a) for summary judgment "upon all or any part" of his claim, the court has discretion whether to grant a motion for partial summary judgment under the provisions of Rule 56(c). See Williams v. Howard Johnson's Inc., 323 F.2d 102, 104 (4th Cir. 1963). F. R. Civ. P. 56(c) states in part:

> A summary judgment, interlocutory in character, may be rendered on the issue of liability alone although there is genuine issue as to the amount of damages. (Emphasis supplied).

That a court has discretion in dealing with a summary judgment motion has seemingly been recognized by the Supreme Court. Kennedy v. Silas Mason Co., 334 U.S. 249, 256–57, 68 S. Ct. 1031, 1034 (1948). Courts have exercised this discretion in cases where partial summary judgment would not expedite a final decision on the whole case. Kollsman Instrument v. Astek Instrument Corp., 225 F. Supp. 534 (S.D. N.Y. 1964); Bernardo v. Bethlehem Steel Co., 169 F. Supp. 914, 917 (S. D. N. Y. 1959); United States v. Naus, 11 F. R. D. 189 (W. D. Mo. 1951). In Naus, the court held that there was no useful purpose in granting summary judgment as to liability for alleged violations of federal rent regulations, when the liability and account of penalties could be determined in a single hearing

This case is similar to the Naus case. Determination that defendant is liable would not be likely to result in agreement on the amount of penalty. A determination that defendant is not liable cannot be made without consideration of the same mass of evidence. Defendant's motion for summary judgment may present issues of fact. While defendant has expressed willingness to have the case decided on its documentary presentation, this offer is not binding on the government and would not justify the granting of summary judgment, dismissing the complaint, even if defendant's views of the law are correct.

Accordingly, the court in its discretion determines that this is not a case where it would be appropriate to render summary judgment on the issue of liability alone.

On three matters there is no issue of fact: (1) the making of the Federal Trade Commission order of October 9, 1969, as set forth in paragraph 1 of the government's Statement Pursuant to Rule 9(g) of the General Rules of this court; (2) the date when the order became final as set forth in paragraph 2 of the government's Statement Pursuant to Rule 9(g); and (3) the fact that defendant Swingline, Inc. did not present an eligible company and a proposed contract to the Commission until September 3, 1971.

It is Ordered that, except for the determination of undisputed facts set forth above, both motions for summary judgment be denied, and that the schedule fixed at the pretrial conference on November 29, 1972 remain in effect as follows:

(a) Lists of any witnesses from whom either party desires oral testimony, of any documents not already submitted on the motions, and trial memoranda relating to the amount of penalty, to be exchanged and filed on April 2, 1973;

(b) A pretrial conference to be held in chambers at 4:30 p.m. on April 9, 1973 to expedite the presentation of the issues; and

(c) Trial to proceed on April 16, 1973.

STANDARD EDUCATORS, INC., ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 72–1164 F.T.C. Docket 8807

(United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, March 9, 1973)

1. EVIDENCE SUPPORTED F.T.C. FINDING THAT INDIVIDUAL DEFENDANT KNEW OF AND APPROVED MANY OF FALSE AND DECEPTIVE PRACTICES OF CORPORATION IN CONNECTION WITH DOOR-TO-DOOR SALES OF ENCYCLOPEDIAS.

   Evidence supported finding of Federal Trade Commission that individual defendant, who organized corporation, served as president and treasurer and owned 51% of its stock, knew of and approved many of false and deceptive practices of the corporation in connection with door-to-door sales of encyclopedias.

2. F.T.C. PROPERLY DRAWS ON ITS EXPERTISE IN DRAWING INFERENCES ABOUT KNOWLEDGE OF DECEPTIVE PRACTICES OF CORPORATE OFFICERS.

   In drawing inferences about knowledge of corporate officers of deceptive practices of corporation, Federal Trade Commission properly draws upon its expertise.

3. BURDEN OF EXCULPATION RESTS ON CHIEF EXECUTIVE AND PRIMARY SHAREHOLDER OF CLOSELY HELD CORPORATION WHOSE STOCK-IN-TRADE IS OVERREACHING AND DECEPTION IN VIOLATION OF F.T.C. ACT.

   A heavy burden of exculpation rests on chief executive and primary shareholder of closely held corporation whose stock-in-trade is overreaching and deception in violation of Federal Trade Commission Act.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 475 F.2d 401)

Court held that evidence supported findings of Federal Trade Commission that individual defendant knew of and approved many of the false and deceptive practices of the corporation in connection with door-to-door sales of encyclopedias.

---

*Reported in 475 F. 2d 401 (1973). For case before Commission, see 79 F.T.C. 858; cert. denied, Oct. 9, 1973, 414 U.S. 828, 94 S. Ct. 54.

Ronald J. Wilson, Washington, D.C., for petitioners.

Nicholas S. Reynolds, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, with whom Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., Asst. Gen. Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, was on the brief, for respondent.

Before WRIGHT and WILKEY, Circuit Judges, and RICHEY, District Judge.

PER CURIAM:

[402] [1] This case is here on a petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission directed its order against James A. Melley, Sr. in his individual capacity, as well as against the company, because it found that Melley knew of and approved many of the false and deceptive practices. Testimony before a hearing examiner showed that Melley was the organizer of the company, served as its president and treasurer, and owned 51 per cent of its stock. In the company's infancy he did much of the selling himself, and although at the time in question Melley no longer engaged in any selling himself, he still, in the words of the trial examiner, "spends his time in the office supervising the over-all operations * * *." In addition, he devised the form contract used by the company's salesmen, a contract whose provisions were an integral part of the deceptive scheme. All of these factors, combined with the uncontradicted proof of widespread instances of deceptive practices by company salesmen, support the Commission's finding that Melley knew of and approved the deceptive practices. See Fred Meyer, Inc. v. F.T.C., 9 Cir., 359 F.2d 351, 368 (1966).

The Commission introduced testimonial evidence as to 12 typical sales, dating from February 1965 to May 1968, taking place at sites as widespread as Oahu, Hawaii, Colorado Springs, Colorado, Groton, Connecticut, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and Havre de Grace, Maryland.[1] The same oral misrepresentations were made in every one of these cases, and in each the pattern of deception was facilitated by the contract written by Mr. Melley. The Commission does not engage in speculation when it rejects the conclusion that these similarities occurred purely by coincidence and instead infers that they were the result of direction from above.

Of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 292(a) (1970).

[1] We might add, in response to the dissent's unwarranted characterization of these instances as "scattered misrepresentations," that petitioners' own counsel sought to limit the number of customer-witnesses that could be called by the Commission in order "to reduce the case to manageable and realistic proportions" and to avoid burdening petitioners.

[2] In drawing inferences about the knowledge of corporate officers in cases such as this, the Commission properly draws upon its expertise. And where it does so, our guiding principle in reviewing the Commission's findings of fact is Mr. Justice Black's statement for a unanimous Court in F.T.C. v. Standard Education Society,[2] 302 U.S. 112, 117, 58 S.Ct. 113, 116, 82 L.Ed. 141 (1937): (footnote omitted)

> The courts do not have a right to ignore the plain mandate of the statute which makes the findings of the Commission conclusive as to the facts if supported by testimony. The courts cannot pick and choose bits of evidence to make findings of fact contrary to the findings of the Commission. * * *

[403] [3] In this case, the conclusion that Melley knew of and authorized the deceptive practices was amply supported by evidence of record. A heavy burden of exculpation rests on the chief executive and primary shareholder of a closely held corporation whose stock-in-trade is overreaching and deception.

The other issues raised by petitioners are without merit, and were dealt with at length in the Commission's careful, well reasoned opinion. Accordingly, the order of the Commission is

Affirmed.

WILKEY, Circuit Judge (dissenting):

The illegal practices alleged in this case were false and deceptive statements made by individual salesmen of Standard Educators, Inc., in connection with door-to-door sales of encyclopedias. I agree with the majority that substantial evidence supports the FTC's findings that such statements were made. I agree that the corporation, acting through its salesmen, violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.[1]

I cannot agree with the majority's affirmance of the Commission's decision to direct its cease and desist order against James A. Melley, Sr., in his individual capacity. The FTC and the majority repeatedly stress the existence of admitted violations by salesmen. That simply gets them nowhere on the issue of Mr. Melley's personal involvement, although it does, of course, support the FTC's decision against the corporation, with which I agree. As regards Mr. Melley, I find the

---

[2] It is interesting to note that, although the Standard Education Society is apparently not related to Standard Educators, Inc., the record does indicate that when he incorporated Standard Educators, Inc. Mr. Melley made arrangements with Standard Education Society to purchase its line of encyclopedias for resale to the public. Standard Education Society also provides the broadsides used by Standard Educators' salesmen in their sales presentations. In addition, the false and deceptive practices of Standard Educators, Inc. parallel in many respects the false and deceptive practices condemned in Standard Education Society, including: representing that encyclopedias are given away free or sold at a specially reduced price to selected persons in return for use of the purchaser's name for advertising; representing that the recipient pays only for purchase of a 10-year annual yearbook extension service; and representing that the recipient was getting a special combination offer not generally available.

[1] 15 U.S.C. § 45 (1964).

Commission's opinion neither "careful" nor "well reasoned." To the contrary, it is unsupported and cavalier.

As the Commission itself notes in its opinion here, "[t]he rationale for subjecting respondents in their individual capacities to Commission orders is to assure that such orders will be fully effective in preventing the unlawful activities." [2] This rationale necessarily implies that some connection must be established between the individual respondent and the alleged unlawful practices. If a proven connection were unnecessary, the Commission could conceivably proceed to order each and every U.S. citizen or resident to cease all imaginable illegal practices within the FTC jurisdiction. The very nature as a "cease and desist" order implies that the named individual was at least indirectly involved in the past, or is likely to participate in the future, in the activities which the Commission wants stopped. In short, naming individual respondents in a case like this "is tantamount to a finding on the evidence that they have personally violated, or can be expected to violate * * * " the relevant statute. Flotill Products, Inc. v. FTC.[3]

Although the degree of personal involvement in the alleged violations which justifies individual direction of a cease and desist order has been variously articulated, mere ownership and control of an offending corporation, whose employees have committed the charged violations, is not enough.[4] Mr. Melley was in fact the majority shareholder, President, Treasurer, and Chairman of the Board of Standard Educators. However, a more specific and substantial connection with the violations must be (but was not) shown to justify the order issued against him here. Rather than establishing such a connection, the FTC's opinion, as it relates to Melley individually, ignores a highly experienced hearing examiner's findings, goes far beyond proper inference, engages in cynical and unwarranted speculation, and finds no support in the record.[5]

[404] This is not a case in which a likelihood of future violations has been shown, for example, by evidence that the corporation involved was formed for the purpose of evading FTC orders. Compare FTC v. Standard Education Society et al.[6] Hardly a "fly by night" operation, Standard Educators, Inc., enjoyed a stable corporate existence since its founding in 1957. There is absolutely no evidence in the record to support a finding that Mr. Melley would attempt to play the "shell game."[7]

---

[2] Appendix (hereafter "App.") at p. 200.

[3] 358 F.2d 224, 233 (9th Cir. 1966).

[4] See Flotill Products, Inc. v. FTC where reliance, in naming individuals in the order there, "on no other fact than that the three individuals owned and controlled the corporation" was accurately described as "rather cavalier." 358 F.2d 224, 233.

[5] The hearing examiner specifically noted that "Complaint counsel did not point to any evidence—and there is none in the record—that Mr. Melley committed any illegal act in his individual capacity, or that Mr. Melley is likely to violate the act in the future in his individual capacity, or that he will attempt to evade any order which may be issued against the corporate respondent." App. at pp. 181–182 (emphasis added).

[6] 302 U.S. 112, 58 S.Ct. 113, 82 L.Ed. 141 (1937).

This is not a case in which the deceptive practices were so intertwined with company policy that the responsible corporate officers could be fairly deemed to have known of and approved the violations. Compare FTC v. Standard Education Society et al.[8] and Benrus Watch Company v. FTC.[9] To the contrary, the Commission proved only scattered misrepresentations perpetrated by individual salesmen.[10] The only evidence of central corporate policy came from Melley himself and was apparently credited by the hearing examiner. Mr. Melley testified that the company had a strong policy against misrepresentations and fired salesmen who were found to have engaged in deceptive practices.[11]

This is not a case in which widespread knowledge of the offenses in the community justified an inference that the corporate officers closely involved must also know of and approve the violations. Compare Fred Meyer, Inc., et al. v. FTC.[12] Mr. Melley did admit that he knew the company was receiving a "very minimum" number of customer complaints, "maybe one a month."[13] For a [405] company doing over $2,000,000 in sales to individual customers (in 1969), that level of customer dissatisfaction was hardly high enough to support an inference of knowledge of pervasive deceptive practices. Since Melley went on to explain how he sought to discipline salesmen and satisfy the complaining customers, an inference of approval of these abuses is even more far-fetched.

---

[7] The hearing examiner specifically noted that "[t]here is no evidence of record to indicate that the corporate entity is a sham or that Mr. Melley organized the corporation in an attempt to evade any order which may be issued . . . ." App. at p. 183.

[8] The offense charged there involved a "well-matured" "general sales plan" "outlined in letters going directly from the companies." 302 U.S. 112, 115–117, 58 S.Ct. 113, 115, 82 L.Ed. 141 (1937).

[9] 352 F.2d 313 (8th Cir. 1965). The violation charged concerned preticketing of merchandise. That practice was of the sort necessarily planned and supervised as a matter of company policy, and could hardly have originated with a frolic and detour by individual non-policymaking employees. Therefore, the fact that the officers involved "formulated, directed and controlled the policies and practices of the corporate respondents" was enough to justify individual direction of the cease and desist order, 352 F.2d 313, 324. See also Pati-Port, Inc. v. FTC, 313 F.2d 103 (4th Cir. 1963), where the individuals named had, on request from a subordinate, specifically approved the illegal practices.

[10] Testimony was introduced concerning twelve sales at scattered sites during a period from February 1965 to May 1968. A dispersed pattern of abuse might well merely suggest that dishonest salesmen get around and pick up the tricks of their trade from each other. Even if central control is inferable, who sent directives from above would still not have been shown. Indeed, their widely scattered character could increase the chances that company headquarters would not learn of violations.

[11] Mr. Melley testified that if salesmen "are caught in misrepresentation, they are fired." App. at p. 404.

[12] 359 F.2d 351 (9th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 908, 87 S.Ct. 851, 17 L.Ed. 2d 782 (1967). In that case, the court noted that "despite Meyer's denials of knowledge of the operations of his business, the Commission was justified in concluding that 'if "a majority of Portland's 120,000 families" were apprised of the details of these [deceptive] programs, we think it is a fair inference that the Chairman of the Board also knew about them.'" 359 F.2d 351, 368.

[13] App. at p. 380.

Even assuming that the illegal practices could or should have been known to those directing the company on a day-to-day basis, this is not a case in which personal knowledge could be fairly attributed to the individual officer actually named. Compare Coro. Inc. v. FTC.[14] While Melley was deeply involved in the corporation's early beginnings, he had almost completely withdrawn from routine supervision of its affairs at the time when the violations charged here occurred. The only evidence concerning his actual degree of involvement indicates that, while some important matters were occasionally brought to his attention, he didn't "seem to have too many duties any more," [15] didn't "watch sales that closely," [16] no longer hired or trained salesmen,[17] and in fact was so removed from the business that he did not even really know how many salesmen were actually employed.[18]

This is not a case in which documents distributed by the company, and used by salesmen, were themselves found to be deceptive. Compare Consumer Sales Corp. v. FTC [19] and Steelco Stainless Steel v. FTC.[20] There is absolutely no finding, nor could there be a reasonable one, that the contract used was on its face in any way misleading. This last point is highly significant because, when stripped of merely conclusory language, the Commission's opinion finding personal involvement appears to be based solely on the fact that Mr. Melley helped to draft the sales contract.

Although not finding the contract itself deceptive, the FTC and the majority here describe that document as "an integral part" of the deceptive sales practices challenged in the complaint.[21] The Commission concludes that it is "unlikely" that the form used could have been "supplied for any other purpose" than that of enabling and authorizing salesmen to "sell encyclopedias in the deceptive manner charged." [22]

---

[14] 338 F.2d 149 (1st Cir. 1964). "In the absence of evidence of personal involvement in Coro's [the company's] unlawful conduct," a showing of "overall corporate responsibility" was held not enough to support direction of the cease and desist order against an individual who was the largest corporate shareholder, President, and Chairman of the Board.

[15] App. at p. 362.

[16] App. at p. 351.

[17] App. at p. 198.

[18] App. at p. 351.

[19] 198 F.2d 404 (2nd Cir. 1952). In this case, deceptive order forms furnished by the company supported an inference that the corporate officers "actively encouraged and participated in making the said false representations." 198 F.2d 404, 407.

[20] 187 F.2d 693 (7th Cir. 1951). Since the literature provided by the company, in this case, was held to be deceptive in its own right, the corporate officers could not escape responsibility just because even more misleading statements were made by salesmen.

[21] App. at p. 198.

[22] App. at p. 199 (emphasis added).

No direct evidence supports such a view. Indeed, Melley testified that the operative reason for the selection of the actual contract format was a perhaps lazy, but otherwise blameless, decision to copy the clauses used by the competition.[23]

The Commission's findings rest on the inference that a deceptive use was intended to be made of concededly nonde[406]ceptive language. If it were the case that the language of the contract had no other reasonable and commercially proper use, such a gossamer inference just might withstand scrutiny. However, all of the contract clauses singled out by the Commission do have legitimate and nondeceptive functions.

The FTC suggests that the spaces provided for filling in military service information were designed to facilitate salesmen's claims that, as a member of the military, the customer was getting a special price. Yet, at another place in the very same opinion, the Commission mentions the more obvious, legitimate, and I submit the actual, purpose for collecting this data: the customer location "problem * * * created by * * * [the] business policy of directing sales to military personnel."[24] Since that group is extremely mobile, detailed and accurate military service information was essential to keep track of people who had installment obligations to fulfill.

The FTC notes that the contract mentions a charge of $3.95 "for delivery" of an extension service and binder. Their contention is that this language was intended to buttress the salesmen's fiendishly deceptive claim that the additional cost was merely for "postage and handling charges." Given the fact that $3.95 was indeed the total price, I find it difficult to share the Commission's grave concern about the misleading effect of this oral representation. Even if I did share that concern, I would still be persuaded that a contract drafted with intent to support the "postage and handling" characterization would use that precise language rather than the more ambiguous "for delivery" term.

The FTC further argues that this scheme of deception was writ large in the contract's reference to the "National Combination Offer." Whatever the salesmen may have said, falsely, about lower prices for larger purchases, the fact remains that this phrase refers to a perfectly legimitate method by which Standard Educators sold its books. By assigning point values, rather than dollar values, to additional books sold in $50 increments above the basic encyclopedia, the company offered flexibility and benefited from simplified accounting. Since the Commission has not characterized this as an illegal "tie in," how the mere reference to this legitimate marketing system shows the contract authors' purpose to deceive remains a mystery to me.

---

[23] App. at p. 365.

[24] App. at p. 217.

Finally, the FTC claims that the contract provision calling for the customer's agreement to give his opinion on the New Standard Encyclopedia demonstrates an intention to bolster the salesmen's suggestion of a special price offered in exchange for an endorsement. Apparently, the Commission completely overlooked the more obvious possible purpose for this contract clause: an actual desire to obtain testimonials for use in advertising the product. The technique of advertising by testimonials has not, so far, been ruled illegal. As with the previously cited inferences, the Commission has chosen the one explanation of the contract drafters' purpose, in preference to the many possible legitimate ones, which leads to a finding of intent to deceive; and it has made its choice for no other reason, from all that appears in the record, than that the desired result of holding Mr. Melley individually responsible could thereby be reached.

What the Commission has done in its analysis of the contract is subtly to shift the burden of proof. For example, with regard to the testimonials, the Commission apparently felt that, once there was a showing that the contract clause actually corresponded to salesmen's misrepresentations, Melley bore the burden of demonstrating a legitimate purpose for the language.[25] This approach no longer requires the complaint counsel to make a [407] substantial showing that the prohibited purpose existed. It clearly conflicts with accepted notions of where the burden falls in such a proceeding. In addition, it is most unfair, since the Commission drew its inferences about intent after the hearing at which Melley could have presented rebuttal evidence. Once Mr. Melley's counsel had established that the contract itself was not deceptive, he might well have reasonably concluded that his need to present further evidence on the language used had ended. Given the extremely tenuous nature of the FTC's further inferences from the contract's language to its drafters' purpose, I for one cannot blame Melley's counsel for failing to anticipate and rebut them.

This case comes down, in the end, to questions of Mr. Melley's state of mind—his purpose in drafting the contracts and his knowledge of the detailed practices of salesmen in the field. That question necessarily turns to a large degree on the credibility of Melley's testimony; and the hearing examiner, who had the best opportunity to assess Melley's credibility, believed him.

The Commission obviously wanted very badly to overturn the hearing examiner's ruling. It took an unlikely end run via inferences that contract language, innocent on its face and serving other legitimate purposes, was intended to be used for deception merely because it was actually so used by some salesmen. That sort of analysis would justify an inference that a company officer who authorized door-to-door sales must have intended to foster misrepresentation because that method of sale may provide the personal contact necessary for an unscrupulous and talented salesman to convince the customer that he is getting a special price because he lives at that address, came to the door within one minute, or has a nice face. Everything that facilitates a sale could be labelled "an integral part" of the salesman's deceptive scheme; but when a possible proper use appears, and absent additional evidence, the intent of the supplier that it be used deceptively should not be so lightly inferred.

---

[25] Presumably, Melley might have met this novel burden by showing that an ad campaign based on testimonials was in fact conducted. However, even if the contract clause had been inserted with a bona fide intent to collect endorsements, there are many possible reasons why an ad campaign might not in fact have resulted. In that event, the difficulties of showing a proper purpose merely highlight the need for scrupulous care whenever guilty intent is presumed and the accused must prove the negative.

Though this court normally gives deference to administrative agency decisions, if supported by testimony, I am not aware of any "expertise" in the Federal Trade Commission which permits it to find an individual responsible for deceptive conduct, and to issue a cease and desist order against that individual, when no evidence in the record makes the inference it draws any more likely than an inference clearing him of personal responsibility. That this court need not respect a greater aptitude in the FTC for drawing deductive logical conclusions is amply demonstrated by the outrageous manner in which the Commission has constructed its "chain" of "reasoning" in this case.

It seems to me that affirmance here either changes the law by holding corporate officers individually liable to cease and desist orders with regard to acts with which they had no connection, save their "mere ownership and control," or it gives the FTC a mandate to exercise no less than mystical powers. The Commission may, under the sort of reasoning approved here, act not on the basis of the record created by its complaint counsel but on sheer instinct. Heretofore such a modus operandi has been more common in the sensational press than in quasi-judicial proceedings.

Since Melley has not been shown ever personally to have participated in any deceptive practice, he is not even being [408] given the dubious benefits of the "bad man" theory. This record would not even support a high-handed attempt to enjoin, and therefore brand as a likely offender, one with a proven "predilection" to violate the law.

Rather, it appears that the FTC and the majority have carved a new niche in the law for "guilt by office" and "guilt by association." Mr. Melley is saddled with a "heavy burden of exculpation" even though no inculpating evidence (beyond mere ownership and control—which is not enough) has been introduced! The majority seems to find that "we know your type" is acceptable logic [26]—at least when applied to a corporation executive rather than a common criminal.

I recognize that there are in fact different standards of proof in criminal trials and civil cease-and-desist order proceedings. But the lower standard in this kind of case surely cannot be so low that it amounts to no standard of proof or indeed, as here, actually shifts the burden once complaint counsel has rested on a wink or a leer.

Nor can the absence of criminal penalties support an argument that Melley is not harmed by being individually named in the cease and desist order. The upright man need not fear the direct impact of an injunction commanding him to remain honest. But the very existence of the order tells the whole world, unless it too is enjoined, that he alone has been found likely to transgress. By its unfounded order, the FTC has filched Melley's reputation—a crime more serious than the one alleged, for it enriches the Commission not and makes Melley poor indeed.

I respectfully dissent.

F.T.C. v. APPROXIMATELY 1499 DOZEN FLAMMABLE SHEER NYLON SCARVES, MORE OR LESS*

Civ. A. No. 70 Civ. 4968. F.T.C. File 99-101.

(United States District Court, Southern District of New York, March 13, 1973)

In a seizure action under the Flammable Fabrics Act, upon consent of the parties, court permitted claimant to take delivery of the scarves on payment of court costs and other expenses of the seizure action and, further, to treat or process the scarves so as to render them lawful for introduction into commerce or, in lieu thereof, to return the scarves to the foreign supplier from whom they were purchased.

Before PIERCE, District Judge.

ORDER

Upon consent of the parties, it is by this Court on this 13th day of March 1973, hereby

---

[26] This approach is highlighted by the elaborate but irrelevant exposition by the majority, in footnote 2, attempting to link this case to Standard Education Society. Mr. Melley's former legitimate business dealing with that firm, of course, have no probative value. The similarity of the conduct of salesmen in both cases may testify to the endurance of the confidence game—but it simply cannot show Mr. Melley's personal involvement in their violations. Recognizing this, the majority is reduced to listing these facts as merely "interesting to note"—exactly the sort of improper "raised eyebrow" technique in which the commission was engaged.

*Not otherwise reported.

Ordered, That all sheer nylon scarves which have been seized in this action, said scarves being further described as Styles 1454 and GX2828, manufactured by Sankyo Seiko Co., Ltd., Yokohama, Japan, and shipped by said Company to Berkshire Handerchief Co., Inc., under Invoices Nos. 10129, 10149, 10152 and 10171 dated July 29, 1970, July 30, 1970, August 7, 1970, August 30, 1970, respectively, shall be delivered to the claimant upon payment by claimant of court costs and fees and storage and other proper expenses of this action and claimant shall not dispose of said scarves until they are adequately treated or processed so as to render them lawful for introduction into commerce. In lieu of so treating or processing said scarves, claimant may dispose of them by returning them to the foreign supplier from whom they were purchased. If claimant returns said scarves to the foreign supplier from whom they were purchased, the shipping containers shall be labeled clearly and conspicuously with the legend: "For export only to [name of supplier]—Dangerously Flammable Wearing Apparel—Not to be returned to the United States or its Possessions" and claimant shall further submit a copy of the actual shipping label to Plaintiff, Federal Trade Commission, when available. If claimant elects not to take delivery of said scarves under the conditions hereinabove provided, the scarves shall be disposed of by destruction by the Court, and claimant shall pay court costs and fees and storage and other proper expenses of this action.

JEWEL COMPANIES, ETC., ET AL. v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION*

No. 72-1382. F.T.C. Dockets 8786-8790

(United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, March 15, 1973)

1. REQUIRED FOUNDATION FOR ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS WAS SUPPLIED OR REPAIRED WHERE F.T.C. UNANIMOUSLY REAFFIRMED ITS DECISION TO ISSUE ADMINISTRATIVE COMPLAINTS AND FOUND ISSUANCE TO BE IN PUBLIC INTEREST.

[1323] Where Federal Trade Commission unanimously reaffirmed its decision to issue administrative complaints, which alleged violations of Robinson-Patman Act and which originally had been issued on a three to two vote, and found issuance to be in the public interest after plaintiffs, against which complaints had been issued, filed suit for declaratory judgment that the complaints were void on ground that one Commissioner had improperly interpreted his statutory obligation in originally voting for issuance of complaints, required foundation for administrative proceedings was supplied or repaired even if absent or defective earlier and plaintiffs' action became moot thereby depriving district court of subject matter jurisdiction.

---

*Reported in 479 F.2d 1323 (1973). For cases before the Commission, see 81 F.T.C. 201, 83 F.T.C. 1213. See also p. 245 herein.

2. COMMISSION'S POWER TO ISSUE SUPERSEDING COMPLAINTS NOT DIMINISHED EVEN IF ORIGINAL COMPLAINT INVALID.

Even if original administrative complaints issued on three to two vote of Federal Trade Commission were invalid because vote of one commissioner in favor of issuance was defective, Commission's power to issue superseding complaints or to reconsider issuance of the challenged complaints was not diminished.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 479 F. 2d 1323)

On appeal, Court held that where Commission unanimously reaffirmed its decision to issue complaints specifying that issuance was in public interest, the required foundation for proceeding was supplied and, therefore, plaintiffs' suit became moot and district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction.

Judgment of District Court modified so as to dismiss for mootnesss.

Joseph F. Ryan, Boston, Mass., Alex Akerman, Jr., Washington, D.C., Theodore A. Groenke, Chicago, Ill., for plaintiffs-appellants.

Harold D. Rhynedance, Jr., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., Alvin L. Berman, Robert E. Duncan, Attys., F.T.C., Washington, D.C., James R. Thompson, U.S. Atty., William T. Huyck, Chicago, Ill., Alan S. Rosenthal, Dept. of Justice, Washington, D.C., for defendant-appellee.

Before CASTLE, Senior Circuit Judge, and FAIRCHILD and SPRECHER, Circuit Judges.

ORDER

[1324] PER CURIAM.

On July 10, 1969, the Federal Trade Commission issued five administrative compliants against the present plaintiffs-appellants. The complaints were issued by a 3–2 vote of the Commission and alleged a violation of Section 2(c) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Thereafter, plaintiffs-appellants filed suit in district court seeking a declaration that the administrative complaints were void and an injunction restraining the Commission from conducting administrative proceedings pursuant to the complaints. The Commission moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to exhaust existing administrative and judicial remedies. In denying this motion, the district court certified the order for appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

This court granted leave to appeal and ultimately determined that the district court did have jurisdiction to consider plaintiffs' allegations as set forth in Count II of their complaint. Count II in essence alleged that one of the commissioners, Commissioner MacIntyre, had improperly interpreted his statutory obligation as a commissioner in voting for issuance of the complaint. Therefore, recognizing that "[w]ithout Commissioner MacIntyre's vote the complaint could not have issued since two commissioners dissented", the cause was remanded for proceedings "not inconsistent" with this court's opinion. See Jewel Companies, Inc. v. F.T.C., 432 F. 2d 1155, 1159 (7th Cir. 1970). [8 S. & D. 1241]

Following remand, the Commission on December 28, 1970, moved to hold in abeyance and stay for 90 days the pending court proceeding so as to permit "the Commission to reconsider its decision to issue the administrative complaints involved in the case". The brief which accompanied the motion stated that the Commission sought a chance to review its action not only because of the decision of this court, but also because of a change in the membership of the Commission. (At the time the motion was filed, the two dissenting commissioners had been succeeded by two new commissioners.)

Plaintiffs did not oppose this motion, but did, on January 6, 1971, file a motion for summary judgment. In their brief accompanying the motion, plaintiffs argued that no factual issues remained because this court had determined that Commissioner MacIntyre had construed his obligation as permitting no exercise of discretion in the public interest. They therefore urged the district court to hold that administrative discretion may be exercised in deciding whether to issue complaints and that Commissioner MacIntyre's allegedly erroneous interpretation of his statutory obligation entitled them to a permanent injunction against the administrative proceedings.

On January 21, 1971, the district court entered an order providing that the Commission would have until May 15, 1971, to file a response to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and that, during the pendency of plaintiffs' motion, the Commission could reconsider its decision to issue the administrative complaints, provided that plaintiffs were afforded the opportunity to be heard in connection with the reconsideration.

On February 5, 1971, the Commission notified plaintiffs of its determination to reconsider its decision to issue the five administrative complaints and indicated that plaintiffs could file briefs on this question. Thereafter, plaintiffs pressed their position regarding the appropriateness of issuance of the complaints both by filing extensive briefs and by participating in oral arguments before the Commission.

On April 12, 1971, the Commission, with all five members participating, ruled [1325] unanimously that issuance of the challenged administrative complaints was in the public interest and reaffirmed its decision to issue the complaints. Accompanying the order was a separate statement by Commissioner MacIntyre where in he indicated that at the time the complaints were originally issued he had considered the public interest and was convinced that issuance was in the public interest.

On May 24, 1971, the Commission filed with the district court a motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground that this action had become moot, various exhibits to the motion including the Commission's order and separate statement of Commissioner MacIntyre, and a memorandum brief in support of its motion and in opposition to plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. Thereafter, plaintiffs filed a brief in further support of their motion for summary judgment and in opposition to the Commission's motion to dismiss. Finally, the Commission filed a reply to plaintiffs' brief.

On March 17, 1972, the district court entered a judgment from which the instant appeal was taken. While recognizing that the Commission had not yet filed an answer, the court concluded no further pleadings were required before the "ultimate relief" which both parties had sought in their respective motions could be granted. After reviewing the history of this litigation, with particular regard to the Commission's order and separate statement of Commissioner MacIntyre, the district court held: (1) that this action had not become moot, despite the Commission's unanimous reaffirmance of its decision to issue the complaints; (2) that discretion must be exercised by the Commission when it contemplates issuance of administrative complaints; and (3) that "Commissioner MacIntyre had made it as clear as he can that, originally and at the time of reaffirmance, he exercised discretion in voting to issue the complaints". Accordingly, the court ordered the entry of judgment in favor of the Commission on Count II, since in its view there was "no genuine issue of fact".

[1] We conclude, however, that as soon as the Commission, after proceedings in which the plaintiffs participated, unanimously reaffirmed its decision to issue the complaints with a specific finding that issuance was in the public interest, the required foundation for the administrative proceeding was supplied or repaired, even if absent or defective earlier, and Commissioner MacIntyre's original, and allegedly defective, vote was no longer of significance. Thus, the instant action had become moot, thereby depriving the district court of subject matter jurisdiction. Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 94-95, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 20 L.Ed. 2d 947 (1968). Accordingly, the district court should have dismissed the action on that ground.

[2] Even if the district court had found that Commissioner MacIntyre did not properly interpret his statutory obligation at the time the complaints were originally issued, this would not have entitled plaintiffs to a permanent injunction against all further proceedings concerning the practices which are the subject of the challenged complaints. At best, plaintiffs would only have been entitled to a declaration of the invalidity of the challenged complaints—the Commission's power to issue superseding complaints, or perhaps, as was done here, reconsider issuance of the challenged complaints, could not have been diminished. Federal Power Commission v. Idaho Power Co., 344 U.S. 17, 20, 73 S.Ct. 85, 97 L.Ed. 15, 20 (1952); Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 55, 68 S.Ct. 822, 92 L.Ed. 1196, 1208–1209 (1948); Securities and Exchange Commission v. Chenery Corp., 332 U.S. 194, 200–201, 67 S.Ct. 1575, 91 L.Ed. 1995, 2001 (1947).

The clerk of this court is directed to enter judgment modifying the judgment appealed from so as to dismiss Count II for mootness, and affirming the judgment as so modified. Costs on appeal are allowed to appellee.

HOLIDAY MAGIC, INC., ET AL. v. F.T.C.*

Civ. A. No. 1878–72. F.T.C. Docket 8834

(United States District Court for the District of Columbia, March 16, 1973)

In Freedom of Information Act proceeding, court held that the non-public files in the Franchise Trade Regulation Rule and administrative proceedings against plaintiffs were investigatory files compiled for law enforcement purposes, and accordingly, all files were exempt from production under the 552(b)(7) exemption of the Freedom of Information Act.

Before CORCORAN, District Judge.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This cause is before the Court on the motion of the defendant, Federal Trade Commission (FTC) for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Rule 12(c) Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (FRCP) or in the alternative for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 FRCP. Because it is supported by affidavits and other matter extraneous to the pleadings the Court will consider it as a motion for summary judgment and concludes that the motion must be granted.

---

*Not otherwise reported. For case before the Commission, see 84 F.T.C. 748; modified, 85 F.T.C. 90.

I

This action was brought by the plantiff Holiday Magic, Inc. seeking injunctive relief against the FTC for the withholding of information Holiday asserts must be disclosed pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. 552. Holiday alleges that it needs the information to challenge the FTC in an upcoming rule making proceeding[1] its position being that the FTC has pre-judged the question before it. Additionally, an administrative proceeding has been brought against Holiday under the provisions of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. 45, and Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. 13(a), and is still pending before an administrative law judge. The administrative proceeding is entitled, In the Matter of Holiday Magic, Inc., Docket No. 8834. (hereinafter, Administrative Proceeding)

At this time, all the documents requested are either in public files and available to the plaintiffs or are to be found in two "non-public" files which the FTC refuses to disclose because they are deemed by FTC to be investigative files created for law enforcement proceedings and exempt from disclosure under 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(7). Alternatively, the FTC argues that certain documents found throughout the files are individually exempt from the broad mandate of the Freedom of Information Act because of other exceptions—primarily (b)(3), ("confidential") and (b)(5) ("intra-agency memoranda").

The Court will deal first with the question of whether these files are "investigative." It is clear that ongoing agency adjudicative proceedings are being conducted by the FTC against the plaintiff Holiday. Accordingly, files assembled for this purpose fall squarely within the ambit of Section (b)(7), Bristol Meyers Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 138 U.S.App.D.C. 22, 424, F.2d 935 (1970), and are exempt from the broad mandate of the Freedom of Information Act, Getman v. NLRB, 146 U.S.App.D.C. 209, 450 F.2d 670 (1971), "except to the extent available by law to a party other than an agency." 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(7).

The Court has examined sworn affidavits of FTC personnel and has as well conducted an in camera inspection of detailed indices of these files. It is satisfied with the bona fides of the characterization of them as "investigatory."[2] Therefore, subject to the limitation discussed below they are exempt from the requirements of the Act, Frankel v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 460 F.2d 813 (2d Cir. 1972).

---

[1] Need is not strictly germane to the plaintiff's right to the information since the rights guaranteed by the Act run to any member of the public. In the context of this discussion, however, the allegation is significant.

This leaves the difficult question of the "availability" of these documents, i.e. to what extent are they "discoverable?" It has been held that Congress intended to limit persons in the position of Holiday to the discovery available to persons charged with violations of federal criminal law. Barceloneta Shoe Corp. v. Compton, 271 F. Supp. 591, 593 (D.P.R. 1967). The fact that these documents are being sought to aid the plaintiff in its efforts in the proposed rulemaking proceedings rather than in the Administrative Proceeding is of no moment for the (b)(7) exemption "prevents a litigant from using the statute to achieve indirectly 'any earlier or greater access to investigatory files than he would have directly * * *'." Bristol Meyers Co. v. FTC, supra, 939 quoting from H.R. Rep. No. 1497 89th Congress 2d Sess. 5 Note 5 at 11.

The statute governing discovery in criminal actions, 18 U.S.C. Sec. 3500, (the Jencks Act) relates only to "statements," in the hands of the government made by government witnesses. Even here the statute expressly limits the criminal defendant's rights to inspection after the witness has testified on direct examination.

The plaintiff Holiday has made no showing of connection between the documents it seems and "statements" made by witnesses in the Administrative Proceeding, nor does the Court discern any such relationship. For this reason the Court concludes that the defendant's motion for summary judgment must be granted.

In light of the foregoing discussion, the Court finds it unnecessary to consider the applicability of other exemptions from the Freedom of Information Act to individual documents found within the files sought.

Accordingly, it is this 16th day of March, 1973.

ORDERED that the motion of the defendant FTC for summary judgment be granted.

---

[2] The Court was satisfied on the basis of the affidavits and indices that the character of the documents was not inimicable to their being placed in an investigative file prepared for the conduct of the Administrative Proceeding. In limiting its examination to these documents the Court was guided by the language of Environmental Protection Agency v. Mink, 410 U.S. 73 (January 22, 1973) No. 71-909, slip opin. at 19, 20. While the Court does not dispute the wisdom of requiring more than a simple statement that a file is "investigatory" before granting a (b)(7) exemption. Cowles Publications v. Department of Justice, 325 F. Supp. 726 (N.D. Cal. 1971), it was satisfied by its in camera examination of the indices of these files here that the exemption is justified.

F.T.C. v. NORMAN J. FOUCHA, et al.*

Civ. A. No. 72–1060 S. F.T.C. Docket 8865

(United States District Court, Northern District of Alabama, Southern Division, March 16, 1973)

1. ATTORNEY GENERAL MAY DELEGATE AUTHORITY TO APPROVE ISSUANCE OF ORDER DIRECTING WITNESS TO GIVE EVIDENCE THAT, BUT FOR IMMUNITY STATUTE, WOULD BE UNDER PROTECTION OF FIFTH AMENDMENT.

   [21] Attorney General is not required to personally approve issuance of order directing a witness in an administrative hearing to give evidence that, but for immunity statute, would be protected by the Fifth Amendment; the Attorney General may delegate such authority.

2. ACTING ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL WAS NOT PRECLUDED FROM ISSUING ORDER DIRECTING WITNESS TO GIVE EVIDENCE THAT, BUT FOR IMMUNITY STATUTE, WOULD BE PROTECTED BY THE FIFTH AMENDMENT, BECAUSE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S DELEGATION ORDER RECITED THAT ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL WAS AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE SAID ORDER. IN ABSENCE OF LANGUAGE TO THE CONTRARY, PRIOR DELEGATION ORDER REMAINED IN EFFECT FOR PURPOSES OF APPROVAL PROCESS.

   Fact that Attorney General's delegation order recited that the Assistant Attorney General was authorized to is[22]sue order directing a witness in administrative hearing to give evidence that, but for immunity statute, would be protected by Fifth Amendment, did not preclude Acting Assistant Attorney General from issuing such order; in absence of clear language to the contrary, prior delegation order directing a ranking deputy to perform functions of the Assistant on a vacancy in that office remained in effect for purposes of the approval process.

3. FACT F.T.C. REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF ORDER DIRECTING WITNESSES TO APPEAR AT ADMINISTRATIVE HEARINGS TO GIVE EVIDENCE WAS TRANSMITTED TO ATTENTION OF CRIMINAL DIVISION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, RATHER THAN ANTITRUST DIVISION, WAS IMMATERIAL TO VALIDITY OF ORDER.

   Fact that Federal Trade Commission request for approval of order directing witnesses to appear at administrative hearings to give evidence that, but for immunity statute, would be protected by Fifth Amendment, was transmitted to attention of criminal division of Attorney General's office, rather than to an antitrust division, to which only an information copy was sent, or that purported concurrence of Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division, was given prospectively, was immaterial to validity of order, notwithstanding that such procedures may have been in violation of Attorney General's delegation orders.

---

*Reported in 356 F. Supp. 21 (1973). For case before the Commission, see 84 F.T.C. 21, American Aluminum Corporation, et al.

By order dated March 28, 1973, the court granted a limited stay of this order pending an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. On July 9, 1973, the appellate court granted the government's motion to dismiss the appeal with the consent of respondents.

4. PREJUDICE MUST BE SHOWN OR APPARENT FOR ACTIONS TAKEN CONTRARY TO REGULATIONS TO BE INVALIDATED FOR REASON THAT REGULATIONS ONCE ADOPTED ARE BINDING ON THE ADOPTING GOVERNMENTAL AGENCY.

   Regulations once adopted are binding on the adopting governmental agency; for actions taken contrary to the regulations to be invalidated for that reason, some prejudice must be shown or apparent.

5. FAILURE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL IN CHARGE OF CRIMINAL DIVISION OR HIS DEPUTY TO PERSONALLY CONCUR IN APPROVAL BY ACTING ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF ANTITRUST DIVISION TO ISSUANCE OF ORDER DIRECTING WITNESSES IN ADMINISTRATIVE HEARINGS BEFORE F.T.C. TO GIVE EVIDENCE, WHICH CONCURRENCE WAS REQUIRED BY ATTORNEY GENERAL'S DELEGATION ORDERS, DID NOT REQUIRE ORDERS TO BE INVALIDATED IN ABSENCE OF SHOWING OF PREJUDICE; PRINCIPAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR APPROVAL WAS GIVEN BY ATTORNEY GENERAL TO ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL IN CHARGE OF THE DIVISION HAVING COGNIZANCE OVER SUBJECT MATTER AND CONCURRENCE RULE OF CRIMINAL DIVISION WAS MERELY A HOUSEKEEPING FUNCTION.

   Even if Assistant Attorney General in charge of criminal division or his deputy failed to personally concur in approval by Acting Assistant Attorney General of antitrust division to issuance of order directing witnesses in administrative hearings before Federal Trade Commission to give evidence that, but for immunity statute, would be protected by the Fifth Amendment, which concurrence was required by Attorney General's delegation orders, orders were not required to be invalidated in absence of showing of prejudice; principal responsibility for approval lay in hands of Attorney General to the AAG in charge of division having cognizance over the subject matter and criminal division's concurrence rule was merely a housekeeping function to facilitate orderly and coordinate operation of the Department of Justice under statute.

(Syllabus, with substituted captions, taken from 356 F. Supp. 21 (1973))

Court held (1) Attorney General is not required to personally approve issuance of order compelling witnesses to give evidence that, but for Immunity Statute, would be protected by the Fifth Amendment; (2) Attorney General's delegation of authority to AAG included a ranking deputy performing functions of Assistant on vacancy in that office; and (3) any failure of Assistant Attorney General in charge of Criminal Division or his acting deputy to personally concur in approval given by the Assistant Attorney General in charge of division having cognizance over the subject matter did not invalidate orders, in absence of showing of prejudice. Order issued.

